It usually consists of a fictitious story the mind has invented to make sense of a persistent underlying feeling of fear. The main element of the story is the belief that certain people, sometimes large numbers or almost everyone, are plotting against me or are conspiring to control or kill me. The story often has an inner consistency and logic, so that it sometimes fools others into believing it too.

Or entire nations have paranoid belief systems at their very basis. The ego's fear and distrust of other people, its tendency to emphasize the otherness of others by focusing on their perceived faults and make those faults into their identity, is taken a little further and makes others into inhuman monsters. The ego needs others, but its dilemma is that deep down it hates and fears them.

Jean-Paul Sartre's statement, ''Hell is other people,'' is the voice of the ego. The person suffering from paranoia experiences that hell most acutely, but everyone in whom the egoic patterns still operate will feel it to some degree. The stronger the ego in you, the more likely it is that in your perception other people are the main source of problems in your life.

It is also more than likely that you will make life difficult for others. But, of course, you won't be able to see that. It is always others who seem to be doing it to you.

The mental illness we call paranoia also manifests another symptom that is an element of every ego, although in paranoia it takes on a more extreme form. The more the sufferer sees himself persecuted, spied on, or threatened by others, the more pronounced becomes his sense of being the center of the universe around whom everything revolves, and the more special and important he feels as the imagined focal point of so many people's attention. His sense of being a victim, of being wronged by so many people, makes him feel very special.

In the story that forms the basis of his delusional system, he often assigns to himself the role of both victim and potential hero who is going to save the world or defeat the forces of evil. The collective ego of tribes, nations, and religious organizations also frequently contains a strong element of paranoia. Us against the evil others.

It is the cause of much human suffering. The Spanish Inquisition, the persecution and burning of heretics and witches, the relations between nations leading up to the First and Second World War, communism throughout its history, the Cold War, McCarthyism in America in the fifties, prolonged violent conflict in the Middle East, are all painful episodes in human history dominated by extreme collective paranoia. The more unconscious individuals, groups, or nations are, the more likely it is that egoic pathology will assume the form of physical violence.

Violence is a primitive but still very widespread way in which the ego attempts to assert itself, to prove itself right and another wrong. With very unconscious people, arguments can easily lead to physical violence. What is an argument?

Two or more people express their opinions, and those opinions differ. Each person is so identified with the thoughts that make up their opinion, that those thoughts harden into mental positions which are invested with a sense of self. In other words, identity and thought merge.

Once this has happened, when I defend my opinions, thoughts, I feel and act as if I were defending my very self. Unconsciously, I feel and act as if I were fighting for survival, and so my emotions will reflect this unconscious belief. They become turbulent.

I'm upset, angry, defensive, or aggressive. I need to win at all costs lest I become annihilated. That's the illusion.

The ego doesn't know that mind and mental positions have nothing to do with who you are, because the ego is the unobserved mind itself. In Zen they say, don't seek the truth, just cease to cherish opinions. What does that mean?

Let go of identification with your mind. Who you are beyond the mind then emerges by itself. End of Disc 3 Without Ego Most people have moments when they are free of ego.

Those who are exceptionally good at what they do may be completely or largely free of ego while performing their work. They may not know it, but their work has become a spiritual practice. Most of them are present while they do their work and fall back into relative unconsciousness in their private life.

This means their state of presence is for the time being confined to one area of their life. I have met teachers, artists, nurses, doctors, scientists, social workers, waiters, hairdressers, business owners, and salespeople who perform their work admirably without any self-seeking, fully responding to whatever the moment requires of them. They are one with what they do, one with the now, one with the people or the task they serve.

The influence such people have upon others goes far beyond the function they perform. They bring about a lessening of the ego in everyone who comes into contact with them. Even people with heavy ego sometimes begin to relax, let down their guard, and stop playing their roles when they interact with them.

It comes as no surprise that those people who work without ego are extraordinarily successful at what they do. Anybody who is one with what he or she does is building the new earth. I have also met many others who may be technically good at what they do, but whose ego constantly sabotages their work.

Only part of their attention is on the work they perform. The other part is on themselves. Their ego demands personal recognition and wastes energy in resentment if it doesn't get enough.

And it's never enough. Is someone else getting more recognition than me? Or their main focus of attention is profit or power, and their work is no more than a means to that end.

When work is no more than a means to an end, it cannot be of high quality. When obstacles or difficulties arise in their work, when things don't go according to expectation, when other people or circumstances are not helpful or cooperative, instead of immediately becoming one with the new situation and responding to the requirements of the present moment, they react against the situation and so separate themselves from it. There's a me that feels personally offended or resentful, and a huge amount of energy is burned up in useless protest or anger, energy that could be used for solving the situation if it were not being misused by the ego.

What is more, this anti-energy creates new obstacles, new opposition. Many people are truly their own worst enemy. People unknowingly sabotage their own work when they withhold help or information from others or try to undermine them, lest they become more successful or get more credit than me.

Cooperation is alien to the ego, except when there's a secondary motive. The ego doesn't know that the more you include others, the more smoothly things flow and the more easily things come to you. When you give little or no help to others or put obstacles in their path, the universe, in the form of people and circumstances, gives little or no help to you because you've cut yourself off from the whole.

The ego's unconscious core feeling of not enough causes it to react to someone else's success as if that success had taken something away from me. It doesn't know that your resentment of another person's success curtails your own chances of success. In order to attract success, you need to welcome it wherever you see it.

The Ego in Illness An illness can either strengthen or weaken the ego. If you complain, feel self-pity or resent being ill, your ego becomes stronger. It also becomes stronger if you make the illness part of your conceptual identity.

I am a sufferer of such and such a disease. Ah, so now we know who you are. Some people, on the other hand, who in normal life have a big ego, suddenly become gentle and kind and much nicer people when they are ill.

They may gain insights they may never have had in their normal life. They may access their inner knowing and contentment and speak words of wisdom. Then, when they get better, energy returns and so does the ego.

When you are ill, your energy level is quite low and the intelligence of the organism may take over and use the remaining energy for the healing of the body. And so there's not enough left for the mind, that is to say, egoic thinking and emotion. The ego burns up considerable amounts of energy.

In some cases, however, the ego retains the little energy that remains and uses it for its own purposes. Needless to say, those people who experience a strengthening of the ego in illness take much longer to recover. Some never do, and so the illness becomes chronic and a permanent part of their false sense of self.

How hard it is to live with yourself. One of the ways in which the ego attempts to escape the unsatisfactoriness of personal selfhood is to enlarge and strengthen its sense of self by identifying with a group, a nation, political party, corporation, institution, sect, club, gang, football team. In some cases, the personal ego seems to dissolve completely as someone dedicates his or her life to working selflessly for the greater good of the collective without demanding personal rewards, recognition or aggrandizement.

What a relief to be freed of the dreadful burden of personal self. The members of the collective feel happy and fulfilled, no matter how hard they work, how many sacrifices they make. They appear to have gone beyond ego.

The question is, have they truly become free, or has the ego simply shifted from the personal to the collective? A collective ego manifests the same characteristics as the personal ego, such as the need for conflict and enemies, the need for more, the need to be right against others who are wrong, and so on. Sooner or later, the collective will come into conflict with other collectives, because it unconsciously seeks conflict and it needs opposition to define its boundary and thus its identity.

Its members will then experience the suffering that inevitably comes in the wake of any ego-motivated action. At that point, they may wake up and realize that their collective has a strong element of insanity. It can be painful at first to suddenly wake up and realize that the collective you had identified with and worked for is actually insane.

Some people at that point become cynical or bitter and henceforth deny all values, all worth. This means that they quickly adopted another belief system when the previous one was recognized as illusory and therefore collapsed. They didn't face the death of their ego, but ran away and reincarnated into a new one.

A collective ego is usually more unconscious than the individuals that make up that ego. For example, crowds, which are temporary collective egoic entities, are capable of committing atrocities that the individual away from the crowd would not be. Nations not infrequently engage in behavior that would be immediately recognizable as psychopathic in an individual.

As the new consciousness emerges, some people will feel called upon to form groups that reflect the enlightened consciousness. These groups will not be collective egos. The individuals who make up these groups will have no need to define their identity through them.

They no longer look to any form to define who they are. Even if the members that make up those groups are not totally free of ego yet, there will be enough awareness in them to recognize the ego in themselves or in others as soon as it appears. However, constant alertness is required, since the ego will try to take over and reassert itself in any way it can.

Dissolving the human ego by bringing it into the light of awareness, this will be one of the main purposes of these groups, whether they be enlightened businesses, charitable organizations, schools, or communities of people living together. Enlightened collectives will fulfill an important function in the arising of the new consciousness. Just as egoic collectives pull you into unconsciousness and suffering, the enlightened collective can be a vortex for consciousness that will accelerate the planetary shift.

Incontrovertible Proof of Immortality Ego comes about through a split in the human psyche in which identity separates into two parts that we could call I and me, or me and myself. Every ego is therefore schizophrenic, to use the word in its popular meaning of split personality. You live with a mental image of yourself, a conceptual self that you have a relationship with.

Life itself becomes conceptualized and separated from who you are when you speak of my life. The moment you say or think, my life, and believe in what you are saying, rather than it just being a linguistic convention, you have entered the realm of delusion. If there is such a thing as my life, it follows that I and life are two separate things, and so I can also lose my life, my imaginary treasured possession.

Death becomes a seeming reality and a threat. Words and concepts split life into separate segments that have no reality in themselves. We could even say that the notion, my life, is the original delusion of separateness, the source of ego.

If I and life are two, if I am separate from life, then I am separate from all things, all beings, all people. But how could I be separate from life? What I could there be apart from life, apart from being?

It is utterly impossible. So there is no such thing as my life, and I don't have a life. I am life.

I and life are one. It cannot be otherwise. So how could I lose my life?

How can I lose something that I don't have in the first place? How can I lose something that I am? It is impossible.

[Speaker 2] (1:16:59 - 1:17:14)

So welcome to you all and welcome, sir.

Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (1:17:15 - 1:17:17)

Yes. A good week for you?

Yes. Very good.

Thank you. Very good. So let's do what we've now started as a tradition.

A moment of silence. Yes. And the question is where to put our attention.

And this time I suggest we put our attention into the feeling of aliveness within what I call the inner body, to feel that there's actually life inside your hands. A good place to start is always with the hands to feel. Yes, I can feel somehow that there is an aliveness in here.

The cells are alive. And that's the beginning of feeling being able to feel the entire inner body, the energy field as a global sense of aliveness. And just put our attention there rather than have it in the head.

And then we can enter actual stillness, because stillness doesn't happen until the mind becomes still. Usually the mind doesn't stop until you take attention away from it and put it somewhere else. So we are putting attention into the body.

And so we can go into stillness just for half a minute or so.

[Speaker 2] (1:19:05 - 1:19:14)

Let us begin here on chapter four, which is a very long chapter. Yes. When you wrote this, you must have been at it for a while.

[Speaker 1] (1:19:14 - 1:19:23)

Yes. And in a way, it reflects all the main themes in the book that actually already contained in that chapter. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:19:23 - 1:20:28)

The chapter is called Role Playing the Many Faces of the Ego. So before we really begin, I'd like to take a moment and talk about one of the most frequently asked questions that we receive by far. So many people who are committed to the book and becoming aware of a new way of thinking, a new way of consciousness, want to know how they can relate to people in their lives who are not yet on this path and don't think they need to be.

Sometimes it's a coworker or a friend or even a spouse, you all have said to us on many of your emails, and it can feel very divisive. We got an email from a gentleman who says, listen, my wife isn't interested in this. I don't know what's going to happen to our relationship.

So that question actually came up as one of the last questions from Qatar, the very first session that we had. But it's an ongoing question that a lot of people, the more they become engaged in the book, are feeling and wanted your response to.

Yes. The main thing is that the shift can only happen inside you. So not to expect other people to also change or to expect or say, I cannot change unless somebody close to me also changes.

The main thing is to take responsibility for your own state of consciousness and allow other people, especially people that you are close to, to be where they are, not to demand that because something is happening inside you and you are beginning to change, not to demand that others should also change. Change does not come about in others by trying to make them change. The most powerful way of bringing about change in others is not trying to bring about change in the other, but to completely accept the other as he or she is.

So that is absolutely vital. There are even schools of psychotherapy that recognize that. So you give the other person your complete acceptance.

And that's part of this change that's happening in us is that we step out of the judgmental mind that continuously judges the other. So we step out of that. And if we step out of the judgmental mind, we are able to simply accept your partner, a close friend, a family member, a relative.

This is where they are at right now. They are still going through their old behavior patterns. What has changed is you are no longer resisting their pattern and reacting to and by reacting, reinforcing their pattern.

That's right. That's right. So you're not taking part in that game anymore.

So part of your change has to be your willingness not to judge, you know, to sit back and to be an observer in your own life and then to more clearly see the ego in others as you also see it in yourself.

[Speaker 1] (1:22:36 - 1:22:36)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:22:36 - 1:22:37)

Don't judge it.

[Speaker 1] (1:22:37 - 1:22:38)

No.

Just know that that's what it is.

[Speaker 1] (1:22:40 - 1:23:04)

Yes. And don't mistake what you're observing, the behavior that people manifest as them. Not that's not who they are.

And that's a vital distinction, because if you mistake that for who they are, then you will perpetuate that kind of behavior. So that's not it won't work. Acceptance is vital acceptance.

[Speaker 2] (1:23:04 - 1:23:27)

And isn't it sort of like I mean, all of you who've asked that question, it's kind of like when people join the church or are, quote, born again, or, you know, we've heard about being born again in the church or you find Jesus or you find Buddha or you discover a new way of being for yourself. And now you want everybody to go to Jesus. Yes.

And you want everybody to believe what you believe.

[Speaker 9] (1:23:28 - 1:23:28)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:23:28 - 1:23:32)

That is part of your ego that now wants people to believe what you believe.

[Speaker 1] (1:23:32 - 1:23:57)

Yes. And so that's a trap one can fall into, even with this teaching, which isn't really based on belief at all. So it's not a new belief.

We're not trying to find some new belief. It's going beyond beyond the thinking mind to into awareness. But there is always the danger when you discover something new that you want to talk about it with everybody.

[Speaker 2] (1:23:57 - 1:24:01)

Well, that's how we ended up with this webcast, because yes, I wanted to share it with other people.

[Speaker 1] (1:24:01 - 1:24:35)

And sometimes it works because sometimes the other person is totally ready and receptive and say, wow, I never realized that. But they recognize it from within because the readiness is there. Right.

But the readiness is not there in everybody. So some people buy copies of the new earth or the power of now for their friends or relatives and then give them out. And sometimes they are disappointed when the other person says, doesn't make sense to me at all.

Means they're not yet ready and that's fine. Maybe they put it on the shelf and maybe 10 years later they're ready. It's quite possible.

Absolutely. Absolutely. So now for class number, I want to get that question out because it comes up over and over and over again on our message board.

So now we're ready for class number four tonight. We're going deeper into identifying the ego in all of its forms. Chapter four, role playing and the many faces of our ego.

Let me start by saying that I think the essence, it's a long chapter, so we have a lot to cover in a short period of time, these 90 minutes. But I think that the essence of this chapter is what you say on page 104, everybody, that you are a human being. What does that mean?

Mastery of life is not a question of control, but of finding a balance between human and being. Mother, father, husband, wife, young, old, all roles that you play, the functions you fulfill, whatever you do, all that belongs to the human dimension. It has its place and needs to be honored.

But in itself, it is not enough for a fulfilled, truly meaningful relationship or life. Human alone is never enough. No matter how hard you try or what you achieve.

I just love that sentence. I loved it so much. I wrote, wow.

Yeah, we're wow. Human alone is never enough, no matter how hard you try or what you achieve. Then there is being it is found in the still alert presence of consciousness itself.

The consciousness that you are human is form being is form less human and being are not separate, but interwoven. That's the essence to me of this chapter.

[Speaker 1] (1:26:23 - 1:26:27)

Yes. And one could say the essence of the whole teaching in a way.

[Speaker 2] (1:26:28 - 1:26:28)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (1:26:28 - 1:26:29)

Way of putting it.

[Speaker 2] (1:26:30 - 1:26:45)

So and of course, human alone is never enough, no matter how hard you try or what you achieve. And that is the essence of why people are in such suffering and such struggle and such, you know, angst against themselves in life, is it not?

And it's why they play roles, because the ego plays roles, because there's unawareness that within you there is the source of all power. So people who are out of touch with the power within or the place where all power resides, the aliveness itself, consciousness itself, then they feel a sense of lack. Why are they not in touch with it?

Because they are not present. They're not in the present moment, because the present moment is the entry point into that place of power within. If you're not present, you don't realize that there is a source of power within.

And then you believe that you need to get secondary power from someone or some situation or other people. Then the ego plays roles to manipulate the environment and other people to get what it thinks it needs, not realizing that all the things that it thinks will give it the power that it seems to lack, all that is already within you, if you could only be present in the now.

[Speaker 2] (1:27:50 - 1:28:00)

I got it. Okay. So the question is how not to lose ourselves in the human dimension.

How not to? By being present in the now.

Yes. And by realizing that whenever you lose yourself, realizing... In the human dimension.

In the human...

That's all the stuff that being human brings with it.

[Speaker 1] (1:28:10 - 1:28:38)

Yes. On the most primordial level, losing oneself means losing oneself in that continuous stream of thinking that goes through people's heads. So it drags you along.

It takes all your conscious attention. Remember, we started today with taking attention away from mind and putting it into the body. Right.

Another thing you can do is take attention away from thinking and put it into sense perceptions and really look and listen and touch things. Like an alertness arises.

[Speaker 2] (1:28:38 - 1:29:01)

You know what I found by doing this? I don't know about all the rest of you, but I have found by being more present, just doing that one exercise, putting yourself... If I'm walking along a path in the woods near my house, be there and not be in my head thinking about what I need to do, just to be there.

And what I found is, I don't know if you all are realizing this too, you are just less stressed.

[Speaker 1] (1:29:01 - 1:29:19)

Less stressed. You're calmer. Yes.

And you don't carry the heavy burden of a personality or me with the burden of past and future, my problematic future, my problematic past. You're much more, you're light and free when you walk in presence.

[Speaker 2] (1:29:19 - 1:29:28)

Okay. But my hairdresser, Andre, asked me this this morning. So I'm going to ask you, then how do you ever plan for anything if you're not thinking about the future?

How do you ever get anything done?

[Speaker 1] (1:29:28 - 1:29:39)

You plan in the present moment. When the time comes to plan and the time is not when you're walking in the woods and when you're walking in the woods, the time is to be present. Unless you want to go to the woods to plan.

[Speaker 2] (1:29:40 - 1:29:41)

You could go to the woods.

[Speaker 1] (1:29:41 - 1:30:06)

You could. Yes, you could. But it's much more likely that your planning is going to be fruitful if it is preceded by a period of presence and stillness.

All right. Any mind activity is much more likely to be beneficial and to be creative if it's preceded by presence and stillness. And then you apply the mind and say, OK, what do I have to do today?

[Speaker 2] (1:30:06 - 1:30:15)

And then you make a list. So if you're going to be in the future, do that as a concentrated event experience.

[Speaker 1] (1:30:16 - 1:30:16)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:30:16 - 1:30:18)

Now I'm going to sit and plan.

[Speaker 1] (1:30:18 - 1:31:08)

Yes. And don't think about tomorrow. Once you've done that, then you know this is what I have to do so that you're not continuously in the next moment.

You don't project yourself. You play mental movies about what you're going to say when that situation arises. So you can you trust in life that whatever it is that you need when the future comes will be there.

So that's the as far as practical matters are concerned. Future is simply something that you use like I call it a clock time. You make an appointment for tomorrow and you do it tomorrow.

Tomorrow. Yes. So you don't continuously project yourself away from the now to some future, believing that it's more important, going to be more important than the now.

It's not.

Because what you say on page 122, anybody who is one with what he or she does is building the new earth.

[Speaker 1] (1:31:17 - 1:31:17)

That's how you do it.

Being one with what you're doing means being total in what you do so that the main focus of your attention is not where you want to get to. You know where you want to get to. Right.

But the main focus of your attention is on the actual doing now. So this is what the energy flows fully into this. The energy doesn't is not diverted from what you are doing now through mental dysfunction because you're wanting to get there, because then whatever you're doing will be stressful.

Because whatever you give your 100 percent attention to is going to be better anyway. Yes, absolutely.

There was a Zen master. He was he was watching somebody in a competition artery and a man was trying very hard to win this competition, but he just couldn't make it. And then somebody asked the Zen master, what's he doing wrong?

And the Zen master said his need to win drains him of power.

[Speaker 2] (1:32:15 - 1:32:16)

Wow.

[Speaker 1] (1:32:16 - 1:32:22)

And so his need to win some future. He wants to have some future moment where he's going to be fulfilled.

Wow.

[Speaker 1] (1:32:22 - 1:32:29)

So his attention is not totally in the now. So the now where all power resides.

[Speaker 11] (1:32:29 - 1:32:29)

Wow.

[Speaker 1] (1:32:29 - 1:32:43)

This power that resides in the now cannot flow then into what you're doing. The openness isn't there because to to have mastery in any endeavor, whatever it is, you need to be total in what you do.

[Speaker 2] (1:32:43 - 1:32:45)

That's what athletes know. The great ones know.

[Speaker 1] (1:32:45 - 1:32:48)

And then they when they enter that, they call it the zone.

[Speaker 2] (1:32:48 - 1:33:01)

Yeah. There was this great article this week, as a matter of fact, those of you saw on Tiger Woods in USA Today saying that he's perhaps the greatest athlete of all times because that's what he knows how to do is to focus and be 100 percent present.

[Speaker 1] (1:33:01 - 1:33:02)

Yes.

It's just him in that ball.

[Speaker 1] (1:33:03 - 1:33:04)

Absolutely.

[Speaker 2] (1:33:04 - 1:33:05)

Yes. Yes.

[Speaker 1] (1:33:05 - 1:33:06)

Of course. Yes.

OK. So another question that was on the message boards a lot last week when Kadada from California called and was saying was on Skype and she was saying that as a young person, she's thinking about the future and thinking about wanting to have a career and husband and so forth. I think a lot of people felt unsatisfied by your response.

I've heard that a lot of people were like, I feel the same way Kadada feels. A lot of people are wondering where the passion goes, where the ambition goes and how you relate passion and ambition, which is what I think Kadada was saying. OK, with with this this new awakening.

Yes. So do we now just we're just all so awakened and that we become passive people?

No, the passion is much greater when you are totally focused on what you're doing now. There will be far. The passion will become stress.

The more you're focused on where you want to get to, the more the passion will degenerate into stress. You may still have a high energy, but it's there's a lot of negative energy that comes in. So if you want to remain truly in your power, then you need to be total.

And that applies to the smallest thing that you do during the day. Right. Because even great endeavors consist of small steps, even the greatest thing.

You are doing wonderful work, but every day that you spend consists of small steps. You arrive in the studio, you get dressed, you get ready, you speak on one sentence at a time. It all consists of one needs to be present as you are.

That's where the power comes from every moment and not look to some future moment that promises some kind of greater fulfillment. That is the delusion. It does not mean that you don't have a plan.

You can plan you. I want to achieve to build up a business. I want to do this or that.

But the main focus must be in the doing. And if the main focus is in the doing now, that's the passion is there and the deep enjoyment is there and an intensity of energy and intensity of energy.

Now, people often say that again, what the Zen master said that his desire to desire to win drains him of power, desire to win, drains his need to win, needs him of power.

So the right man would be being the being present.

[Speaker 2] (1:35:39 - 1:35:47)

You just focused on whatever is necessary in that moment, in that moment. I'm sure that struck a lot of people that that Zen master quote.

[Speaker 9] (1:35:47 - 1:35:47)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:35:48 - 1:36:00)

Because you're so you got to win. You got to make it. You got to succeed.

You got to got to got to. And that's draining energy from you. Instead, we should be focused on this moment, this step and then the next step and then the next step.

That's right. Now, you may win if you try very hard or very stressed. Occasionally it happens that you do win, but it's not really worth it because you get more and more depleted.

And after a while, you lose the you lose the joy of life. If you if if you spend five years of stress and finally you achieve what you wanted, is that worth it? Right.

Enjoyment is very important. Am I losing is that joy in what I'm doing? Is there an enliveness and intensity?

That's the question people believe sometimes high energy in our civilization when there's high energy in what you do. Often people believe there must be stress. They cannot imagine high energy in what you do without stress because that's how we are conditioned because we're always conditioned to look to the next thing.

But there is a much more powerful state of high energy and intensity of energy where the energy is intense and focused. Now, no stress at all. No stress at all.

[Speaker 2] (1:37:05 - 1:37:17)

Well, let's go to our new Earth Study Group watching our webcast at Borders on Michigan Avenue. Hello in Chicago. Hi, everybody.

Hi again. All right. Shireen has a question.

Hello, Shireen.

[Speaker 8] (1:37:18 - 1:37:39)

Hi, Oprah. Hi, Eckhart. We're thrilled to be here.

My question is for you, Eckhart. You say on page one twenty six that constant alertness is required to not let the ego take it over. And I was wondering, do you are you in a constant alertness yourself and do you ever struggle staying alert?

I am usually present in the now, the intensity varies according to the situation. If I'm just I'm sitting alone at home, there's just a background of stillness and there may be thoughts arising, I may be doing this or that. So the and then if a situation arises, the more challenging the situation is, the stronger the sense of presence that arises.

That's a strange thing. I realized that the first time when after this, I underwent this shift. I was actually in a cinema and I was watching a film.

It was a Japanese film about the end of the world. And I saw all these things. Everything was going up in flames.

And this is on the film in the film. And I suddenly found I was becoming more and more peaceful and present inside those intensity of aliveness, as if inside something was saying inside me there is no death. But that's an interpretation.

Really, for the first time, I realized when things go wrong outside, presence intensifies. Everything is fine. There's just a background of presence.

And that's that's wonderful. So because then the challenges that come into your life, two things can happen when a challenging situation or challenging person comes into your life. Either the challenge drags you into old conditioned ego reactions.

Right. For example, an angry person provokes an angry reaction in you. So this means the other person or the situation drags you to their level of consciousness or unconsciousness.

That's one way that one thing that can happen. The other possibility is that any challenge wakes you up more. So you become more intensely present when there's a challenging situation.

And even let's just look at a very simple situation. It's not really challenging, but for some people it is. You're sitting in a traffic jam, not moving.

You have to get somewhere, but it's not moving. So many people would go into negativity at that point. They get stressed.

They body gets tense. So that situation, then you react in the old way. And perhaps a few minutes ago, you were at home, very still and present and it felt good.

And you were looking at the tree in the class, you get in the car. And the moment the first challenge happens, it can drag you down into unconsciousness. But there's another possibility.

You can be alert and see and recognize that situation as the first challenge of the day. And then you say, OK, here I can either go into reaction or I can go into more presence. And suddenly you're in the same situation.

Nothing is moving, fumes, cars. And suddenly you become actually completely present in that city.

[Speaker 2] (1:40:37 - 1:40:48)

There's an exercise, Shireen, in the workbook that we have for this chapter where we talk about being, there's two, the transparency. Can you describe that? Becoming transparent.

Yes. When you react, when you react against a situation, whatever it is, something irritating, it could be somebody screaming, children screaming, an irritating noise. And immediately when that happens, it's almost as if you were a wall and whatever the irritations were hitting this wall inside you.

And it hurts because something inside you gets hit. Now, as a practice, what you can do is imagine yourself being transparent. So what before was hitting this wall inside you and that was painful, that was the resistance that this shouldn't be happening, that's painful.

Now imagine yourself being transparent and the irritating thing passes through you. You can do it, I mean, for example, one of the most irritating noises is perhaps a drill that goes, they break up the road. And so practice with that, become transparent to that, feel the noise passing through you.

It's wonderful. And suddenly in the very same situation that before would have provoked a negative reaction in you, you actually become more present and more peaceful. So the very thing that would have made you react now makes you more present.

Makes you more present.

[Speaker 2] (1:42:11 - 1:42:14)

Also, you talk about the deep lake, the deep lake effect. Would you describe that?

[Speaker 1] (1:42:14 - 1:43:11)

Yes. So the lake, if you imagine a vast lake, the surface of the lake changes all the time according to the weather, according to the wind. Sometimes it's rough, sometimes it's very still.

But even when it's rough, if you imagine you are the lake and whatever happens in your life, the external situations of your life are the surface of the lake. External situations change continuously. Sometimes it's rough, sometimes it's fine, it's very still.

But no matter, even if they are rough, the surface, the depth of the lake remains always undisturbed and you are the lake in its depth. So your external life is the surface of things, surface reality. Your ego.

Ego for the world of form and included in the surface reality is even all your thoughts. Because what we are talking about is the inner depth is deeper than your thoughts and your emotions.

And your presence is the bottom of the lake, is the lake, is the full lake.

[Speaker 1] (1:43:16 - 1:43:30)

Yes. And it's wonderful when you begin to realize that your inner state is no longer dependent on and determined by what's going on the surface. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:43:31 - 1:43:31)

Got it.

Got it. And that's and that's incredible freedom. That's true freedom.

Yes. You can arrive at that place, even if you are in a prison cell. And I've had letters from prison.

People have written to me and said, we are free. I am free. I found that place where my inner state is no longer dependent on what's happening outside.

Of course, the prisoner would still prefer to be outside on that level. Fine. But that's right.

Deep down, there is freedom from external conditions.

[Speaker 2] (1:44:01 - 1:44:04)

Because you are connected to the beingness of yourself.

[Speaker 1] (1:44:04 - 1:44:05)

[Speaker 2] (1:44:05 - 1:44:06)

The consciousness of yourself.

[Speaker 9] (1:44:06 - 1:44:07)

[Speaker 2] (1:44:07 - 1:44:48)

And you can use the word being you can use the word consciousness. You can use the word. A lot of people use the word soul.

Yes. Or inner being. Yes.

Higher self. The word doesn't matter. The word doesn't matter.

Thank you, Shireen and everybody at Borders. Thank you very much. Very alert.

So let's let's get into this chapter. You say that we can assume that the ego is at play whenever we feel superior or inferior to anyone else. Now, I know this is true.

When you see the person who's the biggest jerk out there, you know, people who act with such a sense of superiority and arrogance. I know that that is because they are really feeling inferior.

[Speaker 2] (1:44:49 - 1:44:50)

But still hard to deal with.

[Speaker 9] (1:44:50 - 1:44:50)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:44:51 - 1:45:06)

But what surprised me is that you say that often people who are also shy are also acting out of their egos. And you say whenever you feel superior or inferior to anyone, that's the ego in you. Why is that?

[Speaker 1] (1:45:07 - 1:45:19)

Well, if you're shy, then you're you're what I what you fear is to be found wanting. But so you're not you're there.

[Speaker 2] (1:45:19 - 1:45:22)

The fear is that the attention may take the form of disapproval or criticism.

[Speaker 1] (1:45:22 - 1:45:59)

Yes. You're afraid of that. So because you're afraid of that, whatever the disapproval or the criticism would represent an injury of your mentally mind made sense of self, which is the ego.

So it was the image that I have of myself as a capable person or whatever it is that I'm trying to uphold. If I if I encounter criticism, the ego immediately will be hurt. And so a shy person would not dare say anything because they're afraid of ego loss, afraid of ego loss.

[Speaker 2] (1:45:59 - 1:46:00)

Got it.

And so because sometimes that's mistaken for an egoless person, a person who's very it's not. And deep down inside the shy person or this person who is suffering from this sense of inferiority, there's a desire, the unexpressed desire to be superior. Wow.

And inside the person who acts superior, who seems to have a big confident ego, there's always the hidden fear that he might be inferior. And his whole acting out is to compensate for that hidden fear of being inferior.

OK, behind every positive self-concept is the hidden fear of not being good enough.

[Speaker 1] (1:46:38 - 1:46:39)

[Speaker 2] (1:46:39 - 1:46:51)

Behind every negative self-concept is the hidden desire of being the greatest or better than others. And where does self-esteem fit into all of that? Where is real self-esteem?

What would true self-esteem look like?

Well, first, there is the ego self-esteem, which is really even if you have high ego self-esteem, as we've just seen, there's always hidden fear underneath it. It's always there to compensate for that fear that you feel of not being good enough or perhaps failing. So you need to play a role of being big to compensate for the fear of failure that's deep down.

So that's but that's usually the world calls that he has. Yes, the world would say he or she has high self-esteem of people who have big egos. But the world doesn't realize that that's not true self-esteem.

True self-esteem goes much deeper. It's finding the source of power and aliveness deep inside. We talked about the lake realizing that within the depth of your being, there is that continuous source of intense aliveness and power, which is the stillness out of which everything comes.

The potential, the unexpressed potential for all form is there within every human being. You just have to become still.

[Speaker 2] (1:48:03 - 1:48:08)

So true self-esteem is realizing that that sense of being, that presence is there.

[Speaker 1] (1:48:08 - 1:48:10)

It comes out of the stillness.

That it comes out of the stillness. And that presence in me is the same as the presence in all people.

[Speaker 1] (1:48:14 - 1:48:15)

[Speaker 2] (1:48:15 - 1:48:22)

And when you recognize that and act from that space within yourself, that is when you have true self-esteem.

That's true self-esteem. And self-esteem then is not no longer derived from the belief that you are better than somebody else.

[Speaker 2] (1:48:29 - 1:48:38)

And so you are not attached to the labels or the roles that you play. And you speak about the many various roles that everybody has.

[Speaker 1] (1:48:38 - 1:48:51)

Yes. And then you're no longer devastated by criticism or get very angry when you're criticized as the ego does. The ego is either totally devastated when you get, or it gets very angry when it gets criticized the self-image.

But there's a role that most women in our society and all societies play is that role of mother, which is more than just a role. I mean, it's real. It's not just a role.

[Speaker 1] (1:49:05 - 1:49:52)

Yes. So we need to differentiate between the function that you need to fulfill in this world for a while. Right.

So if you have a child, your function is to be the mother and to fulfill the function of being the mother, which of course is looking after the child, sometimes set limits, what the child is allowed to do and so on. That's all fine. Now, if you become too identified with your function, then the function turns into a role.

And then you cannot let go of the role. And that gets stuck to you. And even when the child grows up and especially becomes a teenager, you still behave as if your child were small and you still try to control and try to protect when it's no longer appropriate.

I got it.

Because you're stuck with a role then. So sometimes when the children become adults, the adult children are still treated by their parents, parents who are stuck in the role of parents.

[Speaker 2] (1:50:05 - 1:50:06)

They can't let go of the role.

So they believe unconsciously that they need to continue to protect and ultimately control what the child does.

[Speaker 2] (1:50:14 - 1:50:16)

Because you don't parent a child the same at every age.

[Speaker 1] (1:50:16 - 1:50:17)

No.

[Speaker 2] (1:50:17 - 1:50:34)

Absolutely. And so they've lost sight of the function that they had as mother to be guide and to direct and to correct and to help and to protect. And they want to carry that into the future.

Yes. Because they are attached to the role.

[Speaker 1] (1:50:34 - 1:51:05)

Yes. OK. And it's not only when the when this when children grow up, even when the children already are still small.

Right. If you are completely identified with this role of mother, then also it can become obsessive. So you might become too controlling or overprotective.

Certain functions become overemphasized. You go too far in fulfilling these functions. So so what was good initially is looking after the child, protecting the child can become too much.

OK, I got it. I got it. Tonight, actress Jenny McCarthy is joining us.

Oh, yeah. Via Skype. Hey, Jenny.

Hi.

How are you? Do you know that when I was reading this book, Jenny, when I was reading my book, here it is. My book's all kind of torn up now.

When I was reading this book on page one oh four, I wrote when I read, as you look at, listen to touch or help your child with this so that you are alert, still completely present, not wanting anything other than that moment as it is. And this way you make room for being in that moment. You're present.

You're not a father, a mother. You are the alertness, the stillness. You are the being behind the doing.

I wrote Jenny McCarthy because that reminded me so much of what you had said about your function as a mother.

Yes, absolutely. You know, I read this book when it first came out, and that was one of my big wake up calls, realizing that when I was with Evan, all I needed to do was just be with Evan. And our relationship bloomed like you wouldn't believe the love connection was there.

He was getting fulfilled because he knew even when Evan wasn't able to speak, this was when Evan still wasn't able to use words energetically, he felt that I was with him, that I was being with him. And I'm so grateful, Eckhart, that you that you taught me that. So did you have a question or do you?

[Speaker 2] (1:52:34 - 1:52:35)

I do.

[Speaker 4] (1:52:35 - 1:53:35)

I do have a question. Okay, it's long, so bear with me. It's not that long, but bear with me.

One very common emotion that I have personally experienced and that I have seen in many mothers is this emotion called guilt. Mothers today experience a few different forms of guilt, and I'm going to explain three different versions where I'm sure mom's listening right now. One of them will say, that's my guilt.

Yeah. The first one is the nine to five working mom feels guilty for leaving her baby with the nanny all day. The second one is the stay-at-home mom feels guilty for getting bored playing with her, you know, her son or daughter all day long.

I mean, sometimes you can only play choo-choo so long and you can't do it anymore and you feel guilty for not wanting to do that. And the third, the last one being, and this one I can really connect to, the thousands of mothers I've met who have children with autism carry a huge amount of guilt with them. It's hard for me to get out, sorry.

Take your time. I haven't cried yet in one interview, so I'm sorry. But a huge amount of guilt that it's in some way their fault, our fault, that our child became autistic.

So my question is, can you offer some insight as to how we can look at things differently from a guilt that we carry as mothers?

[Speaker 2] (1:54:08 - 1:54:22)

Nine to five guilt, choo-choo guilt, and feeling guilty because your child has autism or whatever your child has, and that you are somehow responsible. Thanks, Jenny. That was so well said.

[Speaker 1] (1:54:22 - 1:54:56)

Thank you. Before I say anything, I read your book, while it was still in manuscript form. You gave it to me and I was very impressed by what you did with your child, the courage that you had, where other people would have succumbed and fallen into negativity or self-pity.

You were able to turn it all around and make it into something very positive, at the same time helping many other people, not helping your child, but helping many other people.

[Speaker 10] (1:54:57 - 1:54:58)

Thank you, Eckhart.

You still feel guilty, of course, that's the structure, even after all this wonderful work that you have done with your son. It's amazing, isn't it, that there are certain structures in the human mind that operate no matter how much good you do. They carry the structures, carry on playing themselves out, and they are part of the, what I call, not the content of the ego, but the structure of the ego.

So nobody could have done a better job than you with your boy, in addition helping many others writing that book, and yet you feel guilty. It's not that you feel guilty, there's a certain structure in the thought processes that produces the feeling of guilt. And the other two examples that you gave, there's the mother that has a job, nine to five, the child is with the nanny, and the mother feels guilty about that, cannot accept that this is how it is, and the other mother is at home playing with the child, feels guilty about not doing more in the world.

And so, whatever it is, if you don't tackle the, recognize the structure in your mind for what it is, then you will always believe that the answer to solving this question lies in the realm of content. In other words, content is the situation. So if I change the situation, perhaps I won't feel guilty anymore.

Then this would be, if you think that this so-called problem, it's not a real problem, it's a mind-created problem, if you believe that this problem can be solved on an external level by changing something that you do, it will not, because no matter what situation you go into, the guilt will come back, because in this world you are limited, you can't do everything. You either do this, or you do that, but you cannot be both at home and at work at the same time. So the mind, no matter what situation you go into, will bring up the same structures.

So unless you are very alert, and you recognize that these are egoic mind structures, nothing to do with content, then you realize that what the ego, one of the jobs of the ego is to blame others. Another job of the ego is to make yourself feel guilty. Both of these things strengthen your sense of identity, their negative senses of identity.

And the ego loves to have a strong sense of identity, and no sense of identity is stronger than a negative one, where you condemn yourself for something. And you can see, objectively speaking, it doesn't make sense to feel guilty in your case, and in many other people's cases.

Yes, because if you have to work 9 to 5 to provide for your child, and make, you know, a safe home for your child, and food on the table for your child...

You are doing the best you can. You are doing the best you can. And your mind doesn't, your mind works according to its old conditioning.

So recognize, when those thoughts come, recognize that these are not actual valid thoughts that are actually concern a true situation. They are thoughts generated by the ego. And if you can recognize them as thoughts generated by the ego, structural, not content-based, then in the moment of recognition, they begin to lose their power over you.

Wow. And they will try to come in. It's not, you can't do it just for once.

They will try to come in the next day.

[Speaker 2] (1:58:48 - 1:59:26)

Because you, Jenny, wrote that book. Obviously, I read the book too, because you were here, and shared the book, you know, with our audience. You, you know, refused to take no for an answer.

You fought for Evan. You did the best you knew how to do. And when you didn't know, you sought other answers to figure out the best to do.

So there is a part of you, the part of you that is really you, right, Eckhart? Yes. That knows that.

Yes. True? True, Jenny?

True. Absolutely. And that little crazy talk in your head is just that.

Crazy talk in your head. That's the correct expression. Yeah.

That crazy talk in your head. Yeah.

[Speaker 4] (1:59:27 - 1:59:35)

It really, I just had a huge awakening moment when he said that within me. So I get it. Absolutely.

That's a wow.

That's a wow. Thanks, Jenny.

[Speaker 4] (1:59:38 - 1:59:40)

That's a wow. Thank you both so much.

[Speaker 2] (1:59:40 - 1:59:42)

Say hello to my palsy-wowsy, Jim.

[Speaker 4] (1:59:42 - 1:59:43)

I will. He sends his love to you.

[Speaker 2] (1:59:43 - 2:00:00)

Yeah, he sent me flowers after he was on for Horton Hears Who and said- I know. I made him. Oh, you made him.

Okay. His note said, from your palsy-wowsy. Okay.

Thanks. Thanks a lot. Dion is calling now from Port of Spain, Trinidad.

Dion, what's your question?

[Speaker 6] (2:00:01 - 2:00:03)

Hi, Oprah. Hi, Eckhart. Nice talking to you.

[Speaker 2] (2:00:03 - 2:00:04)

Nice talking to you.

[Speaker 6] (2:00:05 - 2:00:24)

My question is, although I'm now aware of some of the roles that I've played, it's still really easy to slip back into them sometimes. And I'm at this stage where I recognize that I've been playing a role after the moment has passed. But I'd like to know, how do I recognize it in the moment before it happens, especially in those unexpected moments?

[Speaker 2] (2:00:25 - 2:00:27)

About playing a role, did you say?

[Speaker 6] (2:00:28 - 2:00:46)

Yes. Yes. So sometimes I'm aware of a role, but I'm only aware after the moment has passed that I've slipped back into some of the roles that I've recognized.

I'm just trying to figure out, how do I stay in the moment and recognize the role before it happens, so I don't slip back into the same role again? Okay.

Oh, yes. Well, this is a very common thing that happens to people as they grow in awareness. At first, the awareness does not reach many of the conditioned behavior patterns.

The awareness at first, and this applies to many, many people I've heard this so many times, people in whom the awareness begins to grow, this dimension that we call presence or awareness. At first, the awareness does not necessarily flow into all parts of their lives. There are certain behavior patterns that remain as they are, but the awareness comes in after they have happened.

So in this case, in an interaction that you have with other people, you play a certain conditioned role without knowing it. So you are the role. When it's over, and you go away from that situation, suddenly you realize, oh dear, I did it again.

I played that role again, whatever the role is. And that is how our awareness at first comes in, in many cases, after the event. And retrospectively, the presence or the awareness recognizes the old pattern after it's happened.

And what then tends to happen, and I believe this is going to happen to you because I've seen it in so many people, the time gap between the event and the awareness gets shorter. So what then happens is the old pattern operates still, you play the role, and immediately afterwards, you realize, oh, I played it again. But there was virtually no time gap anymore.

Immediately afterwards, you realize it.

So that means you're awakening.

[Speaker 1] (2:02:24 - 2:02:24)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:02:24 - 2:02:28)

You get closer and closer, so the time gap is shorter and shorter.

The next step, the next thing that happens is in the middle of playing a role, you suddenly realize, oh, I'm playing that role again. So the awareness has come in, you're still doing it, but then you know that you're doing it. An enormous difference.

So you're not just playing the role, there is the other dimension comes in at the time of playing the role or whatever the behavior pattern may be, and you realize, I'm doing it again. And that's wonderful, too. And the next step is, it's amazing, it's the same pattern as I've observed in thousands of people.

The next step is just before you are about to enter into some condition pattern like role playing, the awareness is there and you can feel the impulse inside you of wanting to play the role. And you can then say, I don't need to play that anymore.

[Speaker 2] (2:03:23 - 2:03:29)

Well, let's clarify what we mean by role playing. Thank you so much, Dionne from Port of Spain. Thank you.

Thank you.

[Speaker 1] (2:03:30 - 2:03:30)

Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (2:03:30 - 2:03:52)

Let's clarify what we mean by roles, because I think it's confusing to some people who say, well, listen, I am a doctor, I am a teacher, I am a lawyer, I am a store clerk, I am a that. Those are labels. And what is the difference between the job functions that we have and the so-called and roles, you know, and the roles that we play?

[Speaker 1] (2:03:53 - 2:04:35)

I met a woman, middle aged, and she talked to me in a certain way. And I asked, are you a school teacher? And she said, now, how did you know that I'm a school teacher?

So she was because she had already she talks to people as if she were talking to the children at school. OK, so and even when she said, how did you know she was pointing a finger? OK, OK.

You naughty boy. How did you know that? Yes.

Yes. Of course, that's how I knew it, because she had become completely identified with her function. So the role took her over.

She couldn't leave it. She couldn't leave her function behind after work, even inside her family. She behaved like a teacher.

You say when you adjust the way you interact based upon who you're talking to, you're playing a role.

Yes, that also. So do we talk to everyone the same? No.

Most people, if they but you need to have some power of self-observation, which is another one.

We talk to children differently.

[Speaker 1] (2:04:52 - 2:04:52)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:04:53 - 2:04:55)

Friends differently than we do a head of state.

[Speaker 1] (2:04:55 - 2:05:16)

Yes. Or the so-called important person and a so-called not important janitor in a building different than your boss. Yes.

And this is very interesting to observe in one's self because you need to observe it in yourself. Otherwise, you won't know that you're doing it. And you can only observe it in yourself if there's some awareness there that is outside of the role.

And is this why when you go to a party or you're in an event and you don't know people, the first thing you want to know is a friend of mine, Marlene, said to me who is taking our class every week. Hello, Marlene, that she was at a gathering recently and that she was trying to practice the principles of a new earth and that she was introducing herself around the table and she was doing that in such a way that she didn't talk about what she had done or accomplished or who she was married to or where she lived and that one of the people at the table said, we don't care about who you are. We want to know what you do.

We want to know what do you do. And what I realize is people want to know that so they can determine your so-called value.

[Speaker 9] (2:06:04 - 2:06:04)

[Speaker 2] (2:06:04 - 2:06:11)

And to see if you will be of value or yes, perhaps that or necessary.

[Speaker 1] (2:06:11 - 2:06:11)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:06:12 - 2:06:14)

For them to play the role with you.

[Speaker 1] (2:06:14 - 2:06:34)

Oh, yes. Enhance the ego or whether you might be a threat to the ego, whether they can use you or whether they need to be afraid of you or whether they want to have further contact in their circle. Yes.

And all these things. And then many judgments go through people's minds often when they meet somebody and they're automatic.

[Speaker 2] (2:06:34 - 2:06:43)

You observe what that is, what people mean by what do you do really, isn't it? For the most part, they want to say, what do you do? Let me place it in terms of.

[Speaker 1] (2:06:43 - 2:06:43)

[Speaker 2] (2:06:43 - 2:06:45)

How valuable that's going to be to you.

Now, when you don't play roles anymore, you don't have to become strange. And then when you go to parties and somebody asks you, what do you do? You say, I am.

[Speaker 2] (2:06:55 - 2:07:02)

Yes, I am. I am that I am. That is all that I am.

[Speaker 1] (2:07:02 - 2:07:14)

This is the basic truth. But you don't need to say that when you go to a party. You don't.

You can actually talk quite normally without being identified with what you say. If people ask me so.

[Speaker 2] (2:07:14 - 2:07:29)

So that's the essence of what you're trying to say to us in this chapter is that, of course, there are all roles that we are assigned or labels that we use to identify ourself. What you're saying is the problem is when you become completely identified.

[Speaker 1] (2:07:29 - 2:07:30)

Yes. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:07:30 - 2:07:32)

And you think that is who you are.

[Speaker 1] (2:07:32 - 2:07:45)

Yes. And you behave and act as if that were who you are. So you get trapped inside that that conditioned personality.

And whatever you do, then there's the personalities acting out.

You mention in the book where where you play the role of patient. And if you go to a doctor who's playing the role of doctor, he often doesn't see you, the person.

[Speaker 1] (2:07:54 - 2:07:55)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:07:55 - 2:07:56)

Because he's playing the role.

[Speaker 1] (2:07:56 - 2:08:25)

Yes. He has become so identified with his function that the function has taken him over and his has become a role. So and many patients can actually feel that when they go to a doctor, whether there's a human being still there or whether the doctor has become a role.

And so when the doctor has become a role, the the when you go to that doctor, you don't feel acknowledged anymore in your being. You feel he might be very competent as a doctor.

[Speaker 2] (2:08:25 - 2:08:26)

I know.

[Speaker 1] (2:08:26 - 2:08:36)

But something vital is lacking in the interaction. When you see a doctor, he might be the greatest expert in his field. It still doesn't help.

Something very vital is missing.

[Speaker 2] (2:08:36 - 2:08:47)

And everybody and you feel completely that happened to me recently where you feel completely dismissed and disconnected because he you're you're you're thinking he's just trying to get me out of here so he can get the next person in.

[Speaker 1] (2:08:47 - 2:08:47)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:08:47 - 2:08:47)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (2:08:48 - 2:08:52)

Now, if he does that to you, you can imagine what he does. That's a normal person.

[Speaker 2] (2:08:52 - 2:09:02)

Yeah. It's usually people treat me, treat me pretty. Anyway, Dimitri Skyping us from Moscow.

Hello.

[Speaker 3] (2:09:02 - 2:09:06)

Yes. Hi. Hello.

Hello. Hello.

[Speaker 2] (2:09:07 - 2:09:11)

Hi. What time is what time is it there? I'm always curious.

[Speaker 3] (2:09:12 - 2:09:16)

It's about five, 5 a.m. in the morning.

[Speaker 2] (2:09:16 - 2:09:20)

You're up early. Well, thank you. Thank you for joining us.

Your question.

[Speaker 3] (2:09:22 - 2:09:38)

I'd like to first thank you very much for your job. It's an unprecedented event when you spread consciousness all around the world. So thank you very much.

Thank you very much for selection for being there.

Thank you.

[Speaker 3] (2:09:39 - 2:10:26)

And my question is, you know, I do some movement exercises, very ancient ones, and they bring me to stillness. And so I experience stillness when I do this movements and I lose it when I come to my work. No, I do some pauses, breathings before I start my work.

But when I'm provoked, I'm getting into the power games, especially when I'm criticized. So can you recommend something in this? Thank you.

OK.

[Speaker 2] (2:10:27 - 2:10:31)

Yes. I like the way Dimitri breathe. Yes.

It was good.

[Speaker 3] (2:10:32 - 2:10:36)

It's so-called panoramic breath when you breathe in all surroundings.

[Speaker 1] (2:10:41 - 2:11:47)

So what would you recommend? Well, this is you are able to access that dimension of presence when you are not disturbed by external situations, when you are not being challenged. The ego is inactive at those times.

And when you go into ordinary work situations and so on, you begin to relate to people and immediately the ego with its old conditioning comes back and takes you over and you lose yourself in the roles you play and so on. So when do you know? Because we had a question earlier that talked about playing roles and becoming aware of the role playing afterwards, after the event.

Do you become aware at the end of the day or do you become aware in individual instances after like a few minutes after it's happened at work? At what point does the awareness come in?

It depends. If the situation is minor, I'm aware, I guess, five minutes after or maybe into the situation. But when I'm provoked deeply or, for instance, when I'm deeply criticized by my boss, I can be in this for a week and only on weekend when I do the movements to change the tense body position into the relaxed one, I can manage to understand, wow, yes, it was again.

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (2:12:20 - 2:14:29)

Another very helpful thing you can do is not just confine your presence practice to those periods at home, but bring in small, very brief moments of presence into your everyday life. For example, I don't work at work. No matter where you are, you may be sitting at a computer talking on the phone or whatever it is.

Let's I'll give you two or three examples. The phone rings. It wants to be answered.

Let it ring two more times than is necessary before you answer it. The phone rings. Normally you would pick it up, let it ring twice and be present while it rings.

Allow it to ring, but be there in your presence. Use it as a signal to tell you be present now. So that's one way of bringing a little bit of presence into an ordinary work situation.

Or you're at a computer, put a flower next to your computer and occasionally look away from the screen and look at the flower. It doesn't take long, just 20 seconds is fine, 30 seconds. Look at the flower and feel its aliveness inside you.

It helps you. Anything natural can bring you back into presence much more easily than things that are man-made. In our body, at work, when you find a moment, turn away from your desk or whatever it is and feel the aliveness.

Do your breathing, but not the whole thing, just for a few seconds. One conscious breath in and out is a meditation. You don't have to wait for your meditation until you get home.

Bring the meditation into the spaces, into your daily life, as many spaces as possible. That's what, otherwise, the mind has such momentum, the egoic mind, that it will drag you along and you will lose yourself in it. Bringing in small spaces.

[Speaker 2] (2:14:30 - 2:14:31)

Within your daily life.

[Speaker 1] (2:14:31 - 2:14:32)

Daily life.

[Speaker 2] (2:14:32 - 2:14:36)

Yeah. In addition to your panoramic breathing, Dimitri. Yes.

[Speaker 1] (2:14:37 - 2:15:14)

That's beautiful. And then you will find that in the midst of situations, the awareness is more likely to be there. And we've already, you may have listened to what I said to a previous questioner about becoming aware after falling back into old conditioned behaviors.

And you will experience the same thing, especially if you practice bringing these spaces of awareness into your daily life. Then you will find that gradually presence will be strong enough, even when the boss speaks to you and criticizes you.

[Speaker 2] (2:15:14 - 2:15:16)

Even when he's on the third ring.

[Speaker 1] (2:15:19 - 2:16:23)

So it's a gradual process where presence goes into every aspect of your life, gradually. It permeates your everyday life, because that's what is needed. Even if you were the greatest meditator and you could achieve sublime states twice a day at home when you meditate, it wouldn't help you if presence does not permeate every aspect of your life.

Yes. And because otherwise you'll be like the father who was doing in Buddhism, they have a meta meditation. It's called meditating on loving kindness.

So you sit there and say, I love all the people in this house. I love all the people in this city. I love all the people, all the people, all the people, all the people in this house be at peace, all the people in this city be at peace, all the people in this country be at peace.

And then the daughter comes in and says, dad, and the father says, leave me alone. Can't you see I'm doing loving kindness meditation?

Thank you, Dimitri. It goes back to what you were saying earlier. Can I sense my, what you said on page 79, this is in last week's chapter on core of ego.

Can I sense my essential beingness, the I am in the background of my life at all time? That's what you're saying to him. To be more accurate, can I sense the I am that I am at this moment?

Can I sense my essential identity as consciousness itself, even when my boss is yelling at me?

[Speaker 1] (2:16:53 - 2:17:01)

And then perhaps precisely in moments of greatest challenge, there's a greater intensity of presence.

[Speaker 2] (2:17:01 - 2:17:06)

Because those moments would be his most sacred moments, would they not be? That's how you know.

So it's when your greatest challenges become, instead of drawing you into unconscious reactions, when your greatest challenges intensify your presence, then that's how it works. That's the miracle. And that's how the beauty of this work.

[Speaker 2] (2:17:24 - 2:17:29)

Thank you again for Skyping us from Moscow. Thank you. Thank you very much.

[Speaker 3] (2:17:30 - 2:17:47)

I'd like to tell that I'm very familiar with your voice because I have some recordings of your talks. So your voice already permeated me. Thank you very much for bringing presence into the life of this planet.

Thank you. Thank you.

Thank you. I like all your books in the background there too, Dimitri. That's very nice.

So I want to look at some of the email questions, which there's a question from Grayson

Pleasant in California that says, since I've been an owner of a dog, I find myself so much more in the present. My question is, why am I naturally so much more present with an animal than I'm sometimes dealing with people?

Ah, yes. Well, the animal does not provoke thought activity because the dog is not thinking. When the dog looks at you, the dog is not thinking what kind of a person you are.

The dog is not judging you. The dog is at a state of consciousness prior to the arrival of thought. So the dog is, and that state has certain similarities with a state of presence, which is a state of going beyond thinking where we are going.

In both cases, if you are...

So in that way, the dogs are a little more enlightened than we are?

[Speaker 1] (2:18:41 - 2:18:47)

In some ways, the dogs are more connected with being than we are, than normal humans are.

[Speaker 2] (2:18:47 - 2:18:51)

Normal humans are. Because that's where they are all the time.

[Speaker 1] (2:18:51 - 2:19:04)

Yes. And I sometimes call them dogs and cats, particularly because that's the pets that for millions of humans are very important in their lives. Right.

I call them guardians of being.

[Speaker 2] (2:19:05 - 2:19:06)

Guardians of being.

[Speaker 1] (2:19:06 - 2:19:22)

Because for many people, they fulfill that function. For many people who are so lost in their minds, so much involved in their thought processes, the only moments they have when they are not trapped in that is when they are relating to their animal, their pet.

All right. I have to get to this quote. Well, I'll get to that in a moment.

You say that the role of the parent should not be to spare children from all suffering. Why not?

[Speaker 1] (2:19:36 - 2:19:54)

Because first of all, you can't. It would be futile to even attempt. Of course, you protect the child as much as you can.

But every human being has to go through a certain amount of suffering. You cannot come to this planet and avoid suffering.

Because that's what being a human being is.

[Speaker 1] (2:19:58 - 2:19:58)

There's some discord.

[Speaker 1] (2:20:01 - 2:20:19)

Yes. And that is how we grow. If there were a human being that could have avoided all suffering, that human being would be totally superficial and totally identified with the external form of things because it's suffering that drives you deeper, drives you within what you need to find.

[Speaker 2] (2:20:20 - 2:20:22)

And by suffering, do you mean not getting what we want?

Well, that's one form of suffering, too. There are different forms of suffering. Many forms of suffering, of course, are generated by the ego itself.

These are ultimately unnecessary forms of suffering.

[Speaker 10] (2:20:37 - 2:20:37)

Right.

[Speaker 1] (2:20:37 - 2:20:44)

But they don't they are necessary for as long as you are unconscious. And another word for suffering would be challenges or difficulties.

[Speaker 2] (2:20:45 - 2:20:45)

Correct.

[Speaker 1] (2:20:45 - 2:20:47)

Yes. Yes. Challenges.

[Speaker 2] (2:20:47 - 2:20:50)

So you can't be a human being without being challenged.

[Speaker 1] (2:20:51 - 2:21:47)

No, that would be you would miss the whole purpose for being here. So you need to see even your children will not escape. They will soon or later and usually sooner than later.

They will encounter their form of suffering, whatever it is. You protect them as much as you can. But when you see certain things are inevitable, they may do things, unconscious behavior.

They may generate their own suffering, self-generated, or it may happen to them from the outside. But no matter what, it will happen. And then rather than going into intense anguish, see this is human suffering.

And every human, you had to go through your forms of suffering. In my case, for example, I had my parents were had very heavy pain bodies. There was constant conflict at home.

And that was my constant suffering.

Pain body. That's next week.

[Speaker 1] (2:21:49 - 2:21:49)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:21:49 - 2:21:50)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (2:21:50 - 2:21:51)

We'll talk about that. Okay.

No, finish the sentence. I just wanted to say.

So this, of course, not only applies to children, it also applies to other people that may be close to you and going through their suffering. You do what you can to help them. Whatever you can.

The important thing is that you don't go into anguish yourself because by going into anxiety and anguish yourself, you're not helping them at all. Because whatever state you are in transmits itself to others.

How does playing a role at work keep us from being powerful?

[Speaker 1] (2:22:30 - 2:22:57)

Well, if you play a role at work, you always have a secondary motive in what you do because the ego is at work. You are not totally focused on the task at hand because there is some self-interest there. You want to protect yourself.

You want to get credit for yourself. You want to perhaps eliminate other people around you, or perhaps you want to use other people for your own purposes.

A lot of times this happens when people get promoted to supervisors.

[Speaker 1] (2:23:00 - 2:23:00)

[Speaker 2] (2:23:00 - 2:23:20)

You know, they were really good in whatever position they had, and then they get promoted to supervisors, have a little more power, means they're not just now functioning at work for themselves, but now they're over other people. And a little bit of power goes to their heads, and before you know it, trouble.

That's absolutely right. And that's the ego. If you have a position of little power, then the ego is kind of there in potential.

It's latent as far as your work situation is concerned. The similar situation you have in certain third world countries where often you find a revolution overthrows the government, and the people who initiate the revolution have the best intentions they want. Eventually they want to do away with corruption.

They want the best for their country. The moment they get into power, the latent ego in them, although they had good intentions, comes up and they repeat the same dysfunction that they wanted to do away with.

Happens all the time.

[Speaker 1] (2:24:06 - 2:24:06)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:24:07 - 2:24:20)

All right. Charlie lives in Stockholm. Charlie, you were on earlier today.

We Skyped you up on the open word show earlier. Well, you've been up a long time. I hear you have a question about raising your three-year-old daughter.

Go ahead.

I do have a question about that. A lot of it, I guess, has been answered just by listening to tonight's show. But the question about her is, how do you stay present when you're trying to discipline your child and she starts screaming and shouting?

And she's only three, so I can't really explain to her that it's really your ego that's coming out. And I feel like she's learning these roles. I guess my question is, I want to raise her as a more conscious human being.

I don't want her to be awakened at the age of 35 like me. How do you raise a more conscious child? And how do you stay more conscious when you're dealing with conflict?

Because I don't want to set a negative pattern for when she's 16 and she wants to borrow the car, for example.

Yes, yes. I would suggest that you pay, first of all, pay more attention to your inner state than to what is happening to your daughter. Because I believe you experience, perhaps, your daughter causing you feelings of anxiety sometimes.

Yeah, right on.

You believe that. Now, that seems to be the case, that your daughter, by going through certain kinds of behavior, causes you feelings of anxiety. But ultimately, that is not the case.

You cause yourself the feelings of anxiety. When your daughter refuses to eat, she's not making you anxious. Only you can do that.

So it is vital what state of consciousness you are in, what emotional state you are in, when you are relating to your daughter. Because if you're often in a state of anxiety, you get into a vicious circle. The anxiety that you believe was caused by your daughter's behavior, but is ultimately caused by your reaction to your daughter's behavior, that anxiety then will affect her.

And that is a nervous energy field that will provoke further so-called bad behavior in her. Because children absorb...

[Speaker 2] (2:26:39 - 2:26:44)

I was going to say, a three-year-old is absorbing that and picking up that energy more than even your language.

[Speaker 1] (2:26:44 - 2:26:45)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:26:45 - 2:26:47)

They're picking up the energy that you carry.

[Speaker 1] (2:26:47 - 2:26:48)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:26:48 - 2:26:49)

Right. Yes. Yes.

[Speaker 1] (2:26:49 - 2:28:32)

Because that is their language. That's right. And so your first realization needs to...

your first interest needs to be in any situation with your child, okay, there's the external situation, there's what the child is doing, or is not doing, but should be doing, or screaming, or whatever it is, or not eating, not wanting to go to bed, whatever children do. But your first interest needs to be, okay, what's my inner state right now? Am I accepting this moment, no matter what form it is?

Am I saying that's... what I suggest is the little mantra that I recommend, is to ask yourself whether you can be there as the space for whatever your daughter does. Can I be the space for this?

This is a general thing that many people will find helpful, no matter what situation you go into in life, at work, at home, wherever. The present moment, am I able to accept this moment as it is, or am I saying, this should be different, you should behave differently, but she's not behaving differently, she's behaving the way she's behaving right now. You need to accept that right now, she's screaming, if that's what she does, there it is.

Can I be the space for that? And then you see her screaming. Another, this is related to the little exercise we had earlier, where you felt yourself becoming transparent to an irritating external situation, so that you don't have a reactive barrier inside you.

[Speaker 2] (2:28:32 - 2:29:00)

That's hard to do though, when your child is screaming, because your immediate instinct, I would think, is to stop the child from screaming, to resist the screaming, to try to prevent more screaming, and so the resistance of that, the angst and the anxiety of that, creates more screaming. Because if you could just be calm enough to allow your calmness to then calm the child, that's easier said than done.

[Speaker 1] (2:29:00 - 2:29:53)

Yes, that's your spiritual practice, you don't need any other spiritual practice for the next few years. It's far better than going to a monastery and meditate all day long. It's much more effective making that into your spiritual practice, and then you will see as you become more peaceful and more accepting of the present moment, more being the space, then that will transmit itself to the child and affect the child, and the child will absorb your emanation, your energetic vibrational frequency, and the change will happen in that way, rather than feeling that I need to change her. The change happens when you change.

Yeah, that is to prevent her, but that is to not allow her to do things that are dangerous, or to, you know, he's not saying that, but he's saying about adjusting the way you are being, capital B, with her. Yes. Capital B.

Yes. Thank you.

[Speaker 5] (2:30:09 - 2:30:13)

Thank you so much, and thank you so much for doing this web seminar. I hope you do more.

[Speaker 2] (2:30:13 - 2:30:25)

Well, thank you. Thank you so much. It's a way of being present for any situation, and what you were saying is we can apply it not just to children, but to all situations.

Any situation, and it's usually the case the most, in some people's lives, they have a variety of little challenges, but there's other people who have one predominant difficulty in their lives, whether it's another person, whether it's a health situation, or whether it's a work situation, or a financial problem, they have one huge challenge in their lives, and usually one would consider this huge challenge in your life as your greatest enemy, almost, the greatest burden, or as Christians would call it, my cross.

To bear. To bear. Yeah.

Now, this can actually be turned around, and you can make that very thing that is considered your great... Your cross to bear. You can make that into your greatest help on the spiritual path, because it's precisely there that you can, if you can bring acceptance to that, and be the space for that situation, that is usually called, would usually be called bad by the mind, but it is.

You can't argue with that. This is the situation right now. Can I be the space for that?

Then that situation takes you into surrender and into presence.

So that, you know, so many people, when they were first talking about purchasing this book on the website, I saw a lot of messages from people saying, I hope this, you know, shows me my life purpose. I want to awaken to my life's purpose, and for a lot of people, they want that to be something grand. They want it to be, you know, saving starving children in India and Africa.

They want it to be some, you know, great description or something, but what you're saying is, is that if we allow ourselves to be fully present with whatever our chosen function is in life, and whatever difficulties might arise, that there is sacredness in the difficulty.

[Speaker 1] (2:32:26 - 2:32:26)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:32:26 - 2:32:27)

If we allow it to be.

[Speaker 1] (2:32:28 - 2:32:45)

Yes, and be fully present with whatever it, the situation is now. Yes. And then go from there.

So, because then your inner self changes, when you're fully present with the situation, you're no longer putting up internal resistance to life.

[Speaker 2] (2:32:45 - 2:32:54)

Even if there is that thing that you call, there's something that you call background happiness, there's something that happened or needs to happen, or someone who did something.

[Speaker 1] (2:32:54 - 2:32:55)

Yes, background unhappiness.

[Speaker 2] (2:32:55 - 2:33:17)

Background unhappiness. There's something that happened or needs it. He refers to that on page 114, everybody.

There's something that needs to happen in my life before I can be at peace. Something happened in the past that should not have happened. Something is happening now that should not be happening.

How do we make peace with the background unhappiness of our lives?

[Speaker 1] (2:33:17 - 2:33:51)

Yes, you recognize the background unhappiness as not a content base, but as structural. It's the structure of the egoic mind to create that. We had the same when Jenny asked her question.

Right. We had the similar thing. The guilt feelings that she had was part of the background structure of the ego.

And no matter what situation, if you haven't tackled or recognized the structure of the ego in yourself as certain thought forms that repeat themselves, no matter what situation you go into, they will come up in some new form, but basically the same structure.

I got it. I got it. So the secret to happiness, you say, there's so many people were writing about this on the web.

[Speaker 9] (2:34:00 - 2:34:00)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:34:01 - 2:34:48)

The secret to happiness, everybody. Page 115. There are three words that convey the secret of the art of living, the secret of all success and happiness.

One with life being one with life is being one with now. You say you then realize that you don't live your life, but life lives you. Life is the dancer and you are the dance.

I have to tell you, I love this book, but I was like, gee, I thought life was the was the dance and I was the dancer. And there are a lot of people on on the web who are saying the same thing. Can you explain how life is the dancer and we are the dance?

Why aren't we the dancer?

You are not separate from life. So whatever any form is a dancer, life is dancing the dance of form. One could say every human being and everything that's exists is part of the dance of life.

That which moves you, the very consciousness that animates your being, that animates every cell of your body, that produces thoughts too, the very consciousness that you are is the one universal, the one life. And that permeates everything. So the entire universe is permeated by that consciousness, by life, which is another word for God.

God. I don't see God as an entity that is in a particular place somewhere, but as the essence, the intelligence, the animating life essence behind all life forms. It's the eternal.

The totality.

[Speaker 9] (2:35:50 - 2:35:50)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:35:50 - 2:36:02)

It's the totality. You see God. You're saying that God is your idea of God is the totality of the essence of all life form.

[Speaker 1] (2:36:03 - 2:36:46)

Yes. And ultimately you are not separate from that. It's the egoic mind that says my life.

The moment you say my life, you've already separated yourself from life. It's a thought. You have a thought to say, this is my life.

And then you think, oh, I can lose my life. I am not separate from life because I am life. It's only through the structure of language that you create the illusion of separation.

The dog still knows on a primordial level, the animal, the tree knows that it is one with life. So it doesn't have this fear of death and it doesn't see itself as separate from the rest of the universe.

[Speaker 2] (2:36:46 - 2:36:49)

So let me ask you the big question. You have no fear of death?

[Speaker 1] (2:36:49 - 2:37:01)

No. No. The ego has dissolved.

And so only the ego fears death. I know there is no death. You know there is no death.

Okay. Tell me how.

I have a little thing at the end of this chapter.

I know you say the incontrovertible proof of immortality. I read that and I went, okay.

[Speaker 1] (2:37:16 - 2:38:09)

I've done a little thing I did there. Usually when people talk about immortality, they use certain arguments, perhaps from physics. They say the energy gets never is destroyed.

Energy can only become transformed. So the vital energy that is your life, because energy cannot be destroyed, must survive in some form. That's often the argument for the survival of that life.

There is no death, only the form dissolves. That's one way you can approach it. But what I thought I'd do, I look at the structure of this sentence of language that says my life, or I have a life, because most people believe that they have a life.

And they also believe that they can lose their life. Now, if you look at that sentence and say, I can lose my life, then I am separate from life.

So there is no such thing as my life, you say at the end of this chapter, page 128.

[Speaker 1] (2:38:15 - 2:38:32)

Because I am life. I am not separate from life. I am an expression of the one life, a temporary expression in this form of the one timeless and formless life.

So I don't have a life because I am life, expressing itself as this form.

[Speaker 2] (2:38:32 - 2:38:59)

OPRAH WINFREY Okay. So what happens when you, two weeks ago, talked about your mother and father lying in the casket, and you realized that the life force or formlessness, that they were lying in the casket and there were these bodies, but they were not there. They were not there.

So we're not our bodies. We do know that. Everybody who's reading this book knows.

We're not our bodies. We do get that.

[Speaker 1] (2:38:59 - 2:39:37)

OLE GROSSMAN Yes. And once you can actually sense that, it's not just a belief. You can also see that you're not your body, even if you just approach it logically and see that when there's a dead body, then that being is not there anymore.

There's only the flesh and the bones. And when the being isn't there anymore, the flesh and the bones very quickly dissolve. When the animating presence isn't there anymore, all the atoms and molecules separate and go their own way, because the animating presence is not there anymore.

OPRAH WINFREY Okay. So continuing here, so there's no such thing as my life, and I don't have a life. I am life.

I and life are one. It cannot be otherwise. So how could I lose my life?

How can I lose something that I don't have in the first place? How can I lose something that I am? It is impossible.

So what is happening here is I just got it, hello, hello, hello, bing, bing, bing, bing. I got it. We are confusing the I am life force with our bodies.

We're confusing that. So when this dies and becomes the shell and dissipates and the atoms go wherever they go, back into the ground, ashes to ashes, dust to dust, we are confusing that which is the physical form, the human, we're confusing that with the being. And they are separate.

[Speaker 1] (2:40:40 - 2:41:49)

Yes. So another way, if you don't like the word life, you can say the universe. People believe that I am here, and there's the rest of the universe.

And they believe I have come into this universe. They don't know from where. I've come into this universe.

It would be more appropriate to feel that you have come out of this universe, because you are this universe experiencing itself very briefly as a human, as a human, as a human. I got that. And so it wants to do that.

I got that. It's wonderful when you realize there's more to you than a person. You are the universe expressing, expressing itself.

Yes. And experiencing as a human, as a human. And it's called Eckhart.

Yes. For a little while, for a little while. And then it goes through other experiences.

And then where do we go, Eckhart? Could you tell us that? Well, let's see what happens.

Otherwise, you take the fun out of it. If you knew the rest of your life, already the fun would be taken out of it.

Oh, okay. All right. Well, before we say goodbye, I know there's lots we did not get to in this chapter.

We could have spent, you know, two or three weeks on this one chapter. But what would you say is the essence of this chapter? The essence of this chapter?

Yeah. The role-playing chapter. What I said in the beginning, that we're humans and beings.

And in this body, trying to combine, trying to live through the two.

[Speaker 1] (2:42:17 - 2:42:51)

Yes. It's balancing the human and the being, so that you can be function in this world of form, where you have to do things and fulfill your function. At the same time, not lose yourself in that.

Be rooted in the depth of being, so that you're not lost in form. So there's a depth to you and rootedness in that stillness, that aliveness. And then from there, you function out here.

And there's always then a peace in the background. A peace in the background. No matter what's happening out there.

And most particularly, not to be attached to, defined by, the roles that we play in life and realize what they are. Just roles.

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:43:02 - 2:43:03)

Yes. Yes.

[Speaker 1] (2:43:03 - 2:43:13)

And relinquish the role when it's not required anymore. When your children grow up, you don't need to be a mother or father. You don't need to play that role anymore.

[Speaker 2] (2:43:13 - 2:43:18)

See, so many people think that is who they are. And so when their children grow up, they don't know who they are anymore.

Yes. Can be a crisis. Or people retire.

That's right. They had identified.

[Speaker 2] (2:43:23 - 2:43:24)

And they were their job.

Yes. And then, who am I?

[Speaker 2] (2:43:26 - 2:43:29)

Yeah, you were talking about in Japan, where it used to be, you kept your job for life.

[Speaker 1] (2:43:29 - 2:43:30)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:43:30 - 2:43:34)

And you were sharing with us the last time about a man who committed suicide.

[Speaker 1] (2:43:34 - 2:43:42)

There's been many cases of people in Japan who lost their jobs and committed suicide, because they were so identified. Their company was their sense of self.

Well, fascinating. I want to thank all of you around the world for making this really a remarkable experience, for making it possible. Eckhart and I will be here again next Monday at 8 p.m. Tell all your friends. Share the book with them. If they say, I don't get it, that's OK. That's really OK.

That's OK. They'll have the book and maybe pick it up a year from now, two years from now, 10 years from now. This fourth class will be available on demand starting tomorrow, just like all the other classes, for free here at Oprah.com.

And if you want to download a podcast of any of our classes, you can also do that tomorrow at Oprah.com and at iTunes. Your homework assignment for this week is to update your workbook. Next week, it's the chapter many of you have been waiting for, Chapter 5, The Pain Body.

The Pain Body. If you feel burdened by your past, begin to learn how to lighten that load. That's going to be really very exciting.

Now, many of you have been asking about our new Earth theme music. The song is called We Are One Earth, and it was produced by Harpo Sounds, our in-house music label. Beginning tomorrow, it will be available as a free download on iTunes at Oprah.com.

So enjoy it, those of you who've asked us for it. This was fun. This was fun.

And so let's just wait to see what happens. Let's just wait to see what happens. Thank you so much.

See you in class next week. Bye, everybody.

2008-Eckhart Tolle Oprah A New Earth Audiobook Podcast Chapter05

[Speaker 1] (0:00 - 55:27)

CHAPTER FIVE THE PAIN BODY The greater part of most people's thinking is involuntary, automatic, and repetitive. It is no more than a kind of mental static and fulfils no real purpose. Strictly speaking, you don't think.

Thinking happens to you. The statement, I think, implies volition. It implies that you have a say in the matter, that there's choice involved on your part.

For most people, this is not yet the case. I think is just as false a statement as I digest or I circulate my blood. Digestion happens, circulation happens, thinking happens.

The voice in the head has a life of its own. Most people are at the mercy of that voice. They are possessed by thought, by the mind.

And since the mind is conditioned by the past, you are then forced to re-enact the past again and again. The eastern term for this is karma. When you are identified with that voice, you don't know this, of course.

If you knew it, you would no longer be possessed because you are only truly possessed when you mistake the possessing entity for who you are, that is to say, when you become it. For thousands of years, humanity has been increasingly mind-possessed, failing to recognize the possessing entity as not-self. Through complete identification with the mind, a false sense of self, the ego, came into existence.

The density of the ego depends on the degree to which you, the consciousness, are identified with your mind, with thinking. Thinking is no more than a tiny aspect of the totality of consciousness, the totality of who you are. The degree of identification with the mind differs from person to person.

Some people enjoy periods of freedom from it, however brief, and the peace, joy and aliveness they experience in those moments make life worth living. These are also the moments when creativity, love and compassion arise. Others are constantly trapped in the egoic state.

They are alienated from themselves as well as from others and the world around them. When you look at them, you may see the tension in their face, perhaps a furrowed brow, or the absent or staring expression in their eyes. Most of their attention is absorbed by thinking, and so they don't really see you, and they are not really listening to you.

They are not present in any situation, their attention being either in the past or future, which, of course, exist only in the mind as thought-forms. Or they relate to you through some kind of role they play, and so are not themselves. Most people are alienated from who they are, and some are alienated to such a degree that the way they behave and interact is recognized as phony by almost everyone, except those who are equally phony, equally alienated from who they are.

Alienation means you don't feel at ease in any situation, any place or with any person, not even with yourself. You are always trying to get home, but never feel at home. Some of the greatest writers of the twentieth century, such as Franz Kafka, Albert Camus, T.

S. Eliot and James Joyce, recognized alienation as the universal dilemma of human existence, probably felt it deeply within themselves, and so were able to express it brilliantly in their works. They don't offer a solution, their contribution is to show us a reflection of the human predicament, so that we can see it more clearly.

To see one's predicament clearly is a first step towards going beyond it. The Birth of Emotion In addition to the movement of thought, although not entirely separate from it, there is another dimension to the ego, emotion. This is not to say that all thinking and all emotion are of the ego.

They turn into ego only when you identify with them, and they take you over completely, that is to say, when they become I. The physical organism, your body, has its own intelligence, as does the organism of every other life form. And that intelligence reacts to what your mind is saying, reacts to your thoughts.

So emotion is the body's reaction to your mind. The body's intelligence is, of course, an inseparable part of universal intelligence, one of its countless manifestations. It gives temporary cohesion to the atoms and molecules that make up your physical organism.

It is the organizing principle behind the workings of all the organs of the body, the conversion of oxygen and food into energy, the heartbeat and circulation of the blood, the immune system that protects the body from invaders, the translation of sensory input into nerve impulses that are sent to the brain, decoded there, and reassembled into a coherent inner picture of outer reality. All these, as well as thousands of other simultaneously occurring functions, are coordinated perfectly by that intelligence. You don't run your body.

The intelligence does. It also is in charge of the organism's responses to its environment. Any life form, it is the same intelligence that brought the plant into physical form and then manifests as the flower that comes out of the plant, the flower that opens its petals in the morning to receive the rays of the sun and closes them at night-time.

It is the same intelligence that manifests as Gaia, the complex living being that is planet earth. This intelligence gives rise to instinctive reactions of the organism to any threat or challenge. It produces responses in animals that appear to be akin to human emotions, anger, fear, pleasure.

These instinctive responses could be considered primordial forms of emotion. In certain situations, human beings experience instinctive responses in the same way that animals do. In the face of danger, when the survival of the organism is threatened, the heart beats faster, the muscles contract, breathing becomes rapid in preparation for fight or flight.

Primordial fear. When being cornered, a sudden flare-up of intense energy gives strength to the body that it didn't have before. Primordial anger.

These instinctive responses appear akin to emotions, but are not emotions in the true sense of the word. The fundamental difference between an instinctive response and an emotion is this. An instinctive response is the body's direct response to some external situation.

An emotion, on the other hand, is the body's response to a thought. Indirectly, an emotion can also be a response to an actual situation or event, but it will be a response to the event seen through the filter of a mental interpretation, the filter of thought, that is to say, through the mental concepts of good and bad, like and dislike, me and mine. For example, it is likely you won't feel any emotion when you are told that someone's car has been stolen, but when it is your car, you will probably feel upset.

It is amazing how much emotion a little concept like my can generate. Although the body is very intelligent, it cannot tell the difference between an actual situation and a thought. It reacts to every thought as if it were a reality.

It doesn't know it is just a thought. To the body, a worrisome, fearful thought means, I'm in danger, and it responds accordingly, even though you may be lying in a warm and comfortable bed at night. The heart beats faster, muscles contract, breathing becomes rapid.

There's a buildup of energy, but since the danger is only a mental fiction, the energy has no outlet. Part of it is fed back to the mind and generates even more anxious thought. The rest of the energy turns toxic and interferes with the harmonious functioning of the body.

Emotions and the Ego The ego is not only the unobserved mind, the voice in the head which pretends to be you, but also the unobserved emotions that are the body's reaction to what the voice in the head is saying. We have already seen what kind of thinking the egoic voice engages in most of the time, and the dysfunction inherent in the structure of its thought processes, regardless of content. This dysfunctional thinking is what the body reacts to with negative emotion.

The voice in the head tells a story that the body believes in and reacts to. Those reactions are the emotions. The emotions, in turn, feed energy back to the thoughts that created the emotion in the first place.

This is the vicious circle between unexamined thoughts and emotions, giving rise to emotional thinking and emotional story-making. The emotional component of ego differs from person to person. In some egos it is greater than in others.

Thoughts that trigger emotional responses in the body may sometimes come so fast that before the mind has had time to voice them, the body has already responded with an emotion, and the emotion has turned into a reaction. Those thoughts exist at a pre-verbal stage and could be called unspoken, unconscious assumptions. They have their origin in a person's past conditioning, usually from early childhood.

People cannot be trusted, would be an example of such an unconscious assumption in a person whose primordial relationships that is to say with parents or siblings were not supportive and did not inspire trust. Here are a few more common unconscious assumptions. Nobody respects and appreciates me.

I need to fight to survive. There is never enough money. Life always lets you down.

I don't deserve abundance. I don't deserve love. Unconscious assumptions create emotions in the body which in turn generate mind activity and or instant reactions.

In this way they create your personal reality. Your continuously disrupts the body's natural state of well-being. Almost every human body is under a great deal of strain and stress, not because it is threatened by some external factor, but from within the mind.

The body has an ego attached to it and it cannot but respond to all the dysfunctional thought patterns that make up the ego. Thus a stream of negative emotion accompanies the stream of incessant and compulsive thinking. What is a negative emotion?

An emotion that is toxic to the body and interferes with its balance and harmonious functioning. Fear, anxiety, anger, bearing a grudge, sadness, hatred or intense dislike, jealousy, envy all disrupt the energy flow through the body, affect the heart, the immune system, digestion, production of hormones and so on. Even mainstream medicine, although it knows very little about how the ego operates yet, is beginning to recognize the connection between negative emotional states and physical disease.

An emotion that does harm to the body also infects the people you come into contact with and indirectly, through a process of chain reaction, countless others you never meet. There is a generic term for all negative emotions. Unhappiness.

Do positive emotions then have the opposite effect on the physical body? Do they strengthen the immune system, invigorate and heal the body? They do indeed.

But we need to differentiate between positive emotions that are ego generated and deeper emotions that emanate from your natural state of connectedness with being. Positive emotions generated by the ego already contain within themselves their opposite into which they can quickly turn. Here are some examples.

What the ego calls love is possessiveness and addictive clinging that can turn into hate within a second. Anticipation about an upcoming event, which is the ego's over-valuation of future, easily turns into its opposite, let down or disappointment, when the event is over or doesn't fulfill the ego's expectations. Praise and recognition make you feel alive and happy one day.

Being criticized or ignored make you dejected and unhappy the next. The pleasure of a wild party turns into bleakness and a hangover the next morning. There is no good without bad, no high without low.

Ego generated emotions are derived from the mind's identification with external factors which are, of course, all unstable and liable to change at any moment. The deeper emotions are not real emotions at all but states of being. Emotions exist within the realm of opposites.

States of being can be obscured but they have no opposite. They emanate from within you as the love, joy and peace that are aspects of your true nature. The duck with a human mind.

In The Power of Now I mentioned my observation that after two ducks get into a fight, which never lasts long, they will separate and float off in opposite directions. Then each duck will flap its wings vigorously a few times, thus releasing the surplus energy that built up during the fight. After they flap their wings, they float on peacefully as if nothing had ever happened.

If the duck had a human mind, it would keep the fight alive by thinking, by story-making. This would probably be the duck's story. I don't believe what he just did.

He came to within five inches of me. He thinks he owns this pond. He has no consideration for my private space.

I'll never trust him again. Next time he'll try something else just to annoy me. I'm sure he's plotting something already.

But I'm not going to stand for this. I'll teach him a lesson he won't forget. And on and on the mind spins its tails, still thinking and talking about it days, months or years later.

As far as the body is concerned, the fight is still continuing, and the energy it generates in response to all those thoughts is emotion, which in turn generates more thinking. This becomes the emotional thinking of the ego. You can see how problematic the duck's life would become if it had a human mind.

But this is how most humans live all the time. No situation or event is ever really finished. The mind and the mind-mate, me and my story, keep it going.

We are a species that has lost its way. Everything natural, every flower or tree, and every animal have important lessons to teach us if we would only stop, look and listen. Our duck's lesson is this.

Flap your wings, which translates as let go of the story, and return to the only place of power, the present moment. The inability or rather unwillingness of the human mind to let go of the past is beautifully illustrated in the story of two Zen monks, Tanzan and Eikido, who were walking along a country road that had become extremely muddy after heavy rains. Near a village they came upon a young woman who was trying to cross the road, but the mud was so deep it would have ruined the silk kimono she was wearing.

Tanzan at once picked her up and carried her to the other side. The monks walked on in silence. Five hours later, as they were approaching the lodging temple, Eikido couldn't restrain himself any longer.

''Why did you carry that girl across the road?'' he asked. ''We monks are not supposed to do things like that.'' ''I put the girl down hours ago,'' said Tanzan. ''Are you still carrying her?

Now imagine what life would be like for someone who lived like Eikido all the time, unable or unwilling to let go internally of situations, accumulating more and more stuff inside, and you get a sense of what life is like for the majority of people on our planet. What a heavy burden of past they carry around with them in their minds. The past lives in you as memories, but memories in themselves are not a problem.

In fact, it is through memory that we learn from the past and from past mistakes. It is only when memories, that is to say, thoughts about the past, take you over completely that they turn into a burden, turn problematic, and become part of your sense of self. Your personality, which is conditioned by the past, then becomes your present.

Your memories are invested with a sense of self, and your story becomes who you perceive yourself to be. This little me is an illusion that obscures your true identity as timeless and formless presence. Your story, however, consists not only of mental but also of emotional memory, old emotion that is being revived continuously.

As in the case of the monk who carried the burden of his resentment for five hours by feeding it with his thoughts, most people carry a large amount of unnecessary baggage, both mental and emotional, throughout their lives. They limit themselves through grievances, regret, hostility, guilt. Their emotional thinking has become their self, and so they hang on to the old emotion because it strengthens their identity.

Because of the human tendency to perpetuate old emotion, almost everyone carries in his or her energy field an accumulation of old emotional pain, which I call the pain body. We can, however, stop adding to the pain body that we already have. We can learn to break the habit of accumulating and perpetuating old emotion by flapping our wings, metaphorically speaking, and refrain from mentally dwelling on the past, regardless of whether something happened yesterday or thirty years ago.

We can learn not to keep situations or events alive in our minds, but to return our attention continuously to the pristine, timeless present moment rather than be caught up in mental movie-making. Our very presence then becomes our identity, rather than our thoughts and emotions. Nothing ever happened in the past that can prevent you from being present now.

And if the past cannot prevent you from being present now, what power does it have, individual and collective? Any negative emotion that is not fully faced and seen for what it is in the moment it arises does not completely dissolve. It leaves behind a remnant of pain.

Children in particular find strong negative emotions too overwhelming to cope with and tend to try not to feel them. In the absence of a fully conscious adult who guides them with love and compassionate understanding into facing the emotion directly, choosing not to feel it is indeed the only option for the child at that time. Unfortunately, that early defense mechanism usually remains in place when the child becomes an adult.

The emotion still lives in him or her unrecognized and manifests indirectly, for example as anxiety, anger, outbursts of violence, a mood, or even as a physical illness. In some cases it interferes with or sabotages every intimate relationship. Most psychotherapists have met patients who claimed initially to have had a totally happy childhood, and later the opposite turned out to be the case.

Those may be the more extreme cases. But nobody can go through childhood without suffering emotional pain. Even if both of your parents were enlightened, you would still find yourself growing up in a largely unconscious world.

The remnants of pain left behind by every strong negative emotion that is not fully faced, accepted, and then let go of, join together to form an energy field that lives in the very cells of your body. It consists not just of childhood pain, but also painful emotions that were added to it later in adolescence and during your adult life, much of it created by the voice of the ego. It is the emotional pain that is your unavoidable companion when a false sense of self is the basis of your life.

Old but still very much alive emotion that lives in almost every human being is the pain body. The pain body, however, is not just individual in nature. It also partakes of the pain suffered by countless humans throughout the history of humanity, which is a history of continuous tribal warfare, of enslavement, pillage, rape, torture, and other forms of violence.

This pain still lives in the collective psyche of humanity and is being added to on a daily basis, as you can verify when you watch the news tonight or look at the drama in people's relationships. The collective pain body is probably encoded within every human's DNA, although we haven't discovered it there yet. Every newborn who comes into this world already carries an emotional pain body.

In some it is heavier, more dense than in others. Some babies are quite happy most of the time. Others seem to carry an enormous amount of unhappiness within them.

It is true that some babies cry a great deal because they are not given enough love and attention, but others cry for no apparent reason, almost as if they were trying to make everyone around them as unhappy as they are. And often they succeed. They have come into this world with a heavy share of human pain.

Other babies may cry frequently because they can sense the emanation of their mother's and father's negative emotion, and it causes them pain and also causes their pain body to grow already by absorbing energy from the parents' pain bodies. Whatever the case may be, as the baby's physical body grows, so does the pain body. An infant with only a light pain body is not necessarily going to be a spiritually more advanced man or woman than somebody with a dense one.

In fact, the opposite is often the case. People with heavy pain bodies usually have a better chance to awaken spiritually than those with a relatively light one. Whereas some of them do remain trapped in their heavy pain bodies, many others reach a point where they cannot live with their unhappiness any longer, and so their motivation to awaken becomes strong.

Why is the suffering body of Christ, his face distorted in agony and his body bleeding from countless wounds, such a significant image in the collective consciousness of humanity? Millions of people, particularly in medieval times, would not have related to it as deeply as they did if something within themselves had not resonated with it, if they had not unconsciously recognized it as an outer representation of their own inner reality, the pain body. They were not yet conscious enough to recognize it directly within themselves, but it was the beginning of their becoming aware of it.

Christ can be seen as the archetypal human, embodying both the pain and the possibility of transcendence. How the pain body renews itself The pain body is a semi-autonomous energy form that lives within most human beings, an entity made up of emotion. It has its own primitive intelligence, not unlike a cunning animal, and its intelligence is directed primarily at survival.

Like all life forms, it periodically needs to feed, to take in new energy, and the food it requires to replenish itself consists of energy that is compatible with its own, which is to say, energy that vibrates at a similar frequency. Any emotionally painful experience can be used as food by the pain body. That's why it thrives on negative thinking as well as drama in relationships.

The pain body is an addiction to unhappiness. It may be shocking when you realize for the first time that there's something within you that periodically seeks emotional negativity, seeks unhappiness. You need even more awareness to see it in yourself than to recognize it in another person.

Once the unhappiness has taken you over, not only do you not want an end to it, but you want to make others just as miserable as you are in order to feed on their negative emotional reactions. In most people, the pain body has a dormant and an active stage. When it is dormant, you easily forget that you carry a heavy, dark cloud or a dormant volcano inside you, depending on the energy field of your particular pain body.

How long it remains dormant varies from person to person. A few weeks is the most common, but it can be a few days or months. In rare cases, the pain body can lie in hibernation for years before it gets triggered by some event.

The pain body feeds on your thoughts. The pain body awakens from its dormancy when it gets hungry, when it is time to replenish itself. Alternatively, it may get triggered by an event at any time.

The pain body that is ready to feed can use the most insignificant event as a trigger, something somebody says or does, or even a thought. If you live alone or there is nobody around you at the time, the pain body will feed on your thoughts. Suddenly, your thinking becomes deeply negative.

You were most likely unaware that just prior to the influx of negative thinking, a wave of emotion invaded your mind. As a dark and heavy mood, as anxiety, or fiery anger. All thought is energy, and the pain body is now feeding on the energy of your thoughts.

But it cannot feed on any thought. You don't need to be particularly sensitive to notice that a positive thought has a totally different feeling tone than a negative one. It is the same energy, but it vibrates at a different frequency.

A happy positive thought is indigestible to the pain body. It can only feed on negative thoughts, because only those thoughts are compatible with its own energy field. All things are vibrating energy fields in ceaseless motion.

The chair you sit on, the book you are holding in your hands appear solid and motionless only because that is how your senses perceive their vibrational frequency. That is to say, the incessant movement of the molecules, atoms, electrons and subatomic particles that together create what you perceive as a chair, a book, a tree, or a body. What we perceive as physical matter is energy vibrating, moving, at a particular range of frequencies.

Thoughts consist of the same energy vibrating at a higher frequency than matter, which is why they cannot be seen or touched. Thoughts have their own range of frequencies, with negative thoughts at the lower end of the scale and positive thoughts at the higher. The vibrational frequency of the pain body resonates with that of negative thoughts, which is why only those thoughts can feed the pain body.

The usual pattern of thought creating emotion is reversed in the case of the pain body, at least initially. Emotion from the pain body quickly gains control of your thinking, and once your mind has been taken over by the pain body, your thinking becomes negative. The voice in your head will be telling sad, anxious, or angry stories about yourself or your life, about other people, about past, future, or imaginary events.

The voice will be blaming, accusing, complaining, imagining. And you are totally identified with whatever the voice says, believe all its distorted thoughts. At that point, the addiction to unhappiness has set in.

It is not so much that you cannot stop your train of negative thoughts, but that you don't want to. This is because the pain body at that time is living through you, pretending to be you. And to the pain body, pain is pleasure.

It eagerly devours every negative thought. In fact, the usual voice in your head has now become the voice of the pain body. It has taken over the internal dialogue.

The vicious circle becomes established between the pain body and your thinking. Every thought feeds the pain body, and in turn the pain body generates more thoughts. At some point, after a few hours or even a few days, it has replenished itself and returns to its dormant stage, leaving behind a depleted organism and a body that is much more susceptible to illness.

If that sounds to you like a psychic parasite, you're right. That's exactly what it is. How the pain body feeds on drama.

If there are other people around, preferably your partner or close family member, the pain body will attempt to provoke them, push their buttons, as the expression goes, so it can feed on the ensuing drama. Pain bodies love intimate relationships and families, because that is where they get most of their food. It is hard to resist another person's pain body that is determined to draw you into reaction.

Instinctively it knows your weakest, most vulnerable points. If it doesn't succeed the first time, it will try again and again. It is raw emotion looking for more emotion.

The other person's pain body wants to awaken yours, so that both pain bodies can mutually energize each other. Many relationships go through violent and destructive pain body episodes at regular intervals. It is almost unbearably painful for a young child to have to witness the emotional violence of their parents' pain bodies, and yet that is the fate of millions of children all over the world, the nightmare of their daily existence.

That is also one of the main ways in which the human pain body is passed on from generation to generation. After each episode, the partners make up, and there is an interval of relative peace to the limited extent that the ego allows it. The human pain body will often activate the pain body, particularly in men, but also in some women.

When a person becomes drunk, he goes through a complete personality change as the pain body takes him over. A deeply unconscious person whose pain body habitually replenishes itself through physical violence often directs it towards his spouse or children. When he becomes sober, he is truly sorry and may say he will never do this again, and he means it.

The person who is talking and making promises, however, is not the entity that commits the violence, and so you can be sure that it will happen again and again unless he becomes present, recognizes the pain body within himself, and thus disidentifies from it. In some cases, counseling can help him do that. Most pain bodies want to both inflict and suffer pain, but some are predominantly either perpetrators or victims.

In either case, they feed on violence, whether emotional or physical. Some couples who may think they have fallen in love are actually feeling drawn to each other because their respective pain bodies complement each other. Sometimes the roles of perpetrator and victim are already clearly prescribed the first time they meet.

Some marriages that are thought to be made in heaven are actually made in hell. If you have ever lived with a cat, you will know that even when the cat seems to be asleep, it still knows what is going on, because at the slightest unusual noise its ears will move towards it and its eyes may open slightly. Dormant pain bodies are the same.

On some level they are still awake, ready to jump into action when an appropriate trigger presents itself. In intimate relationships, pain bodies are often clever enough to lie low until you start living together and preferably have signed a contract committing yourself to be with this person for the rest of your life. You don't just marry your wife or husband, you also marry her or his pain body.

And your spouse marries yours. It can be quite a shock when, perhaps not long after moving in together or after the honeymoon, you find suddenly one day there's a complete personality change in your partner. Their voice becomes harsh or shrill as they accuse you, blame you, or shout at you, most likely over a relatively trivial matter.

Or they become totally withdrawn. What's wrong, you ask? Nothing is wrong, they say.

But the intensely hostile energy they emanate is saying, everything is wrong. When you look into their eyes there's no light in them any more. It is as if a heavy veil has descended, and the being you know and love, which before was able to shine through their ego, is now totally obscured.

A complete stranger seems to be looking back at you, and in their eyes there's hatred, hostility, bitterness, or anger. When they speak to you, it is not your spouse or partner who is speaking, but the pain body speaking through them. Whatever they are saying is the pain body's version of reality.

A reality completely distorted by fear, hostility, anger, and a desire to inflict and receive more pain. At this point you may wonder whether this is your partner's real face that you had never seen before, and whether you made a dreadful mistake in choosing this person. It is, of course, not the real face, just the pain body which temporarily has taken possession.

It would be hard to find a partner who does not carry a pain body, but it would perhaps be wise to choose someone whose pain body is not excessively dense. Dense Pain Bodies Some people carry dense pain bodies that are never completely dormant. They may be smiling and making polite conversation, but you do not need to be psychic to sense that seething ball of unhappy emotion in them just underneath the surface, waiting for the next event to react to, the next person to blame or confront, the next thing to be unhappy about.

Their pain bodies can never get enough, are always hungry. They magnify the ego's need for enemies. Through their reactivity, relatively insignificant matters are blown up out of all proportion, as they try to pull other people into their drama by getting them to react.

Some get involved in protracted and ultimately pointless battles or court cases with organizations or individuals. Others are consumed by obsessive hatred towards an ex-spouse or partner. Unaware of the pain they carry inside, by their reaction they project the pain into events and situations.

Due to a complete lack of self-awareness, they cannot tell the difference between an event and their reaction to the event. To them, the unhappiness and even the pain itself is out there in the event or situation. Being unconscious of their inner state, they don't even know that they are deeply unhappy, that they are suffering.

Sometimes people with such dense pain bodies become activists fighting for a cause. The cause may indeed be worthy, and they are sometimes successful at first in getting things done. However, the negative energy that flows into what they say and do, and their unconscious need for enemies and conflict, tend to generate increasing opposition to their cause.

Usually they also end up creating enemies within their own organization, because wherever they go, they find reasons for feeling bad, and so their pain body continues to find exactly what it is looking for. The Media and the Pain Body If you were not familiar with our contemporary civilization, if you had come here from another age or another planet, one of the things that would amaze you is that millions of people love and pay money to watch humans kill and inflict pain on each other and call it entertainment. Why do violent films attract such large audiences?

There is an entire industry, a large part of which fuels the human addiction to unhappiness. People obviously watch those films because they want to feel bad. What is it in humans that loves to feel bad and calls it good?

The pain body, of course. A large part of the entertainment industry caters to it. So, in addition to reactivity, negative thinking and personal drama, the pain body also renews itself vicariously through the cinema and television screen.

Pain bodies write and produce these films, and pain bodies pay to watch them. Is it always wrong to show and watch violence on television and the cinema screen? Does all such violence cater to the pain body?

At the current evolutionary stage of humanity, violence is still not only all-pervasive but even on the increase, as the old egoic consciousness, amplified by the collective pain body, intensifies prior to its inevitable demise. If films show violence in its wider context, if they show its origin and its consequences, show what it does to the victim as well as the perpetrator, show the collective unconsciousness that lies behind it and is passed on from generation to generation, the anger and hatred that lives in humans as the pain body, then those films can fulfill a vital function in the awakening of humanity. They can act as a mirror in which humanity sees its own insanity.

That in you which recognizes madness as madness, even if it is your own, is sanity, is the arising awareness, is the end of insanity. Such films do exist and they do not fuel the pain body. Some of the best anti-war films are films that show the reality of war rather than a glamorized version of it.

The pain body can only feed on films in which violence is portrayed as normal or even desirable human behavior or that glorify violence with the sole purpose of generating negative emotion in the viewer and so become a fix for the pain-addicted pain body. The popular tabloid press does not primarily sell news but negative emotion, food for the pain body. Outrage screams the three-inch headline or BASTARDS!

The British tabloid press excels at this. They know that negative emotion sells far more papers than news does. There is a tendency in the news media in general, including television, to thrive on negative news.

The worse things get, the more excited the presenters become and often the negative excitement is generated by the media itself. Pain bodies just love it. The collective female pain body.

The collective dimension of the pain body has different strands in it. Tribes, nations, races, all have their own collective pain body, some heavier than others, and most members of that tribe, nation or race have a share in it to a greater or lesser degree. Almost every woman has her share in the collective female pain body, which tends to become activated particularly just prior to the time of menstruation.

At that time, many women become overwhelmed by intense negative emotion. The suppression of the feminine principle, especially over the past 2,000 years, has enabled the ego to gain absolute supremacy in the collective human psyche. Although women have egos, of course, the ego can take root and grow more easily in the male form than in the female.

This is because women are less mind-identified than men. They are more in touch with the inner body and the intelligence of the organism where the intuitive faculties originate. The female form is less rigidly encapsulated than the male, has greater openness and sensitivity towards other life forms and is more tuned to the natural world.

If the balance between male and female energies had not been destroyed on our planet, the ego's growth would have been greatly curtailed. We would not have declared war on nature, and we would not be so completely alienated from our being. Nobody knows the exact figure because records were not kept, but it seems certain that during a 300-year period, between 3 and 5 million women were tortured and killed by the Holy Inquisition, an institution founded by the Roman Catholic Church to suppress heresy.

This surely ranks together with the Holocaust as one of the darkest chapters in human history. It was enough for a woman to show a love for animals, walk alone in the fields or woods, or gather medicinal plants to be branded a witch, then tortured and burned at the stake. The sacred feminine was declared demonic, and an entire dimension largely disappeared from human experience.

Other cultures and religions, such as Judaism, Islam and even Buddhism, also suppressed the female dimension, although in a less violent way. Women's status was reduced to being child-bearers and men's property. Males who denied the feminine even within themselves were now running the world, a world that was totally out of balance.

The rest is history, or rather, a case history of insanity. This fear of the feminine that could only be described as acute collective paranoia. We could say, of course, men were responsible.

But then why in many ancient pre-Christian civilizations, such as the Sumerian, Egyptian and Celtic, were women respected and the feminine principle not feared but revered? What is it that suddenly made men feel threatened by the female? The evolving ego in them.

It knew it could gain full control of our planet only through the male form, and to do so, it had to render the female powerless. In time, the ego also took over most women, although it could never become as deeply entrenched in them as in men. We now have a situation in which the suppression of the feminine has become internalized, even in most women.

The sacred feminine, because it is suppressed, is felt by many women as emotional pain. In fact, it has become part of their pain body, together with the accumulated pain suffered by women over millennia through childbirth, rape, slavery, torture and violent death. But things are changing rapidly now.

With many people becoming more conscious, the ego is losing its hold on the human mind. Because the ego was never as deeply rooted in women, it is losing its hold on women more quickly than on men. Certain countries in which many acts of collective violence were suffered or perpetrated have a heavier collective pain body than others.

This is why older nations tend to have stronger pain bodies. It is also why younger countries such as Canada or Australia, and those which have remained more sheltered from the surrounding madness such as Switzerland, tend to have lighter collective pain bodies. Of course, in those countries, people still have their personal pain body to deal with.

If you are sensitive enough, you can feel a heaviness in the energy field of certain countries as soon as you step off the plane. In other countries, one can sense an energy field of latent violence just underneath the surface of everyday life. In some nations, for example in the Middle East, the collective pain body is so acute that a significant part of the population finds itself forced to act it out in an endless and insane cycle of perpetration and retribution, through which the pain body renews itself continuously.

In countries where the pain body is heavy but no longer acute, there has been a tendency for people to try and desensitize themselves to the collective emotional pain. In Germany and Japan, through work, in some other countries through widespread indulgence in alcohol, which, however, can also have the opposite effect of stimulating the pain body, particularly if consumed in excess. China's heavy pain body is to some extent mitigated by the widespread practice of Tai Chi, which amazingly was not declared illegal by the communist government that otherwise feels threatened by anything it cannot control.

Every day in the streets and city parks, millions practice this movement meditation that stills the mind. This makes a considerable difference to the collective energy field and goes some way towards diminishing the pain body by reducing thinking and generating presence. Spiritual practices that involve the physical body, such as Tai Chi, Qigong and Yoga, are also increasingly being embraced in the Western world.

These practices do not create a separation between body and spirit and are helpful in weakening the pain body. They will play an important role in the global awakening. The collective racial pain body is pronounced in Jewish people who have suffered persecution over many centuries.

Not surprisingly, it is strong as well in Native Americans whose numbers were decimated and whose culture all but destroyed by the European settlers. In black Americans, too, the collective pain body is pronounced. Their ancestors were violently uprooted, beaten into submission and sold into slavery.

The foundation of American economic prosperity rested on the labor of four to five million black slaves. In fact, the suffering inflicted on Native and black Americans has not remained confined to those two races but has become part of the collective American pain body. It is always the case that both victim and perpetrator suffer the consequences of any acts of violence, oppression or brutality.

For what you do to others, you do to yourself. It doesn't really matter what proportion of your pain body belongs to your nation or race and what proportion is personal. In either case, you can only go beyond it by taking responsibility for your inner state now.

Even if blame seems more than justified, as long as you blame others, you keep feeding the pain body with your thoughts and remain trapped in your ego. There is only one perpetrator of evil on the planet, human unconsciousness. That realization is true forgiveness.

With forgiveness, your victim identity dissolves and your true power emerges, the power of presence. Instead of blaming the darkness, you bring in the light.

End of disc four.

[Speaker 2] (55:32 - 57:30)

Hi everybody, welcome again to class number five in our webcast series about Eckhart Tolle's A New Earth. We're at the halfway mark and I'd like to thank all of you who are committed to this work and make time every week to share this space with us and to give this to yourself. As of today, we've hit nearly 11 million streams and downloads of this series.

That's really uplifting. So together, I believe that we are beginning to create powerful changes in our lives as individuals and then putting that out into the world. Before we get started, I wanted to share something with all of you.

Our friend Elizabeth Lesser of the Omega Institute sent me a poem that I'd like to share with everybody. She sent it to me this week because I, several weeks ago, was talking about being under my trees and sensing the trees and so she emailed me this poem and said, here's a poem to be with your trees. It's called Lost by David Wagner and will be on our website for you to get later.

So listen to this, Eckhart. It says, stand still, the trees ahead and bushes beside you are not lost. Wherever you are is called here and you must treat it as a powerful stranger.

Must ask permission to know it and be known. The forest breathes. Listen.

It answers. I have made this place around you. If you leave it, you may come back again.

Saying, here, no two trees are the same to raven. No two branches are the same to wren. If what a tree or a bush does is lost on you, you are surely lost.

Stand still. The forest knows where you are. You must let it find you.

Don't you love that? That's beautiful.

[Speaker 2] (57:34 - 57:45)

Yes. So that's my point, to lead us into silence. Would you like to lead us into silence?

Yes. Eckhart has a call this week, everybody. I told you he's sounding very sexy now.

[Speaker 1] (57:50 - 59:14)

So when we go into silence, another way of putting it is to say we go into the present moment more deeply. So let's approach it from that angle today and say let's take our attention right now into this present moment, no matter what it contains on the surface, no matter what you're perceiving or what you're feeling. You bring your full acceptance to this moment as it is, no matter what form it takes.

And that aligns you with now and takes you into stillness. So that's all we do right now, and so we're still, just for a little while, sensing what the present moment is beyond the forms of the present moment, sensing what the essence of the present moment is because the essence of the present moment is life itself. So it's sensing that life that is the essence of now, which is more than what you see in the now and what you touch in the now.

It's deeper than that. You can only sense it. The external senses cannot perceive it.

So let's do this now and just be in the present moment.

[Speaker 2] (1:00:02 - 1:00:13)

All right. I'm actually finding it easier. The first time we did this, I was like, oh boy, we're going to be quiet for 10 seconds.

Now I think we're going like 40, 50 seconds.

[Speaker 1] (1:00:13 - 1:00:33)

Yes, and another strange thing is when you actually enter the present moment, it's a holy place no matter where you are, and this connects with the poem you read. If you bring your attention to it fully, every place you are is holy. So there's a sacredness to life that you become aware of when you take your attention into the present moment.

[Speaker 2] (1:00:34 - 1:00:49)

What I'm finding too, reading this book and then working with you every week, is that everything starts to be sacred. I mean, everything starts to be. You can find the sacred in the most ordinary of things.

[Speaker 1] (1:00:49 - 1:00:50)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:00:50 - 1:01:19)

And that there is a calmness and a stillness to almost everything if you can get quiet enough yourself to feel it. Yes. Yeah, that's what's happening to me.

Yes. As so many other people are experiencing whatever you're experiencing, how the reading of this book, The Awakening for You, is taking on whatever form it does in your life, that's what I'm seeing for myself. Yes.

Yeah. Everything's magical. Yes.

You never have to be bored, ever.

[Speaker 1] (1:01:19 - 1:01:34)

No, no. And the need for artificial stimulus goes when people continuously need to, whenever they get home, they need to switch something on to have some kind of entertainment. You can still enjoy entertainment, but you're not dependent anymore.

[Speaker 2] (1:01:34 - 1:02:43)

On that to fill you up. Yeah. Well, tonight we're discussing chapter five.

So glad we're in the pain body. So I wanted to just start with my idea of an overview of this chapter. You say that in this chapter that the human mind seems to be hooked on me and my story, constant mind chatter that keeps negative emotions alive and personalizes everything.

You say at the beginning of this chapter on page 129, I'm on everybody, that the greatest part of most people's thinking is involuntary, automatic, and repetitive. It's no more than a kind of mental static and fulfills no real purpose. Strictly speaking, you don't think thinking happens to you.

The statement, I think, implies volition, you say. It implies that you have a say in the matter, that there's a voice involved on your part. But really, you say, I think it's just as false a statement as I digest or I circulate my blood.

Digestion happens, circulation happens, thinking happens.

Yeah. So it's becoming aware that thinking happens to you all the time. The key is becoming aware of it.

It's happening to everybody until the awareness occurs, then you are identified with that voice in the head, with its repetitive thought patterns. And that is what most people are trapped in, and it makes up their superficial personality with all the continuous repetitive judgments and likes and dislikes and prejudices and whatever makes up the content of their egoic mind. So people are trapped in that and derive their sense of self from that, which is ultimately insubstantial, conditioned by the past, not who they are.

Absolutely. And you say also in Chapter 5, the pain body, you show how this addiction to being these thoughts in our head, this addiction to these thoughts in our head, to this negativity, is at the root of humanity's problems. On page 137, you write, we are a species that has lost its way.

And we are lost, I could say also we are a species lost, we are lost in thought. We've lost ourselves in the mind. So looking for some kind of identity in the movement of thinking without ever really finding it.

So the most important step in any person's awakening is to realize that there is a voice in their head that doesn't stop speaking. When you realize all this, and then you begin to realize what kinds of things the voice is saying, repetitive judgments and so on, negative thoughts about yourself, about other people, about situations you are in, especially all these repetitive negative thoughts that many people are trapped with, you become aware of that.

Yes, and then you become aware that it's really just the story that you've told yourself about yourself.

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:04:49 - 1:04:50)

And that's all it is.

Yes.

All right. That it has no power.

[Speaker 1] (1:04:53 - 1:04:53)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:04:53 - 1:04:55)

Yes. The past has no power over you.

No power. The power comes in with your awareness that there is a voice.

[Speaker 2] (1:04:59 - 1:05:00)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (1:05:00 - 1:05:04)

Because the awareness is not part of it, and that is part of becoming present.

[Speaker 2] (1:05:04 - 1:05:19)

Yes. One of my favorite quotes of this chapter is, nothing on page 141, nothing ever happened in the past that can prevent you from being present now. And if the past cannot prevent you from being present now, what power does it have?

[Speaker 1] (1:05:19 - 1:05:55)

Yes. Yes. Because many people are so attached to the past that they carry a burden, like carrying a huge sack on your back, a burden.

You're identified with that. And they believe that they're unable to be present because the past prevents them from being present. But it can't do that.

You can step out of the stream of thinking, take your attention into the present, and immediately the past no longer has that power over you.

Because nothing ever happened in the past that can prevent you from being present now. You say that the core of all of this is the pain body. On page 141 we read that any negative emotion that is not fully faced and seen for what it is in the moment it arises does not completely dissolve.

The energy field of old but still very much alive emotion that lives in almost every human being is the pain body. And chapter 5 introduces us to the pain body. Amazing.

You know, when I read this, I thought about my childhood. Now, I've shared my childhood with lots of people, and as a child I was raised by my grandmother for the first six years. And my grandmother used to whip me often, like I used to get beatings on a regular basis.

And it was really a part of our culture, and I know many of you were raised this way too, that not only would you get beaten for almost, you know, for doing nothing, for you broke a glass or you, you know, spoke out of turn or whatever the adults deemed was inappropriate for you in that moment, but I would get beaten, and then I was never allowed to have any emotion about it. I remember feeling many times my grandmother would whip me with switches. She would braid the switches together, and I'd get a whipping.

And then in the middle of whipping me, she'd say, stop your crying, stop your crying. And I'd get whipped until I would stop crying. And then afterwards she would say, you better wipe that pout off of your face.

You better put a smile on your face. So you'd have to now act as though the beating that you just had didn't happen. And when I read this, that any negative emotion that is not fully faced and seen for what it is in the moment it arises does not completely dissolve.

It leaves behind a remnant of pain. I realized that that pain of not being able to express the emotion, of just being able to be angry. I mean, now I see kids today when their parents say something and they don't like it, the kids can say, I don't like you, or that upset me, or, you know, God forbid I hate you, which, you know, in my culture was never allowed.

You had to suppress that, whatever you're feeling. If you're beaten, wipe that pout off of your face, wipe your tears, stop crying right now. And so that would be a huge pain body that I would end up carrying, especially as a child, because you say children especially carry it.

So did you find then that as you grew up that there was a lot of unexpressed negative emotion in you?

[Speaker 2] (1:08:41 - 1:09:08)

I didn't, it wasn't unexpressed, it was repressed ability to, it's what caused me to have the disease to please for so long, a desire to please everybody, because the ability to say in the moment, this upsets me, or this really bothers me, or what you're doing I don't like, was not something I felt I could do for the longest time.

[Speaker 1] (1:09:08 - 1:09:18)

Yes, yes. So all these negative remnants of negative emotions, they become, they accumulate in the body.

[Speaker 2] (1:09:19 - 1:09:20)

I ate mine.

[Speaker 1] (1:09:20 - 1:09:21)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:09:21 - 1:09:21)

Yes.

Yeah, yeah. And then together they form what I call, because we need to realize that any emotion that you have is a form of energy that's acceptable I think to most people, just as every thought you have is a form of energy, every thought is energy, so there's nothing spooky about that. So when I say that the pain body can be considered almost an entity in its own right that lives in you, some people find that's a little spooky, but all that I'm trying to say is here that it's an energy form.

Entity is another word for it. So an energy form lives in you that you may not be aware of all the time because some of the time it is dormant, and it's only active for a certain percentage of time. So first realization is that there is something in me that seeks unhappiness, that seeks unpleasant experiences, that seeks more negativity, because it feeds on those things.

Those things, negative thoughts, will feed the pain body. That is one of the favorite ways pain body to feed, it's your own thinking. So this is very important for people to realize, to observe within themselves that periodically in many people an addiction to negativity arises.

And if you can recognize that as it arises, then you're no longer totally at the mercy of it.

[Speaker 2] (1:11:15 - 1:11:18)

Right, because the awareness dissipates it.

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:11:20 - 1:11:56)

And so back to this point though, whenever there is negativity in your life that you never fully dealt with, that negativity, the energy of that negativity has to go someplace. And you're saying where it goes is inside us. And for me, everybody knows I've struggled with my weight for years, for me that's the form that it takes.

For a lot of other people it makes them outwardly angry or negative toward other people. But it has to take some form. For some people it makes them sick, makes them ill.

Yes. And a very frequent manifestation of it, perhaps the most frequent manifestation of the pain body, is in intimate relationships, where periodically partners have to go through their drama. They have to reenact drama every few weeks, in some cases every few days.

They go through intense emotional negativity. And usually the pain body awakens first in one, in either the man or the woman first. And when the pain body awakens, it wants some kind of reaction, negative emotional reaction.

[Speaker 2] (1:12:40 - 1:12:41)

That from the other person.

[Speaker 1] (1:12:41 - 1:13:11)

Because it feeds on it. So many people have realized when they've spoken about it, there is, oh yes, this is happening in our relationship, that periodically the need, the pain body arises, and it then will attempt to push the partner's buttons, as they're called in some forms of psychotherapy. They say pushing the person's buttons means the pain body knows exactly what buttons to push in your partner, buttons that will certainly bring a negative reaction.

[Speaker 2] (1:13:11 - 1:13:26)

Now is the pain body ultimately this feeling of not being good enough? Is the pain body there because of a feeling of not being worthy, of not knowing its sense of presence or consciousness? Is that why it's the pain body?

[Speaker 1] (1:13:26 - 1:13:48)

Well, it's the emotional aspect of the ego. So really pain body is part of the ego, and it's a very unhappy entity. But because its very existence consists of this unhappy vibration, it does not want an end to its unhappiness, because an end to its unhappiness is the end to the pain body.

Got it. Got it. Linda is Skyping us from her den.

Hello. Hi.

Hi.

[Speaker 2] (1:13:55 - 1:14:04)

How are you, Oprah? Is that a yellow den you have there? Yellow?

Yes. Yes, it's gorgeous. In Silver Spring, Maryland, she has a question about the pain body and her sister.

[Speaker 4] (1:14:05 - 1:15:47)

I do. And thank you, Oprah, so much for this. I first encountered your book, Mr. Choli, in 2005, and have read it at least four times. And so when Oprah picked it, I was so excited. You write on page 148 that the pain bodies love intimate relationships and families, because that is where they get most of their food. And that really resonated for me.

I had a huge aha moment, because I have a sister who has always interacted with everyone in the family in a very dramatic way. And I always considered her to be a drama queen who would rather have a problem than solve a problem. But after reading this chapter, it helped me so much understand more about her and what was going on and why she was interacting with us the way that she is.

My question is, now that I've seen that, of course I wanted to call her and have her read the book, but you've already talked about how sometimes that's not necessarily the best way to approach people. But what is the way? How can I really reconnect the family?

She is separated from our family. She's separated from her children, from us, and we have no relationship at all. And it's really tragic.

And I want to do something to help bring us back together and don't know what to do.

So at the moment you have no contact with her at all?

[Speaker 4] (1:15:53 - 1:16:09)

She has totally withdrawn everything. I do send her emails every month or so just to check in. Sometimes she responds, but very terse and cold.

Most times not.

[Speaker 1] (1:16:10 - 1:17:59)

Well, the... I'm sorry. I hope an opportunity will arise for you to get together at some point so you can continue to invite her if there's an event at home or whatever and then just be open.

But when she does come, it's very important for you not to buy into her drama. I don't know whether this happened in the past, whether she used to draw other family members into her drama. That's usually the tendency.

So now when you meet her again, then you will realize, of course, you will be in a different state of consciousness because you will see that what she is suffering from is the disease of the pain body. And that is not part of who she actually is in truth. So you can be there as a very compassionate presence.

And when the drama arises again, as it will, because her pain body will be very active again when she meets you or any family member, when it happens again, it is very unlikely that you will find yourself forced to react to the pain body because you will be present. So you can simply recognize the pain body in her without the need, as that was there in the past, the need to react to it and therefore buy into her drama and feed her drama. And that will be a very strange experience for her.

Somebody who simply accepts her the way she is and if accusations come at you, whatever she does, you did this or whatever form the drama takes.

[Speaker 4] (1:17:59 - 1:18:00)

You sound like you know her.

[Speaker 1] (1:18:00 - 1:18:47)

I know the pain body. They're all the same basically. So then you can simply accept that she is suffering from this and simply be there as a compassionate presence without reacting.

Allow her to be in her pain body. And that means the drama cannot sustain itself for very long if only one person plays the drama. It needs two.

So you're not feeding her pain body anymore and then see what happens. She may be confused. I've experienced that quite a few times when people came up to me with heavy pain bodies.

It's a story that you tell in this chapter about the friend who comes to your house and she has all the papers and she's complaining. And she doesn't know what to do and she lays out all the papers and she's complaining, complaining, complaining. And Eckhart basically says nothing but just listens and is the presence there for her.

And finally she picks up her papers, confused, and goes home and the next day says, What did you do to me?

[Speaker 1] (1:19:08 - 1:19:33)

Yes. But don't underestimate the pain body's ability to make you unconscious again, to push some kind of button and you will find yourself reacting again because pain bodies are very cunning, very clever. And they know exactly what will make you unconscious and what will make you react.

[Speaker 2] (1:19:33 - 1:19:37)

You speak of it like it's a creature that's like an alien force inside of us.

Yes, that's how I see it. Really?

[Speaker 2] (1:19:40 - 1:19:51)

But you see that, Linda, that this then becomes your sacred spiritual journey. This is a part of your spiritual journey to not be drawn into the drama.

[Speaker 4] (1:19:52 - 1:20:09)

Well, it's so interesting you put it that way, Oprah, because that's what I've kind of come to the conclusion that this is part of my awakening. My role in my family is to kind of be the one to help her get out of this.

[Speaker 2] (1:20:09 - 1:20:17)

And not by judging and not by telling her to, but by being that which you wish to emulate.

Yeah, and that's the hard part.

Yeah, that's hard.

[Speaker 4] (1:20:21 - 1:20:26)

Not judging, because I guess that's the part of the pain body that she activates in me.

[Speaker 2] (1:20:26 - 1:20:32)

Your pain body wants to say, who do you think you are? Exactly. I know, I've been there.

[Speaker 1] (1:20:33 - 1:21:14)

And of course when the pain body takes over a person, the whole personality becomes transformed. And sometimes people are shocked when they marry somebody or they start living with somebody, and this lovely man or woman that they loved so much, one morning suddenly he or she turns into a little monster. And the total energy shift in them, a complete change of energy, like it's truly as if they were possessed by a completely different, very negative personality.

And that comes as a shock often to people when they start living together.

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (1:21:15 - 1:21:23)

And again, it doesn't mean that necessarily that you chose the wrong person to live with, it just means for the first time you experienced... The pain body showed up.

...that person's pain body. And also what we were talking about in the last chapter, you were playing a role up until then. You were playing the role, I am in love with you.

[Speaker 1] (1:21:31 - 1:21:31)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:21:32 - 1:21:36)

And often love, you say, is about your own possessiveness.

[Speaker 1] (1:21:36 - 1:21:36)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:21:36 - 1:21:36)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (1:21:37 - 1:21:49)

And so the roles are easy to play as long as you're not living together, then you can sustain the roles. But when you start living together, very soon the roles cannot be played anymore.

[Speaker 2] (1:21:49 - 1:22:00)

And also that's why I was thinking with the pain bodies, what happens on a lot of holidays, Linda, you've seen this in families, everybody comes together and you have all those pain bodies in a room.

Oh, yeah.

[Speaker 2] (1:22:01 - 1:22:07)

Clashing. Clashing and reacting to one another and all living about the past.

[Speaker 1] (1:22:07 - 1:22:07)

Oh, yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:22:07 - 1:22:11)

Because that's what the coming together for families is about.

[Speaker 1] (1:22:11 - 1:22:22)

Thanksgiving and Christmas Day are the best day for the pain bodies because... Everywhere. And often the families go through the same thing year after year.

[Speaker 2] (1:22:22 - 1:22:27)

Really? Thank you, Linda, for bringing that up. Thank you so much.

[Speaker 4] (1:22:27 - 1:22:31)

And I will listen to the rest of the class. Thank you so much for the opportunity.

[Speaker 2] (1:22:31 - 1:22:54)

Thank you for bringing that up for us. Yeah. And often, yeah, the reason why you have all these pain bodies clashing Thanksgiving on the major holidays, they come together, and people have an image in their mind, the courier and Ives, the painting of what they want the Thanksgiving dinner to be, and instead it becomes something different because everybody's bringing their past.

[Speaker 1] (1:22:55 - 1:22:55)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:22:55 - 1:22:57)

Living that moment through their past.

[Speaker 1] (1:22:57 - 1:23:00)

Yes, yes. That's amazing.

So how do we change that this Thanksgiving?

[Speaker 1] (1:23:03 - 1:23:20)

Well, it just takes one person to be present and one person not to participate in this. So when next event happens, family gathering, whatever it is, then you will see the usual comments will be made.

That's right.

[Speaker 1] (1:23:21 - 1:23:24)

And the usual reactions will happen.

[Speaker 2] (1:23:25 - 1:23:27)

Can you believe he did? Yes, yes.

[Speaker 1] (1:23:28 - 1:24:07)

Or you visit your parents and your parents don't fully approve of you and then they say, well, you remember 10 years ago, I told you you should have done that. You would be better off now if you had done that. And again, immediately, if you're not present, pain body will arise and become defensive.

Anger will arise. And you're in it. You're drawn into the drama.

Yes. So it requires great alertness not to be drawn in. Right.

So because we don't underestimate the pain body's ability to draw in sometimes even very present people can still be drawn in.

[Speaker 2] (1:24:08 - 1:24:24)

And you were saying that it happens in intimate situations, in family situations more often than not, because I would suppose it's because out in the world, everybody's trying to be at least on their best behavior. A lot of people who are taking this class, you know, are working people who see it in their jobs every day with people.

[Speaker 7] (1:24:24 - 1:24:25)

Yes, yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:24:25 - 1:25:01)

Every day. I love on page 134 when you say, although the body is very intelligent, it cannot tell the difference between an actual situation and the thought. It reacts to every thought as if it were a reality.

It doesn't know it's just a thought. To the body, a worrisome, fearful thought means I'm in danger and it responds accordingly, even though you may be lying in a warm and comfortable bed at night. The heart beats faster, muscles contract, breathing becomes rapid.

There's a buildup of energy, but since the danger is only a mental fiction, the energy has no outlet. The rest of the energy turns toxic, interferes with the harmonious functioning of the body.

[Speaker 1] (1:25:01 - 1:25:01)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:25:01 - 1:25:04)

So that's what you said weeks ago about worry.

[Speaker 1] (1:25:05 - 1:25:05)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:25:06 - 1:25:06)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (1:25:06 - 1:25:15)

To see in oneself when worry arises, what we call worry, is simply repetitive negative thought patterns.

[Speaker 2] (1:25:15 - 1:25:23)

That's right. And your body doesn't know the difference, and so all of that energy is inside your body, and that's what makes people sick.

[Speaker 1] (1:25:23 - 1:26:10)

Yes, yes. So it's very important to clear up your mind so that you stop the continuous negativity of the egoic self-talk, as we call it. So recognize it, and then step out of that stream of thinking.

Use any device you can. I recommend device number one to step out of the stream of negative thinking, come into the present moment, take one or two conscious breaths. Ah, you've stepped out of the stream of thinking.

Or feel the inner body, feel the aliveness in your arms, your hands, your legs. Put your attention there.

Right.

[Speaker 1] (1:26:11 - 1:26:32)

You've stepped out of the stream of thinking. Or look at something and bring your full consciousness to the active perception. For example, a tree or a flower, anything natural is best.

Look at anything natural, give it your full attention, that takes you out of the stream of thinking. Or any natural sound, a bird, the wind.

[Speaker 2] (1:26:32 - 1:26:33)

To bring you back, really.

[Speaker 1] (1:26:33 - 1:26:43)

Or bring you back to the present. These are all little ways in which you can step out of the stream of competitive thinking.

In the story on page 137, The Duck with the Human Mind, love that story. You talk about how the human mind creates a me and a my story that keeps negative emotions alive and personalizes everything and has ultimately led our entire species to a precipice. So, tell us the duck story.

What lessons it has for all of us as humans.

I was writing The Power of Now and writing about accumulated emotions. And then I was taking a break and went into the park and sat on a bench by a pond and I saw two ducks approaching on the pond and suddenly, maybe one duck got too close to the other. Suddenly, they started getting into a fight.

It lasted for about 30 seconds and then they both separated, swam off in opposite directions. They were still agitated, both of them. And then both ducks kind of lifted themselves up on the water and vigorously flapped their wings a few times.

They almost stood up on the water and went... And then suddenly, they were totally peaceful again and swam off.

[Speaker 2] (1:27:58 - 1:28:00)

They were doing cleansing breaths.

[Speaker 1] (1:28:00 - 1:28:00)

Cleansing.

[Speaker 2] (1:28:00 - 1:28:01)

Which we did from Russia last night.

And I realized at that moment I had actually been writing about this and the ducks were showing me how they let go of what otherwise would have become accumulated negativity in the body. Wow. And so their instinctive natural intelligence takes over and then I realized they all do it.

And all the ducks after a fight do that. And immediately... It's like clearing their wings.

Clearing. The energy gets dissipated. Wow.

And they are totally peaceful afterwards. And then, of course, they don't have the human mind which repeats the story of what this duck did to me and what I'm going to do to this duck next time or I'm never going to get close to her anymore. Whatever the story is.

[Speaker 2] (1:28:50 - 1:28:53)

How dare you come over to my side of the pond again.

And then talk to other ducks about what that duck did to you. And all the story making... Because the story making that still goes on in the human mind keeps the old emotion alive.

Yes. So you relive it. Again, the negativity is relived.

The body believes it's still happening.

[Speaker 2] (1:29:11 - 1:29:12)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (1:29:12 - 1:29:14)

Because the body believes in what your mind is thinking.

[Speaker 2] (1:29:14 - 1:29:20)

Because although the body is intelligent, it cannot tell the difference between an actual situation and a thought.

[Speaker 1] (1:29:20 - 1:29:34)

Yes. So whatever thoughts you are holding, your body believes that is your reality. And the corresponding emotions will arise.

Wow. And the corresponding physical states of contraction will be there.

[Speaker 2] (1:29:34 - 1:29:34)

Wow.

[Speaker 1] (1:29:35 - 1:29:40)

So this is how... That was the duck's lesson. So I put it into the book.

[Speaker 2] (1:29:40 - 1:29:56)

That's right. I mean, and we see so many people... I know I have friends who've been through divorce and they live and still, you know, hating their ex-spouse and talking about their ex-spouse and what their ex-spouse did to them and, you know, years after the spouse is gone.

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (1:29:56 - 1:29:59)

And so that keeps it alive as if it were still happening.

[Speaker 2] (1:30:00 - 1:30:00)

As if it were still happening.

And there's an addictive quality...

[Speaker 2] (1:30:02 - 1:30:03)

And that's in your mind.

In the mind. And it's addictive. There's an addictive quality to that.

You need to see it in yourself to see that it's still the case for some people who are listening to us.

[Speaker 2] (1:30:13 - 1:30:17)

So it's like the monks. Tell the monk story. I like the monk story.

The two monks.

[Speaker 1] (1:30:17 - 1:30:18)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:30:18 - 1:30:20)

And the one monk picks up the girl on the road.

Yes. That's the story of two monks on a pilgrimage and they come across, in a village, they come across a young 17-year-old girl with a long kimono trying to cross a very muddy road but she's not daring to step into the mud. So one monk picks her up, carries her across the road through the mud, puts her down, and so the monks walk on in silence for another four or five hours just practicing noble silence.

And then after four or five hours they're getting close to their destination. One monk says to the monk who had picked up the girl, Oh, you know, you shouldn't have done that because we monks are not supposed even to touch women so you really shouldn't have picked up that girl. You're not supposed to do that.

The other monk says, Oh, are you still carrying that girl? I put her down hours ago. So the other monk was still carrying the girl, the event, in his head.

Four hours later.

[Speaker 1] (1:31:20 - 1:31:22)

And for four hours he was walking with this burden.

[Speaker 2] (1:31:23 - 1:31:23)

Yes. Right.

[Speaker 1] (1:31:24 - 1:31:30)

That shows the reluctance of the human mind to let go of the past.

[Speaker 2] (1:31:31 - 1:31:41)

Yeah. So how many of us reading this chapter are not carrying things from four hours ago but carrying things from four years and 40 years ago?

[Speaker 1] (1:31:41 - 1:31:41)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:31:41 - 1:31:44)

People are still holding on to what was done to them.

[Speaker 1] (1:31:44 - 1:31:45)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:31:45 - 1:31:45)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (1:31:45 - 1:31:57)

Yes. That's a dreadful burden. It's like carrying a useless weight around with you.

And some people carry it from all their lives. And they even derive some identity from that.

Right.

[Speaker 1] (1:31:58 - 1:31:59)

Right.

[Speaker 2] (1:31:59 - 1:32:10)

I had to learn years ago to let go of what had happened to me as a child because what I realized, you know, my grandmother, the people who took care of me, did the best they knew how to do at the time.

[Speaker 1] (1:32:10 - 1:32:10)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:32:11 - 1:32:13)

And if they had known better, they would have done better.

[Speaker 1] (1:32:13 - 1:32:36)

Yes. And that is always the case. Whatever humans have done to you, it's always they didn't know any better because they could only act according to their level of consciousness.

Nobody can act beyond their level of consciousness. So you cannot expect your parents, if you believe they did something that was wrong, you cannot expect your parents to have acted beyond their level of consciousness.

[Speaker 2] (1:32:36 - 1:32:37)

Because that's all they knew.

[Speaker 1] (1:32:37 - 1:32:50)

Yes. Jesus on the cross said it all when he says, forgive them for they know not what they do, which means they are unconscious. So when you realize that, you naturally forgive.

[Speaker 2] (1:32:50 - 1:32:51)

That's what Jesus meant.

[Speaker 1] (1:32:51 - 1:32:56)

Yes. If he had lived now, he probably would have said they are unconscious. They don't know.

[Speaker 2] (1:32:56 - 1:33:02)

Okay. Well, Roz is on the phone from Sydney, Australia and has a question about the pain body and grief. Hello, Roz.

Hi, Oprah. Hi, Eckhart. Can I start by saying thank you both so much for helping to make my life feel lighter and less stressful?

That's amazing. And for taking the time to answer all our questions. But in regard to the pain body, I'd like to clarify, how do we honor the memory of our loved ones who have died and that we shed tears for and not add to our pain body?

I'm trying to work out, are we adding to our pain body or is this the type of sorrow from the state of being?

You mean the ability to grieve or not? Yeah.

[Speaker 5] (1:33:42 - 1:34:19)

Well, the best way I can describe it is I lost my dad six years ago and most of the time I think of him and I have a smile on my face. But sometimes the tears flow for what I think is no apparent reason. Intellectually, I know crying won't bring him back and I can't change the past, but the tears just come.

So am I adding to my pain body by doing that? I feel I'm honoring my father's memory, but I'm sad at the time. So is that a negative emotion or is that something deeper down inside that is a natural thing and it's a part of my being?

There's a natural mourning, of course, that happens when a loved one passes away. With some people, that also can turn into pain body. For example, that would be the case if there's an excessive or exaggerated amount of sadness or depression.

Some people, after a loved one dies, go through years of debilitating depression or they develop even extreme anger. That is also quite frequent that people develop anger when a loved one dies. Those are instances when the pain body becomes activated through the death of a loved one.

But that does not seem to be the case with you. So to allow mourning to happen when it happens can actually be a beautiful thing. Observe what your mind is doing and what kind of thoughts your mind is generating when you go through these periods of sadness or crying.

Maybe your mind is not saying much at all. Maybe there's just emotion, and that can be quite beautiful, simply to allow this emotion of sadness, which is natural after all when somebody has passed away or when you remember a loved one, allow this emotion of sadness to be there. You may actually find that underneath the sadness there's still some peace.

When you allow the emotion of mourning to be there, then you realize that underneath the seemingly negative emotion there's still a deeper peace. I found that when my parents passed away a year and a half ago, both of them within a few months, the sadness came, some tears came periodically, and yet through the acceptance of the emotion there was an underlying peace that was deeper even than the sadness. And that comes with the acceptance of the emotion, and that's important for you.

So I don't believe that in your case this is the pain body, but I would suggest that you observe, or perhaps you can tell me now, what kind of thoughts your mind produces when you go through these periods of sadness or weeping. What does your mind say?

[Speaker 5] (1:36:55 - 1:37:35)

Well, usually at the end I end up smiling again. It's just that I wonder whether the tears were a negative thing, or no, I don't suppose tears are a negative thing, but there are just times when I suppose it's that sense of loss that comes with it, which I know in a way is adding pain to your life, but it's something you just, I don't know, how do you explain the void you feel inside when you lose someone. Admittedly, I'm not getting depressed about it, thank God, but I just wondered whether logically I was adding pain to my life or whether it just is something that if you can stay detached and observe, you realize it's just a part of who you are.

I think it is a part of who we are, and I recently just lost a loved one who happened to be a four-legged animal, my beloved little Sophie I lost. Sophie died? Oh, I'm sorry to hear that.

Yes, and unless you have an animal who's a member of your family, a lot of people don't understand, but she was a member of my, she was as close to me as anybody has ever been in my life, and I will have to say that I miss her little body, and I miss the, as I know you do with your loved one, I miss the physicality of her because she slept with me every single night, came to work with me every single day, has been at every event for the past 13 years, so I miss her physical body, but I actually feel closer to her, to the spirit of her, to the soul of her. I feel that the density of the body has allowed the spirit of her to be with me in a way that I never could really fully appreciate or absorb, so I actually feel closer to her.

I feel the love that she was in a way that I didn't even feel when she was alive.

Yes, yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:38:45 - 1:38:47)

Did you sense that with your parents too?

Yes, yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:38:47 - 1:38:49)

So that's the peace you're talking about.

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:38:49 - 1:39:09)

And actually she died on the second night that we were doing this, on March the 10th, and I went home in the middle of the day. She died early in the morning. I cried all afternoon.

I came here and allowed myself to be, to accept it, to go to that place where, all right, she's gone.

[Speaker 7] (1:39:10 - 1:39:10)

Yes.

She's gone. I'm not going to say, oh, why is she gone? Oh, all right, she's gone.

[Speaker 1] (1:39:16 - 1:39:18)

Yes, and that's the acceptance.

[Speaker 2] (1:39:18 - 1:39:20)

And a peace comes with that.

Yes, because the void is the word, because a void is left when the form that was there, the body that was there, suddenly is no longer. And that's the void. Now the void, when it's resisted, and it is resisted especially by the ego, the ego hates it.

The ego doesn't want the void to be there. But when you can accept that now there is the void instead of the body, then something else shines through that void which is formless. Right.

So where the form once was, the formless can now shine through. Absolutely. And that's the beauty, and that's the grace that is hiding behind death or death of whatever kind.

So there's always that. You have to look for that. I see that.

I see that. Do you see that, Roz?

[Speaker 5] (1:40:14 - 1:40:17)

Yeah, that's inspirational. That natural morning makes me feel better now.

[Speaker 2] (1:40:17 - 1:40:40)

And what happens is, Roz, if we spend our time, I always say when somebody you love dies, you now have an angel you know. You can call the angel formless or consciousness or being or whatever. But what happens is so many people are just caught up in the grief of it and the loss of it and resisting and wanting it to be the way it was.

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:40:41 - 1:40:49)

Trying to hold on to the way it was instead of accepting what is, and they don't allow the grace of the formless to come through.

Then the grace cannot come through. That's right. I got that.

[Speaker 2] (1:40:53 - 1:41:41)

I hope you got that too, Roz. Yeah, thank you. That was lovely.

I really appreciate that. God bless you both. God bless you.

I love when you say that sometimes understanding the science for me, sometimes understanding the science behind these concepts as you're talking about makes it easier. And you say on page 146, all things are vibrating energy fields in ceaseless motion. The chair you sit on, the book you're holding appears solid and motionless only because that's how our senses perceive their vibrational frequency.

That is to say the increased movement of the molecules. And so we're all vibrating at different frequencies. And the vibrational frequency of the pain body resonates with that of negative thoughts.

[Speaker 1] (1:41:41 - 1:41:46)

Yes. Negative thoughts and other negative emotions coming from other people.

[Speaker 2] (1:41:47 - 1:42:45)

And then I love that you say this on page 152. You write on page 152. I think this is great here.

If you were not familiar with our contemporary civilization, if you had come here from another age or another planet, one of the things that would amaze you is that millions of people love and pay money to watch humans kill and inflict pain on each other and call it entertainment. When I read that, I thought, yeah, if you're from another planet, you would think, what is that? So what is that that people love that?

I mean the most violent movies, particularly this year for Academy Awards, most of the movies were violent movies, destructive, all those pain bodies up there on the screen. And what is it about a lot of the public that enjoys that?

Well, if it's in some cases violence may be actually helpful to see because it shows the human madness. If it shows the wider context in which violence happens, if it shows the psychological dysfunction behind violence, then it can be helpful. But most of these movies contain violence that is actually meant to feed the pain body.

And it is the pain body in the viewers who enjoy those films that enjoys the violence. So it's not actually the people themselves who pay money to see these movies. It's the pain body in them that feeds on the violence that it watches.

And the people who produce these movies probably...

Your pain bodies are writing them.

The pain bodies write them. The pain bodies write the movies, the pain bodies produce them, and the pain bodies watch them.

Well, this comes from a screenwriter, Lana, who's in her study in Copenhagen and has a question. Copenhagen. Copenhagen.

Hello, Lana, from Copenhagen.

[Speaker 3] (1:43:58 - 1:44:08)

Hi, Oprah. Hi, Eckerd. Hello.

Eckerd, I also have a cold, so I hope I sound as sexy as you do. So, yes.

I like your flowers on the wall, may I say? I like your art. Did you take those pictures yourself?

Oh, no.

[Speaker 3] (1:44:15 - 1:47:23)

I bought it from somebody. Okay, okay, great. Yeah.

But I'm a screenwriter. I'm also a producer. And after reading this chapter, it just floored me on so many levels.

I write pieces that involve scenes that may have violence. It may have a death. It may have rape.

But I try not to be gratuitous. But after reading this chapter, I wasn't quite sure how to be sure. And one particular experience that I had really kind of put me in a tailspin about how to create content, how to create media projects going forward after reading this book.

I had a few friends over for dinner, Danish friends of mine, and I've learned so much from the Danish people. They're wonderful, wonderful people. And at the time, there was in the news, the beginning of this year, a lot of what they call second-generation kids were burning cars here in Denmark.

And a friend of mine made the comment to me, well, I don't understand how people can burn their own neighborhoods. And that hit me like a ton of bricks. And although I was too young to remember the riots after Martin Luther King died, I remember that comment being spoken by Americans.

So here I am in Denmark and kind of hearing the same type of conversation. And I felt like my first response was, I've got to do a documentary on this. And so I started making the phone calls to do whatever I needed to do to talk to traditional Danes and also second-generation Danish people.

But then I read the chapter and I wondered whether or not my pain body as an African-American was now entering into this situation and creating something that may kind of negatively affect the pain body of another group of people. So I questioned whether or not I wanted to do this documentary. So what is your question?

What is your question to us? My question is, in this situation that I've just described, the pain body that led me to come up with the idea for this documentary, I think it comes from my experience of being an African-American and that I want to bring people together. I want to kind of not allow a situation that's not necessary to just go unchecked.

And I feel like media can do that. A documentary can open up that dialogue. But I'm wondering if my pain body, since it created this idea for a documentary, is this something that will help both sides?

Or am I just speaking to pain bodies, to other pain bodies?

Well, I don't believe necessarily that your pain body came up with the idea of making this documentary about the violence that's happening in Denmark. And I believe that you will probably show the wider context in which this violence happens and the root causes of this violence, not only historical but perhaps also psychological. And if all these things are included in the film, then to show violence can actually fulfill a useful purpose.

That's why I mention in the book that some of the most powerful anti-war films were war films because those films showed the reality of war, not some glamorized version of war for the pain body to feed on. So if you show the reality and the underlying causes at the wider context, then those films are not going to feed the pain body because they will help people become more conscious and perhaps not prematurely judge the people who are carrying out these acts of vandalism or whatever it is to see perhaps what lies behind it.

[Speaker 2] (1:48:43 - 1:50:27)

Correct. Thank you, Lana. Thank you so much.

I think it's interesting, though. Lana's talking about what you talk about on page 159, that as there are individual pain bodies that each of us carries because of whatever negativity happened in our lives, and we didn't completely deal with that at the moment, that there is also a collective pain body that nations carry and races carry. And you say the collective racial pain body is pronounced in Jewish people who suffered persecution over many centuries.

Not surprisingly, it's strong as well in Native Americans whose numbers were decimated, whose culture all but destroyed by the European settlers, and black Americans, too, for whom the collective pain body is pronounced, their ancestors violently uprooted, beaten into submission and sold into slavery. The foundation of American economic prosperity rested on the labor of four to five million black slaves. In fact, the suffering inflicted on Native and black Americans has not remained confined to those two races, but has become part of the collective American pain body.

It is always the case that both victim and perpetrator suffer the consequences of any acts of violence, oppression, or brutality for what you do to others you do to yourself. I think that there is not an understanding, and actually, Senator Obama in his speech a couple of weeks ago was trying to speak to this, this collective pain body that America holds. And I think a lot of Americans, number one, don't know it exists and want to deny that it does exist because they say, I didn't have anything to do with slavery, or I didn't have anything to do with the Native Americans.

Correct?

[Speaker 1] (1:50:27 - 1:50:28)

That's right.

[Speaker 2] (1:50:28 - 1:50:32)

And to not to recognize it is what? Is to be in denial of what is the truth.

[Speaker 1] (1:50:33 - 1:50:37)

Yes, and then it continues to be there without you knowing it.

[Speaker 2] (1:50:37 - 1:50:42)

That's right. Because the recognition of it is the beginning of being able to change it, right?

Yes, that's right. And I believe, since you mentioned Senator Obama, there was this controversy about the pastor who was making certain remarks. I believe that the pastor who has probably helped many, many people over many years, occasionally when he speaks, as far as I can tell, he gets taken over by the pain body.

And then the pain body speaks through him. And it's understandable, and I believe Obama understands that, although he may not use the term or be familiar with the term pain body, but he understands the wider context for those remarks and he realizes that it arises out of the collective pain. And once you see that these things arise out of the collective pain, you can see them in a much wider perspective.

And you don't personalize what this person is saying. It's not personal anymore. He's expressing collective pain.

You also talk about this when it comes to women. Pretty revolutionary. On page 155, you say, The suppression of the feminine principle, especially over the past 2,000 years, has enabled the ego to gain absolute supremacy in the collective human psyche.

Although women have egos, of course, the female form is less rigidly encapsulated than the male and has greater openness and sensitivity toward other life forms. If the balance between male and female energies, I found this so fascinating, had not been destroyed on our planet, you say, the ego's growth would have been greatly curtailed. With many people becoming more conscious, the ego is losing its hold on the human mind because the ego was never as deeply rooted in women.

It's losing its hold on women more quickly than on men.

[Speaker 1] (1:52:31 - 1:52:31)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:52:31 - 1:53:01)

You know what? Reading this, as a female, living in the world today, able to make choices and be my own person and express myself, I had forgotten about the years and years of torture and suppression and, you know, killing of women were the most natural things because you liked animals, because you were a midwife, because you were a woman who wanted to have a voice.

[Speaker 1] (1:53:02 - 1:53:02)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:53:02 - 1:53:03)

Tortured, killed.

[Speaker 1] (1:53:03 - 1:53:03)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:53:04 - 1:53:05)

Hundreds of millions of women.

[Speaker 1] (1:53:05 - 1:53:09)

Yes. And what I'm saying is it's the arising ego.

[Speaker 2] (1:53:10 - 1:53:12)

And that happened because of the ego in the male.

[Speaker 1] (1:53:12 - 1:53:29)

Yes. So it's not the male as such. It was the growing ego in the male that saw the feminine principle and the feminine energy as a threat because it could not fully establish itself in that.

[Speaker 2] (1:53:29 - 1:53:34)

You believe we would have had a new earth a lot sooner if there had been not the suppression of the female.

[Speaker 1] (1:53:35 - 1:54:20)

Yes, probably, yes. But the shift is happening now, and the interesting thing is that there are more women changing, going through the shift in consciousness, than men. Men are going through also, but there are, for example, Elizabeth Lesser mentioned at the Omega Institute, about 70-75% of the people who come there for inner work, consciousness transformation, and so on, are women.

So women are more open now to the change in consciousness that is happening than men. I'm not saying it's not happening to men also, but there's a greater openness.

We love it. Audrey in Campbell, California, one of our emails says, I have 20 pounds to lose as a child. My father and brother call me big girl and big fat cow.

Could this be? That's not good. Could this be why?

Audrey, that's not good at all. Could this be why I have such difficulty losing the weight? I've been hearing these words in my head for years and years, and I can't let the words go.

Help. So, of course, these words have become lodged in your mind, and they have taken up residence in your mind, and now you can't get rid of them. So they are, again, thoughts are energy formations, and thoughts that get lodged in your mind, sometimes they start in childhood, when parents tell you something negative.

For example, some parents tell their children, you are stupid. It's a stupid thing to say. Yes, it's a stupid thing to say that your kids are stupid, yeah.

And if told that repeatedly, this thought becomes lodged in their mind. A thought can, if you don't bring presence to it now, you won't be able to dislodge it. So the first thing is to realize what has happened to you, is that something that you were told years ago, repeatedly, has now become a thought that refuses to leave.

It's an energy, you are possessed, so to speak, temporarily, hopefully, by a thought. Some of you may have seen a film called The Number 23 with Jim Carrey last year, and that's about a man who becomes obsessed with the idea of the number 23. And he sees it, suddenly he sees everywhere, significance in the number 23.

And that's an example of how one thought can take possession of your entire mind, and then through this one thought that takes possession of your entire mind, you interpret the whole universe, the whole of reality. This is how dangerous it can be, if you're not careful, how one thought can take you over. So realize, the questioner here needs to realize that this is an old thought, and realize it's no more than a thought.

It is not the truth. It's an old record that has been playing itself.

Over and over in your head. Big fat cow, big fat cow, big fat cow.

[Speaker 1] (1:57:03 - 1:57:13)

Yes, no more than an old, no more than a tape. So when you hear it again, when you hear that in your mind, you realize there's the old tape again.

That's right.

It loses its power, because it's no more than that.

That's right. There's an old tape for the past, and the past has no power over the present moment.

No.

[Speaker 2] (1:57:21 - 1:57:57)

All right. I love also when you say that thinking is no more than a tiny aspect of the totality of consciousness, the totality of who you are. Yes.

I had an awakening moment with that thought, because we all think that we are our thoughts. Up until reading this book, I think so many of us, I was one of those people thinking that we were our thoughts. Yes.

And then to read that thinking, not only are we not our thoughts, we are the awareness of our thoughts, but that thinking is only no more than a tiny aspect of the totality of consciousness, the totality of who you are.

[Speaker 1] (1:57:57 - 1:58:08)

Yes. And the awareness, of course, compared to thinking, the awareness is vast, it's limitless, and has infinite potential for anything creative to come into your life.

Because that's where all your creativity comes from.

[Speaker 1] (1:58:10 - 1:58:23)

Yes. Not through thinking. Thinking can become a secondary tool in manifesting something, but not with the creative insight, the creative realization, the creative idea does not come through the movement of thinking.

[Speaker 2] (1:58:24 - 1:58:31)

Wow. Think about that, everybody. That when you have a creative inspiration, it does not come through your thoughts.

[Speaker 1] (1:58:31 - 1:58:31)

No.

[Speaker 2] (1:58:31 - 1:58:33)

It comes through your being.

[Speaker 1] (1:58:33 - 1:58:35)

Yes. And so the space of awareness.

[Speaker 2] (1:58:36 - 1:58:37)

The space of awareness.

Now, to the extent to which you are creative in your life depends on how much access you have in yourself to that space of awareness, of presence. And it's sometimes enough for brief moments to have access to that, and for some people that's enough to lead a creative life. Right.

But, of course, we want to be more than that, not just have brief access, but to make it the very foundation of your life.

[Speaker 2] (1:59:10 - 1:59:29)

It's like when Quincy Jones was doing the We Are The World tape, and he brought together all of those artists, and he left the door open. First they had a sign outside the door that said, Check your egos at the door. And then they left the door open.

He said, We wanted to leave room for God to walk in the room. Leave enough space for God to walk into the room. Yes.

Yes.

So you're leaving the space. Leaving the space. Leaving the space inside yourself.

Yes.

So, also if you want change in your life, some people don't know, there will be other chapters when we'll talk about life purpose and so on, but the realization of what it is, for example, what it is that you're meant to do in your life, also comes from that inner space. Are you able to allow the space within to come still? Right.

And then whatever it is that you need to know will arise from there. Will come through that. Yes.

And then it may come as a thought, but then it will be an inspired thought. Right. Without the space, without the stillness, without accessing that dimension, thinking cannot be inspired.

There is no inspired thinking. The inspiration comes from the realm that is deeper than thought.

[Speaker 2] (2:00:24 - 2:00:27)

I got that. And you're never going to think your way to a purpose.

[Speaker 1] (2:00:27 - 2:00:32)

No. And you're not going to worry your way out of a problem.

[Speaker 2] (2:00:33 - 2:00:35)

You're not going to worry your way out of a problem.

[Speaker 1] (2:00:35 - 2:00:39)

It's impossible because worry means to manufacture more problems.

[Speaker 2] (2:00:39 - 2:00:41)

The same thing. You're just continuing the same thought over and over.

[Speaker 1] (2:00:41 - 2:00:42)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:00:42 - 2:00:48)

Yes. You need a different kind of consciousness. Wasn't it Einstein that said that?

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (2:00:48 - 2:00:59)

I don't remember whether it was Einstein or Jung, but he said a problem cannot be solved on the same level of consciousness that gave rise to the problem. That created it. Yes.

We have an email from Judy in Columbia, South Carolina. Could you talk a bit about alcohol and drug abuse in the pain body? Is this an attempt at escape from the pain body, alcohol and drug abuse?

[Speaker 1] (2:01:11 - 2:03:02)

Yes. Often it is. And I mention that in the book.

It's an escape of not wanting to feel the pain anymore. In some people, the pain body is active almost all the time. And that is a dreadful way to live.

And those people in whom the pain body is active almost all the time, often they will seek some kind of escape from it because they can't live with that pain anymore. The pain body loves it, but it makes your life more and more miserable. But there is also a good chance, and maybe that connects us to what I said in the book, if people who have a heavy pain body, their chance of awakening is also quite great because when life becomes unbearable because you are creating so much pain continuously for yourself, your desire to awaken, to finally get out of this misery, is much greater than a normal person's desire to awaken.

In other words, you could say when you are having a relatively pleasant dream, you don't mind so much dreaming on, but when your dream turns into a nightmare, then you really want to awaken from that when you can't stand it. And that was the case with me. I had a very, very heavy pain body that drove me almost very close to suicide until the realization came I cannot live with myself any longer.

That thought was the breakthrough where the separation happened from the consciousness that I am and the ego and the pain body that I had been identified with as the unhappy little me.

[Speaker 2] (2:03:02 - 2:03:07)

Were you really actually going to kill yourself? Did you have a plan to kill yourself?

[Speaker 1] (2:03:08 - 2:03:12)

Yes. My first plans to kill myself I already had at the age of 9 and 10.

[Speaker 2] (2:03:13 - 2:03:14)

Really?

[Speaker 1] (2:03:14 - 2:03:20)

Yeah. So I had worked it all out, but somehow I didn't quite have the courage yet to do it.

[Speaker 2] (2:03:20 - 2:03:22)

Because the pain body was so heavy even at 9 and 10?

[Speaker 1] (2:03:22 - 2:03:29)

Already then it was quite heavy. Then it subsided a little bit and then it came back again very strongly in my 20s.

[Speaker 2] (2:03:29 - 2:03:37)

Wow. And what was it? What was it that caused you to feel you felt depressed, you felt unworthy, you felt what?

It was partly living in almost continuous conflict in the home environment between my parents who were always fighting. There was very little peace at home. I was very sensitive, so it was very hard for me to even be there at home.

As you say in the book, for children who watch their parents fight, it's almost unbearable.

Yes. And that of course contributes to the child's growing pain body. So my pain body grew very quickly.

But if this had not been the case, I would never have awakened. Right. I would have been in a relatively pleasant dream.

That's right.

[Speaker 2] (2:04:21 - 2:04:26)

If you'd had a nice happy childhood, you might not be sitting here teaching with us tonight.

[Speaker 1] (2:04:26 - 2:04:27)

Certainly not.

No.

[Speaker 1] (2:04:27 - 2:04:36)

No. So retrospectively, one is grateful for one's suffering because eventually suffering will wake you up.

You said when I read earlier on page 141 about any negative emotion that's not fully faced and seen for what it is in the moment it arises, does not completely dissolve, it leaves behind a remnant of pain. So when we are faced with negative emotions on a daily basis, we should embrace them, we should go into them rather than resist them.

Yes. Accept whatever emotion.

[Speaker 2] (2:04:58 - 2:04:59)

Accept it.

[Speaker 1] (2:04:59 - 2:05:10)

Accept because it's part of accepting the present moment because if a certain negative emotion is part of what's happening in the present moment, what can you do? It's already happening.

Take it.

[Speaker 1] (2:05:11 - 2:05:47)

Take it. Oh, there it is. I can feel that anger.

I can feel the sadness. I can feel it. Be the space for it.

So accept that it is there. The acceptance of the present moment, no matter what form it takes, externally or internally, whatever form it takes. Externally, it means whatever situation arises right now, it always is as it is at this moment.

You might as well say yes to it. Internally, it means whatever emotion arises at this moment, it is as it is. You might as well say yes to it.

[Speaker 2] (2:05:47 - 2:06:03)

Well, I know next week we're going to be talking about breaking free of the pain body, but just for now, if every time you can see it show itself and recognize it for what it is, there it is, there's my pain body again, there's his again, that the awareness of it begins to dissolve it. Correct?

[Speaker 1] (2:06:04 - 2:06:04)

Okay.

[Speaker 2] (2:06:05 - 2:06:23)

Let's go to our new Earth Study group watching our webcast. Hey, everybody at Borders on Michigan, are you enjoying the class tonight? Yes.

Interesting. All the pain bodies have gathered together at Borders. I hear Courtney has a question.

Yes. Yes, I have a question. Hi.

I think a lot. So what I'm curious to know is, when I'm not in a relationship, I obsess that I'm going to be alone. And when I'm in a relationship, I obsess about my career or money or anything.

And I think a lot of people my age obsess about this, money, career, finding a relationship. What you say in the book, Eckhart, makes sense, but what I guess I'm having trouble with is taking that and actually putting it, you know, changing my life kind of daily, I guess.

I love the makes sense but. What you say makes sense but. Go ahead.

It does make sense, but then I just don't know, I guess I'm having trouble putting that into my daily life. How do I not obsess or think about these things all the time and try and stay in the present?

[Speaker 1] (2:07:15 - 2:07:22)

Well, when you say obsess, of course you're talking about certain thoughts that go through your head.

Over and over and over. Over and over and over.

[Speaker 1] (2:07:26 - 2:08:08)

So are you able sometimes to, while these thoughts go through your head, to recognize the futility of these thoughts? Are you sometimes able to be there as the presence in the background or see, for example, just after they happened, let's see, for example, realize for the past 20 minutes I've been obsessing about this or that. I'm having had thoughts about a certain situation that's not here now.

And that's part, of course, of the structure of the egoic mind. It loves to do that. Are you sometimes already there as the presence or are you always totally identified with the?

No, sometimes I am. And in the hindsight, I can go back and realize what I've done, but it's in the moment when I'm doing this and my mind just won't stop. It just keeps going and going and I keep thinking about things that it's hard to stop, I think, and kind of realize what I will realize eventually.

Yes, now something applies that we talked about the other week when we are talking about worry. Worry is another type of that kind of thinking, what you call obsessing. These thoughts, the way I put it two weeks ago, was these thoughts pretend to be important and necessary.

These thoughts want to draw in all your conscious attention and it's almost as if every thought we're saying, give me your attention. This is very important. You must think about this.

Think, think. Right. So the thoughts have the ability, they have a certain momentum behind them.

This is the momentum of the mind. And so it's not easy to become free of that. But the first freedom is in realizing their futility in the moment they happen and to realize that they fulfill no useful purpose except to make your life miserable.

[Speaker 2] (2:09:30 - 2:09:32)

Yeah, because what has the obsessing gotten you?

[Speaker 6] (2:09:33 - 2:09:38)

What does it do for you? Worry. More worry.

It's just kind of an idea of how to be, how to just be.

[Speaker 2] (2:09:38 - 2:09:46)

And also takes energy away from your being. It takes energy away from your being able to be fully present with whatever it is you're doing.

[Speaker 1] (2:09:47 - 2:09:47)

Yes.

You can see that, right?

[Speaker 1] (2:09:48 - 2:09:49)

You see that.

Oh, yeah. It's just at the time sometimes it's not so... Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (2:09:53 - 2:10:30)

So rather than trying to get rid of those thoughts, because what you resist persists. Right. So if you try to get rid of those thoughts, that will be hard.

But if you see they are futile and they are meaningless and they are no more than part of the structure of the conditioned egoic mind, because if you change your situation, you will obsess about something else. You've experienced that already. So if you're in a relationship, you then have some other thing to obsess about.

If there's no relationship, you can obsess about the lack of relationship. Yep.

[Speaker 7] (2:10:32 - 2:10:32)

Yep.

[Speaker 1] (2:10:33 - 2:10:40)

Or if you're making money, you can obsess about perhaps losing it. Perhaps the financial market will collapse.

[Speaker 7] (2:10:40 - 2:10:41)

Right.

[Speaker 1] (2:10:41 - 2:11:10)

Or if you have no money, then you obsess about how to make money. So see the futility of all this movement of thought in the moment it happens and realize it actually takes away your power. It's like a little parasite.

Egoic thought patterns are almost like a parasitic entity that lives in you that sucks up all your conscious attention.

[Speaker 2] (2:11:10 - 2:11:11)

You got that right, Courtney?

[Speaker 6] (2:11:12 - 2:11:16)

Oh, yeah. It makes sense now. It's just when I'm going through it, I can't stop.

[Speaker 2] (2:11:16 - 2:11:35)

Well, the thing to do is all of this doesn't happen. Awakening doesn't happen all at once. No.

The whole process is you have to catch yourself doing it more and more often. You start slowly, and more and more often you catch yourself, and pretty soon or later you'll find.

[Speaker 1] (2:11:35 - 2:11:35)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:11:36 - 2:11:36)

Yeah.

Or another thing that might be helpful is when the mind is not overly active, just normal moments, occasionally choose to take your attention away from thinking. We mentioned it earlier. Right.

And bring your attention to the present moment. Either use the device of feeling the inner body, conscious breath, sense perceptions, conscious alert sense perceptions. So choosing to be present rather than to be thinking.

And what that does is you begin to train yourself. You begin to train yourself to be present with yourself.

[Speaker 1] (2:12:16 - 2:12:16)

That's right.

[Speaker 2] (2:12:16 - 2:12:18)

It's about present moment training.

[Speaker 1] (2:12:19 - 2:12:22)

Right. And then presence grows in you.

Yes, it does.

[Speaker 1] (2:12:23 - 2:12:29)

But you have to invite it in. Yeah. Invite it in when the mind is not totally mad.

[Speaker 2] (2:12:29 - 2:12:29)

Right.

[Speaker 1] (2:12:29 - 2:12:37)

And then when the mind does become, then these periods come when it gets totally mad, then it's more likely that there will still be a presence there in the background.

[Speaker 2] (2:12:37 - 2:12:39)

Still can take a breath.

[Speaker 1] (2:12:39 - 2:12:39)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:12:39 - 2:13:03)

I'm getting better at it. I've actually gotten better in the past five weeks, and you will too, Courtney. Thank you.

Thank you. Thanks, everybody at Borders. Thank you all.

Okay. Somebody asked earlier, there was an email where somebody wanted to know, and I didn't get to it, wanted to know whether or not that pain body allows artists and writers and creative people to be more creative, the pain body.

[Speaker 1] (2:13:04 - 2:13:32)

There are, especially in modern art and modern writing, there are some artists who express the pain body in their work. So when you read their work or when you see their visual art, you can see, wow, there's a lot of pain in there. And perhaps that is how they free themselves to some extent of the pain body because they externalize it and make it into an object.

Yeah.

[Speaker 2] (2:13:32 - 2:13:35)

You can take that suffering and turn it into something else.

[Speaker 1] (2:13:35 - 2:14:09)

Now, whether this is really helpful to many humans, I don't know. To see so much pain on a canvas, I'm sure it was helpful for the artist to externalize that. So I believe that the deepest art goes deeper than that, than just show the pain, the human pain.

It may also include the human pain, but like the great works of literature are not just expressions of human suffering. They also show a dimension that's beyond suffering. Right.

[Speaker 2] (2:14:10 - 2:14:44)

Well, another question from Mary in Birmingham, Michigan. Politics in the pain body, she writes. Is it the pain body that leads us to be fascinated with others' downfalls, such as the governor of New York and the mayor of Detroit?

I find myself eagerly watching the news to hear more about the scandals. I find myself wondering what I would do if I were in their place, having risen so high, so successful, and fallen so far. Fallen so far.

That's Mary in Birmingham, Michigan. Is that our pain body that loves to hear bad things about other people, the tabloids?

[Speaker 1] (2:14:45 - 2:14:45)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:14:46 - 2:14:49)

Even watching the news, things that are true, scandals.

[Speaker 1] (2:14:49 - 2:14:50)

Loving bad news.

[Speaker 2] (2:14:51 - 2:14:52)

Yes, loving bad news.

[Speaker 1] (2:14:52 - 2:15:17)

Is also of the pain body. And so there are some publications actually thrive on emotional negativity. They actually sell a negative emotion.

Some newspapers do it in their headlines. And because they have realized the more negative the headlines are, the more papers they sell. Yeah.

You were saying the British press. They love it. Love it.

Yes. And we do too now in our country.

[Speaker 1] (2:15:20 - 2:15:20)

Yeah.

[Speaker 2] (2:15:20 - 2:15:30)

Yeah. More and more tabloid newspapers, tabloid magazines, following the lives of famous people. People love to see famous people fail, fall.

[Speaker 1] (2:15:30 - 2:15:30)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:15:30 - 2:15:32)

And that's our pain body?

[Speaker 1] (2:15:32 - 2:15:56)

Yes. Whenever you see that negativity, the enjoyment of negativity in whatever form, or the enjoyment of negative events, the enjoyment of negative things happening to people, the enjoyment of your own negative thinking, all that is the pain body. It loves pain.

It lives on it.

[Speaker 2] (2:15:56 - 2:15:58)

And loves drama. It seeks drama.

[Speaker 1] (2:15:58 - 2:15:59)

Drama is part of that pain. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:15:59 - 2:16:12)

Yes. Yes. Yes.

That story you told about going into the restaurant. Oh, yes. Yeah.

Oh, my gosh. Going into the restaurant and this guy is all disrupted. Wow.

[Speaker 1] (2:16:12 - 2:16:36)

Yes. But it was particularly strange because it happened immediately after I'd had a session with a woman who had a very heavy pain body at home. She came to see me at home.

And she had carried this pain body for many, many years. And it was so heavy that one could almost sense it in the energy field. In the room.

We've all encountered people like that where it's deep.

[Speaker 1] (2:16:39 - 2:16:40)

Yes. It's heavy. It's dark.

[Speaker 2] (2:16:40 - 2:16:41)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (2:16:41 - 2:18:06)

So I had been doing work with her and suddenly she became conscious. She was able to separate suddenly for the first time in her life. She was able to separate herself from the pain body.

And there was an awareness that realized she was carrying this heavy pain body inside. That was a great liberation for her. And she went off and said, Oh, wonderful.

Thank you so much. And that was the beginning of a change in her. And after this session with the woman, I went off to the restaurant.

And I felt that I was so happy that the pain body had left her, not left her permanently, but the awareness had come in. And then in the restaurant, I encountered a man in a wheelchair at a table nearby who had just finished his meal. And then I could feel the negative emotion in him building up, becoming stronger and stronger and stronger.

And suddenly he started shouting and screaming. And I realized I had a suspicion that the pain body, the universal pain body, because every personal pain body is an expression of the one human universal pain body, that the pain body had come back there to tell me, I'm still here. You thought you got rid of me, but I'm still here.

So the pain body got into the person who had the most negativity inside.

Because the person with the most negativity would have drawn it in.

[Speaker 1] (2:18:10 - 2:18:10)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:18:10 - 2:18:18)

But did you, at the end of this incident in the book that you write about, and the restaurant owner says, Did you do all this? Did you cause this?

[Speaker 1] (2:18:18 - 2:18:21)

The restaurant owner must have had some intuition that there was some connection.

[Speaker 2] (2:18:22 - 2:18:30)

Between you sitting in the restaurant and all this disruption. And so the answer is, Did the pain body follow you into the restaurant?

[Speaker 1] (2:18:30 - 2:18:54)

I never knew the answer. It occurred to me that that might have happened. All it means is that the energy that was so heavy, the room, my place where she had come to see me was so heavy with that energy.

When I left, perhaps it came with me. And it's possible. I don't know the final answer to that.

Yeah.

[Speaker 2] (2:18:55 - 2:19:02)

Yes. Because as we were saying earlier, you speak of the pain body like it's its own alien force. Like a ghost of some kind.

[Speaker 1] (2:19:02 - 2:19:02)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:19:03 - 2:19:08)

But it is. It's not a ghost. It's an energy.

It's an energy field.

[Speaker 1] (2:19:08 - 2:19:33)

And eventually it becomes transmuted. Which means it loses its energy for its pain body form. And the very energy that was trapped there because of the energy was trapped.

It was emotional energy that was trapped inside this shell. That becomes freed through presence.

[Speaker 2] (2:19:34 - 2:19:43)

So that's what we're going to talk about next week. Next week is how you can begin to free the pain body or any energy that you're carrying from the past.

[Speaker 1] (2:19:43 - 2:19:44)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:19:44 - 2:19:45)

And you can free it instantly.

[Speaker 1] (2:19:45 - 2:20:12)

You free it instantly. But although not the whole of it necessarily instantly. But in the moment, some of it can become transmuted.

And the example I gave is like it's like putting a log into the fire. The fire is the fire of consciousness or presence. And so the pain body can actually be transmuted and becomes presence.

We'll talk about that next week.

[Speaker 2] (2:20:12 - 2:20:18)

Before we say goodbye, though, let's sum up what we've covered in this class today. What do you want people to know about the pain body?

[Speaker 1] (2:20:19 - 2:20:54)

The most vital thing is for people to be there when it happens. Now, when it happens means it's either happening to somebody close to you at home, your partner or family member. Or more importantly, when the pain body happens to you.

Now, it's easier to realize that the pain body is there when you see it arising in somebody else. Always easier. You require more presence to see it in yourself.

But that's the vital thing is to be there and realize it. That's the pain body.

Well, the way you know it's in yourself is when you start to tell yourself the story. The woman who was the big fat cow or family had called her a big fat cow her whole life. When you start to replay the tapes in your head over and over again.

My story, my story, my story. Identifying with that. Anything you identify with is ego.

[Speaker 1] (2:21:14 - 2:21:15)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:21:15 - 2:21:18)

Right. That's how you know it's the pain body.

[Speaker 1] (2:21:18 - 2:21:40)

Yes. Or a sudden emotion arises. Something your partner made a remark, said something.

And an enormous emotion arises that is out of proportion to the external trigger. And that could be the beginning of the arising pain body. So then you say, oh, there's the pain body.

Then you already, you're not at the mercy of the pain body.

So let me ask you this. On the night that you had that, you know, the breakthrough where you said, I cannot live with myself any longer. Did you lose your pain body too?

[Speaker 1] (2:21:51 - 2:21:52)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:21:53 - 2:21:55)

Well, that just was one happy day, wasn't it?

[Speaker 1] (2:21:57 - 2:21:58)

That's quite rare.

[Speaker 2] (2:21:58 - 2:21:59)

Oh, my goodness.

[Speaker 1] (2:22:01 - 2:22:02)

You lost your ego.

[Speaker 2] (2:22:02 - 2:22:04)

You lost your pain body. What a day that was.

[Speaker 1] (2:22:05 - 2:22:59)

Well, after years of dreadful suffering. So that's the one more thing to say about the pain body is when you see it in somebody else, you have to be very careful. The pain bodies don't like to hear that they are the pain body.

So when you're talking to somebody like your partner, you have to be very careful. Because once the partner has already been taken over by the pain body, if at that stage you say, there's your pain body. Your partner won't be hearing you anymore.

The pain body will be hearing you and the pain body will say something back. And it won't be pleasant. And you can't argue with the pain body.

You can never win an argument with the pain body. He'll always win. The pain body will win.

It will go on and on and on and find another clever argument why the pain is justified and right.

[Speaker 2] (2:23:00 - 2:23:19)

And so it's like our first caller from Silver Spring was talking about her sister. What we must learn to do is be compassionate. Yes.

Stand still. Yes. Stand still, as I said with the point.

Stand still and allow it to be. Yes. Whatever it is.

Yes. And then.

[Speaker 1] (2:23:19 - 2:23:21)

And then you don't feed it.

[Speaker 2] (2:23:21 - 2:23:26)

You don't feed it. Don't allow yourself to be drawn into the, pulled into the drama of it.

And if the pain body is not fed, then it won't sustain itself for that long. It will have to seek some other place where it will get fed or it will subside. So that's the beauty when you're in a relationship.

If both partners are conscious enough, you can have an agreement that says, if I observe the pain body beginning in you or you observe the pain body beginning in me, please let me know.

I'm going to point it out.

[Speaker 1] (2:23:56 - 2:24:10)

You have to point it out at the beginning before it takes over completely. Because once it's taken over completely, the person won't be hearing you anymore. But at the beginning, you can still say, could that be your pain body?

Even that is dangerous, but you can try.

Oh, it's not my pain body.

[Speaker 2] (2:24:13 - 2:24:50)

Well, thanks to everybody around the world for joining us again. This fifth class will be available on demand tomorrow for free, of course, here at Oprah.com. And if you want to download or watch any of our classes, you can do that also tomorrow.

All of them are available at Oprah.com and iTunes. It's free. Thanks to Nature Made Soft Gel Vitamins.

Don't forget to update your workbook and get ready for next week's class. Again, we thank you. Thank you.

We thank you. You're a man without a pain body. We'll see you in class next time.

Thank you. Good night, everybody.

CHAPTER 6 BREAKING FREE The beginning of freedom from the pain body lies first of all in the realization that you have a pain body. Then, more important, in your ability to stay present enough, alert enough, to notice the pain body in yourself as a heavy influx of negative emotion when it becomes active. When it is recognized, it can no longer pretend to be you and live and renew itself through you.

It is your conscious presence that breaks the identification with the pain body. When you don't identify with it, the pain body can no longer control your thinking and so cannot renew itself anymore by feeding on your thoughts. The pain body in most cases does not dissolve immediately, but once you have severed the link between it and your thinking, the pain body begins to lose energy.

Your thinking ceases to be clouded by emotion. Your present perceptions are no longer distorted by the past. The energy that was trapped in the pain body then changes its vibrational frequency and is transmuted into presence.

In this way, the pain body becomes fuel for consciousness. This is why many of the wisest, most enlightened men and women on our planet once had a heavy pain body. Regardless of what you say or do or what face you show to the world, your mental emotional state cannot be concealed.

Every human being emanates an energy field that corresponds to his or her inner state, and most people can sense it, although they may feel someone else's energy emanation only subliminally. That is to say, they don't know that they sense it, yet it determines to a large extent how they feel about and react to that person. Some people are most clearly aware of it when they first meet someone, even before any words are exchanged.

A little later, however, words take over the relationship, and with words come the roles that most people play. Attention then moves to the realm of mind, and the ability to sense the other person's energy field becomes greatly diminished. Nevertheless, it is still felt on an unconscious level.

When you realize that pain bodies unconsciously seek more pain, that is to say, that they want something bad to happen, you will understand that many traffic accidents are caused by drivers whose pain bodies are active at the time. When two drivers with active pain bodies arrive at an intersection at the same time, the likelihood of an accident is many times greater than under normal circumstances. Unconsciously, they both want the accident to happen.

The role of pain bodies in traffic accidents is most obvious in the phenomenon called road rage, when drivers become physically violent often over a trivial matter, such as someone in front of them driving too slowly. Many acts of violence are committed by normal people who temporarily turn into maniacs. All over the world at court proceedings you hear the defense lawyers say, this is totally out of character, and the accused, I don't know what came over me.

To my knowledge, so far no defense lawyer has said to the judge, although the day may not be far off, this is a case of diminished responsibility. My client's pain body was activated and he did not know what he was doing. In fact, he didn't do it, his pain body did.

Does this mean that people are not responsible for what they do when possessed by the pain body? My answer is, how can they be? How can you be responsible when you are unconscious, when you don't know what you are doing?

However, in the greater scheme of things, human beings are meant to evolve into conscious beings, and those who don't will suffer the consequences of their unconsciousness. They are out of alignment with the evolutionary impulse of the universe. And even that is only relatively true.

From a higher perspective, it is not possible to be out of alignment with the evolution of the universe, and even human unconsciousness and the suffering it generates is part of that evolution. When you can't stand the endless cycle of suffering anymore, you begin to awaken. So the pain body too has its necessary place in the larger picture.

Presence A woman in her thirties came to see me. As she greeted me, I could sense the pain behind her polite and superficial smile. She started telling me her story, and within one second her smile changed into a grimace of pain.

Then she began to sob uncontrollably. She said she felt lonely and unfulfilled. There was much anger and sadness.

As a child she had been abused by a physically violent father. I saw quickly that her pain was not caused by her present life circumstances, but by an extraordinarily heavy pain body. Her pain body had become the filter through which she viewed her life situation, and to see the link between the emotional pain and her thoughts, being completely identified with both.

She could not yet see that she was feeding the pain body with her thoughts. In other words, she lived with the burden of a deeply unhappy self. At some level, however, she must have realized that her pain originated within herself, that she was a burden to herself.

She was ready to awaken, and this is why she had come. I directed the focus of her attention to what she was feeling inside her body, and asked her to sense the emotion directly, instead of through the filter of her unhappy thoughts, her unhappy story. She said she had come expecting me to show her the way out of her unhappiness, not into it.

Reluctantly, however, she did what I asked her to do. Tears were rolling down her face, her whole body was shaking. ''At this moment, this is what you feel,'' I said.

''There's nothing you can do about the fact that at this moment, this is what you feel. Now, instead of wanting this moment to be different from the way it is, which adds more pain to the pain that is already there, is it possible for you to completely accept that this is what you feel right now?'' She was quiet for a moment. Suddenly she looked impatient as if she was about to get up and said angrily, ''No, I don't want to accept this.'' ''Who is speaking?'' I asked her. ''You, or the unhappiness in you. Can you see that your unhappiness about being unhappy is just another layer of unhappiness?'' She became quiet again. ''I'm not asking you to do anything.

All I'm asking is that you find out whether it is possible for you to allow those feelings to be there. In other words, and this may sound strange, if you don't mind being unhappy, what happens to the unhappiness? Don't you want to find out?'' She looked puzzled briefly, and after a minute or so of sitting silently, I suddenly noticed a significant shift in her energy field.

She said, ''This is weird. I'm still unhappy, but now there's space around it. It seems to matter less.

This was the first time I heard somebody put it like that. There's space around my unhappiness. That space, of course, comes when there's inner acceptance of whatever you're experiencing in the present moment.

I didn't say much else, allowing her to be with the experience. Later she came to understand that the moment she stopped identifying with the feeling, the old painful emotion that lived in her, the moment she put her attention on it directly without trying to resist it, it could no longer control her thinking and so become mixed up with a mentally constructed story called the unhappy me. Another dimension had come into her life that transcended her personal past, the dimension of presence.

Since you cannot be unhappy without an unhappy story, this was the end of her unhappiness. It was also the beginning of the end of her pain body. Emotion in itself is not unhappiness.

Only emotion plus an unhappy story is unhappiness. When our session came to an end, it was fulfilling to know that I had just witnessed the arising of presence in another human being. The very reason for our existence in human form is to bring that dimension of consciousness into this world.

I had also witnessed a diminishment of the pain body, not through fighting it, but through bringing the light of consciousness to it. A few minutes after my visitor left, a friend arrived to drop something off. As soon as she came into the room, she said, ìWhat happened here?

The energy feels heavy and murky. It almost makes me feel sick. You need to open the windows, burn some incense.î I explained that I had just witnessed a major release in someone with a very dense pain body, and that what she felt must be some of the energy that was released during our session. My friend, however, didnít want to stay and listen. She wanted to get away as soon as possible. I opened the windows and went out to have dinner at a small Indian restaurant nearby.

What happened there was a clear further confirmation of what I already knew, that on some level all seemingly individual human pain bodies are connected, although the form this particular confirmation took did come as a shock. The return of the pain body. I sat down at a table and ordered a meal.

There were a few other guests. At a nearby table there was a middle-aged man in a wheelchair who was just finishing his meal. He glanced at me once, briefly but intensely.

A few minutes passed. Suddenly he became restless, agitated, his body began twitching. The waiter came to take his plate.

The man started arguing with him. ìThe food was no good, it was dreadful.î ìThen why did you eat it?î asked the waiter. ìAnd that really set him off.î He started shouting, became abusive. Vile words were coming out of his mouth. Intense violent hatred filled the room. One could feel that energy entering the cells of oneís body, looking for something to latch on to.

Other guests too, but for some strange reason ignoring me completely as I sat in intense presence. I suspected that the universal human pain body had come back to tell me. ìYou thought you defeated me.

Look, Iím still here.î I also considered the possibility that the released energy field left behind after our session followed me to the restaurant and attached itself to the one person in whom it found a compatible vibrational frequency, that is to say, a heavy pain body. The manager opened the door. ìJust leave, just leave.î The man zoomed out in his electric wheelchair, leaving everyone stunned. One minute later he returned. His pain body wasnít finished yet. It needed more.

He pushed open the door with his wheelchair, shouting obscenities. The waitress tried to stop him from coming in. He put his chair in fast forward and pinned her against the wall.

Other guests jumped up and tried to pull him away, shouting, screaming, pandemonium. A little later a policeman arrived. The man became quiet, was asked to leave and not return.

The waitress fortunately was not hurt except for bruises on her legs. When it was all over, the manager came to my table and asked me, half joking but perhaps feeling intuitively that there was some connection, ìDid you cause all this?î ìThe pain body in children.î Childrenís pain bodies sometimes manifest as moodiness or withdrawal. The child becomes sullen, refuses to interact and may sit in a corner, hugging a doll or sucking a thumb.

They can also manifest as weeping fits or temper tantrums. The child screams, may throw him or herself on the floor or become destructive. Thwarted wanting can easily trigger the pain body, and in a developing ego the force of wanting can be intense.

Parents may watch helplessly in incomprehension and disbelief as their little angel becomes transformed within a few seconds into a little monster. ìWhere does all that unhappiness come from?î they wonder. To a greater or lesser extent it is the childís share of the collective pain body of humanity which goes back to the very origin of the human ego.

But the child may also already have taken on pain from his or her parentsí pain bodies, and so the parents may see in the child a reflection of what is also in them. Highly sensitive children are particularly affected by their parentsí pain bodies. Having to witness their parentsí insane drama causes almost unbearable emotional pain, and so it is often these sensitive children who grow into adults with heavy pain bodies.

Children are not fooled by parents who try to hide their pain body from them, who say to each other, ìWe mustnít fight in front of the children.î This usually means, while the parents make polite conversation, the home is pervaded with negative energy. Suppressed pain bodies are extremely toxic, even more so than openly active ones, and that psychic toxicity is absorbed by the children and contributes to the development of their own pain body. Some children learn subliminally about ego and pain body simply by living with very unconscious parents.

A woman whose parents both had strong egos and heavy pain bodies told me that often when her parents were shouting and screaming at each other, she would look at them and, although she loved them, would say to herself, ìThese people are nuts. How did I ever end up here?î There was already an awareness in her of the insanity of living in such a way. That awareness helped reduce the amount of pain she absorbed from her parents.

Parents often wonder how to deal with their childís pain body. The primary question is, of course, are they dealing with their own? Do they recognize it within themselves?

Are they able to stay present enough when it becomes activated, so that they can be aware of the emotion on the feeling level before it gets a chance to turn into thinking and thus into an unhappy person? While the child is having a pain body attack, there isnít much you can do except to stay present so that you are not drawn into an emotional reaction. The childís pain body would only feed on it.

Pain bodies can be extremely dramatic. Donít buy into the drama. Donít take it too seriously.

If the pain body was triggered by thwarted wanting, donít give in now to its demands. Otherwise the child will learn, ìThe more unhappy I become, the more likely I am to get what I want.î This is a recipe for dysfunction in later life. The pain body will be frustrated by your non-reaction and may briefly act up even more before it subsides.

Fortunately, pain body episodes in children are usually more short-lived than in adults. After it has subsided, or perhaps the next day, you can talk to the child about what happened. But donít tell the child about the pain body.

Ask questions instead. For example, ìWhat was it that came over you yesterday when you wouldnít stop screaming?î ìDo you remember?î ìWhat did it feel like?î ìWas it a good feeling?î ìThat thing that came over youódoes it have a name?î ìNo.î ìIf it had a name, what would it be called?î ìIf you could see it, what would it look like?î ìCan you paint a picture of what it would look like?î ìWhat happened to it when it went away?î ìDid it go to sleep?î ìDo you think it may come back?î These are just a few suggested questions. All these questions are designed to awaken the witnessing faculty in the child, which is presence.

They will help the child to disidentify from the pain body. You may also want to talk to the child about your own pain body, using the childís terminology. The next time the child gets taken over by the pain body you can say, ìItís come back, hasnít it?î Use whatever words the child used when you talked about it.

Direct the childís attention to what it feels like. Let your attitude be one of interest or curiosity rather than one of criticism or condemnation. It is unlikely that this will stop the pain body in its tracks, and it may appear that the child will not even be hearing you, yet some awareness will remain in the background of the childís consciousness even while the pain body is active.

After a few times the awareness will have grown stronger and the pain body will have weakened. The child is growing in presence. One day you may find that the child is the one to point out to you that your own pain body has taken control of you.

Unhappiness Not all unhappiness is of the pain body. Some of it is new unhappiness, created whenever you are out of alignment with the present moment, when the ìnowî is denied in one way or another. When you recognize that the present moment is always already the case, and therefore inevitable, you can bring an uncompromising inner ìyesî to it, and so not only create no further unhappiness, but, with inner resistance gone, find yourself empowered by life itself.

The pain bodyís unhappiness is always clearly out of proportion to the apparent cause. In other words, it is an overreaction. This is how it is recognized, although not usually by the sufferer, the person possessed.

Someone with a heavy pain body easily finds reasons for being upset, angry, hurt, sad, or fearful. Relatively insignificant things that someone else would shrug off with a smile or not even notice, become the apparent cause of intense unhappiness. They are, of course, not the true cause, but only act as a trigger.

They bring back to life the old accumulated emotion. The emotion then moves into the head and amplifies and energizes the egoic mind structures. Pain body and ego are close relatives.

They need each other. The triggering event or situation is then interpreted and reacted to through the screen of a heavily emotional ego. This is to say, its significance becomes completely distorted.

You look at the present through the eyes of the emotional past in you. In other words, what you see and experience is not in the event or situation, but in you. Or, in some cases, it may be there in the event or situation, but you amplify it through your reaction.

This reaction, this amplification, is what the pain body wants and needs, what it feeds on. For someone possessed by a heavy pain body, it is often impossible to step outside his or her distorted interpretation, the heavily emotional story. The more negative emotion there is in a story, the heavier and more impenetrable it becomes.

And so the story is not recognized as such, but is taken to be reality. When you are completely trapped in the movement of thought and the accompanying emotion, stepping outside is not possible because you don't even know that there is an outside. You are trapped in your own movie or dream, trapped in your own hell.

To you it is reality and no other reality is possible. And as far as you are concerned, your reaction is the only possible reaction, breaking identification with the pain body. A person with a strong active pain body has a particular energy emanation that other people perceive as extremely unpleasant.

When they meet such a person, some people will immediately want to remove themselves or reduce interaction with him or her to a minimum. They feel repulsed by the person's energy field. Others will feel a wave of aggression towards this person, and they will be rude or attack him or her verbally, and in some cases even physically.

This means there's something within them that resonates with the other person's pain body. What they react to so strongly is also in them. It is their own pain body.

Not surprisingly, people with heavy and frequently active pain bodies often find themselves in conflict situations. Sometimes, of course, they actively provoke them, but at other times they may not actually do anything. The negativity they emanate is enough to attract hostility and generate conflict.

It requires a high degree of presence to avoid reacting when confronted by somebody with such an active pain body. If you're able to stay present, it sometimes happens that your presence enables the other person to disidentify from his or her own pain body and thus experience the miracle of a sudden awakening. Although the awakening may be short-lived, the awakening process will have become initiated.

I witnessed happened many years ago. My doorbell rang close to 11 o'clock at night. My neighbor Ethel's anxiety-laden voice came through the intercom.

We need to talk. This is very important. Please let me in.

Ethel was middle-aged, intelligent, and highly educated. She also had a strong ego and a heavy pain body. She escaped from Nazi Germany when she was an adolescent, and many of her family members perished in the concentration camps.

Ethel sat down on my sofa, agitated, her hands trembling. She took letters and documents out of the file she carried with her and spread them out all over the sofa and floor. At once I had the strange sensation as if a dimmer switch had turned the inside of my entire body to maximum power.

There was nothing to do other than remain open, alert, intensely present, present with every cell of the body. I looked at her with no thought and no judgment and listened in stillness without any mental commentary. A torrent of words came out of her mouth.

They sent me another disturbing letter today. They are conducting a vendetta against me. You must help.

We need to fight them together. Their crooked lawyers will stop at nothing. I will lose my home.

They are threatening me with dispossession. It transpired that she refused to pay the service charge because the property managers had failed to carry out some repairs. They in turn threatened to take her to court.

She talked for ten minutes or so. I sat, looked, and listened. Suddenly she stopped talking, looked at the papers all around her as if she had just woken up from a dream.

She became calm and gentle. Her entire energy field changed. Then she looked at me and said, This isn't important at all, is it?

No, it isn't, I said. She sat quietly for a couple more minutes, then picked up her papers and left. The next morning she stopped me in the street, looking at me somewhat suspiciously.

What did you do to me? Last night was the first night in years that I slept well. In fact, I slept like a baby.

She believed I had done something to her. But I had done nothing. Instead of asking what I had done to her, perhaps she should have asked what I had not done.

I had not reacted, not confirmed the reality of her story, not fed her mind with more thought and her pain body with more emotion. I had allowed her to experience whatever she was experiencing at that moment. And the power of allowing lies in non-interference, non-doing.

Being present is always infinitely more powerful than anything one could say or do, although sometimes being present can give rise to words or actions. What happened to her was not yet a permanent shift, but a glimpse of what is possible, a glimpse of what was already within her. In Zen such a glimpse is called Satori.

Satori is a moment of presence, a brief stepping out of the voice in your head, the thought processes and their reflection in the body as emotion. It is the arising of inner spaciousness where before there was the clutter of thought and the turmoil of emotion. The thinking mind cannot understand presence and so will often misinterpret it.

It will say that you are uncaring, distant, have no compassion, are not relating. The truth is, you are relating, but at a level deeper than thought and emotion. In fact, at that level there is a true coming together, a true joining that goes far beyond relating.

In the stillness of presence you can sense the formless essence in yourself and in the other as one. Knowing the oneness of yourself and the other is true love, true care, true compassion. Triggers.

Some pain bodies react to only one particular kind of trigger or situation, which is usually one that resonates with a certain kind of emotional pain suffered in the past. For example, if a child grows up with parents for whom financial issues are the source of frequent drama and conflict, he or she may absorb the parent's fear around money and develop a pain body that is triggered whenever financial issues are involved. The child as adult gets upset or angry even over insignificant amounts of money.

Behind the upset or anger lies issues of survival and intense fear. I have seen spiritual, that is to say relatively conscious people, who started to shout, blame, and make accusations the moment they picked up the phone to talk to their stockbroker or realtor.

Just as there is a health warning on every package of cigarettes, perhaps there should be similar warnings on every banknote and bank statement.

Money can activate the pain body and cause complete unconsciousness. Someone who in childhood was neglected or abandoned by one or both parents will likely develop a pain body that becomes triggered in any situation that resonates even remotely with their primordial pain of abandonment. A friend arriving a few minutes late to pick them up at the airport or a spouse coming home late can trigger a major pain body attack.

If their partner or spouse leaves them or dies, the emotional pain they experience goes far beyond the pain that is natural in such a situation. It may be intense anguish, long-lasting incapacitating depression, or obsessive anger. A woman physically abused by her father may find that her pain body becomes easily activated in any close relationship with a man.

Alternatively, the emotion that makes up her pain body may draw her to a man whose pain body is similar to that of her father. Her pain body may feel a magnetic pull to someone who it senses will give it more of the same pain. That pain is sometimes misinterpreted as falling in love.

A man who had been an unwanted child and was given no love and a minimum of care and attention by his mother developed a heavy ambivalent pain body that consisted of unfulfilled intense longing for his mother's love and attention, and at the same time intense hatred towards her for withholding what he so desperately needed. As an adult, almost every woman would trigger his pain body's neediness, a form of emotional pain, and this would manifest as an addictive compulsion to conquer and seduce almost every woman he met and in this way get the female love and attention that the pain body craved. He became quite an expert on seduction, but as soon as a relationship turned intimate or his advances were rejected, the pain body's anger towards his mother would come up and sabotage the relationship.

When you recognize your own pain body as it arises, you will also quickly learn what the most common triggers are that activate it, whether it be situations or certain things other people do or say. When those triggers occur, you will immediately see them for what they are and enter a heightened state of alertness. Within a second or two you will also notice the emotional reaction that is the arising pain body, but in that state of alert presence you won't identify with it, which means the pain body cannot take you over and become the voice in your head.

If you are with your partner at the time, you may tell him or her, what you just said or did triggered my pain body. Have an agreement with your partner that whenever either of you says or does something that triggers the other person's pain body, you will immediately mention it. In this way the pain body can no longer renew itself through drama in the relationship and instead of pulling you into unconsciousness will help you become fully present.

Every time you are present when the pain body arises, some of the pain body's negative emotional energy will burn up as it were and become transmuted into presence. The rest of the pain body will quickly withdraw and wait for a better opportunity to arise again, that is to say when you are less conscious. A better opportunity for the pain body to arise may come whenever you lose presence, perhaps after you've had a few drinks or while watching a violent film.

The tiniest negative emotion such as being irritated or anxious can also serve as a doorway through which the pain body can return. The pain body needs your unconsciousness, it cannot tolerate the light of presence. The pain body as an awakener.

At first sight it may seem that the pain body is the greatest obstacle to the arising of a new consciousness in humanity. It occupies your mind, controls and distorts your thinking, disrupts your relationships and feels like a dark cloud that occupies your entire energy field. It tends to make you unconscious, spiritually speaking, which means totally identified with mind and emotion.

It makes you reactive, makes you say and do things that are designed to increase the unhappiness within yourself and the world. As unhappiness increases, however, it also causes increasing disruption in your life. Perhaps the body can't take the stress anymore and develops an illness or some dysfunction.

Perhaps you become involved in an accident, some huge conflict situation or drama that was caused by the pain body's desire for something bad to happen, or you become the perpetrator of physical violence, or it all becomes too much and you cannot live with your unhappy self anymore. The pain body, of course, is part of that false self. Whenever you get taken over by the pain body, whenever you don't recognize it for what it is, it becomes part of your ego.

Whatever you identify with turns into ego. The pain body is one of the most powerful things the ego can identify with, just as the pain body needs the ego to renew itself through it. That unholy alliance, however, eventually breaks down in those cases where the pain body is so heavy that the egoic mind structures, instead of being strengthened by it, are becoming eroded by the continuous onslaught of the pain body's energy charge, in the same way that an electronic device can be empowered by an electric current, but also destroyed by it if the voltage is too high.

It often reaches a point where they feel their life is becoming unbearable, where they can't take any more pain, any more drama. One person expressed this by saying plainly and simply that she was fed up with being unhappy. Some people may feel, as I did, that they cannot live with themselves anymore.

Inner peace then becomes their first priority. Their acute emotional pain forces them to disidentify from the content of their minds and the mental-emotional structures that give birth to and perpetuate the unhappy me. They then know that neither their unhappy story nor the emotion they feel is who they are.

They realize they are the knowing, not the known. Rather than pulling them into unconsciousness, the pain body becomes their awakener, the decisive factor that forces them into a state of presence. However, due to the unprecedented influx of consciousness we are witnessing on the planet now, many people no longer need to go through the depths of acute suffering to be able to disidentify from the pain body.

Whenever they notice they have slipped back into a dysfunctional state, they are able to choose to step out of identification with thinking and emotion and enter the state of presence. Their relinquished resistance becomes still and alert, one with what is, within and without. The next step in human evolution is not inevitable, but for the first time in the history of our planet it can be a conscious choice.

Who is making that choice? You are. And who are you?

Consciousness that has become conscious of itself. Breaking free of the pain body. A question people frequently ask is, how long does it take to become free of the pain body?

The answer is, of course, that it depends both on the density of an individual's pain body as well as the degree or intensity of that individual's arising presence. But it is not the pain body but identification with it that causes the suffering that you inflict on yourself and others. It is not the pain body but identification with the pain body that forces you to relive the past again and again and keeps you in a state of unconsciousness.

So a more important question to ask would be this, how long does it take to become free of identification with the pain body? And the answer to that question is, it takes no time at all. When the pain body is activated, know that what you are feeling is the pain body in you.

This knowing is all that is needed to break your identification with it. And when identification with it ceases, the transmutation begins. The knowing prevents the old emotion from rising up into your head and taking over not only the internal dialogue but also your actions as well as interactions with other people.

This means the pain body cannot use you anymore and renew itself through you. The old emotion may then still live in you for a while and come up periodically. It may also still occasionally trick you into identifying with it again and thus obscure the knowing but not for long.

Not projecting the old emotion into situations means facing it directly within yourself. It may not be pleasant but it won't kill you. Your presence is more than capable of containing it.

The emotion is not who you are. When you feel the pain body, don't fall into the era of thinking there's something wrong with you. Making yourself into a problem, the ego loves that.

The knowing needs to be followed by accepting. Anything else will obscure it again. Accepting means you allow yourself to feel whatever it is you're feeling at that moment.

It is part of the is-ness of the now. You can't argue with what is. Well, you can, but if you do, you suffer.

Through allowing, you become what you are, vast, spacious. You become whole. You're not a fragment anymore, which is how the ego perceives itself.

Your true nature emerges, which is one with the nature of God. Jesus points to this when he says, Be ye whole even as your father in heaven is whole. The New Testament's be ye perfect is a mistranslation of the original Greek word which means whole.

This is to say, you don't need to become whole, but be what you already are, with or without the pain body.

[Speaker 2] (41:49 - 42:35)

Welcome everybody to class six of our New Earth web series with author Eckhart Tolle. We're live again tonight and one of the things that we both look forward to every week is the energy that we feel from all of you out there who've signed on from your living room couches, from your kitchen tables, your home offices and dens and family rooms. I consider this to be a sacred moment when we can all come together and in community this way and share in this work.

So wherever you are right now, I thank you. Eckhart Tolle thanks you for awakening with us. One of my other favorite books is a book that Eckhart Tolle had written, um, I don't know how many years ago.

A few years ago.

A few years ago and it's a little book with wonderful passages in it and it's called Stillness Speaks. It really speaks to, um, just on a different level what we've been talking about in New Earth and I wanted to begin tonight's class, uh, before we begin our moments of silence here, reading from the beginning of Stillness Speaks by Eckhart Tolle and it says, stillness is your essential nature. What is stillness?

The inner space or awareness in which the words on this page are being perceived and become thoughts. Without that awareness there would be no perception, no thoughts, no world. You are that awareness disguised as a person.

I just love that. That you are the awareness. That's what we've been saying week after week here is that you're not your thoughts, you are the awareness of your thoughts.

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (43:40 - 43:41)

Disguised as a person.

[Speaker 1] (43:41 - 44:00)

Yes. And you're not your sense perceptions, you are the awareness that makes all sense perception possible. You're not your emotions, you're the awareness that makes all these emotions possible.

So that's the, and that's the dimension where you are timeless. Everything else is time.

[Speaker 2] (44:01 - 44:24)

So when you lose touch with your inner stillness, you lose touch with yourself. When you lose touch with yourself, you lose yourself in the world. Your innermost sense of self of who you are is inseparable from stillness.

This is the I am that is deeper than name and form. You are the awareness disguised as a person.

[Speaker 9] (44:24 - 44:25)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (44:25 - 44:28)

So I think we should have our moments of silence leading into that.

[Speaker 1] (44:28 - 45:03)

Yes. So I suggest to use again the, what I sometimes call the anchor of the inner body so that we can put our attention into the inner body and fully inhabit the body, be in the body and feel the aliveness that pervades the entire body. And that's where our attention is.

And that is our anchor for stillness. So let's do that now. Attention moves away from thinking into the aliveness of the inner body.

All right. All right. That is beautiful.

So everybody tonight we're discussing chapter six, breaking free. Let's start with an overview of what this chapter is really about. In chapter five, as you all know, we met the pain body and that's, we all know what that is.

That part of us that's addicted to negativity and unhappiness. And Eckhart says that the beginning of freedom from the pain body lies first of all, in the realization that we all have a pain body. That was chapter five.

We did that last week. Now in chapter six, we're going to explore what triggers the pain body in our everyday lives and whether it's a situation or certain things other people do or say. Eckhart shows us how that we can actually use those triggers to enter a more heightened state of awareness.

And also this chapter is about breaking free of the pain body. So you don't have to continually carry the past and everything that happened in the past and what people did to you, your story. You can release that.

Tonight is about breaking free at the beginning of the chapter on page 162. You say that when you disidentify with the pain body, the energy that was trapped in the pain body, you say, then changes itself, its vibrational frequency and is transmuted into presence. And this way, the pain body becomes fuel for consciousness.

This is why many of the wisest, most enlightened men and women on our planet once had a heavy pain body, you say. So what I wanted to ask is that so many people today, uh, medicate themselves, um, any uncomfortable feelings that you have, you go to a psychiatrist or counselor. Remember the first thing they do is prescribe medication for you.

Does medication get in the way of, um, using the pain body as fuel for enlightenment?

Uh, to a large extent it does. There may be certain extreme cases when medication is necessary. And for people who already are on medication, it's certainly not advisable to go off medication without the advice of a doctor.

So if you feel that it's time for you to get off, talk to a doctor who is relatively conscious and can help you gradually to get off the medication. So it's really a question of, uh, not giving into this culturally conditioned behavior that says whenever you feel some discomfort inside yourself, emotional disturbance, immediately to seek some external help in the form of a substance that you ask your doctor to give you rather learn to be with inner discomfort that arises, learn to be with emotional pain that arises rather than wanting to eliminate it, uh, learn to accept it. Acceptance is one of the main, uh, focal points of this teaching. Teach, learn to accept whatever emotion arises in you rather than run away from it or wanting to eliminate it.

But why this is the thing, Eckhart, why would I want to accept it? That's why people are medicating themselves.

[Speaker 9] (48:55 - 48:55)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (48:55 - 49:08)

That's why people eat, they gamble, they overwork themselves, they live in denial, they become unconscious because they don't want to deal with the pain. That's what we're all trying to get away from.

[Speaker 1] (49:08 - 49:08)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (49:08 - 49:08)

Pain.

[Speaker 1] (49:08 - 50:22)

Yes. Now, if you medicate it, it doesn't actually go away. It dulls the pain so that you are not conscious of it anymore.

It's still there in the background. It's the same thing for many illnesses. The, uh, for example, I had a heavy cold a couple of weeks ago.

Yes. I didn't take anything, but some people take things to, so that the symptoms are suppressed of the cold. It doesn't suppress the cold.

The cold is still there. So why accept it? It's because it is here at this moment.

So it's part of bringing this inner yes to whatever arises in the present moment. It is part of becoming friendly with the present moment, even if on the surface, the present moment doesn't look that great. So we are bringing, and this is where the awareness begins to come into the emotion.

If we bring acceptance to whatever we feel at this moment, rather than not wanting to feel it, the equivalent of that would be an external situation that arises. And then I resist it because I don't want this situation to be as it is, but it already is.

[Speaker 2] (50:22 - 50:30)

And then you just cause stress when, and that's what you say in this book and also in the Power of Now, wanting something to be different than it is, is what causes stress.

[Speaker 1] (50:30 - 50:46)

And creates further negative emotion. If there's some emotion in you that is not pleasant, and then you don't want to be feeling what you feel, creates on top of the emotion that's already there, another negative emotion that wants to deny what's there.

[Speaker 2] (50:46 - 51:01)

So the best thing to do is to feel it, accept it, allow the feeling to do whatever it's going to do to you, make you feel sad or angry or upset or whatever, and then choose to do something about that.

[Speaker 1] (51:01 - 51:13)

Yes. Or not. Yes.

Realize first that you are the awareness for that emotion. You are the space for it. You are the awareness disguised as a person.

You are not the emotion, you are the awareness.

[Speaker 2] (51:13 - 51:13)

Okay.

[Speaker 1] (51:14 - 51:28)

So then already a shift has happened, because if you completely identify with the emotion, then the emotion will very quickly rise into your mind, and it will control your thinking. So... And you will think it's you.

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (51:28 - 51:28)

Yeah, you will think it's you.

So you will be identified with the emotion. Let's say it's anger that arises. Yes.

A slight trigger triggers enormous anger, and immediately you start to think angry thoughts. Correct. Or if it's sadness or depression, you immediately start to think thoughts that reflect the emotion.

And the pain body loves that, because the pain body will feed on the energy of your thinking. That's right. And once you are trapped in the vicious circle between emotion and emotional thinking, when all the self-talk in your head, that everybody experiences most of the time, the self-talk in the head then becomes the voice of the pain body that is talking in your head.

And then all your interpretations of other people, of events, will be totally distorted and very negative.

[Speaker 2] (52:16 - 52:45)

Because you say at the bottom of page 162, when you realize that pain bodies unconsciously seek more pain, that is to say they want something bad to happen, you will understand that many traffic accidents are caused by drivers whose pain bodies are active at the time. When two drivers with active pain bodies arrive at an intersection at the same time, the likelihood of an accident is many times greater than under normal circumstances. So is it always the pain body that attracts accidents and other bad things?

[Speaker 1] (52:45 - 53:47)

No. No. That's just one factor that is often there, but there are many other factors that could attract an accident.

Many people are not fully present when they drive. I remember there was a sad story some years ago of a famous actor who got thrown off his horse and then had a spinal injury. I forgot.

And he passed away, I think, a couple of years ago. And I remember seeing the interview with him when he talked about that incident. He loved riding.

And so he was horse riding. And he said for one moment he lost the present moment while he was riding his horse. And at that moment, he got thrown off the horse.

Wow. And he said that was the one moment of unawareness and it happened. But then he actually grew tremendously inside after the accident because he brought complete acceptance to what happened to him.

And so there was an enormous awakening that happened in him before he passed away.

Even though he was paralyzed.

Yes. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (53:50 - 53:55)

Well, Dave is Skyping us from his home office in Madison, Wisconsin. Dave, thank you for joining us.

[Speaker 7] (53:56 - 53:57)

Hi, Oprah. Hi, Eckhart.

[Speaker 1] (53:57 - 53:58)

Hi. Hello.

[Speaker 2] (53:59 - 54:00)

Your question is.

[Speaker 7] (54:01 - 54:07)

First off, I just want to say thank you. Thank you. Thank you to both of you.

You are welcome.

[Speaker 2] (54:08 - 54:08)

Welcome.

[Speaker 7] (54:10 - 54:32)

My question is, when my wife and I have a disagreement, she comes back hours or days later wanting to rehash that disagreement. And she always feels there has to be a wrong or right to it. How can I get her to live in the present and get the ego out of the way?

[Speaker 2] (54:34 - 54:43)

Were you watching last week when he told the story of the two monks, you know, and the monk said to the other monk, you're still carrying that girl. I put her down hours ago.

[Speaker 7] (54:43 - 54:45)

I want to become the two ducks.

[Speaker 2] (54:47 - 54:48)

You want to become the two ducks.

OK, good. Now, you need to see what is your role when you have disagreements at home. I assume that your wife has a pain body that becomes active at that time.

And when you have disagreements, is your pain body also a contributing factor at home or do you feel that it is just your wife's pain body? How, in other words, how do you feed into what is your part in the disagreement and in the energy field there?

[Speaker 2] (55:27 - 55:29)

Yeah. How are you playing into the drama of it, Dave?

[Speaker 7] (55:30 - 56:05)

I don't play into the drama of it. And that seems to initially increase it more on her behalf. And then, but lately, after going through the book, I find that I look for a single thing.

Her eyes are beautiful. And I just think of those and I take to a different place inside myself. And it seems that it kind of it just diminishes on her behalf that.

Mm hmm.

Now, when you disagree or you have an argument, that means to some extent you must be identified with a mental position. And because if you don't have a mental position that you identify with, there is no argument. Correct.

[Speaker 2] (56:24 - 56:26)

So that's why I said today this.

Yes. This is why Oprah was a little bit skeptical. Yes.

When you were talking. So it's perhaps before we talk about your wife, maybe there's something that you can do so that you let go of identification with mental positions. When you discuss things, you can still discuss the practicality of certain things that you need to talk about, but don't become identified with a mental position of rightness that makes you right.

And because that is what the ego thrives on and that is what feeds the pain body.

Whenever you identify with anything, it's the ego.

[Speaker 1] (57:07 - 57:39)

Yes. Whatever you identify with becomes ego. So perhaps bring more vigilance into especially when you see a situation is developing that is going to become an argument or you can see that the pain body in your wife is becoming active again.

And then it's a it's a time of being particularly alert and vigilant inside yourself so that you do not get drawn into opposing her in any way.

And even Dave, you know, the reason why I said and was skeptical because of what Eckhart just said, if I may reiterate, if you are if there's no drama involved at all with you, if you just become peace, then the argument has to dissolve. Like the woman, the story that he tells in the book of the woman who came and was so upset and carrying all the papers and the bills and so forth. And as he sat there just listening, taking it in, she finally said, this doesn't really matter, does it?

And left and went home. You remember that? Yeah.

From a couple of classes ago. And I understand what you're talking about, because often when you start reading this material and you start to awaken yourself, we become a little self-righteous about it, you know? So perhaps maybe there's a little bit of that still remaining with you where you want to say, I am so because I know this happened with Stedman and myself.

We're in a discussion and I'm feeling, well, I am very awakened. I'm a very evolved person. So what you're saying is is not going to upset me.

But that attitude, the energy of that, my ego and my self-righteousness is what contributed to the drama. You see what I'm saying?

I do. Yeah, I do.

[Speaker 2] (58:55 - 59:03)

Your need to be right or your need to feel like, you know, I'm a little bit more superior because I'm not engaging in this and you are.

[Speaker 1] (59:03 - 59:10)

Yes. Yes. So that's then alertness and vigilance is very important on your part.

[Speaker 2] (59:10 - 59:38)

I think what you just said here is so important for every one of us who's trying to continue to wake into this process, that whenever there's an argument or disagreement, the thing is, is to not and it's not to ever make it about the other person, even though it seems to be. The question is not what can I do for my wife, for my partner, for my boss, for my co-worker? But it is what can I do in the situation?

[Speaker 1] (59:38 - 59:39)

Yes. Right.

[Speaker 2] (59:39 - 59:42)

That's that's what is my contribution to it.

[Speaker 1] (59:42 - 1:00:35)

That's right. That's primary. And then your wife, I don't know whether she has any interest in spiritual teaching or the pain body.

Have you ever mentioned to her the pain body, not while there's a pain body attack happening, but when the pain body said nobody hears you when you know, because when you cannot talk to the pain body about the pain body, that was actually dangerous because the pain body will throw something at you. So the is your does your wife. What?

I love it when you get tickled. Go ahead. I know pain bodies.

So the is is your wife sometimes relatively more open to this than at other times? Or is she always not open to this in your view?

[Speaker 7] (1:00:36 - 1:00:58)

She's not open to it to this point. But when I was running off the sheets for this week's class, she picked him up out of the printer and she read him over and she said, hmm, you're talking about me. So maybe that opens the book.

Yes. Yes. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:00:58 - 1:01:01)

Opens the door. Dave, thanks so much for your question. Thanks so much.

[Speaker 7] (1:01:02 - 1:01:03)

Thank you. Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (1:01:03 - 1:01:16)

Well, many acts of violence, you say on page 163 are committed by normal people who temporarily turn into maniacs. Does this mean that you think people are not responsible for what they do when possessed by the pain body?

[Speaker 1] (1:01:16 - 1:03:05)

No, that's what I say. They are not responsible. As we mentioned last time, Jesus on the cross, when he said they know not what they do, meaning they are so unconscious, they are in the grip of an energy field at which they cannot control.

They don't even know that they are in the grip of this energy field because it has taken complete possession of them. So in that sense, I say they are not responsible, which does not mean that they do not suffer the consequences of their actions. So it almost looks like a little bit of a paradox.

Yes. No, they are not responsible. Nevertheless, karmically, they will suffer the consequences of their unconsciousness because human beings are.

Our purpose is to evolve into conscious beings. So if we are not evolving into conscious beings, then we suffer. Right.

The less, the more close we are to this evolutionary impulse of evolving into conscious being of the flowering of consciousness, the more close we are to this, the more we suffer. And so these people who inflict violence on others, who make others suffer, also make themselves suffer. And they suffer the consequences karmically.

And sometimes the karmic consequences come in the form of the legal system. So they are put away. And so that represents for them at that time karma.

And then there's always a possibility when they are in deep suffering because of something that they did in a state of complete unconsciousness. When they then are in deep suffering, perhaps in prison, whatever they may be, there's always the possibility then of awakening through the suffering that they inflicted on themselves, on others also.

[Speaker 2] (1:03:05 - 1:03:23)

Because you say on page 164, when you can't stand the endless cycle of suffering anymore, you begin to awaken. So the pain body, too, has its necessary place in the larger picture. But there are a lot of people who never awaken.

They just, you know, the pain body just, they die with it.

[Speaker 1] (1:03:23 - 1:03:46)

Yes, that is true. Then there's always a chance that the unawakened consciousness awakens in some other form, in some other situation. So but the entire universe is going in the direction of awakening.

So it is, the more we are open to this...

Because we have to, or we're going to die.

Yes, the human species now, the impulse, the awakening impulse has been there for a million years longer. But for us now, we have arrived at this critical point where humanity, if humanity does not embrace this new state of consciousness, the awakened state, then humanity is not going to make it. On a cosmic scale, even that doesn't matter.

And whatever gain there has been achieved in the awakening of conscience on this planet is not going to be lost. There's only one consciousness throughout the entire universe. And that one consciousness is awakening in millions and billions of lives.

[Speaker 2] (1:04:28 - 1:04:32)

And so if we don't survive as a human species...

That's not the greatest tragedy either. In relatively speaking, it is tragic. But in absolute terms, that's fine too.

[Speaker 2] (1:04:40 - 1:04:42)

Yeah. And it's really, it's our decision.

[Speaker 1] (1:04:42 - 1:04:59)

Yes. Yes. The fact that we are here at this very moment engaged in this work is a very good sign.

It's a sign. Because here, at least we know that at right now, here, the awakening is happening.

Yeah. For the hundreds of thousands of people who are joining us around the world.

[Speaker 1] (1:05:02 - 1:05:02)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:05:03 - 1:05:06)

Danielle, who's joining us now from Ireland and Skyping us from Dublin. Hi, Danielle.

Hi, Oprah. Hi, Akash.

[Speaker 2] (1:05:09 - 1:05:10)

Hi. What time is it in Dublin right now?

[Speaker 8] (1:05:11 - 1:05:13)

I think about half two in the morning.

[Speaker 2] (1:05:13 - 1:05:17)

Okay. Well, you're up late. Thank you for joining us.

[Speaker 8] (1:05:18 - 1:05:45)

No, no, no. I'm delighted to be here. Thank you for having me.

And my question's about ego, and I'm just going to read it out. And I've been practicing trying to stay in the present moment for over three years now. But I've come to some sort of block because my ego keeps on telling me, if you get rid of your ego, you will lose the world as you know it.

You will lose your relationships with the friends you've built up for years. And you want to give up your career you've worked so hard for. And you'll be isolated from the rest of society because they are all living in ego.

How can I overcome this?

Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (1:05:48 - 1:05:49)

Excellent question.

Now, as you may have noticed, these are thoughts that arise in your mind. These thoughts that arise in your mind are telling you something. Now, what these thoughts are saying may be very far from the truth.

What the thought that if you awaken, if you become really present, you're going to lose your friends. Life is not going to be fun anymore. You have to see, is that the truth or are these just thoughts that my egoic mind is producing in order to stop me from being present?

Do I believe in those thoughts or do I believe in first-hand evidence that I have? Because if you've been practicing being present, then you realize it's actually quite joyful to be fully open to the present moment. It doesn't take away from the fun of being alive.

It actually makes you more intensely alive when you are fully present in the now, rather than always looking to some next moment that's going to be better than this one. This is how most of the world lives. So, I'm sure you've already had glimpses or more than glimpses of how the quality of your life actually becomes enhanced through being fully present to life now, because life is now.

So, and your mind is... please, a question?

Oh, no, I definitely have. But I think it's just the ego keeps on sweeping in or else you'll be in a situation where your friends expect you to act the same way that you've always acted, like in ego. Like your friendship, a lot of friendships are kind of bound through ego.

[Speaker 9] (1:07:43 - 1:07:43)

Yes.

[Speaker 8] (1:07:44 - 1:07:54)

You know, it's your personality and, you know, you'll try and be in the present moment and then they'll be like, come on, come on, you know, let's go and do something, you know, which is obviously trying to escape from the present moment.

[Speaker 2] (1:07:54 - 1:08:33)

But isn't it true, Danielle, when you become to awaken, when you come to the state where you feel more alive and awakened and willing to be more present with yourself, that that means you might have to let go of some of the things that used to bring you a false sense of happiness, that maybe the same people you used to hang around with and do things with who are not, you know, ready to follow your path or not willing to be a part of some of the things that you now recognize that matter, maybe it means letting some of those friends go.

That's, that's the whole point.

Maybe just a comment on this. Usually what happens when people become more present, some of their friends are actually drawn into that also, because whatever state you're in will affect the people around you or your back. So usually it happens that some of your friends will actually join you and also grow in presence and awaken, and others may drop away who are not ready yet.

That's that is usually the case. So the and the career does actually can only improve because the quality of anything that you do in full presence is so much greater and there's so much power available to you that is not there when you're always looking to some other scattered.

[Speaker 2] (1:09:23 - 1:09:24)

Yes, you're scattered.

[Speaker 1] (1:09:24 - 1:09:39)

You remember a couple of weeks ago, I quoted the Zen master who was observing competitors at an archery competition, and the Zen master was observing one competitor and he said, his need to win drains him of power.

Power.

[Speaker 1] (1:09:39 - 1:09:59)

And of course, this need to win, which most people in the old consciousness have is the need to arrive at some future point. And it takes energy away from what you're doing now. And that drains you of power.

So whatever you do becomes actually more powerful when you're present rather than so it can.

[Speaker 2] (1:09:59 - 1:10:30)

I remember when I first started doing this talk show 22 years ago, I used to get asked a lot of questions about other talk shows and other people. And I always used to say, we're running our own race here. And the energy that it takes to look back and see where the other guy is in the race.

And there have been a lot of guys and female guys and guys with shows who were in competition. The energy that it takes to look at what somebody else is doing, takes energy away from what you're doing.

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:10:31 - 1:10:39)

I mean, if you're on track, I used to run track. And if you just take the moment to look back and see where the other guy is, that energy is so draining.

[Speaker 1] (1:10:40 - 1:10:40)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:10:40 - 1:10:42)

And causes you to lose your own footing.

[Speaker 1] (1:10:42 - 1:10:43)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:10:43 - 1:10:45)

And lose your own concentration and focus.

[Speaker 1] (1:10:45 - 1:10:45)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:10:45 - 1:10:46)

So that's what you're saying.

[Speaker 1] (1:10:46 - 1:10:54)

Yes. And that's also put this in the sense that you're competing against others as part of the ego energy. That's right.

And that also takes power away.

[Speaker 2] (1:10:55 - 1:10:56)

That's right. Instead of just run the race.

[Speaker 1] (1:10:57 - 1:10:57)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:10:57 - 1:10:58)

Run your own race.

[Speaker 1] (1:10:58 - 1:10:58)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:10:58 - 1:11:04)

Now, what's the best way for us to sense the pain body? It's very... Thank you so much, Danielle.

Joining us from Dublin.

[Speaker 8] (1:11:05 - 1:11:06)

The technical problem. Thanks. Bye.

[Speaker 2] (1:11:06 - 1:11:39)

Thank you. Bye. Thank you.

It's very easy for all of us to spot the pain body in other people. And I've actually heard the word come up many times as we go. That was his pain body.

That was his pain body. So thanks for introducing it to our culture. So it's easy to see it in other people.

What's the best way? Number one, to spot it in yourself. And how do you stop ourselves from acting out when we're in its grip?

Are there simple exercises or something we can do to break the grip when you feel yourself go in there?

[Speaker 1] (1:11:39 - 1:12:02)

Yes. So the important thing is to catch it as it first arises in the first because before it takes over your mind when it's there as an emotion. And usually it's the pain body when the emotional reaction is out of proportion to the triggering event.

So a relatively minor thing triggers an enormous amount of unhappiness in whatever form.

[Speaker 2] (1:12:02 - 1:12:05)

That's right. A small thing happens and you flare up.

[Speaker 1] (1:12:05 - 1:12:05)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:12:05 - 1:12:05)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (1:12:05 - 1:13:04)

Yes. And so then after a while you realize the kind of situation that triggers your pain body. And then you can be actually more vigilant when such a situation happens.

And you can see a very important thing is to be able to have some attention inside your body that is connected with the exercise we did at the beginning today which is bringing consciousness into the body. Because if you're able to bring consciousness into the body you can more easily feel an arising emotion inside you. Whether it's a very heavy emotion of deep sadness or whether it's a fiery emotion of anger or whatever it is.

Or the emotion of intense fear. That contraction. Then you can.

There's so many people these days who are completely out of touch with their emotions because they live only in the head.

[Speaker 9] (1:13:04 - 1:13:04)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (1:13:06 - 1:14:36)

It's so being able to feel an emotion as it arises and then recognizing it as the beginning of the pain body. My pain body. And as long as you know this is the pain body you are not identified with it because the knowing is the awareness.

So when you if you can catch it early on and then it may still grow. Suddenly the fear fear may become very intense or the anger or whatever form the pain body takes. But you will be there as the awareness in the background while it happens.

And one thing that doesn't happen is that the pain body cannot control your thinking because you're shining the light of consciousness on it. It cannot then creep into your mind and suddenly make your mind think what it wants to think. So remain there as the awareness for it and say oh there's the pain body.

Then it cannot renew itself and it also cannot control your behavior. Your actions. All it is that you have contained it not through holding it down but you have contained it there through your presence.

Okay. And then it can't renew itself through in that situation. So it suddenly it comes up but it cannot renew itself and then it will subside again.

But the pain body being very clever it will then wait for a more suitable opportunity when you are less conscious than at that moment. It will try again. And for example.

[Speaker 2] (1:14:36 - 1:14:38)

It's like you're always being tested.

[Speaker 1] (1:14:38 - 1:14:52)

Yes. The pain body is like a little little wild animal or something. There's always it's there in the back and say okay what's the joy.

Can I am I going to come out now or is it the situation not not right. He's too conscious.

[Speaker 2] (1:14:52 - 1:14:54)

Is the pain body also your ego Eckhart?

[Speaker 1] (1:14:54 - 1:15:12)

The pain body is an ask the emotional aspect of ego. So when you identify with the pain body it becomes part of the ego because whatever you identify with becomes part of the ego. When you don't identify with it it's no longer part of the ego.

[Speaker 2] (1:15:12 - 1:15:14)

All right. Because what you identify with is the ego.

[Speaker 1] (1:15:15 - 1:15:15)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:15:15 - 1:15:36)

I like this question from Lorraine from Vancouver British Columbia who writes I attract negativity. It seems that my whole world is one big fight. I just want people to stop instigating fights with me.

I don't deliberately go out and begin conflict but it comes to me. I hate it. I just want peace.

What's the problem? Isn't that interesting?

Yes. Now this is whatever you experience repeatedly and frequently externally is a reflection of your inner state. So you attract certain things into your life that reflect your state of consciousness.

So for Lorraine it's very important to become much more aware of whatever state she is in at any given moment. Become more aware of what emotion she is feeling at any given moment.

Because Lorraine could not be attracting fights and conflict.

[Speaker 1] (1:16:12 - 1:16:13)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:16:13 - 1:16:15)

Unless she was emanating that energy.

[Speaker 1] (1:16:15 - 1:16:15)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:16:15 - 1:16:34)

And you say on 162 every human being emanates an energy field that corresponds to his or her inner state. Most people can sense it although they may feel someone else's energy emanation only subliminally. That is to say they don't know that they sense it.

Yet it determines to a large extent how they feel about and react to that person.

[Speaker 1] (1:16:34 - 1:17:08)

Yes. Yeah. So there are two aspects to the your inner state.

There's the emotional aspect to your inner state. What is the energy of the emotion that you feel? And there's a mental aspect.

What kinds of thoughts are you is your mind producing at this moment? Is your mind producing negative thoughts? What kind of thoughts?

So you need to be there as the awareness become aware of what is that I feel right now. What is my state at this moment? That's a good question to ask yourself.

What's my inner state at this moment?

[Speaker 2] (1:17:08 - 1:17:11)

At the moment that somebody instigates a fight with her?

No.

[Speaker 2] (1:17:12 - 1:17:12)

No.

Normal moments when you're not being challenged. Okay. Because all these accumulate your normal state of consciousness eventually produces some external event.

So as much as possible in any situation, it's always more important what your inner state of consciousness is than the external situation.

Got it.

The external situation is always secondary. So what am I feeling now? And what am I thinking now?

These are the important questions. So become an alertness then arises and you become suddenly realize what's my mind saying? What's most of the day?

What kind of thoughts is my mind producing? How many negative thoughts do I have every hour, every minute? You become aware particularly of because the ego loves negative thinking.

[Speaker 2] (1:18:01 - 1:18:21)

And so what you're saying then, it would be impossible for Lorraine to be a peaceful person to say, she says here, I just want peace. What's the problem? It would be impossible to just be a peaceful person, minding your own business, having peaceful, loving thoughts.

And people want to pick a fight with you all the time.

[Speaker 1] (1:18:22 - 1:19:06)

Yes, that's not would not be possible. So it's there's something in her that she needs to become aware of. And that's not her true self.

It's a form of conditioning. Her true self is the awareness, which is already perfect. It's fine.

There's nothing wrong with who she is in her essence. So look, be vigilant as much as possible. Have maybe put little signs at home, little reminders so that you remember to be conscious of what's going on inside me.

What's going on inside me? Very important question.

[Speaker 2] (1:19:07 - 1:19:08)

What's going on inside me?

[Speaker 1] (1:19:08 - 1:19:10)

What thoughts is my mind thinking?

[Speaker 2] (1:19:11 - 1:19:11)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (1:19:11 - 1:19:13)

What is it that I'm feeling right now?

[Speaker 2] (1:19:13 - 1:20:19)

I wanted to go back to page 162 again, where you say every human being emanates an energy field that corresponds to his or her inner state. And most people can sense it, although they may feel somebody else's energy emanation only subliminally. That is to say, they don't know that they sense it, yet it determines to a large extent how they feel about and react to that person.

I had an encounter with somebody recently where their energy thing was so strong. I walked into the room and felt it so strong. I had to remove myself from the room.

Yes. Yeah. Yes.

Some people are most clearly aware of it when they first meet someone, even before any words are exchanged. That's what had happened there. A little later, however, I love this part.

A little later, however, words take over the relationship and with words come the roles that most people play. Attention then moves to the realm of mind and the ability to sense the other person's energy field becomes greatly diminished. Nevertheless, it is still felt on an unconscious level.

And that's why kids can sense it. Little kids can sense it because they don't have the words or the language.

[Speaker 1] (1:20:19 - 1:20:20)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:20:20 - 1:20:20)

Isn't that true?

[Speaker 1] (1:20:21 - 1:20:35)

Yes. And animals can sense it. And animals can sense it too.

Very acutely because they don't have the conceptual mental realm, so they can feel much more acutely a human energy field.

[Speaker 2] (1:20:35 - 1:20:38)

That's right. And after they're introduced to you, your title means nothing to them.

No.

[Speaker 2] (1:20:39 - 1:20:55)

Yes. Your title or your position or your label, the role that you're playing means nothing to them. No.

So once they sniff you and they don't like it, they don't like you. We have Mubina on the phone from Dubai. Hi, Mubina.

We hear you have a question.

[Speaker 9] (1:20:55 - 1:20:57)

Hi, Oprah. Hi. Good morning.

[Speaker 2] (1:20:57 - 1:21:08)

I hear Dubai is so great. It's beautiful. Please come visit.

Yeah, I think I might be coming. And yeah, I am. You have a question about relationships?

Go ahead. Yes.

[Speaker 3] (1:21:08 - 1:22:01)

My question is about the nature of love. Eckhart says that love has no wanting and that true love really is about not expecting anything in return. My question is related to a little personal dilemma.

I met somebody five years ago and I really, really like him. But I noticed that he has a dense pain body. My question is, should I continue to be present for this person?

I have been doing so for five years, giving him my present time and really being there for him. And is it worth waiting? I really do want to get married and have a family someday.

Is it worth waiting for someone with a dense pain body? But I still feel I want to be present for this person. And I know Eckhart says that we shouldn't go around changing people.

[Speaker 2] (1:22:01 - 1:22:03)

Well, you're not going to change him, first of all.

[Speaker 3] (1:22:03 - 1:22:04)

Right.

[Speaker 2] (1:22:04 - 1:22:06)

OK. Are you hoping that you're going to change him?

[Speaker 3] (1:22:08 - 1:22:15)

I'm hoping that he's going to let go of his past at some point and realize that I'm the one for him.

[Speaker 2] (1:22:18 - 1:22:25)

Well, I think you need a little more awakening. OK. No, but I'll let Eckhart answer.

Go ahead.

So do you feel that you love that person?

[Speaker 3] (1:22:31 - 1:22:32)

Yes, very dearly.

[Speaker 1] (1:22:33 - 1:23:44)

Well, let's see what it means to love someone. When you truly love another human being, there's something that you recognize in them that has nothing to do with the form of that person. There is the recognition of the essence of that person and your own essence, your own being, your own consciousness recognizes that in the other.

And that essence is the divine in each human being. So when you love another person, you really love God in the other person. You don't love the person.

If you love the person, it's the ego, because then you love the form. And if you love the person and not the formless within the person, the divine, if you don't love God in the other person, then the love is of the ego. And the ego love is very different from true love.

The ego love is greedy. And the ego love says, you love me back. And if you don't, I'm going to get very angry.

So we're upset with you or impatient with you because you haven't loved me the way I wish to be loved.

[Speaker 1] (1:23:52 - 1:24:01)

Yes, yes. So there's no need to deny what you feel for this person. It's actually...

[Speaker 3] (1:24:01 - 1:24:23)

Yes, and I've never really expected anything back from him. But what I hear from friends is always, what are you waiting for? And, you know, he's not giving you anything back.

So what are you waiting for? Now, I don't mind waiting another five years. It's just that I've just been, you know, getting bombarded with questions from friends who just think, you know, go out with other people.

[Speaker 1] (1:24:24 - 1:24:37)

Now, the love in you actually is fine. The love that you feel does not need anything. But you as a person, you as a person may have certain needs and preferences in this situation.

I don't believe that she's making this phone call for her friends, personally. I believe that you are making this phone call for yourself, Ms. Mubina. And that it's not...

Absolutely, I am. Yeah, that it's not your friends who are saying, why doesn't he do something? I think, you know, what you expressed to us at the beginning of this phone call is that you think it's been five years and it's time that he should do something.

But he has a pretty heavy pain body, right? Okay, so you want him to make a move and you want that move to be marriage?

[Speaker 3] (1:25:07 - 1:25:13)

Um, well, it could lead to that, sure. I mean, I'm in no hurry. What do you want?

But I'm just...

What do you want?

[Speaker 3] (1:25:14 - 1:25:36)

Well, I want, I want him to realize that he, um, I don't know that I, I just, I just love him. That's all. Oh, no.

You know, and I, I just, I just want him to see that. And I think he's just, um, being blocked or...

[Speaker 2] (1:25:36 - 1:25:36)

I'm not buying that.

[Speaker 3] (1:25:37 - 1:25:38)

His pain body is so dense.

[Speaker 2] (1:25:38 - 1:25:44)

No, I think what you said to us earlier is what you really want. You said, I want him to realize that I'm the one for him.

[Speaker 3] (1:25:45 - 1:25:47)

Sure, definitely. I'm not going to lie about that.

Okay, yeah, you already said it. Go ahead.

[Speaker 1] (1:25:50 - 1:25:50)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:25:50 - 1:25:52)

So what do you want to say about that, Eckhart?

[Speaker 1] (1:25:52 - 1:26:11)

Well, it may be time for you to talk to him and say, I love you. And what I feel for you is not going to change. But I have certain needs and preferences.

I would like to, I would like you to decide and make a commitment whether or not you want to be with me.

Right.

[Speaker 1] (1:26:13 - 1:26:16)

Old, old, old, Eckhart.

[Speaker 2] (1:26:17 - 1:26:19)

And then he says, well, I'm not ready for that.

[Speaker 1] (1:26:20 - 1:26:27)

Now, if he says I'm not ready and you get angry or extremely upset, then it was ego love.

[Speaker 3] (1:26:28 - 1:26:34)

If he says I'm... He said that to me a lot of times before that he's not ready, right? Fine, it's okay.

[Speaker 2] (1:26:34 - 1:26:57)

Did you hear what Eckhart just said? Hello, Mabina, did you hear? If you get upset, then that's ego love.

Ego, yes. Okay. And if you don't get upset and you're patient and you're, as you said, you can wait five more years or however it chooses to be, then perhaps maybe it is the real thing.

Yes. Unless you're just waiting for him to make the move and discover that you're the one.

[Speaker 3] (1:27:00 - 1:27:08)

Okay. Yeah, that's what I've been doing. And I just wanted to confirm that.

So that's fine. That's confirmed. That's great.

The extent to which you can love another human being depends on the extent to which you are connected with your own essence. And you can recognize... Sometimes it's easier to recognize God in one particular form, but you can recognize God in another human being.

So the love is in you. And when you... The love does not come from the outside.

The love is the recognition of oneness, that ultimately you and the other share the one consciousness. That's what connects and makes all humans one.

[Speaker 2] (1:27:47 - 1:27:59)

And what you say in the book, I don't know, I'm paraphrasing now, because this was, I think, last week that you really addressed this in the Pain Body, is that many times people mistake what they believe to be love for their own neediness.

[Speaker 1] (1:27:59 - 1:28:00)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:28:00 - 1:28:06)

And their ego identification with, you know, this person validates me or... Yes. Yes.

[Speaker 1] (1:28:07 - 1:28:08)

Yes. So true love is...

[Speaker 2] (1:28:08 - 1:28:13)

Especially in our society, in the American society, where it's all about romance.

[Speaker 1] (1:28:13 - 1:28:13)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:28:14 - 1:28:14)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (1:28:14 - 1:28:23)

That's encouraged by the culture and so on, what you see in films, the role playing associated with that. So...

It's really damaged us a lot, hasn't it?

[Speaker 1] (1:28:25 - 1:28:30)

Yes. Yes. But we are waking up out of that.

[Speaker 9] (1:28:30 - 1:28:31)

Mm-hmm.

[Speaker 1] (1:28:33 - 1:28:44)

There are not so many films now that end in the happy marriage or something like that, because people are beginning to recognize that's not how it is.

[Speaker 2] (1:28:44 - 1:28:45)

That it's not happily ever after.

[Speaker 1] (1:28:45 - 1:28:46)

No, no.

[Speaker 2] (1:28:46 - 1:28:49)

Thank you, Mubina. Thanks. Thank you so much.

Thank you. Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (1:28:51 - 1:28:59)

Last week, we aired an interview on The Oprah Show with Thomas, who was a transgendered man. Heard about this man who became pregnant?

[Speaker 1] (1:28:59 - 1:28:59)

No.

[Speaker 2] (1:29:00 - 1:29:25)

Transgendered man who's pregnant, and his wife, Nancy. We also spoke to Thomas and Nancy's neighbors, George and Victoria, who gave us their reaction. And I found out during a commercial break that George and Victoria are students of A New Earth.

And here's a clip of our conversation after The Oprah Show went off the air. They just told me during commercial break that you're reading A New Earth. Are you taking the class?

Absolutely.

[Speaker 5] (1:29:26 - 1:30:10)

I love it, Oprah. It's been fantastic. I actually read the book first, and I couldn't put it down.

I had to read the whole book because I said to George, at last, I'm so excited. This book is really captivating, you know? So then I encouraged George to take the class with me.

So we've been watching it together and studying together. And that's what's helped us be more understanding and open-minded, non-judgmental. As Eckhart says, no labels.

Trying to get judgment out of our heads and stay in the moment and just really embrace our devoted neighbors as the human beings that are with us sharing this Earth.

[Speaker 4] (1:30:11 - 1:30:40)

And I don't think it's a coincidence that we moved to Bend and right across the street from us, we've encountered Nancy and Thomas and this situation. Because I think, in a way, there's a design to this. And it was an opportunity for us to grow.

And this is why we're kind of honored, really, to share this experience, because it's really helped us become more enlightened people. It's given us the opportunity to actually manifest what the seminars are all about.

[Speaker 2] (1:30:41 - 1:30:57)

So that's Victoria and George. Join us now from Skype from their home office in Bend, Oregon. Since Nancy and Tom were on the show, has all the press been in your neighborhood?

Looking for them or looking for you?

Yes, they were. Oddly enough, they kind of dissipated after your show. And it's been relatively peaceful now.

Oh, good.

Well, I remember you had a question for Eckhart. And I said I was going to let you ask that question yourself. That was related to the suffering of Christ.

On page 144, Eckhart writes, Why is the suffering body of Christ, his face distorted and agonized, his body bleeding from countless wounds, such a significant image in the collective consciousness of humanity? Millions of people, particularly in medieval times, would not have related to it as deeply as they did if something within themselves had not resonated with it, if they had not unconsciously recognized it as an outer representation of their own inner reality, the pain body. They were not yet conscious enough to recognize it directly within themselves, but it was the beginning of their becoming aware of it.

Christ can be seen as the archetypal, archetypical human embodying both the pain and the possibility of transcendence. And you had a question regarding some of this. Go ahead, George.

[Speaker 4] (1:32:08 - 1:32:40)

Yes, thank you, Oprah, for having us on the show. Eckhart, you mention the Christian doctrine a lot in your book, and this is a question to help me reconcile Christian doctrine with your teachings. If it's true that the ego loves suffering, as you mention in your book, and if it's true, as the New Testament says, that God sent his only begotten son to suffer and die for humanity's sins, was the passion of Christ an ego trip?

Thank you, thank you. Now, I would not say that the ego loves suffering, the pain body loves suffering. The ego is actually very often tries very hard to avoid suffering.

The ego produces suffering inevitably, sooner or later, because the way it goes about its business is dysfunctional. The ego is a very limited view of who you are. And if you act from such a limited view of who you are, you cannot see where you fit into the totality of other human beings and your environment, then eventually your actions will produce suffering.

So the ego produces suffering, although it wants something else. This is why we have the proverb, the road to hell is paved with good intentions. The ego wants the best for you, but it produces often the worst.

So I would not say that the suffering of Christ is an ego trip. It's not that. I'd like to share with you something.

I had an insight some years ago. I was walking in England into a village church. It was all very quiet.

I was the only person in that 600-year-old church. And I saw the cross on the altar and Jesus on the cross. And this is an image that we are so used to, but we don't question it.

But at that moment, I saw it as if I had just arrived on this planet and had never seen it before. And I was struck by the strangeness of that symbol. And I looked, there's a suffering human being in agony on this cross.

And at the same time, there was another cross without Jesus on it. And I saw this golden cross was the same cross. That cross that is the torture instrument is at the same time a symbol for the divine.

And suddenly I saw a very deep significance in that, that can be appreciated and recognized. I believe by anybody, even if they are not Christians. Jesus on the cross stands for humanity.

Jesus represents every human being that has ever lived or will ever live. Jesus represents something that is part of the human condition. And this, what he experienced at that moment, when I was looking at the cross in the church, I saw that what this represents is a human being who experiences an extreme form of limitation.

He's totally unfree, totally limited in deep suffering. And at the same time, the words I suddenly remembered from what is said on the cross, not my will, but thy will be done. And that was the act of complete acceptance of suffering.

He went to the depths of suffering and then totally accepted suffering. And through this total acceptance of suffering, a sudden transmutation happened. And the very torture instrument, the cross that had produced the suffering, was transformed and became a symbol for the divine.

And that explained the paradox that I had seen when I went into that church as if I'd never been to a church before. And I saw how can the torture instrument at the same time be a symbol of the divine. And so in every human being's life, every human being will experience some form of suffering, sometimes very intense.

[Speaker 2] (1:36:49 - 1:36:53)

Sometimes every human being, as you said last week, will have their own cross to bear.

[Speaker 1] (1:36:53 - 1:37:44)

Yes, every human being has their own cross to bear. And every human being needs to learn the lesson that is there. When we look at Jesus on the cross, he has to come to the point where the human being, instead of wanting to avoid suffering, says this is what is, and bring a complete yes to whatever is at this moment.

Not as I will, but thy will be done. Thy will be done. Complete alignment.

And that I call conscious suffering, where suddenly the inner resistance is not there anymore. And when you go into conscious suffering and say, this is fine, I say yes to this. Even the most unacceptable situation, if there's nothing I can do about it, I bring a yes to it.

[Speaker 2] (1:37:44 - 1:37:45)

Not as I will, thy will be done.

[Speaker 1] (1:37:45 - 1:38:10)

Yes. And at that moment, the ego dies. And at that moment, the divine comes through.

And the very thing that was the worst thing that could ever happen to you, when you bring surrender to it, becomes an opening into the divine. And that's the miracle and the transformative value of the cross.

[Speaker 2] (1:38:10 - 1:38:27)

Boy, I think that's powerful, George and Victoria, don't you? The moment, I got that. I just got that.

I had a big old epiphany. The very moment, the worst thing that can happen to you, if you surrender to it, there is an opening that allows the energy of the divine to come through.

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:38:28 - 1:38:29)

At the moment of surrender.

[Speaker 1] (1:38:29 - 1:38:31)

Yes. And that is the grace.

I got that, George. Didn't you get that?

[Speaker 4] (1:38:33 - 1:38:36)

Yes, I did. Thank you. So it was a lesson for us, in other words.

[Speaker 1] (1:38:36 - 1:38:56)

It's a lesson, yeah. Behind every form of suffering, there's grace hiding, concealed. It does not reveal itself until you surrender.

Until you suffer consciously. Until you no longer deny what is. So there's the grace that's hiding behind every form of suffering.

[Speaker 4] (1:38:56 - 1:39:27)

Wow. So if the ego doesn't love suffering, but produces suffering, what does that voice in our head that you refer to in the book, the voice that denigrates our self-esteem, that says you weren't any good, you were never any good, you're never going to be any good. That's also what in the Bible also is described as the voice of Satan.

Is the ego, in that sense, a force of evil in us? You know, you have the good and the bad, the duality.

Yes.

[Speaker 4] (1:39:27 - 1:39:27)

Exactly.

[Speaker 9] (1:39:29 - 1:39:29)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (1:39:29 - 1:40:01)

Ego, I would define as, ego is complete identification with form. Total identification with form. The form of me as this body, the psychological form of me, total identification with every thought that arises.

So you cannot step out, you're trapped in form completely. And that is evil. So going beyond form, beyond identification with form, is when the other dimension opens up.

[Speaker 2] (1:40:01 - 1:40:08)

Yeah. And didn't in some cultures in the past, I saw this on Guy Ritchie's documentary on the ego, that they used to refer to the ego as Satan.

[Speaker 1] (1:40:09 - 1:40:09)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:40:10 - 1:40:19)

Yes. Yes. In some cultures.

Yes. Referred to as Satan. Yes.

Thank you, George and Victoria. Victoria, you're still enjoying the book, or you're done now, right? Have you done reading?

[Speaker 5] (1:40:19 - 1:40:37)

I finished the book, Oprah. I actually have a quick question, if it's possible. Go ahead.

I was curious because, you know, you spoke of children and the trauma that young children experience when their parents are fighting.

[Speaker 2] (1:40:37 - 1:40:38)

Yeah.

[Speaker 5] (1:40:39 - 1:41:10)

Eckhart, do you think that it's possible that a pregnant mother passes her pain body onto her unborn child? And perhaps even generations that has happened with the grandmother, great grandmother, passing that onto their unborn baby. So we end up with this big old backpack of somebody else's pain body.

And can we free ourselves from that as simply as being aware, like you said?

[Speaker 2] (1:41:10 - 1:41:12)

Great questions, guys.

[Speaker 1] (1:41:12 - 1:42:23)

Thank you. Yes. You're absolutely right.

The pain body is passed on from generation to generation. And certainly whatever a mother experiences in pregnancy affects already the child that is inside her. Whatever emotions she experiences, they will affect and leave remnants in the child.

And I believe that although no scientists have discovered it yet, I believe that even in the human DNA, there's already programming that is the pain body. And so we inherit it. It's only partly personal.

In other words, partly it arises as a result of things that happened to us in childhood and so on. But it goes back much further than that. It's old.

It's very old. And as you know, I mentioned in the book, another aspect of the pain body is it's also collective. You also inherit the pain body of sometimes of your entire nation is part of your pain body.

[Speaker 2] (1:42:23 - 1:42:33)

This is what we were talking about last week. The pain body of slavery in this country that so many people are in denial about. The pain body of what's happened to the Native Americans in this country.

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (1:42:33 - 1:42:33)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:42:33 - 1:42:33)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (1:42:34 - 1:42:44)

And so what you said is absolutely true. So the mother will often already pass on her pain body to the unborn child.

[Speaker 2] (1:42:44 - 1:42:57)

So isn't that harder to get yourself free? We're going to talk about before this class is over tonight, breaking free of the pain body. But if you inherited it, if it's like genetically DNA encoded, isn't that harder to get rid of?

[Speaker 1] (1:42:57 - 1:44:05)

Well, that's how it is. But it's it comes from the past. It is the living past in you.

The living past. Now, the past has no power against the present moment. Yes.

Present moment. Because all power arises out of the present moment because it is life itself. So then this is why you don't need years or generations to become free of the pain body.

It has taken many generations for the pain body to build up, but it takes only one conscious human and one conscious moment now to disidentify from it and recognize it. You're not totally free yet, no, but you recognize it for what it is. It takes only one moment of awareness now to see it for what it is.

And when this person then has broken the unconsciousness of generations and that's what we are engaged in, we are we are breaking the unconsciousness that goes back thousands and thousands of years. That's pretty powerful.

George and Victoria, thank you again from Bend, Oregon. Thanks, guys.

[Speaker 4] (1:44:09 - 1:44:16)

Thank you because you folks are doing this on a global electronic basis. So thank you for letting us be a part of that breakthrough.

[Speaker 2] (1:44:17 - 1:45:00)

Thank you. Thank you for the second time. Well, on page 170, you talk about children and you say suppressed pain bodies are extremely toxic, even more so than openly active ones.

And that psychic toxicity is absorbed by the children and contributes to the development of their own pain body. So people who are, I think about this all the time. We were just doing somebody on the show.

We're always doing somebody on the show who's arguing in their families. When you argue in front of your children, I remember this the other day, the little girl said, when my mommy and daddy argue, I go and I go and hide under the covers. When you argue in front of your children, you are creating and reinforcing their pain bodies.

Yes. I did that as a child. I was always trying to hide from my parents' pain body, which was there a lot of the time active.

So that's one way is when there's an active confrontation and the parents having a confrontation with their mutual pain body.

[Speaker 2] (1:45:16 - 1:45:21)

You shocked us last week when you said you started thinking of killing yourself when you were at a very young age, nine or 10.

[Speaker 1] (1:45:21 - 1:46:30)

Yes. Because of your parents. Yes, that was the general environment that I was in.

I perceived it as extremely unpleasant. There was the environment of my parents and there was, not that they were not loving parents, but they both had heavy pain bodies. I loved them, but I didn't know at the time why that was continuous conflict.

I just knew it was dreadful to be around them. And of course, I was also unhappy at school because I never liked having to study things that I wasn't interested in. It wasn't done in an interesting way.

So yes, the children then absorb. One way they absorb the pain body from their parents is when there's open conflict between the parents' pain bodies. But another way is also when some parents say we mustn't fight in front of the children.

And nevertheless, there's an intense emotional negativity. They may not be saying anything, but there's an emanation of intense negativity in the parents.

That's right. I know a couple stayed together 24 years in order until the last child was grown and had gone to college. All the children are completely messed up.

One problem after another problem. Drugs and drinking and all kinds of problems because the children stayed in that house and absorbed all the energy that was in that house.

[Speaker 1] (1:46:53 - 1:46:53)

[Speaker 2] (1:46:54 - 1:46:54)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (1:46:54 - 1:47:04)

And sometimes it's the case if the parents repress that because they don't want to fight in front of the children or they may have an image of themselves as religious and they mustn't.

[Speaker 2] (1:47:04 - 1:47:05)

That's right.

[Speaker 1] (1:47:05 - 1:47:18)

And so they are not even admitting to themselves perhaps that there's intense negativity. And then the children grow up in that. And sometimes it's then the children who are forced to act it out in the world.

[Speaker 2] (1:47:18 - 1:47:49)

That's right. And the interesting about that when you try to repress it when you're not fully realizing the truth of who you are and you say the truth of who you are will set you free. When you allow the repressed bad energy to go on in the household, the energy is still there.

It goes back to what I was saying on page 162. The energy is always there. Yes.

And children more so than even adults children who don't have the language for it pick up on the energy.

[Speaker 1] (1:47:49 - 1:47:50)

Yes, yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:47:50 - 1:47:53)

And often blame themselves because they don't have the language to explain.

[Speaker 1] (1:47:54 - 1:47:54)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:47:54 - 1:48:10)

Okay, okay. You also say on... Well, first of all, we'll do this.

We'll go to a caller on this topic from Melbourne, Australia. Hello. She has a 10-year-old daughter.

Her name is Wendy. Wendy, hi. Hi, Oprah.

Hi, Eckhart.

[Speaker 9] (1:48:10 - 1:48:10)

Hi.

Thank you for having me on the webcast today. Well, great to talk to you. I have a question.

Eckhart, on page 178, you state that someone who in childhood was neglected or abandoned by one or both parents will likely develop a pain body that becomes triggered in any situation that resonates even remotely with their primordial pain of abandonment. So I see this pain in my 10-year-old daughter whose father no longer sees her and hasn't really had much of a relationship with her. And my question is, how do I help her through her feelings of abandonment?

And how do I guide her through people-pleasing behavior? Because I notice she has a strong tendency to people-please just to be accepted or liked. I would really love some help on this one as I'm often at a loss on how to help her through it.

[Speaker 1] (1:49:03 - 1:49:20)

Can you give an example of how this, what you see as a sense of abandonment, how it manifests in her now? Can you give a situation where this happens? How does she behave in such a situation?

[Speaker 6] (1:49:21 - 1:50:00)

Well, often there's been occasions when they have little parties at school and children get invited. And if she's one of the kids that's excluded, because obviously not everyone gets invited to everyone's birthday party, she's so traumatized by it. She cries and she doesn't understand.

And she comes and she says they don't like her or they don't love her. And then she'll try to often buy the friendship. She'll take things to them.

You know, take gifts or take Easter eggs lately and things like that. And I just think, oh, how do I get her through this? She wants to be liked all the time.

She wants approval. So your child- It's a case of intense tears and trauma.

[Speaker 1] (1:50:01 - 1:50:03)

She's now 10 years old?

[Speaker 6] (1:50:03 - 1:50:04)

10 years old, yes.

[Speaker 1] (1:50:04 - 1:50:59)

Yes. Perhaps you can gradually over the next few years explain to her that she cannot be liked by everybody. Nobody is liked by everybody.

And you cannot expect- I think if you explain it gently, she will begin to understand that it is impossible in this world to be liked and accepted by everybody. And it is not necessary to be liked and accepted by everybody. And especially if you do things that are of any significance in this world as when she grows up, the more significant things you do in this world, the more you will find there are certain people who don't like what you do.

And even Oprah has people who don't like what she does. I don't know why, but- I don't either.

Yes, and the more successful you become, the more people you have who don't like what you do. So you have a- And I used to be- Listen, as you're describing your daughter, I used to be this little 10-year-old girl who had such a desire to please. I was always taking all of my notebook paper and giving it to everybody else, whatever I had.

Even in college, nobody liked me. So I would spend all my money, because I was working in TV from the time I was a sophomore in college. And everybody else was jealous of me for having a job and having a job on TV.

And so I would take my money and buy pizzas for everybody and try to make everybody like me. And listen, I hope you- I was 40-something before I figured it out.

[Speaker 1] (1:51:46 - 1:52:03)

So I hope your daughter gets it before then. I think some gentle explanation, just a little bit here and there. Now she's 10.

And then over the next few years, the behavior will continue for a while. You cannot just undo all conditioning in another person.

Yeah, the pain body is, I was not wanted by my father. That's what the 10-year-old is feeling. I was not wanted by my father.

Yes, yes. And the pain body, if your daughter gets taken over by intense negative feelings that are out of proportion to the triggering event, which is a sign that this is the pain body, if this happens and when this happens, after, I'll describe it in a new earth, after a pain body episode is over, the next day, for example, you talk to what your daughter felt at that time. Yesterday, when you behaved in such a way, when you did this, when you said that, what did it feel like?

Ask her questions about, so that she begins to put attention on her own emotions and she can detect them. Ask questions about, after a pain body episode in your daughter, ask her what it feels like so that the awareness grows in her of this. And next time, when it happens again, say, oh, there's the, that old thing has come back.

She may even, you may even encourage her to give it a name, the pain body.

[Speaker 6] (1:53:15 - 1:53:16)

Hmm, okay.

[Speaker 1] (1:53:16 - 1:53:35)

And then she can identify it when it happens again. So gradually, the child can be, instead of at the mercy of these arising emotions, the child can already learn at an early age to be there as the awareness of the emotion, rather than to be taken over by the emotion.

[Speaker 2] (1:53:35 - 1:53:40)

Actually, I think children can learn this a lot easier than adults can, because we're so overly conditioned.

[Speaker 1] (1:53:40 - 1:53:45)

Yes, and that should be the, one of the main things that children learn at school, but so far that's not happening.

[Speaker 2] (1:53:45 - 1:54:45)

Right. And also, Wendy, I might suggest this, you know, I think one of the things that would have helped me a lot, and I found this with my girls in Africa, who come from really disadvantaged backgrounds. They're disadvantaged.

And one of the things I want to teach them is a life of service. You always feel better about your life when you can be of service to someone else's. And so if your daughter, even at 10, is exposed to children who are less fortunate than she is, children who are orphaned or abandoned or, you know, in poverty, I don't know what the situation is in Melbourne, but children who have less than she does, and she is able to see that her situation really isn't so bad and allowed to feel a sense of gratitude for who she is and where she is and what she has, and yet also empathy and compassion for people who have less than she does. I think that that will also, even at 10 years old, begin to offer some perspective for her.

Yes, absolutely.

Yes, I agree.

Absolutely.

[Speaker 2] (1:54:48 - 1:55:03)

Thank you so much for your call. Thank you very much. Thank you.

Okay, so tonight's chapter, Breaking Free, how do we do it? You say, how long does it take to become free of the pain body on page 183? Tell us how long.

[Speaker 1] (1:55:05 - 1:55:33)

The important question, as I say, is not how long it takes to become free of the pain body, but how long does it take for me to stop identifying with the pain body? That's because it's more important to stop identifying with it because in one sense, you're already free. The pain body may still be there in you for a while, but when you stop identifying with it, that's freedom already.

[Speaker 2] (1:55:33 - 1:55:45)

You say the answer is, of course, that it depends both on the density of an individual's pain body, some are more dense than others. Yes. As well as the degree or intensity of that individual's arising presence.

[Speaker 1] (1:55:45 - 1:55:45)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:55:45 - 1:56:01)

So the more you're able to bring that sense of awareness, or as I said in the beginning, that you, you who is disguised as awareness, that awareness is you disguised as a person, the more you can be present with that.

[Speaker 1] (1:56:01 - 1:56:01)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:56:02 - 1:56:03)

The more it dissipates.

[Speaker 1] (1:56:03 - 1:56:03)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:56:03 - 1:56:04)

It doesn't happen instantly.

No, but every time you disidentify, every time you are there as the awareness, the energy of the pain body already diminishes. So every time there's a little bit less of it. And it's the, what happens to the energy?

It's all, energy is all one. There's only one energy, but it appears in different frequencies and the pain body energy has a certain frequency. It's contained, it's rigid, it's tight and it becomes freed and it contributes to the arising awareness.

And you say, but it's not the pain body, but identification with it that causes the suffering.

That's right. The pain body itself is only...

Has no power over it.

[Speaker 1] (1:56:50 - 1:57:04)

No, it's not suffering anymore when you don't identify with it. Then it's only an unpleasant feeling inside you. You can hardly call it suffering, but it's suffering when you become it or it becomes you, that's suffering.

It's not the pain body, but identification with the pain body that forces you to relive the past again and again and again and keeps you in a state of unconsciousness. I'm on page 183, everybody. So a more important question to ask would be, how long does it take to become free of identification?

Yes, that's the key. And the answer to that, of course, is it doesn't really take any time because all it requires you is to be aware this moment as it arises, in the moment it arises to see it and recognize it. Be the awareness for it, be the space for it, is another word, another expression we can use.

Are you able to be the awareness for the pain body, to be the space for the pain body and say, ah, there it is. That means you've broken the identification. All it requires is for you to be present in the now as the awareness.

And to remember that the past, no matter what it is, no matter how awful it was, how horrifying, how much suffering, the past has no power over the present moment.

Because what arises out of the present moment is the dimension of consciousness that we call presence or awareness. It's a dimension that was already there in you always, but had been covered up by density of emotion and density of conditioned mind structures, thinking.

[Speaker 2] (1:58:34 - 1:58:38)

And the way you get to that is to bring yourself back to the present moment, get still.

[Speaker 1] (1:58:38 - 1:59:25)

Yes. Get still. Get still.

And then that arises, that dimension that then arises is, we could call it, goes beyond who you are as a person. It is transpersonal. It is a transpersonal dimension in you.

And that's the only thing that can free you from the purely personal realm, which has its place, but is very limited. And it's the only thing that can free you from the past and the heaviness of the past. And the past cannot prevail against it.

It is impossible because it is the only power there is. So it is also the timeless dimension in you. When we talk of presence or awareness, there is no past and future in presence or awareness.

I got that. When you say on the page 184, when you feel the pain body, don't fall into the era of thinking there's something wrong with you, making yourself into a problem.

[Speaker 9] (1:59:35 - 1:59:35)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:59:35 - 2:00:24)

Because the ego loves that. Okay. The knowing needs to be followed by accepting.

We talked about that a lot tonight. Anything else will obscure it. Accepting means you allow yourself to feel whatever it is you're feeling at that moment.

You can't argue with what is. Well, you can, but if you do, you suffer. That's how we suffer.

Through allowing, you become what you are, vast and spacious. You become whole. You're not a fragment anymore, which is how the ego perceives itself.

Your true nature emerges, which is one with the nature of God. And then you say, Jesus points to this when he says, be whole, even as your father in heaven is whole. The New Testament's be perfect is a mistranslation of the original Greek word, which means whole.

This is to say you don't need to become whole, but be what you already are with or without the pain body.

[Speaker 1] (2:00:25 - 2:00:28)

Yes. Yes. You already that.

[Speaker 2] (2:00:30 - 2:00:45)

Now, this brings us to the question that Denise in Michigan asks on our web. She says, is Eckhart perfect? Eckhart, you seem to be almost perfect, although I know nobody is.

Do you ever yell? Do you ever get angry or feel sad?

I'm not perfect because the form cannot be perfect. Every form, by the very fact that it has form, is one thing, but not the other. So whole, yes, I feel that I'm aligned with something far greater than the little person.

And that is where I rest, and that is where inspiration comes from, where the teaching arises, this is presence. And it goes far beyond this little person. This little person is insignificant.

It doesn't matter very much to me. So I don't look for perfection. I don't look for perfection in myself because that would be terrible frustration.

I do things that people perhaps would regard as not perfect.

[Speaker 2] (2:01:39 - 2:01:42)

I'm waiting to hear.

[Speaker 1] (2:01:44 - 2:02:22)

I have a glass of wine. I like my glass of wine occasionally. I drink coffee at Starbucks almost every day.

And sometimes people come up to me and say, you are drinking coffee. You shouldn't be drinking coffee. What do you need coffee for?

I say, why not? I enjoy it. So I enjoy all kinds of things.

I don't have many negative emotions. I can't think the last time I even had a negative emotion, but it's possible. Perhaps I remember maybe some years ago, yes, I was watching and people were mistreating an animal and I suddenly felt anger.

So it can happen.

And what did you do when you felt the anger? I just did a show on puppy mills. It made me very angry too.

So what did you do with that anger? Did you say, oh, I'm feeling anger? You notice the anger?

[Speaker 1] (2:02:33 - 2:02:55)

And the situation, somebody else interfered at that very moment. Otherwise, I had already taken steps towards stopping it. And so the anger was there.

I felt it. And it was in my system for a couple of minutes as a vibrational, intense vibration in the body. And then it dissipated.

I let it go.

So you don't just like little things don't upset you ever?

[Speaker 1] (2:02:59 - 2:03:08)

No, no. I've let go. I had so much of that in the past.

So much suffering with all kinds of little things. It's not worth it.

[Speaker 2] (2:03:08 - 2:03:17)

Yeah. I never understand this because I'm not, you know, I don't get triggered by, you know, automobiles or driving or stuff. I never understand the people, the road rage.

That's pain buddy, right? Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:03:19 - 2:03:26)

I never understand why not getting in a, not being led in a line or being cut off, why that would cause you to be so crazy.

[Speaker 1] (2:03:26 - 2:04:27)

I don't understand it either. But for many people, that is something they personalize. So it's an egoic phenomenon.

So when, when somebody does something, they regard it as a personal insult to them, to their dignity or whatever. So, and of course, if, if it were personalized, the traffic, that's good. They wouldn't perhaps do it with the weather.

If some hail or rain hits your windscreen, then you would, perhaps you wouldn't get angry. But if a driver cuts across, then you suddenly get angry, but it's the same thing. It's just an energy field cutting, cutting across.

Why personalize it? And I'm amazed that people suffer so much stress in traffic because if you don't react, then there's no stress. If you don't personalize other drivers, as if they were, had some personal disagreement with you, it's nothing to do with you.

They don't even know you. Right. If you don't personalize things, it's actually quite stress-free.

[Speaker 2] (2:04:28 - 2:04:32)

Or you get stuck in traffic and you get, people get so frustrated getting stuck in traffic.

[Speaker 1] (2:04:32 - 2:04:44)

Yes. I know. And that can be a wonderful meditation.

You can't move. Why not be in the body, feel the intense life, the liveness in your energy field and be there, enjoy.

And everybody who's listening has ever been stuck in traffic. You now, after reading the book, you know how ridiculous it is to be upset that you're stuck in traffic because there's nothing you can do to change it. So just be with it.

[Speaker 1] (2:04:56 - 2:05:07)

Wonderful opportunity for acceptance and surrender. And a wonderful opportunity for learning dysfunction. If you observe they are not accepting and surrendering, then you can observe how dysfunction arises.

[Speaker 2] (2:05:07 - 2:05:12)

I love the way you answered that question from Denise in Michigan. You say you're not perfect, but you're whole.

[Speaker 1] (2:05:12 - 2:05:31)

Yes. So sometimes people on the spiritual path, they look for some kind of perfection. They have an image of how a perfect, evolved, spiritual human being behaves.

And then they try to conform that to that image. It doesn't work. It really accept your own limitations, accept your imperfections.

Do you have no attachment to, I mean, the way you even described your body. I loved last week, toward the end of our webcast, I asked you if you had any fear of dying. And I said this later to some friends.

I've never talked to anybody whom I've asked that question, to whom I've asked that question. And there was such definitive resoluteness about it. Like I really believed you when you said you had no fear.

I really believed you when you had no fear of death. And you have no attachment to anything? Like do you live in a nice house?

Do you like nice things?

Oh, yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:06:09 - 2:06:10)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (2:06:10 - 2:07:27)

I like nice things. Now for many years, I lived on a minimum because for many years I didn't have a regular job. I was just doing occasional counseling and occasional little workshops.

So for many years, I lived on very, very little. And I enjoyed that. I later on, I realized, oh, I must have lived for all those years below the poverty level.

But I didn't feel that at the time. I didn't regard myself as poor. I've enjoyed every moment of it.

And then now I have relative wealth, especially compared to that time. And I'm actually enjoying that too. I buy some nice furniture sometimes and enjoy it.

You like nice sheets? I like nice sheets. Do you care?

Well, I can sleep in any, but I like nice things. But you're not attached to them? Not, no,

no.

I'm not attached. I enjoy having space around so that you don't have to listen to the neighbor's noise. That is quite nice.

Perhaps the greatest thing that money can buy is space around you. But if you don't have it and if you have to live with neighbor's noise, it's a great opportunity for surrendering or for telling them to shut up.

But... Before we go, I wanted to have you tell everyone about an upcoming, well, I want to tell you about an upcoming Oprah show. Do you want to summarize?

I guess you just basically did. Break free of it, lose the identification.

[Speaker 1] (2:07:41 - 2:07:43)

Yes, that's it. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:07:43 - 2:08:04)

I'm really excited about the next chapter because the next chapter is finding who you truly are. And I would say, bring a friend to the webcast next week. Come and bring a friend because even if you haven't read the rest of the book, you can start really on page 185 with finding who you truly are and then work your way backwards.

It's going to be so exciting.

Yes, I love it too.

I love it. I love it when you love it. I love it.

It's going to be so exciting. Also, everybody, listen, I want to tell you about an upcoming Oprah show we're doing this Wednesday, an entire hour on a new earth that's going to air on our show, my show, this Wednesday, April 9th, in the United States and in Canada and the rest of the world as soon as we can get it to our international affiliates. For those of you who've been in Dubai, we'll be talking to people who've had a big and little transformation in their lives.

It's a powerful hour and something I think you'll want to see if you've been trying to talk to your friends about this or people in your home about this, that's the show that they should watch. I want to encourage you to have them watch that and bring a friend to next week's webcast to find out who you truly are. Again, Eckhart and I thank you all for joining us around the world.

The sixth class will be available on demand tomorrow for free here at oprah.com. If you want to download or watch any of our classes, you can do that also tomorrow at oprah.com and iTunes. It's free.

Thanks to nature-made soft gel vitamins. It's free. And also tomorrow, we'll have special bonus materials for you on oprah.com and iTunes. Audio meditations read by Eckhart's partner, Kim Ng. You can listen to them on your computer or download them and take them to go. Don't forget to update your workbook.

Get ready for next week's class, finding out who you truly are. If you're not who you think you are, well, then who are you? We're going to talk about that.

It's going to be so exciting next week. Again, I thank you.

[Speaker 1] (2:09:38 - 2:09:39)

Thank you, everybody.

[Speaker 2] (2:09:40 - 2:09:43)

Thank you. See you in class next week. Good night.

Good night.

[Speaker 2] (2:09:45 - 2:09:47)

Lovely. Wasn't that lovely?

[Speaker 1] (0:00 - 1:10:57)

CHAPTER VII Finding who you truly are. Nossi seauton. Know thyself.

These words were inscribed above the entrance to the temple of Apollo at Delphi, site of the sacred oracle. In ancient Greece, people would visit the oracle hoping to find out what destiny had in store for them, or what course of action to take in a particular situation. It is likely that most visitors read those words as they entered the building without realizing that they pointed to a deeper truth than anything the oracle could possibly tell them.

They may not have realized either that, no matter how great a revelation or how accurate the information they received, it would ultimately prove to be of no avail, would not save them from further unhappiness and self-created suffering, if they failed to find the truth that is concealed in that induction. Know thyself. What those words imply is this.

Before you ask any other question, first ask the most fundamental question of your life. Who am I? Unconscious people, and many remain unconscious, trapped in their egos throughout their lives, will quickly tell you who they are, their name, their occupation, their personal history, the shape or state of their body, and whatever else they identify with.

Others may appear to be more evolved because they think of themselves as an immortal soul or divine spirit. But do they really know themselves, or have they just added some spiritual-sounding concepts to the content of their mind? Knowing yourself goes far deeper than the adoption of a set of ideas or beliefs.

Spiritual ideas and beliefs may at best be helpful pointers, but in themselves they rarely have the power to dislodge the more firmly established core concepts of who you think you are, which are part of the conditioning of the human mind. Knowing yourself deeply has nothing to do with whatever ideas are floating around in your mind. Knowing yourself is to be rooted in being, instead of lost in your mind, who you think you are.

Your sense of who you are determines what you perceive as your needs and what matters to you in life. And whatever matters to you will have the power to upset and disturb you. You can use this as a criterion to find out how deeply you know yourself.

What matters to you is not necessarily what you say or believe, but what your actions and reactions reveal as important and serious to you. So you may want to ask yourself the question, What are the things that upset and disturb me? If small things have the power to disturb you, then who you think you are is exactly that, small.

That will be your unconscious belief. What are the small things? Ultimately, all things are small things, because all things are transient.

You might say, I know I'm an immortal spirit, or I'm tired of this mad world, and peace is all I want. Until the phone rings. Bad news.

The stock market has collapsed. The deal may fall through. The car has been stolen.

Your mother-in-law has arrived. The trip is cancelled. The contract has been broken.

Your partner has left you. They demand more money. They say it's your fault.

Suddenly, there's a surge of anger, of anxiety. A harshness comes into your voice. I can't take any more of this.

You accuse and blame, attack, defend, or justify yourself, and it's all happening on autopilot. Something is obviously much more important to you now than the inner peace that a moment ago you said was all you wanted. And you're not an immortal spirit anymore, either.

The deal, the money, the contract, the loss or threat of loss are more important. To whom? To the immortal spirit that you said you are?

No, to me. The small me that seeks security or fulfillment in things that are transient and gets anxious or angry because it fails to find it. Well, at least now you know who you really think you are.

If peace is really what you want, then you will choose peace. If peace mattered to you more than anything else, and if you truly knew yourself to be spirit rather than a little me, you would remain nonreactive and absolutely alert when confronted with challenging people or situations. You would immediately accept the situation and thus become one with it rather than separate yourself from it.

Then, out of your alertness, would come a response. Who you are, consciousness, not who you think you are, a small me, would be responding. It would be powerful and effective and would make no person or situation into an enemy.

Sure that you cannot fool yourself for long about who you really think you are by showing you what truly matters to you. How you react to people and situations, especially when challenges arise, is the best indicator of how deeply you know yourself. The more limited, the more narrowly egoic the view of yourself, the more you will see, focus on, and react to the egoic limitations, the unconsciousness in others.

Their faults, or what you perceive as their faults, become to you their identity. This means you will see only the ego in them and thus strengthen the ego in yourself. Instead of looking through the ego in others, you are looking at the ego.

Who is looking at the ego? The ego in you. Very unconscious people experience their own ego through its reflection in others.

When you realize that what you react to in others is also in you, and sometimes only in you, you begin to become aware of your own ego. At that stage, you may also realize that you were doing to others what you thought others were doing to you. You cease seeing yourself as a victim.

You are not the ego, so when you become aware of the ego in you, it does not mean you know who you are. It means you know who you are not. But it is through knowing who you are not that the greatest obstacle to truly knowing yourself is removed.

Nobody can tell you who you are. It would just be another concept, so it would not change you. Who you are requires no belief.

In fact, every belief is an obstacle. It does not even require your realization, since you already are who you are. But without realization, who you are does not shine forth into this world.

It remains in the unmanifested, which is, of course, your true home. You are then like an apparently poor person who does not know he has a bank account with 100 million dollars in it, and so his wealth remains an unexpressed potential. Abundance Who you think you are is also intimately connected with how you see yourself treated by others.

Many people complain that others do not treat them well enough. I don't get any respect, attention, recognition, acknowledgement, they say. I am being taken for granted.

When people are kind, they suspect hidden motives. Others want to manipulate me, take advantage of me. Nobody loves me.

Who they think they are is this. I am a needy little me whose needs are not being met. This basic misperception of who they are creates a dysfunction in all their relationships.

They believe they have nothing to give, and that the world or other people are withholding from them what they need. Their entire reality is based on an illusory sense of who they are. It sabotages situations, amass all relationships.

If the thought of lack, whether it be money, recognition or love, has become part of who you think you are, you will always experience lack. Rather than acknowledge the good that is already in your life, all you see is lack. Acknowledging the good that is already in your life is the foundation for all abundance.

The fact is, whatever you think the world is withholding from you, you are withholding from the world. You are withholding it because deep down you think you are small and that you have nothing to give. Try this for a couple of weeks and see how it changes your reality.

Whatever you think people are withholding from you, praise, appreciation, assistance, loving care and so on, give it to them. You don't have it? Just act as if you had it and it will come.

Then, soon after you start giving, you will start receiving. You cannot receive what you don't give. Outflow determines inflow.

Whatever you think the world is withholding from you, you already have. But unless you allow it to flow out, you won't even know that you have it. This includes abundance.

The law that outflow determines inflow is expressed by Jesus in this powerful image. Give and it will be given to you. Good measure, pressed down, shaken together, running over, will be put into your lap.

The source of all abundance is not outside you. It is part of who you are. However, start by acknowledging and recognizing abundance without.

See the fullness of life all around you, the warmth of the sun on your skin, the display of magnificent flowers outside a florist's shop, biting into a succulent fruit, or getting soaked in an abundance of water falling from the sky. The fullness of life is there at every step. The acknowledgment of that abundance that is all around you awakens the dormant abundance within.

Then let it flow out. When you smile at a stranger, there's already a minute outflow of energy. You become a giver.

Ask yourself often, What can I give here? How can I be of service to this person, this situation? Nothing to feel abundant.

Although if you feel abundant consistently, things will almost certainly come to you. Abundance comes only to those who already have it. It sounds almost unfair, but of course it isn't.

It is a universal law. Both abundance and scarcity are inner states that manifest as your reality. Jesus puts it like this, For to the one who has, more will be given, and from the one who has not, even what he has will be taken away.

Knowing yourself and knowing about yourself. You may not want to know yourself because you're afraid of what you may find out. Many people have a secret fear that they are bad.

But nothing you can find out about yourself is you. Nothing you can know about you is you. While some people do not want to know who they are because of fear, others have an insatiable curiosity about themselves and want to find out more and more.

You may be so fascinated with yourself that you spend years in psychoanalysis, delve into every aspect of your childhood, uncover secret fears and desires, and find layers upon layers of complexity in the makeup of your personality and character. After ten years, the therapist may get tired of you and your story and tell you that your analysis is now complete. Perhaps he sends you away with a 5,000-page dossier.

This is all about you. This is who you are. As you carry the heavy file home, the initial satisfaction of at last knowing yourself gives way quickly to a feeling of incompleteness and a lurking suspicion that there must be more to who you are than this.

And indeed, there is more. Not perhaps in quantitative terms of more facts, but in the qualitative dimension of depth. There is nothing wrong with psychoanalysis or finding out about your past as long as you don't confuse knowing about yourself with knowing yourself.

The 5,000-page dossier is about yourself, the content of your mind which is conditioned by the past. Whatever you learn through psychoanalysis or self-observation is about you. It is not you.

It is content, not essence. Going beyond ego is stepping out of content. Knowing yourself is being yourself.

And being yourself is ceasing to identify with content. Most people define themselves through the content of their lives. Whatever you perceive, experience, do, think or feel is content.

Content is what absorbs most people's attention entirely. And it is what they identify with. When you think or say, My life, you are not referring to the life that you are, but the life that you have or seem to have.

You are referring to content, your age, health, relationships, finances, work and living situation, as well as your mental-emotional state. The inner and outer circumstances of your life, your past and your future, all belong to the realm of content, as do events, that is to say, anything that happens. What is there other than content?

That which enables the content to be. The inner space of consciousness. Chaos and higher order.

When you know yourself only through content, you will also think you know what is good or bad for you. You differentiate between events that are good for me and those that are bad. This is a fragmented perception of the wholeness of life, in which everything is interconnected, in which every event has its necessary place and function within the totality.

The totality, however, is more than the surface appearance of things, more than the sum total of its parts, more than whatever your life or the world contains. Behind the sometimes seemingly random or even chaotic succession of events in our lives as well as in the world, lies concealed the unfolding of a higher order and purpose. This is beautifully expressed in the Zen saying, The snow falls, each flake in its appropriate place.

We can never understand this higher order through thinking about it, because whatever we think about is content, whereas the higher order emanates from the formless realm of consciousness, from universal intelligence. But we can glimpse it and, more than that, align ourselves with it, which means be conscious participants in the unfolding of that higher purpose. That has not been interfered with by man.

Our thinking mind will see only disorder and chaos all around us. It won't even be able to differentiate between life, good, and death. Bad, anymore, since everywhere new life grows out of rotting and decaying matter.

Only if we are still enough inside, and the noise of thinking subsides, can we become aware that there is a hidden harmony here, a sacredness, a higher order in which everything has its perfect place and could not be other than what it is and the way it is. The mind is more comfortable in a landscaped park because it has been planned through thought. It has not grown organically.

There is an order here that the mind can understand. In the forest, there is an incomprehensible order which to the mind looks like chaos. It is beyond the mental categories of good and bad.

You cannot understand it through thought, but you can sense it when you let go of thought, become still and alert, and don't try to understand or explain. Only then can you be aware of the sacredness of the forest. As soon as you sense that hidden harmony, that sacredness, you realize you are not separate from it.

And when you realize that, you become a conscious participant in it. In this way, nature can help you become realigned with the wholeness of life. Good and Bad At some point in their lives, most people become aware that there is not only birth, growth, success, good health, pleasure and winning, but also loss, failure, sickness, old age, decay, pain and death.

Conventionally, these are labeled good and bad, order and disorder. The meaning of people's lives is usually associated with what they term the good. But the good is continually threatened by collapse, breakdown, disorder, threatened by meaninglessness and the bad, when explanations fail and life ceases to make sense.

Sooner or later, disorder will erupt into everyone's life, no matter how many insurance policies he or she has. It may come in the form of loss or accident, sickness, disability, old age, death. However, the eruption of disorder into a person's life and the resultant collapse of a mentally defined meaning can become the opening into a higher order.

The wisdom of this world is folly with God, says the Bible. What is the wisdom of this world? The movement of thought and meaning that is defined exclusively by thought.

Thinking isolates a situation or event and calls it good or bad, as if it had a separate existence. Through excessive reliance on thinking, reality becomes fragmented. This fragmentation is an illusion, but it seems very real while you are trapped in it.

And yet the universe is an indivisible whole in which all things are interconnected, in which nothing exists in isolation. The deeper interconnectedness of all things and events implies that the mental labels of good and bad are ultimately illusory. They always imply a limited perspective and so are true only relatively and temporarily.

The story of a wise man who won an expensive car in a lottery. His family and friends were very happy for him and came to celebrate. Isn't it great, they said.

You are so lucky. The man smiled and said, maybe. For a few weeks he enjoyed driving the car.

Then one day a drunken driver crashed into his new car at an intersection and he ended up in hospital with multiple injuries. His family and friends came to see him and said, that was really unfortunate. Again the man smiled and said, maybe.

While he was still in hospital, one night there was a landslide and his house fell into the sea. Again his friends came the next day and said, weren't you lucky to have been here in hospital. Again he said, maybe.

The wise man's maybe signifies a refusal to judge anything that happens. Instead of judging what is, he accepts it and so enters into conscious alignment with the higher order. He knows that often it is impossible for the mind to understand what place or purpose a seemingly random event has in the tapestry of the whole.

But there are no random events, nor are there events or things that exist by and for themselves in isolation. The atoms that make up your body were once forged inside stars and the causes of even the smallest event are virtually infinite and connected with the whole in incomprehensible ways. If you wanted to trace back the cause of any event, you would have to go back all the way to the beginning of creation.

The cosmos is not chaotic. The very word cosmos means order. But this is not an order the human mind can ever comprehend, although it can sometimes glimpse it, not minding what happens.

J. Krishnamurti, the great Indian philosopher and spiritual teacher, spoke and travelled almost continuously all over the world for more than fifty years, attempting to convey through words, which are content, that which is beyond words, beyond content. At one of his talks in the later part of his life, he surprised his audience by asking, Do you want to know my secret?

Everyone became very alert. Many people in the audience had been coming to listen to him for twenty or thirty years and still failed to grasp the essence of his teaching. Finally, after all these years, the Master would give them the key to understanding.

This is my secret, he said. I don't mind what happens. He did not elaborate, and so I suspect most of his audience were even more perplexed than before.

The implications of this simple statement, however, are profound. When I don't mind what happens, what does that imply? It implies that internally I am in alignment with what happens.

What happens, of course, refers to the suchness of this moment, which always already is as it is. It refers to content, the form that this moment, the only moment there ever is, takes. To be in alignment with what is means to be in a relationship of inner non-resistance with what happens.

It means not to label it mentally as good or bad, but to let it be. Does this mean you can no longer take action to bring about change in your life? On the contrary.

When the basis for your actions is inner alignment with the present moment, your actions become empowered by the intelligence of life itself. The Zen master Hakuin lived in a town in Japan. He was held in high regard and many people came to him for spiritual teaching.

Then it happened that the teenage daughter of his next-door neighbor became pregnant. When being questioned by her angry and scolding parents as to the identity of the father, she finally told them that he was Hakuin, the Zen master. In great anger the parents rushed over to Hakuin and told him with much shouting and accusing that their daughter had confessed that he was the father.

All he replied was, Is that so? News of the scandal spread throughout the town and beyond. The master lost his reputation.

This did not trouble him. Nobody came to see him anymore. He remained unmoved.

When the child was born, the parents brought the baby to Hakuin. You are the father, so you look after him. The master took loving care of the child.

A year later, the mother remorsefully confessed to her parents that the real father of the child was the young man that worked at the butcher shop. In great distress they went to see Hakuin to apologize and ask for forgiveness. We are really sorry.

We've come to take the baby back. Our daughter confessed that you are not the father. Is that so?

is all he would say as he handed the baby over to them. The master responds to falsehood and truth, bad news and good news in exactly the same way. Is that so?

He allows the form of the moment, good or bad, to be as it is and so does not become a participant in human drama. To him, there's only this moment and this moment is as it is. Events are not personalized.

He is nobody's victim. He is so completely at one with what happens that what happens has no power over him anymore. Only if you resist what happens are you at the mercy of what happens and the world will determine your happiness and unhappiness.

The baby is looked after with loving care. Bad turns into good through the power of non-resistance. Always responding to what the present moment requires, he lets go of the baby when it is time to do so.

Imagine briefly how the ego would have reacted during the various stages of the unfolding of these events. The ego and the present moment. The most important, the primordial relationship in your life is your relationship with the now or rather with whatever form the now takes, that is to say, what is or what happens.

If your relationship with the now is dysfunctional, that dysfunction will be reflected in every relationship and every situation you encounter. The ego could be defined simply in this way, a dysfunctional relationship with the present moment. It is at this moment that you can decide what kind of relationship you want to have with the present moment.

Once you have reached a certain level of consciousness, and if you are reading this you almost certainly have, you are able to decide what kind of relationship you want to have with the present moment. Do I want the present moment to be my friend or my enemy? The present moment is inseparable from life, so you are really deciding what kind of a relationship you want to have with life.

Once you have decided you want the present moment to be your friend, it is up to you to make the first move, become friendly towards it, welcome it no matter in what disguise it comes, and soon you will see the results. Life becomes friendly towards you, people become helpful, circumstances cooperative. One decision changes your entire reality.

But that one decision you have to make again and again and again until it becomes natural to live in such a way. The decision to make the present moment into your friend is the end of the ego. The ego can never be in alignment with the present moment, which is to say aligned with life, since its very nature compels it to ignore, resist or devalue the now.

Time is what the ego lives on. The stronger the ego, the more time takes over your life. Almost every thought you think is then concerned with past or future, and your sense of self depends on the past for your identity and on the future for its fulfillment.

Fear, anxiety, expectation, regret, guilt, anger, are the dysfunctions of the time-bound state of consciousness, in which the ego will treat the present moment as a means to an end, as an obstacle, or as an enemy. Let us look at them in turn so that when this pattern operates in you, you can recognize it and decide again. To the ego, the present moment is, at best, only useful as a means to an end.

It gets you to some future moment that is considered more important, even though the future never comes except as the present moment, and is therefore never more than a thought in your head. In other words, you are never fully here because you are always busy trying to get elsewhere. When this pattern becomes more pronounced, and this is very common, the present moment is regarded and treated as if it were an obstacle to be overcome.

This is where impatience, frustration, and stress arise, and in our culture it is many people's everyday reality, their normal state. Life, which is now, is seen as a problem, and you come to inhabit a world of problems that all need to be solved before you can be happy, fulfilled, or really start living. Or so you think.

The problem is, for every problem that is solved, another one pops up. As long as the present moment is seen as an obstacle, there can be no end to problems. I'll be whatever you want me to be, says life, or the now.

I'll treat you the way you treat me. If you see me as a problem, I will be a problem to you. If you treat me as an obstacle, I will be an obstacle.

At worst, and this is also very common, the present moment is treated as if it were an enemy. When you hate what you are doing, complain about your surroundings, curse things that are happening or have happened, or when your internal dialogue consists of shoulds and shouldn'ts, of blaming and accusing, then you are arguing with what is, arguing with that which is always already the case. You are making life into an enemy and life says, war is what you want and war is what you get.

External reality, which always reflects back to you your inner state, is then experienced as hostile. A vital question to ask yourself frequently is, what is my relationship with the present moment? Then become alert to find out the answer.

Am I treating the now as no more than a means to an end? Do I see it as an obstacle? Am I making it into an enemy?

Since the present moment is all you ever have, since life is inseparable from the now, what the question really means is, what is my relationship with life? This question is an excellent way of unmasking the ego in you and bringing you into the state of presence. Although the question doesn't embody the absolute truth, ultimately I and the present moment are one, it is a useful pointer in the right direction.

Ask yourself it often until you don't need it anymore. How do you go beyond a dysfunctional relationship with the present moment? The most important thing is to see it in yourself, in your thoughts and actions.

In the moment of seeing, of noticing that your relationship with the now is dysfunctional, you are present. The seeing is the arising presence. The moment you see the dysfunction, it begins to dissolve.

Some people laugh out loud when they see this. With the seeing comes the power of choice, the choice of saying yes to the now, of making it into your friend. The paradox of time On the surface, the present moment is what happens.

Since what happens changes continuously, it seems that every day of your life consists of thousands of moments in which different things happen. Time is seen as the endless succession of moments, some good, some bad. Yet, if you look more closely, that is to say through your own immediate experience, you find that there are not many moments at all.

You discover that there's only ever this moment. Life is always now. Your entire life unfolds in this constant now.

Even past or future moments only exist when you remember or anticipate them, and you do so by thinking about them in the only moment there is, this one. Why does it appear then as if there were many moments? Because the present moment is confused with what happens, confused with content.

The space of now is confused with what happens in that space. The confusion of the present moment with content gives rise not only to the illusion of time, but also to the illusion of ego. There's a paradox here.

On the one hand, how can we deny the reality of time? You need it to go from here to there, to prepare a meal, build a house, read this book. You need time to grow up, to learn new things.

Whatever you do seems to take time. Everything is subject to it, and eventually, this bloody tyrant time, as Shakespeare calls it, is going to kill you, a river that drags you along with it, or a fire in which everything is consumed. I recently met some old friends, a family I had not seen in a long time, and I was shocked when I saw them.

I almost asked, Are you ill? What happened? Who did this to you?

The mother who walked with a cane seemed to have shrunk in size. Her face shriveled like an old apple. The daughter who had been full of energy, enthusiasm, and the expectations of youth when I last saw her, seemed worn out, tired after bringing up three children.

Then I remembered. Almost thirty years had passed since we last met. Time had done this to them.

And I'm sure they were just as shocked when they saw me. Everything seems to be subject to time, yet it all happens in the now. That is the paradox.

Wherever you look, there's plenty of circumstantial evidence for the reality of time. A rotting apple? Your face in the bathroom mirror compared to your face in a photo taken thirty years ago?

Yet you never find any direct evidence. You never experience time itself. You only ever experience the present moment, or rather what happens in it.

If you go by direct evidence only, then there is no time, and the now is all there ever is. Eliminating time. You cannot make the egoless state into a future goal and then work towards it.

All you get is more dissatisfaction, more inner conflict, because it will always seem that you have not arrived yet, have not attained that state yet. When freedom from ego is your goal for the future, you give yourself more time, and more time means more ego. Look carefully to find out if your spiritual search is a disguised form of ego.

Even trying to get rid of yourself can be a disguised search for more if the getting rid of yourself is made into a future goal. Giving yourself more time is precisely this. Giving yourself more time.

Time, that is to say past and future, is what the false mind-made self, the ego, lives on. And time is in your mind. It isn't something that has an objective existence out there.

It is a mind structure needed for sensory perception, indispensable for practical purposes, but the greatest hindrance to knowing yourself. Time is the horizontal dimension of life, the surface layer of reality. Then there is the vertical dimension of depth, accessible to you only through the portal of the present moment.

So instead of adding time to yourself, remove time. The elimination of time from your consciousness is the elimination of ego. It is the only true spiritual practice.

When we speak of the elimination of time we are of course not referring to clock time, which is the use of time for practical purposes, such as making an appointment or planning a trip. It would be almost impossible to function in this world without clock time. What we are speaking of is the elimination of psychological time, which is the egoic mind's endless preoccupation with past and future, and its unwillingness to be one with life by living in alignment with the inevitable isness of the present moment.

Whenever a habitual no to life turns into a yes, whenever you allow this moment to be as it is, you dissolve time as well as ego. For the ego to survive it must make time, past and future, more important than the present moment. The ego cannot tolerate becoming friendly with the present moment, except briefly, just after it got what it wanted.

But nothing can satisfy the ego for long. As long as it runs your life, there are two ways of being unhappy. Not getting what you want is one.

Getting what you want is the other. Whatever is or happens is the form that the now takes. As long as you resist it internally, form that is to say the world, is an impenetrable barrier that separates you from who you are beyond form, separates you from the formless one life that you are.

When you bring an inner yes to the form the now takes, that very form becomes a doorway into the formless. The separation between the world and God dissolves. The form that life takes at this moment, when you treat the now as a means, an obstacle or an enemy, you strengthen your own form identity, the ego.

Hence the ego's reactivity. What is reactivity? Becoming addicted to reaction.

The more reactive you are, the more entangled you become with form. The more identified with form, the stronger the ego. Your being then does not shine through form anymore, or only barely.

Through non-resistance to form, that in you which is beyond form emerges as an all-encompassing presence, a silent power far greater than your short-lived form identity, the person. It is more deeply who you are than anything in the world of form, the dreamer and the dream. Non-resistance is the key to the greatest power in the universe.

Through it, consciousness, spirit, is freed from its imprisonment in form. Inner non-resistance to form, whatever is or happens, is a denial of the absolute reality of form. Resistance makes the world and the things of the world appear more real, more solid and more lasting than they are, including your own form identity, the ego.

It endows the world and the ego with a heaviness and an absolute importance that makes you take yourself and the world very seriously. The play of form is then misperceived as a struggle for survival, and when that is your perception, it becomes your reality. The many things that happen, the many forms that life takes on, are of an ephemeral nature.

They are all fleeting. Things, bodies and egos, events, situations, thoughts, emotions, desires, ambitions, fears, drama, they come, pretend to be all-important, and before you know it they are gone, dissolved into the no-thingness out of which they came. Were they ever real?

Were they ever more than a dream, the dream of form? When we wake up in the morning, the night's dream dissolves, and we say, Oh, it was only a dream. It wasn't real.

But something in the dream must have been real, otherwise it could not be. When death approaches, we may look back on our life and wonder if it was just another dream. Even now, you may look back on last year's vacation or yesterday's drama and see that it is very similar to last night's dream.

There's the dream, and there's the dreamer of the dream. The dream is a short-lived play of forms. It is the world, relatively real, but not absolutely real.

Then there's the dreamer, the absolute reality in which the forms come and go. The dreamer is not the person. The person is part of the dream.

The dreamer is the substratum in which the dream appears, that which makes the dream possible. It is the absolute behind the relative, the timeless behind time, the consciousness in and behind form. The dreamer is consciousness itself, who you are.

To awaken within the dream is our purpose now. When we are awake within the dream, the ego-created earth drama comes to an end, and a more benign and wondrous dream arises. This is the new earth, going beyond limitation.

In each person's life there comes a time when he or she pursues growth and expansion on the level of form. This is when you strive to overcome limitations such as a physical weakness or financial scarcity, when you acquire new skills and knowledge, or through creative action bring something new into this world that is life enhancing for yourself as well as others. This may be a piece of music, or a work of art, a book, a service you provide, a function you perform, a business or organization that you set up or make a vital contribution to.

When you are present, when your attention is fully in the now, that presence will flow into and transform what you do. There will be quality and power in it. You are present when what you are doing is not primarily a means to an end, money, prestige, winning, but fulfilling in itself, when there is joy and aliveness in what you do.

And, of course, you cannot be present unless you become friendly with the present moment. That is the basis for effective action, uncontaminated by negativity. Limitation We are here not only to experience limitation, but also to grow in consciousness by going beyond limitation.

Some limitations can be overcome on an external level. There may be other limitations in your life that you have to learn to live with. They can only be overcome internally.

Everyone will encounter them sooner or later. Those limitations either keep you trapped in egoic reaction, which means intense unhappiness, or you rise above them internally by uncompromising surrender to what is. That is what they are here to teach.

The surrendered state of consciousness opens up the vertical dimension in your life, the dimension of depth. Something will then come forth from that dimension into this world, something of infinite value that otherwise would have remained unmanifested. Some people who surrendered to severe limitation become healers or spiritual teachers.

Others work selflessly to lessen human suffering or bring some creative gift into this world. In the late seventies, I would have lunch every day with one or two friends in the cafeteria of the graduate center at Cambridge University where I was studying. A man in a wheelchair would sometimes sit at a nearby table, usually accompanied by three or four people.

One day, when he was sitting at a table directly opposite me, I could not help but look at him more closely, and I was shocked by what I saw. He seemed almost totally paralyzed. His body was emaciated.

His head permanently slumped forward. One of the people accompanying him was carefully putting food in his mouth, a great deal of which would fall out again and be caught on a small plate another man was holding under his chin. Occasionally, the wheelchair-bound man would produce unintelligible croaking sounds, and someone would hold an ear close to his mouth and then, amazingly, would interpret what he was trying to say.

Later, I asked my friend whether he knew who he was. Of course, he said he is a professor of mathematics and the people with him are his graduate students. He has motor neuron disease, which progressively paralyzes every part of the body.

He has been given five years at the most. It must be the most dreadful fate that can befall a human being. A few weeks later, as I was leaving the building, he was coming in, and when I held the door open for his electric wheelchair to come through, our eyes met.

With surprise, I saw that his eyes were clear. There was no trace in them of unhappiness. I knew immediately he had relinquished resistance.

He was living in surrender. A number of years later, when buying a newspaper at a kiosk, I was amazed to see him on the front page of a popular international news magazine. Not only was he still alive, but he had by then become the world's most famous theoretical physicist, Stephen Hawking.

There was a beautiful line in the article that confirmed what I had sensed when I had looked into his eyes many years earlier. Commenting upon his life, he said, now with the help of a voice synthesizer, Who could have wished for more? The joy of being.

Unhappiness or negativity is a disease on our planet. What pollution is on the outer level is negativity on the inner. It is everywhere, not just in places where people don't have enough, but even more so where they have more than enough.

Is that surprising? No. The affluent world is even more deeply identified with form, more lost in content, more trapped in ego.

People believe themselves to be dependent on what happens for their happiness, that is to say, dependent on form. They don't realize that what happens is the most unstable thing in the universe. It changes constantly.

They look upon the present moment as either marred by something that has happened and shouldn't have, or as deficient because of something that has not happened but should have. And so they miss the deeper perfection that is inherent in life itself, a perfection that is always already here, that lies beyond what is happening or not happening, beyond form. Accept the present moment and find the perfection that is deeper than any form and untouched by time.

The joy of being, which is the only true happiness, cannot come to you through any form, possession, achievement, person or event, through anything that happens. That joy cannot come to you ever. It emanates from the formless dimension within you, from consciousness itself, and thus is one with who you are, the ego.

The ego is always on guard against any kind of perceived diminishment. Automatic ego-repair mechanisms come into effect to restore the mental form of me. When someone blames or criticizes me, that to the ego is a diminishment of self, and it will immediately attempt to repair its diminished sense of self through self-justification, defense, or blaming.

Whether the other person is right or wrong is irrelevant to the ego. It is much more interested in self-preservation than in the truth. This is the preservation of the psychological form of me.

Even such a normal thing as shouting something back when another driver calls you idiot is an automatic and unconscious ego-repair mechanism. One of the most common ego-repair mechanisms is anger, which causes a temporary but huge ego inflation. All repair mechanisms make perfect sense to the ego, but are actually dysfunctional.

Those that are most extreme in their dysfunction are physical violence and self-delusion in the form of grandiose fantasies. A powerful spiritual practice is consciously to allow the diminishment of ego when it happens without attempting to restore it. I recommend that you experiment with this from time to time.

For example, when someone criticizes you, blames you, or calls you names, instead of immediately retaliating or defending yourself, do nothing. Allow the self-image to remain diminished and become alert to what that feels like deep inside you. For a few seconds it may feel uncomfortable, as if you had shrunk in size.

Then you may sense an inner spaciousness that feels intensely alive. You haven't been diminished at all. In fact, you have expanded.

You may then come to an amazing realization. When you are seemingly diminished in some way and remain in absolute non-reaction, not just externally but also internally, you realize that nothing real has been diminished, that through becoming less you become more. When you no longer defend or attempt to strengthen the form of yourself, you step out of identification with form, with mental self-image.

Through becoming less in the ego's perception, you in fact undergo an expansion and make room for being to come forward. True power, who you are beyond form, can then shine through the apparently weakened form. This is what Jesus means when he says, deny yourself, or turn the other cheek.

This does not mean, of course, that you invite abuse or turn yourself into a victim of unconscious people. Sometimes a situation may demand that you tell someone to back off in no uncertain terms. Without egoic defensiveness, there will be power behind your words, yet no reactive force.

If necessary, you can also say no to someone firmly and clearly, and it will be what I call a high quality no, that is free of all negativity. If you are content with being nobody in particular, content not to stand out, you align yourself with the power of the universe. What looks like weakness to the ego is in fact the only true strength.

This spiritual truth is diametrically opposed to the values of our contemporary culture and the way it conditions people to behave. Instead of trying to be a mountain, teaches the ancient Tao Te Ching, be the valley of the universe. In this way, you are restored to wholeness, and so all things will come to you.

Parables teaches that when you are invited, go and sit in the lowest place, so that when your host comes, he may say to you, friend, move up higher. Then you will be honored in the presence of all who sit at table with you. For everyone who exalts himself will be humbled, and he who humbles himself will be exalted.

Another aspect of this practice is to refrain from attempting to strengthen the self by showing off, wanting to stand out, be special, make an impression or demand attention. It may include occasionally refraining from expressing your opinion when everybody is expressing his or hers, and seeing what that feels like. As without, so within.

When you look up at the clear sky at night, you may easily realize a truth at once utterly simple and extraordinarily profound. What is it that you see? The moon, planets, stars, the luminous band of the Milky Way, perhaps a comet, or even the neighboring Andromeda galaxy two million light years away.

Yes, but if you simplify even more, what do you see? Objects floating in space. So what does the universe consist of?

Objects and space. If you don't become speechless when looking out into space on a clear night, you are not really looking, not aware of the totality of what is there. You are probably only looking at the objects and perhaps seeking to name them.

If you have ever experienced a sense of awe when looking into space, perhaps even felt a deep reverence in the face of this incomprehensible mystery, it means you must have relinquished for a moment your desire to explain and label and have become aware not only of the objects in space, but of the infinite depth of space itself. You must have become still enough inside to notice the vastness in which these countless worlds exist. The feeling of awe is not derived from the fact that there are billions of worlds out there, but the depth that contains them all.

You cannot see space, of course, nor can you hear, touch, taste, or smell it. So how do you even know it exists? This logical-sounding question already contains a fundamental error.

The essence of space is no-thingness, so it doesn't exist in the normal sense of the word. Only things, forms, exist. Even calling it space can be misleading, because by naming it, you make it into an object.

Let us put it like this. There is something within you that has an affinity with space. That is why you can be aware of it.

Aware of it? That's not totally true either, because how can you be aware of space if there is nothing there to be aware of? The answer is both simple and profound.

When you are aware of space, you are not really aware of anything, except awareness itself, the inner space of consciousness. Through you, the universe is becoming aware of itself. When the eye finds nothing to see, that no-thingness is perceived as space.

When the ear finds nothing to hear, that no-thingness is perceived as stillness. When the senses, which are designed to perceive form, meet an absence of form, the formless consciousness that lies behind perception and makes all perception, all experience possible, is no longer obscured by form. When you contemplate the unfathomable depths of space, or listen to the silence in the early hours just before sunrise, something within you resonates with it as if in recognition.

You then sense the vast depths of space as your own depths, and you know that precious stillness that has no form to be more deeply who you are than any of the things that make up the content of your life. The ancient scriptures of India point to the same truth with these words, What cannot be seen with the eye, but that whereby the eye can see. Know that alone to be Brahman the Spirit, and not what people here adore.

What cannot be heard with the ear, but that whereby the ear can hear. Know that alone to be Brahman the Spirit, and not what people here adore. What cannot be thought with the mind, but that whereby the mind can think.

Know that alone to be Brahman the Spirit, and not what people here adore. God, the scripture is saying, is formless consciousness and the essence of who you are. Everything else is form, is what people here adore.

The two-fold reality of the universe, which consists of things and space, thingness and no thingness, is also your own. A sane, balanced and fruitful human life is a dance between the two dimensions that make up reality, form and space. Most people are so identified with the dimension of form, with sense perceptions, thoughts and emotion, that the vital hidden half is missing from their lives.

Their identification with form keeps them trapped in ego. What you see, hear, feel, touch or think about is only one half of reality, so to speak. It is form.

In the teaching of Jesus, it is simply called the world. And the other dimension is the kingdom of heaven or eternal life. Just as space enables all things to exist, and just as without silence there could be no sound, you would not exist without the vital formless dimension that is the essence of who you are.

We could say God if the word had not been so misused. I prefer to call it being. Being is prior to existence.

Existence is form, content, what happens. Existence is the foreground of life. Being is the background, as it were.

The collective disease of humanity is that people are so engrossed in what happens, so hypnotized by the world of fluctuating forms, so absorbed in the content of their lives, they have forgotten the essence, that which is beyond content, beyond form, beyond thought. They are so consumed by time that they have forgotten eternity, which is their origin, their home, their destiny. Eternity is the living reality of who you are.

Some years ago, when visiting China, I came upon a stupa on a mountaintop near Guilin. It had writing embossed in gold on it, and I asked my Chinese host what it meant. It means Buddha, he said.

Why are there two characters rather than one, I asked. One, he explained, means man, the other means no, and the two together means Buddha. I stood there in awe.

The character for Buddha already contained the whole teaching of the Buddha, and for those who have eyes to see, the secret of life. Here are the two dimensions that make up reality, thingness and no-thingness, form and the denial of form, which is the recognition that form is not who you are.

Well, hi. Welcome, everybody. Welcome to Class 7 of our New Earth Web Series with author Eckhart Tolle.

I want to thank our students from every corner of the world who are joining us live on this journey of discovery. I truly believe that as each one of us becomes more awake and aware in our own lives, so will our families and everyone we encounter, our communities and our countries and eventually our world. And so Eckhart Tolle and I welcome you once again to yet another lesson, Chapter 7, my favorite chapter thus far.

Before we get started, we're going to have a moment of silence, and you're going to lead us into that moment of silence. Yes?

[Speaker 1] (1:11:43 - 1:13:34)

Yes. We're already getting used to having moments of silence to start with, and I'll introduce the moment of silence today with a short meditation passage taken from The Power of Now. And as I read this short passage, our viewers should already be able to become still as they listen.

And after I've read it, we'll be still just for half a minute or so. So here we go. It's all about entering the present moment fully.

And that begins with using your senses fully. Be where you are. Look around.

Just look. Don't interpret. Be aware of the silent presence of each thing.

Be aware of the space that allows everything to be. Listen to the sounds. Don't judge them.

Listen to the silence underneath the sounds. Touch something, anything, and feel and acknowledge its being. Observe the rhythm of your breathing.

Feel the air flowing in and out. Feel the life energy inside your body. Allow everything to be within and without.

Allow the is-ness of all things. Move deeply into the now.

[Speaker 2] (1:14:32 - 1:15:49)

That's great. That's great. All right, everybody.

Tonight, we're discussing Chapter 7, Finding Who You Truly Are, which I know is the reason why so many of you picked up this book in the first place, because when I first announced it, I was reading the subtitle that the book is A New Earth Awakening to Your Life's Purpose, and I'd gone on the message boards and so many people were saying, I hope this book helped me discover my purpose. I hope this book allows me to find who I am. Well, if you're ready, tonight's your night.

Let's start with an overview of what this chapter is really about. You say that it is about, you begin with know thyself. Chapter 7 starts with those two words that you say are inscribed above the entrance of a famous Greek temple.

You say on page 186, what those words imply is this. Before you ask any other questions, first ask the most fundamental question of your life. Who am I?

And then you say on page 189 that you are not the ego, so when you become aware of the ego in you, it doesn't mean you know who you are, it means you know who you are not. But it is through knowing who you are not that the greatest obstacle to truly knowing yourself is removed. So let's start off with these two questions.

Who aren't I?

And who am I? And of course, the best starting point is the first question. Who aren't I?

Because what is left when you realize, and it's usually a process for most people, realizing who you are not, letting go of identification with things and so on, when you realize who you are not, then suddenly who you are becomes revealed to you. And who you are cannot easily be put into words, because if it could, then it could be answered in one simple sentence, and then everybody could repeat that answer and believe that they know who they are. So we start with knowing who you are not, and that begins for people sometimes with loss, where they lose something valuable that they had identified with, or death comes into their lives, some kind of breakdown or disaster happens, sometimes those people suddenly awaken, something has been taken away from them that they had identified with for many years that had become part of their sense of self. And if something very fundamental that has been part of your sense of self is removed, death, loss, collapse.

[Speaker 2] (1:17:15 - 1:17:18)

Even if it's a person, a human being who you loved.

[Speaker 1] (1:17:18 - 1:18:57)

Yes, it could be somebody close to you who dies. Then, of course, at first it leads to enormous suffering, and you feel as if part of you had died also. And for some people that happens even if they lose possessions, because they were so identified with their possessions that when their possessions are removed, they feel there's nothing left of me.

Another related to possessions is social position. If people fall from some high social position, there's a scandal that happens all the time in the news. Yes.

Not mentioning any names. Yes, don't. You don't have to.

And then these people can be extremely painful if they had become totally identified with either their possessions or their social position, and they're suddenly faced with a kind of huge emptiness in their lives. And then the question arises, I'm nobody anymore. And this is the point, a decisive point is reached there where they can either continue to resist and suffer, resist what has happened internally, complain about it, tell themselves story about it, how it's all collapsed, or they can suddenly come to a point of acceptance of what happened and acceptance of the present moment.

So the thing that was so important in their lives, actually left behind, I sometimes compare to, if you look at a person's life, it's a tapestry. It consists of all kinds of things that one identifies with.

[Speaker 9] (1:18:57 - 1:18:57)

Right.

[Speaker 1] (1:18:57 - 1:20:10)

And when a great loss happens, it's almost as if suddenly there's a huge hole in that tapestry of my life. Correct. And that is painful when you identify with a tapestry, but behind the tapestry there's a light that shines through, because without the light there wouldn't be anything at all.

That's why you can't even see your life. Without the light of consciousness, nothing would be. Behind the tapestry there's a light.

I'm using a kind of analogy. So when you don't resist this hole that has suddenly appeared in this tapestry of your life, then there's a light that shines through then, and I'm using that as an analogy. There's suddenly a peace that comes when the emptiness that is left behind by the form that has dissolved is not resisted internally.

And then through that empty space there comes what the Bible calls the peace that passes all understanding. Because you can't explain suddenly, and people have reported that this has happened to them, they lost sometimes, in some cases, everything. They suffered at first and then suddenly an inner shift happened.

They accepted.

[Speaker 2] (1:20:10 - 1:20:49)

And this also happens when you are grieving somebody that you loved, isn't it true? Yes. Because when you come to understand fully who you are, it doesn't mean that you will no longer be saddened when you lose loved ones.

But you will also, when you become conscious, you then understand that they have just moved from form to formless and that the formless can have an easier way to come through, come through now, even more strongly than it did in the form if you allow yourself to be with it and to see it and to experience it.

Yes. What you just said, an example, I was talking to a woman who lost her son. He had an illness.

He was about 28, I believe. And she was sitting next to him at his deathbed and the moment he, just a few minutes before he died and just after he died, she could sense an enormous peace descending upon the room and filling the whole room and she could feel that there was a sacred presence in the room in the moment of death. So she had totally surrendered to that and it's very painful.

It's even more painful for a parent to have to witness a child's death than the other way around. That was the most sacred moment in her life and that lasted for about 10 minutes and after 10 minutes her mind came in and suddenly she started crying and protesting.

Because the mind wants the situation to be different. The mind wants you alive again in the physical body. Or the mind wants the thing back that I have lost.

The job, the position, the whatever. I think it's harder though when it comes to loved ones because there is a connection there and there is, you know, nobody knows what happens except maybe you, when we die. And so there's this feeling that, you know, I have lost someone.

Is that feeling selfishness?

[Speaker 1] (1:22:16 - 1:22:39)

No, it's a normal feeling because there was, even if you truly love somebody, of course what you love in the other person is deeper than the form, the external form of that person. Nevertheless there's always a little bit even in true love, there's always a little bit of attachment to the form also. Because the light comes through the form.

The light comes through the form.

Yes.

Alright, let's go here to page 186 everybody. This is one of my favorite things. A second, I have a cold so I look like I'm sucking on a cough drop.

Unconscious people and many remain unconscious, trapped in their egos throughout their lives, will quickly tell you who they are. Their name, their occupation, their personal history, the shape or state of their body and whatever they identify with. Others may appear to be more evolved because they think of themselves as an immortal soul or divine spirit.

But do they really know themselves? Or have they just added some spiritual sounding concepts to the content of their mind? Knowing yourself goes far deeper than the adoption of a set of ideas or beliefs.

Spiritual ideas and beliefs may at best be helpful pointers but in themselves they rarely have the power to dislodge the more firmly established core concepts of who you think you are which are part of the conditioning of the human mind. This is my favorite in this chapter. One of my favorites.

I have three stars, then another star when I read it the second time and another star. Knowing yourself deeply has nothing to do with whatever ideas are floating around in your mind. Knowing yourself is to be rooted in being instead of lost in your mind.

That was beautifully written.

Yes. And so the... I mentioned that because some people identified many people identified with external things.

You mentioned I believe a week or two ago somebody mentioned to you that they suddenly realized that they are not their car. They're not their car. That's the beginning, early stage of disidentification but it's good.

[Speaker 2] (1:24:34 - 1:24:38)

But we do think we are and that's why you wrote the whole chapter. We do think we are our roles.

[Speaker 8] (1:24:38 - 1:24:39)

Yes, our roles.

[Speaker 2] (1:24:39 - 1:24:52)

Because a lot of people have important roles. Roles as parents and roles in important positions that affect a lot of people's lives and people think that they are their roles and they identify with their status in the world and what they have achieved.

[Speaker 1] (1:24:52 - 1:25:23)

That's right. And of course it's a question of finding a balance of honoring the role, of honoring the function that you have in this world. So that's fine.

You have to do whatever you're doing. You fulfill your function as mother as father or in some other capacity, some public function, business function whatever it is. So to honor the function without becoming totally identified with the function so that always there's still a human being there not just a function.

So knowing yourself deeply has nothing to do with whatever ideas are floating around in your mind. Meaning knowing yourself deeply has nothing to do with me being on television every day, speaking to people and even maybe doing a good job at it. Actually doing a good job at it.

And all the great jobs that everybody else is doing who's listening. Those are identifications with form.

Yes. And also what you just read is people sometimes have certain ideas in their mind of who they are and they may be spiritual ideas. I'm eternal spirit.

That's of course wonderful and basically it is true but do you truly know that because in order to truly know that you are more you are much deeper than this form goes far beyond holding certain concepts in your mind. Yeah. It goes this kind of knowing is a knowing that it goes beyond conceptual knowing.

[Speaker 2] (1:26:23 - 1:26:29)

Because if you really knew that you would have a certain way of being or living in the world that would manifest that in the world.

[Speaker 1] (1:26:29 - 1:26:42)

Exactly. That would manifest your being in the world. That's right.

And particularly when situations happened your reaction to a situation always tells you where you are at as far as your level of consciousness.

[Speaker 2] (1:26:42 - 1:26:51)

That is why a lot of people become annoyed with people who claim to be so spiritual or so religious. Yes. Who are intolerant of other people.

[Speaker 8] (1:26:51 - 1:26:51)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:26:51 - 1:27:40)

Intolerant of other ideas. Self-righteous. Imposing their ideas on other people because if you truly were what you say you are.

Yes. So moving on to who you think you are. This is one of my beautiful statements here.

On page 187 everybody. If small things have the power to disturb you then who you think you are is exactly that small. That will be your unconscious belief.

What are the small things? Ultimately all things are small things because all things are transient. And you say your sense of who you are determines what you perceive as your needs and what matters to you in life and whatever matters to you will have the power to upset and disturb you.

So people all the time say I'm a peaceful person. I'm a loving person. Yes.

I'm a kind person. I'm a generous person. I'm a good person.

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (1:27:41 - 1:28:46)

And then the slightest thing goes wrong and suddenly something else comes up which is total opposite of the good person. And so this is not the deep knowing of who you are. The deep knowing really is we use the word know here in a somewhat differently from the conventional way of using the word know.

Usually knowing is conceptual knowing. Right. So the analogy one could have which is sometimes given is with honey.

You can examine the chemical makeup of honey. You can examine the molecular structure of honey. I can tell you it's sweet.

You can write a PhD about honey or you can write poems about honey. But if you have never tasted honey, in other words if honey has not merged with you, then you don't really know honey. But the moment you taste honey, then you know honey.

And all the other stuff beforehand, even your PhD about honey if you wrote one is not knowing, not true knowing. It's only conceptual. Okay.

So to be rooted in being instead of lost in your mind. And what does that mean to be rooted in being?

[Speaker 1] (1:28:54 - 1:28:59)

And again we are using words here to describe something that really is beyond words. It's not describable.

[Speaker 9] (1:29:00 - 1:29:00)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (1:29:00 - 1:30:02)

But just a little hint is we always come back of course here in this teaching to the present moment. Absolutely. So when your attention moves fully into the present moment, at that moment you go deeper into being.

You could say that life has two dimensions. There's the horizontal dimension of life, past, future where everything happens. And most people, their whole existence is on that horizontal surface dimension of life.

And they think that's their life. They think that's all there is. And of course then life is quite a threatening place because All that is transient.

Very transient. And you've never encountered the deeper dimension. This by the way is a few people have interpreted the Christian cross which we mentioned also last time in a slightly different context.

The Christian cross as being showing the horizontal dimension of life and suddenly it intersects with the vertical dimension. It's also the dimension of the sacred.

[Speaker 9] (1:30:03 - 1:30:03)

[Speaker 1] (1:30:03 - 1:30:22)

And so you enter the vertical dimension by becoming present by bringing your attention into the now. Because then past and future disappear from your consciousness. At this moment there's only the now and suddenly a depth opens up within you.

[Speaker 2] (1:30:22 - 1:30:33)

And so what you've been saying throughout this book is that if you are living your life in the horizontal, the past and the future, then you're not really living. You are making enemies of this present moment.

[Speaker 8] (1:30:33 - 1:30:33)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:30:33 - 1:30:34)

And you're not truly living.

[Speaker 8] (1:30:34 - 1:30:35)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:30:35 - 1:31:12)

And that when you say, what I interpret when you say knowing yourself is to be rooted in being instead of lost in your mind is to in every encounter, and I've been doing this more and more, bringing, coming back to your breath Yes. Coming back to the present moment in such a way that you are aware and conscious of everything that's going on around you. And recognizing that you you, you are that awareness.

That's who you are. You are the observer of all these things that are going on in the horizontal plane of your life.

Exactly. So with the vertical comes the witnessing presence. That's right.

And so that's the liberation you, that's, you know, sometimes this word liberation is used in spiritual context That's the liberation from the horizontal dimension which Jesus calls the world. Yes.

You know, may I just share this? I know we have Debbie from the Netherlands on Skype, but maybe this will help illustrate this for you. A couple of years ago, I wrote this in my magazine for one of the What I Know For Sure's.

I was walking with my friend Bob Green on New Year's Day two years ago on a mountain in Hawaii and it was late evening the sun had set while we were walking and the moon had come up and the clouds had come in and come down to the ground where we were. And all of a sudden we were walking and we were surrounded by the clouds. We were in the clouds on this mountain.

And you could only see a sliver of the moon just a sliver of it. And I think Bob made a comment like it looks like the DreamWorks logo, the moon. It looks like you can go and sit up there with the fishing pole.

And we were walking along and all of a sudden he turned around and he said can you hear that? And I stopped and it was completely utterly still. It was so still it makes me want to weep thinking about it.

It was so still that it felt like all of time and no time it felt like the Earth had stopped. That everything had stopped. So much so that my very breath was so loud I began to hold my breath because my breath was making too much noise in the stillness.

And in that moment I understood what you had written in Stillness Speaks that that is always there. That stillness. There's not a bird or a cricket or a frog or a car horn or anything.

That is always there. And that's also an inner dimension. And that is the same as I.

I am that. I am that stillness. It was a powerful spiritual experience for me.

I've never forgotten. I've got chills now even thinking about it. Wonderful.

Because you recognize that is always there. When all the noise and all the fireworks and all the things that go on on this mountain that is always there.

Yes. Consciousness. We could call it, although labels are always limiting, but we could say that is pure consciousness.

Before consciousness becomes something. Before it's born into a form, it's there in its pristine, formless, timeless state.

[Speaker 2] (1:33:55 - 1:34:02)

And in all things, that's why you were asking us to look around the room, there is the stillness of all things. It's easier to determine in nature though.

[Speaker 1] (1:34:02 - 1:34:02)

[Speaker 2] (1:34:02 - 1:34:03)

It's harder with a table.

[Speaker 1] (1:34:04 - 1:34:39)

Yes. It's harder. And even harder with human beings.

Because there is so much mind there. So nature, but even in so-called inanimate objects that you perhaps never even look at, haven't looked at for years they've been around you. Sometimes it's wonderful to pick up an object and just be aware of its silent presence.

No matter what it is. Because whatever it is, ultimately, nothing is inanimate. And physicists would agree, because if you go deep into any so-called inanimate object you realize it's intensely alive.

It's easy to do with trees as I said earlier. And so, the essence is what we're trying to get here is that that is who we are. That stillness.

[Speaker 1] (1:34:49 - 1:34:57)

Yes. That's the essence of our being. That's who we are at the deepest level.

This is the timeless dimension within us.

[Speaker 2] (1:34:57 - 1:35:11)

And when you're saying that even when you pass on, when you transition to another, to the formless, that stillness, that consciousness, that spirit, whatever name you choose to give it, still there.

[Speaker 1] (1:35:11 - 1:35:38)

Yes. That awareness is timeless. It's not subject to birth and death.

As I have said somewhere, the opposite of the opposite of life has no opposite. Usually people think in terms of life and death. But really, death is the opposite of birth.

It's not the opposite of life. Life in its essence has no opposite. It's eternal.

[Speaker 2] (1:35:40 - 1:35:53)

Debbie's from the Netherlands and lives in the city of Harlem. She's Skyping us from her family room there. Einstein, you have a question about a quote on page 187 about small things disturbing you.

I love this quote. Go ahead, Deb.

[Speaker 4] (1:35:54 - 1:36:30)

Hi. Hi, Oprah. Hi, Eckhart.

My question is about high sensitivity. I always considered myself as a sensitive person, and that means I'm easily overwhelmed by day-to-day life things that might be considered small. I've been practicing staying in the moment with challenging moments, but I think I need some more advice.

Is high sensitivity just a narrow egoic state? Do you have some tools that might help me to stop feeling so overwhelmed by all these small things?

[Speaker 2] (1:36:30 - 1:36:32)

It does sound like a label you've given yourself.

[Speaker 4] (1:36:33 - 1:36:33)

Yeah.

[Speaker 2] (1:36:34 - 1:36:36)

I'm a highly sensitive individual.

[Speaker 1] (1:36:37 - 1:36:48)

Yes. That is true. That also we need to address.

Can you give perhaps two or three examples of what kind of things you are very sensitive to?

[Speaker 4] (1:36:51 - 1:37:03)

Well, a lot of things, but usually when I go into a shop and there's loud music there, I just want to run away. I have a hard time dealing with noise and chaos.

[Speaker 1] (1:37:05 - 1:37:07)

Yes. Or being in a big city, traffic.

[Speaker 4] (1:37:08 - 1:37:08)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (1:37:08 - 1:39:45)

Yes. Well, I suggest that you experiment a little bit when these situations arise and you feel the same thing happening again. And if you bring very alert attention to the situation, you realize that really there are three levels to this situation.

Level one is whatever it is that disturbs you, the external noise, the chaos, the traffic, whatever it may be. So there is the thing that disturbs you, level one. Level two, there is your reaction to that thing that disturbs you, which could come as an almost physical reaction, as perhaps a contraction in your body.

It could be also an emotional reaction of frustration, irritation, anger, I assume, something like that. Right? And also, in addition, the reaction could be certain thoughts in your head about the situation that says, I can't stand being here any longer, it's dreadful, dreadful.

Right? This is level two. Now, be aware of that these two are, first of all, separate.

There is the triggering event or situation and then there is your physical, emotional, mental reaction to that. And now, what is level three? That is usually overlooked, but level three is where ultimately freedom lies.

Level three is your awareness of both these levels. You are aware that there is the situation, the event, there is my reaction, physical, emotional, mental, and there is myself being the aware space for those two. And if you can bring your attention more to that deepest level, then you realize changes will happen on the other two levels.

If you recognize yourself not as the reacting entity that happens in you, but that's not who you are, but you recognize yourself as the awareness that is aware of the thing that's happening out there, of the thing that's reacting inside.

Actually, like, Debbie, you're observing your own behavior. You're observing your ego's behavior to it. You're observing your ego's behavior.

With no judgment, just as pure observation, pure awareness.

[Speaker 2] (1:39:58 - 1:40:02)

Like, oh, isn't that interesting? I'm getting so upset over this guy pulling in front of me.

Yes, just being there as the awareness. And that's already the beginning of freedom. And then, increasingly, you realize that you are that.

You are not the entity that is reacting. And then, as Oprah said, you can let go of thinking of yourself, of having this concept of yourself as a highly sensitive person, that perhaps you might, it's not natural, nothing personal in this, you may have become attached to, because you've lived with this concept of who you are for many years. So, that's the, that's where freedom lies.

[Speaker 2] (1:40:43 - 1:41:08)

But, in addition to Debbie's question, let's say, and for her, you know, she labels herself or defines herself as a highly sensitive person, but let's say a person gets upset about someone putting a dent in his or her car, or you spill coffee on your blouse right before an important meeting, or your child gets sick, or you get sick, or are you saying that if we get upset about these things, these kinds of things, that we don't know who we truly are?

[Speaker 1] (1:41:10 - 1:41:24)

If the dimension of presence or awareness is missing, then you are lost in the reaction. You think you are the reaction. Yes, then you become the reaction, and when you become the reaction, you don't know who you are.

It's a misperception of who you are.

You got that, right, Debbie? Yeah, yeah, I got it. I got it, too.

Isn't it good when you get it? I got it, too. I got it, too.

And just detaching yourself, that doesn't change the situation.

[Speaker 1] (1:41:39 - 1:42:22)

It doesn't immediately change the situation, but you do find that as you practice this, changes suddenly appear. Changes sometimes first appear in the force that is behind your reaction that lessens. You react, still react, but less, not as strongly.

And miraculously, you sometimes even find that if you totally, because really the awareness level is also part of the acceptance, completely accepted at this moment, this is what I feel, and this is what the external situation is. With complete acceptance, even changes often happen miraculously in the external situation.

[Speaker 2] (1:42:22 - 1:42:51)

I think acceptance of the situation which you talk about in Power Now, and also repeatedly in A New Earth, acceptance, non-resistance to the moment is one of the most important things we can learn. And that is whether or not you are facing a crisis, whether you're facing someone, you've lost a loved one, or whether you're in traffic and are a highly sensitive person, accepting what is in that moment is the most important.

And you can practice with little things, because little things happen throughout the day that people feel irritated about, angry about, are protesting against, and so on. Or with little things, you will have many opportunities to practice. So it's a wonderful spiritual practice.

So you use what before you wanted to get rid of, you use it as part of your spiritual practice, and then as a by-product, you also eventually get rid of it.

[Speaker 2] (1:43:22 - 1:43:47)

Thanks, Debbie. Thanks so much. Okay, thank you.

From the Netherlands. Thank you. Everybody says they want peace, inner peace and peace on Earth.

On page 188 you say, if peace is really what you want, then you will choose peace. And if peace mattered to you more than anything else, and if you truly knew yourself to be a spirit, rather than a little me, you would remain non-reactive and absolutely alert when confronted with challenging people or situations.

[Speaker 1] (1:43:48 - 1:44:48)

Yes. So you can either be reactive, act according to the way you've reacted for many years, your past conditioning, or you can become more alert when a challenging situation happens, so that you don't internally separate yourself from the situation. So that when you completely open yourself to the situation, that you bring an alertness to it, an alertness of presence.

So you're facing the situation totally with that state of alert presence. You're not reactive anymore. And if something needs to be said or done in the situation, the words will suddenly come from that level of consciousness, from that alert stillness.

If you need to do something, then the right thing, the right doing will happen. Instinctively, or instinctively is not the right word, intuitively the right thing, you will do the right thing.

Because it will be born out of a sense of presence.

[Speaker 1] (1:44:52 - 1:44:52)

Out of presence.

[Speaker 2] (1:44:53 - 1:44:55)

Or a sense of being, which is another word that we're using.

[Speaker 1] (1:44:55 - 1:44:55)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:44:56 - 1:44:57)

That's right.

[Speaker 1] (1:44:57 - 1:45:09)

And so whenever you are upset about any situation, there's a line in the Course in Miracles that says, I am never upset for the reason I think.

[Speaker 2] (1:45:09 - 1:45:09)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (1:45:10 - 1:45:16)

So because when you're upset, you have lost yourself on the external level, what we call the horizontal.

[Speaker 2] (1:45:16 - 1:45:24)

But aren't there some things worth upsetting you? I mean, there are injustices in the world, and there are horrible things happening all the time in the world that we should be upset about.

[Speaker 1] (1:45:24 - 1:45:35)

I wouldn't say that we should be upset about. It is normal for people to be upset about this, but it is not the most effective way of bringing about change. I got it.

[Speaker 2] (1:45:35 - 1:45:37)

You can be upset all day long and nothing changes.

[Speaker 1] (1:45:37 - 1:45:38)

Nothing happens.

[Speaker 2] (1:45:38 - 1:45:40)

Because people have been upset for years and things don't change.

[Speaker 1] (1:45:41 - 1:45:54)

Yes. People are upset about violence. They're upset about war.

Continuous war between nations and so on. It continues to happen. And you cannot fight against...

[Speaker 2] (1:45:54 - 1:45:59)

Somebody emailed me today. They said they were upset about 13-year-old girls having to marry so-called ministers.

[Speaker 1] (1:46:00 - 1:46:00)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:46:01 - 1:46:03)

Upset about it, but being upset about it changes nothing.

[Speaker 1] (1:46:04 - 1:46:26)

No. So it's more powerful to face a situation and see this is how it is, and then see if action is possible. What is it that can be done?

Got it. And then there's no negativity in the action. But if you are resisting, if you are complaining about the situation already, whatever you do, negativity flows into what you do.

I just got something earlier, and the reason I'm thinking about this is because a friend of mine had lost his loved one and was saying that he was having such a hard time letting go. And what I just had in this moment, something clicked for me, is that when people do finally are allowed to move on from their grief, it's because they have come to the point of acceptance that their loved one is gone.

[Speaker 8] (1:46:48 - 1:46:48)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:46:48 - 1:47:22)

And what you're saying is, in any situation, whether it's the loss of a loved one or loss of a position or loss of whatever that you're faced with, acceptance of the situation and beginning to deal with what is going on now instead of wondering or worrying about what could have been, should have been, might have been, changes the situation and the way you feel about it. And that your pain and suffering is caused and stress is caused because you refuse to accept the now. Yes.

[Speaker 1] (1:47:22 - 1:47:23)

You're not one with the now.

[Speaker 2] (1:47:23 - 1:47:34)

Got it. So tonight we are Skyping with a new study group in West Hollywood along with Borders where we've been Skyping in Borders in Chicago. Now we've moved to Hollywood.

[Speaker 1] (1:47:34 - 1:47:39)

Very good. At the famed Bodhi Tree. Oh, I love that bookstore.

I was there some years. I gave a talk there.

Don't you love that bookstore?

[Speaker 1] (1:47:40 - 1:47:40)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:47:40 - 1:48:06)

I do too. The Bodhi Tree is considered by many to have one of the best book selections in Los Angeles for the mind, body and spirit. So, hi everybody at Bodhi.

Hi. God, everybody looks so California-like. We can tell we're not in Chicago.

Everybody's all bundled up. I Skyped Tanisha at the Bodhi Tree earlier today on The Oprah Show and she's back tonight with a question. Hi, Tanisha.

[Speaker 5] (1:48:06 - 1:48:07)

Hi, Oprah. How are you?

[Speaker 2] (1:48:08 - 1:48:09)

Good to see you. And your question?

[Speaker 5] (1:48:10 - 1:48:51)

Yes, my question has to do with reactivity. Page 208 totally says, the more reactive... Okay, what is reactivity?

Becoming addicted to reaction. The more reactive you are, the more entangled you become with form. The more I identify with form, the stronger the ego.

My question has to do with I've always related being reactive to being sensitive. And being sensitive allows me to be very passionate about things, allows me to connect with other people and be emotionally available to my friends and family. So my question is how can I retain sensitivity and be passionate about things and keep that but not allow my ego to get stronger?

Great question, Tanisha.

Thanks. Thank you. Well, reaction may appear to be a sign of sensitivity but actually reaction is not sensitive.

Reaction is a conditioned way of responding to a situation and you're not... All reaction really comes from the past because it's part of the way in which you have been conditioned. And because it comes from the past, it is never totally adequate to the present moment.

So sensitivity is actually lost when you are reactive and true sensitivity comes when you are absolutely present in the situation and see this is how it is and you totally face the situation as it is and with that comes enormous sensitivity and with that comes also intuition. It's only when you internally don't resist a situation then the intuitive faculties arise within you. As long as you internally resist a situation and reactivity is always some form of resistance as long as you internally resist then the intuitive faculties cannot really come in because you are acting out old conditioning.

Intuition comes out of presence, out of the present moment. So bringing presence to a situation then that means you become absolutely sensitive and that's also a deeper aliveness and a deeper power than what looks like power and aliveness when you observe somebody reacting. Sometimes it might look very passionate but really they are acting out their past conditioning.

The ego is acting out. That's not true passion. It's the ego wanting this or that from the situation, wanting to manipulate the situation, wanting to get something out of the situation, whatever, but not being truly present.

So it's only through presence that the true sensitivity is there.

[Speaker 2] (1:51:06 - 1:51:35)

Thank you Tanisha and all you Bodhi people. Thank you so much. The Bodhi tree.

Love that. That's great. Continuing on with who we are because I know so many people have this as a prominent question for themselves.

You say on page 189, nobody can tell you who you are. It would just be another concept. So it would not change you.

Who you are requires no belief. In fact, every belief is an obstacle.

[Speaker 1] (1:51:35 - 1:51:43)

What does that mean? It means who you are has nothing to do with any thought that you might have about yourself.

[Speaker 2] (1:51:43 - 1:52:02)

So does who you are have nothing to do with what you've done? So you spend your life here doing all this work and working, working, working, working, making money, taking care of your family, doing all the things that people do, and that has nothing to do with you. And then you, at your funeral, they read your, you know, words about you and say, this is who you are.

Well, and then there's the gravestone, and on the gravestone there is the date of birth, and there is a one or two inch dash, and then there's the date of your death, and the dash is really all your ambitions and your fears and your drama and your problems. That's what's left on that level. So I'm not saying not to honor the level of form, because that's what we are talking about.

Whatever you do in this life, this horizontal level, where we do things, where we have our functions and play roles, you honor that level, but realizing there is something more vital, there is something deeper than just that.

[Speaker 2] (1:52:50 - 1:52:58)

Bridget says, Dear Oprah Eckhart, can you explain the quote on page 192, but nothing you can find out about yourself is you. Nothing you can know about you is you.

[Speaker 1] (1:52:59 - 1:54:15)

Yes. So I'm making a difference here between knowing yourself and knowing about yourself. And I mention as an example if you go to a conventional psychoanalyst, let's say, you will spend some years examining the makeup of your conditioning, of your past, your childhood, and so on.

And you find out more and more about yourself things that perhaps you hadn't seen clearly. About your emotions, about the makeup of your thoughts, and so on. And all that is knowing about.

It's to do with content. The content of my life, and the content of my mind, ultimately. Because my life is, I know it only as the content of my mind.

So that is knowing about yourself. And you can know thousands of facts about yourself and your history and still not know who you are. Because that knowing has nothing to do with conceptual knowing, with bits of information.

It's the deeper knowing. I gave the analogy earlier of the honey. The honey.

You can know about the honey.

[Speaker 9] (1:54:15 - 1:54:15)

Yes.

Or you can taste the honey because when you taste the honey, the honey becomes you. It merges with you. That's right.

That's right. In that sense, knowing who you are in a non-conceptual way is being fully who you are. It's being in touch with that deeper level of being where that you can only access in the present moment, the vertical dimension.

Can I ask, well, if you are reading this book and suddenly become to understand or not reading this book and understand, as you say, many people say, well, I'm a spiritual being. You know, I'm on my spiritual path.

[Speaker 8] (1:54:53 - 1:54:53)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:54:53 - 1:55:15)

As many people have said, you know, as I'm reading all of the message boards, which I love by the way. Keep them coming. They say, I've been on the spiritual path for many years or I'm a spiritual person.

Aren't you just a little step closer thinking you're a spiritual person or is that another form of your ego, saying I'm a spiritual person? Well, you have... Because I've said for years, I recognize I'm spirit.

[Speaker 8] (1:55:15 - 1:55:16)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:55:16 - 1:55:25)

That just... Come from the greater spirit. So, I can use the word, I am consciousness come out of the greater consciousness that I call God.

[Speaker 8] (1:55:25 - 1:55:25)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:55:25 - 1:55:32)

Or spirit that come out of the greater consciousness spirit that I call God. Yes. So, I recognize that.

I know that intellectually.

[Speaker 1] (1:55:32 - 1:56:22)

Yes. So, in that sense, you can say intellectually that is a true statement. But I also feel it deeply.

The question is whether, and this is I know that you do, but any... The question is whether you truly feel that as a reality and a way of finding out how deeply you truly know this is when how you react to situations in your life and how you react to other people in your life. It's there that you find out whether your belief that you are spirit, whether you truly know that or whether it's no more, as I put it, than an idea floating around in your mind.

Do you know it in the depths of your being? Because then, the way in which you deal with situations and people is very different. Correct.

[Speaker 2] (1:56:23 - 1:56:45)

I've always believed that I really was God's child. That I was, you know, come from, and as I've gotten older and could articulate it better, you know, I use other ways of describing it, but I believe that I came from that which is God. Yes.

And was born of that. And so, therefore, really have no real fears in the world. I've always believed everything would be okay.

[Speaker 1] (1:56:45 - 1:56:45)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:56:46 - 1:56:47)

No matter what, I'm going to be okay.

[Speaker 1] (1:56:47 - 1:56:48)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:56:48 - 1:56:49)

Because of that. And you can...

[Speaker 1] (1:56:49 - 1:57:09)

And that's more than a belief. More than a belief. You can sense that.

Yeah. In some way that it's hard to describe. Right.

But you can sense that, ultimately, there isn't you and God. There is a deep place where you and God merge. There's a oneness with that.

Well, I've just gotten that later in life. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:57:09 - 1:57:16)

I used to think God was out there. Yes. Mm-hmm.

Yes. Eleanor lives in Boston, Massachusetts, and is Skyping us from a friend's house. Hi, Eleanor.

[Speaker 3] (1:57:17 - 1:57:23)

Hi, Oprah. Hi, Mr. Tolle. This is such a great experience.

I really thank you so much for it.

[Speaker 2] (1:57:24 - 1:57:25)

Well, thank you. Your question is?

[Speaker 3] (1:57:26 - 1:58:21)

My question is, on page 192, you say, you may not want to know yourself because you are afraid of what you may find out. Mm-hmm. My question is about letting go of your insecurities or what you would call your ego.

For many years now, I've been handling, so to say, an eating disorder. It's pretty much been, it's consumed a great part of my identity. That's how I identify myself.

I feel like that causes a great lacking in me. Mm-hmm. In a way, I do want to let go, but then a great part of me just wants to hold on to this identification of myself.

I guess my question is, what is this next step from awakening to the fact that I should move on and acting upon that?

That's the deriving your sense of who you are from certain thoughts or mental images that you have about yourself. That's a normal identity that people have. They derive their sense of self from certain mental images or thoughts they have about themselves, which they repeat to themselves, which they talk to others about.

[Speaker 2] (1:58:50 - 1:58:55)

Yes. It's what Debbie was saying to us earlier from the Netherlands. I'm a very sensitive person.

[Speaker 1] (1:58:55 - 1:58:55)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:58:55 - 1:58:57)

Therefore, lots of things overwhelm me.

[Speaker 1] (1:58:58 - 1:58:58)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:58:58 - 1:58:58)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (1:58:58 - 1:59:09)

That's already on one level that is true, but if you become too identified with a label like that, then that becomes a hindrance going beyond it.

[Speaker 9] (1:59:09 - 1:59:10)

Mm-hmm.

[Speaker 1] (1:59:10 - 1:59:14)

That's why you immediately said when she said that, ah, there we have a label.

[Speaker 9] (1:59:15 - 1:59:15)

Mm-hmm.

[Speaker 1] (1:59:15 - 2:00:52)

There's a similar thing perhaps that happens to you. It's really finding within yourself something that is more powerful, more genuine, more truly who you are than any image that you have in your mind. And we have to come back here to really the essence of this teaching, which is present moment.

You have to invite the present moment into your life as frequently as you can. You have to make room for the present moment, because it's only when you make room for the present moment that these images and mental concepts about who you are do not operate. So when you become present, and I've already given hints about how to, little things you can do to become present.

At the beginning of our session today, we had this little meditation where we said be aware of your sense perceptions. Touch things, look at things, listen to things without judging, without labeling. Then the alertness rises.

The key is here, another word for presence is the alertness. And so you become alert also within. You feel the aliveness of your inner body.

Rather than having a mental concept of who you are, you feel the entire energy field, that which animates the physical form, and you are in touch with that.

Yeah, and Eleanor, what I would say, add to that is is that you haven't done that enough, because once you start to do that, when you get in touch with the inner body, when you begin to feel the inner space, when you begin to feel the presence and being that is really you, you realize you're bigger than your little self with an eating disorder. When you start, and the reason why you're still attached to this idea of having an eating disorder because that's as big as you know yourself to be right now. And when you know yourself to be something more, you will choose to be the something more, and not this little me that has an eating disorder.

That's how I see it.

Yes, that's it.

[Speaker 2] (2:01:37 - 2:01:43)

That's how I see it. And that's why you're clinging to it, because you don't know who you are. Because you don't know who you are.

[Speaker 3] (2:01:44 - 2:01:56)

It's very difficult to move beyond that. I mean, I may in my mind understand that intellectually that I'm greater than this issue, but it's hard.

[Speaker 2] (2:01:57 - 2:02:21)

You're not going to help yourself through your mind. That's what Eckhart is saying in this whole book. That real healing, real everything, creativity, real joy, real presence and being comes from that space, the inner space of consciousness or presence and being.

And the reason why you're attached to the idea, because that works for you. That works for you right now.

[Speaker 3] (2:02:21 - 2:02:22)

Very easy.

Yeah, that works for you because you like playing small right now. And so maybe you're not ready. But what he just described for you is exactly...

And it doesn't happen overnight. It doesn't mean that, you know, tomorrow you're going to wake up and not have an issue. It's slowly bringing more and more consciousness into your daily way of being that allows you...

[Speaker 3] (2:02:45 - 2:02:47)

It's a lot of effort, that's for sure.

[Speaker 2] (2:02:48 - 2:02:51)

And I would say this, Eleanor, I would say you're worth it.

[Speaker 3] (2:02:51 - 2:02:54)

Thank you. Thank you so much for this opportunity.

[Speaker 2] (2:02:54 - 2:02:55)

I would say you're worth the effort.

[Speaker 3] (2:02:56 - 2:02:57)

Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (2:02:58 - 2:03:54)

I want to move on to abundance. And there was a question I had earlier that you had on here about abundance. I love that question.

But there's a lot in Chapter 7 about abundance and that we are not the little me that we think we are. You say on page 190 whatever you think the world is withholding from you you're withholding from the world and you're withholding it because deep down you think you're small and that you have nothing to give. Try this for a couple of weeks and see how it changes your reality.

Whatever you think people are withholding from you, praise, appreciation, assistance, loving, care, and so on, give it to them. So is abundance... Do you have that question to put back here?

The abundance question that somebody had asked in email? What's so great about this, I think, is that it's something people can do every day right now, is to start to give that which you say you most want.

Yes. And it starts with recognizing external abundance, that if the act of recognition that there's external abundance and what that is, we'll see in a second, is the act of recognition of external abundance already brings out the abundance that is an essential part of your very being. So when you recognize abundance without, and what I'm suggesting there is just to look at you walking past a store where there's a display of fruit, apples, oranges, and you see the abundance and the aliveness that is there.

You acknowledge it there. Abundance doesn't mean that you need to buy many things. You can buy or not buy, but it's to see the abundance of water, rain falling from the sky.

There's an abundance of water. There's an abundance of aliveness. There's an abundance of joy in the dog that's going past you there.

And so to recognize, to see the abundance that surrounds you, even if you're very poor in the eyes of the world, the abundance is always there around you, but you need to recognize it, acknowledge it, and another word for that is gratitude.

I know. I was going to say, that's why I've kept a gratitude journal for years.

[Speaker 1] (2:05:11 - 2:05:11)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:05:11 - 2:05:24)

If you keep a gratitude journal listing, I do this thing, just the five things in the day that made you most grateful, what you start to notice is, is that there are more things added to your list, and you don't even have time to write them all.

[Speaker 8] (2:05:24 - 2:05:25)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:05:25 - 2:05:33)

And when you start to pay attention to the things, okay? And you also say acknowledging the good that is already in your life is the foundation for all abundance.

[Speaker 1] (2:05:33 - 2:06:06)

Yes. And again, many people make that mistake because they believe that there is nothing good in my life. And that's absurd.

It means they are not present. They are trapped in certain stories in their head which tell them continuously that there is nothing good in my life. And if they only opened their eyes and looked around, and if they smelled the air, saw the sunlight, the most abundant thing you can see is the sun.

Well, I think the most abundant thing you can have is your breath. The breath? Come back to your breath.

So you can be with that?

When you can't think of anything to be grateful for, go to your breath.

[Speaker 1] (2:06:09 - 2:06:13)

Breath? Or the aliveness in your hands and in your arms to feel that.

[Speaker 2] (2:06:13 - 2:06:22)

Well, the email question from Rosanita in Georgia was to ask you to please explain what you mean by abundance comes only to those who already have.

Yes. Now, abundance, you need to recognize that as coming from within you. Abundance is not something that external things come to you that make you abundant.

Abundance is the energy that flows out of you, out of the being of who you are, into this world. So the beginning of you initiate this process by recognizing the abundance that's all around you externally. Outflow determines inflow.

And then it suddenly, the recognition already draws it out.

I was going to say, isn't gratitude in itself an energy field that draws more to you? Isn't it its own vibrational frequency that draws more to you?

[Speaker 8] (2:07:10 - 2:07:10)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:07:10 - 2:07:15)

And that's what I interpreted you saying. Is that gratitude is its own energy field?

[Speaker 8] (2:07:15 - 2:07:15)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:07:15 - 2:07:33)

And that when you acknowledge and are grateful for whatever you have, when you can see and feel the gratitude, experience the gratitude in whatever you have, that changes your vibrational frequency, literally, and allows more to be drawn to you.

[Speaker 1] (2:07:33 - 2:08:23)

Yes. It changes your entire reality. It changes the way in which you experience life.

Yes, it does. It changes your world. And so it's, if that's the only thing people remember, there are many things in this book, but just if they want to change their lives, they're not happy with their lives, bring gratitude into it, which is, of course, connected also to the present moment, because it's only here in this moment.

What is it in this moment that I can be grateful for? Be grateful for. And then you suddenly see, oh, it's all that.

There's always, it's miraculous if you truly look around and sense and feel. It's miraculous. The entire universe is miraculous.

Yes. And when you are so trapped in your thoughts that you don't see this anymore, then the entire universe becomes dead to you and there's nothing new that ever arises.

[Speaker 2] (2:08:23 - 2:09:13)

You know, I was practicing this this weekend. I was saying to Eckhart before we started that I was under the weather and had an obligation in New Orleans and wasn't able to fulfill that commitment and normally I would have just been beating myself up about it, because I've never had to cancel anything before, but I decided to be with the fact that I was sick and I had one of the happiest days of my life, being sick in bed, because I accepted it and was not fighting the fact that I wasn't well. I thought, I'm going to be with feeling badly and I'm going to appreciate everything about the day. So every cup of tea that Stedman brought me, I was happy and happy that I was, you know, I had clean sheets, I mean, and happy that I could open the curtains and there was sun coming through the window, just and I just had the most happy time being sick in bed.

Yes. Yeah, so that's what you're talking about.

[Speaker 8] (2:09:13 - 2:09:14)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:09:15 - 2:09:16)

Being able to be grateful from where you are.

[Speaker 1] (2:09:17 - 2:09:18)

Yes, very, very powerful.

[Speaker 2] (2:09:18 - 2:09:20)

If I hadn't read this book, I might not have been able to do that.

So it's been very helpful to me. And you say, yeah, go ahead. You can even be grateful for things that on the surface don't look so good.

When you accept what is, you're grateful for whatever situation arises. Let's say, your car breaks down and you have to change the tire in the middle of the night and even there you can say, okay, we come to this later in the book. It begins sometimes, a so-called negative situation begins with not resisting it.

Yes. And so...

[Speaker 2] (2:09:56 - 2:10:04)

Don't you say in the power of now, I just interrupted a thought, but don't you say in the power of now that all stress comes from resisting the present moment?

[Speaker 1] (2:10:04 - 2:10:04)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:10:05 - 2:10:05)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (2:10:05 - 2:10:09)

It doesn't come from the situation, it comes from your thoughts about the situation.

[Speaker 2] (2:10:09 - 2:10:14)

Because the tire needing to be changed by itself could not cause you to be stressed.

[Speaker 1] (2:10:14 - 2:10:23)

No, it just is as it is. It is as it is. And if you can see that, then suddenly you move into that and even there comes gratitude.

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:10:24 - 2:10:27)

So your stress is about wanting the moment to be different than what it is.

[Speaker 1] (2:10:27 - 2:10:27)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:10:27 - 2:10:32)

And that's whether it's a tire, losing your job, losing a loved one.

[Speaker 8] (2:10:32 - 2:10:32)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:10:33 - 2:10:45)

Okay. And you sum this up, this abundance, by using a quote from Jesus saying, Give and it will be given to you. Good measure, pressed down, shaken together, running over, will be put into your lap.

That is the truth, so help me.

[Speaker 1] (2:10:46 - 2:12:05)

That is just the truth. Yes. It's an amazing, amazing statement.

And also, somewhere else, Jesus talks about... You must like Jesus. You talk about him a lot.

Oh, yes. There was a time when I... I was brought up as a Catholic and then I...

for many years I wasn't interested anymore. And then after I went through this inner shift, a couple of years afterwards, I happened to pick up the New Testament and I happened to read the Gospels and I suddenly saw how deep all this is, these statements. Right.

It became more than doctrine. Yes, yes. And so Jesus somewhere else says, I want you to have life in its fullness.

I want you to have the fullness of life. And that's a beautiful statement and people sometimes don't realize what he means by the fullness of life because in our civilization particularly, the fullness of life means having as many things as possible. Yes.

And of course, I'm convinced that Jesus was not talking about shopping malls. No. Because if he was talking about shopping malls, then the kingdom of heaven has already arrived and it's in the shopping malls.

So he was not talking about many, many things. Eckhart made a joke, y'all.

Eckhart made a funny.

[Speaker 1] (2:12:12 - 2:12:23)

He was talking about something that is within you. The fullness of life is a dimension within you and he said, I want you to be in touch with that dimension within you.

[Speaker 2] (2:12:23 - 2:12:29)

And you are absolutely right. If you get nothing else from this book, if you can get that, then your life will change.

[Speaker 8] (2:12:29 - 2:12:29)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:12:30 - 2:12:31)

Your life will change.

[Speaker 8] (2:12:31 - 2:12:31)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:12:31 - 2:12:57)

That abundance comes only to those who already have it, page 192. It sounds almost unfair, but of course it isn't. It's a universal law.

Both abundance and scarcity are interstates and manifest as your reality. Jesus puts it like this, for to the one who has, more will be given and from the one who is not, even what he has will be taken away. And he's not talking about things.

No. He's talking about your interstate of gratitude for what you already have.

[Speaker 8] (2:12:57 - 2:12:57)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:12:58 - 2:13:01)

And your life will change. Laura from Baltimore is on the line and has a question for us. Laura?

[Speaker 6] (2:13:02 - 2:13:04)

Hi, Oprah. Hi, Eckhart.

[Speaker 2] (2:13:04 - 2:13:05)

Hi. Hello.

[Speaker 6] (2:13:05 - 2:13:41)

Thank you so much for this opportunity. You've both been great spiritual teachers for me and I'm just so grateful. Thank you.

My question is, before reading this book, I was someone who usually suppressed my emotions. And on page 208, you talk about bringing an inner yes to whatever form that the now takes. So now, when I have the emotion of sadness arise, I try to apply this principle.

In the past, I would have said no to the emotion and suppressed it. But now I worry that by saying yes to this emotion, it's just the ego tricking me and defeating the pain body. How can I be sure that emoting is not actually strengthening my ego?

[Speaker 1] (2:13:44 - 2:15:06)

Right. Good question. So, when you fully allow an emotion, it implies that you are there as the awareness, the witnessing presence.

Because it's only from that space that you can say that this is what I feel and here it is. It's part of the is-ness of this moment. And if you do that, the emotion cannot rise up into your mind and control your thinking.

In other words, it does not become part of ego. It's only if the emotion rises up into your mind and then your mind starts to think along the lines of that particular emotion and thereby feeding more energy to the very same emotion. That means you are strengthening that emotion and it's becoming part of ego.

But if you can just look at the emotion and allow it to be, then the emotion is not going to feed on your thoughts anymore. And then you will actually find when you allow an emotion to be, it subsides fairly quickly. And it's not part of ego.

This practice is going beyond emotion without repressing them.

[Speaker 2] (2:15:07 - 2:15:08)

You got that, Laura?

[Speaker 6] (2:15:09 - 2:15:10)

Yes, thank you so much.

[Speaker 2] (2:15:10 - 2:16:11)

I love that. Tell us the story of the Zen Master on 199, the one who said, is that so? I mean, I think you have to be a Zen Master, practically, to have that kind of reaction to everything in life.

Because when somebody attacks you, that's a thing I still have to work on. Because I live in a world where people write things that are not true all the time. Somebody's working on a biography of me now, unauthorized.

So I know it's going to be lots of things in there that are not true. And so, I've gotten better at it. And I know everybody experiences it on one level or another.

For me, it's people saying things about me that are not true. It caused me to show myself as a small person. The little me comes out.

And I'm like, that's not true! And so this Zen Master who's able to say, when he's being accused of, you know, doing something horrible to this girl, is that so? Who can do that?

[Speaker 1] (2:16:11 - 2:17:00)

It's a very extreme form of being one with the present moment. This is a, I believe, should I tell the story? Yes, please do.

So there was a Zen Master. He was highly regarded. And he was a spiritual teacher, had a very good reputation.

And one day, neighbors of his came to him and said, our daughter is pregnant, and you remember, she came to see you about some advice some time ago, and she has now confessed to us that you are the father of this baby that's going to be born out of our 17-year-old daughter. And of course, they didn't tell him this in the way as I'm telling it to you. They were very angry.

[Speaker 2] (2:17:01 - 2:17:02)

Is this a true story?

I believe it is. So there was an enormous anger in this situation, you can imagine. And the Zen Master was listening to them as they were telling them that he had fathered this child.

He was listening in that Zen state of open alert attention, like this. And then when they had finished their story, you are the father of this child, and he said, is that so? Yes, he said.

And then we are going to, when the child is born, you are going to look after the baby, because you are responsible. Is that so? And so when the baby was born, they brought the child over to him and said, now you look after the baby, it's not ours, you are responsible.

And he accepted the baby, and the word got round that he had fathered a child by a 17-year-old girl. He lost his reputation, nobody came to see him anymore. He was totally indifferent to this, because he was only responding to the needs of the present moment, so he started looking after the baby.

And so she spent about a year looking after the baby, and in the meantime the mother of the baby grew up a little bit more, and suddenly she confessed to her parents that the Zen master was not the father, she just didn't want to tell them that it was the boy who works in the butchers who was the father. And of course the parents got extremely upset, and they came running to the Zen master and said, she has just told us that you are not the father. He said, is that so?

Yes, and so we would like our baby back please. And so he handed the baby over. It's the story that...

[Speaker 2] (2:18:46 - 2:18:48)

It must be in the Zendom kingdom or something.

[Speaker 1] (2:18:49 - 2:19:01)

Continuous, it's the story that shows an extreme example of absolute non-resistance, and the good that comes because the baby was being looked after with loving care for a whole year by this Zen master.

[Speaker 2] (2:19:01 - 2:19:11)

But why wouldn't a Zen master, okay, because he's a Zen master. Is that the level that you were saying that we should be striving? Well I know you're not saying we should do anything, we should do whatever we want to do.

[Speaker 1] (2:19:11 - 2:19:15)

It is not necessary, that is only to exemplify...

[Speaker 2] (2:19:15 - 2:19:18)

Because I would be it is not true! It's not true!

[Speaker 1] (2:19:20 - 2:19:47)

Or you can say no, I'm not the father. It's not true, I'm not the father. So you can say it in one way that is very reactive and that would be the normal way, or you can say it in a way that is free of reaction and nevertheless states the truth.

So you're still surrendered inside, you're still accepting that these parents this is where they are at, this is what they believe, and simply you say this is not the case, I'm not the father.

Bottom line is you're saying don't get pulled into the drama. Yes. Don't get pulled into the drama.

Yes. State your case, state the facts without allowing your ego to be pulled into the drama of it.

[Speaker 8] (2:19:59 - 2:19:59)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:19:59 - 2:20:21)

And then be able to move on. That's right. That's what you're saying.

That's it. Okay, we've got Fatima on the line from Kuwait. Hello, Fatima?

Hello? Hello. Hi Oprah.

Hi. Hi. Nice to see you.

Or hear you. Hi. Can you hear me?

Yes we can. Go ahead with your question.

[Speaker 7] (2:20:21 - 2:20:43)

Okay, great. Since we are used to identifying ourselves with what we have and what we do, I would like to ask you, Oprah and Eckhart, to identify yourself without names or any form of identification so other people can get a better understanding of who they are and what you mentioned on page 186. Okay, Eckhart, go right ahead and do that.

The sound wasn't so good.

[Speaker 2] (2:20:44 - 2:21:07)

She was saying since we're so used, accustomed to identifying ourselves through labels and what we do, she would like for you and I, I would like for you, to identify yourself without using those labels of identification so that everybody listening can get a better idea then of how then do you describe yourself.

[Speaker 1] (2:21:07 - 2:21:38)

Yes, so we're talking about being with another person. When you identify yourself, you identify yourself to another person. Yes.

So there's a situation where you meet somebody, perhaps somebody you don't know yet. Yes. And so you can be there as an ego entity in which case you would immediately explain your achievements or you would immediately explain your sufferings or your diseases that you identify with or whatever.

[Speaker 2] (2:21:38 - 2:21:43)

Sometimes people do it this way, which annoys me, they'll say, what school did you go to?

[Speaker 1] (2:21:43 - 2:21:43)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:21:44 - 2:21:47)

That's immediately to say whether or not you're in the category.

[Speaker 1] (2:21:47 - 2:22:13)

That's right. Yes. So people, they want to as the mind, that's what the human mind does, they want to be able to classify you, they want to be able to find out where they can put you in there.

So they're asking questions about that but you don't need to be drawn into that and realize that as you, and this is a very very important thing.

[Speaker 2] (2:22:13 - 2:22:19)

Okay, so let's say we didn't know you and you're at a gathering where people don't know you.

[Speaker 8] (2:22:19 - 2:22:19)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:22:19 - 2:22:22)

And I come up and I introduce myself and I say, hello, I'm Oprah.

[Speaker 8] (2:22:23 - 2:22:23)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:22:23 - 2:22:38)

And I'm here with a convention and I'm, you know, I sold so many pharmaceuticals and I did so this and that, I've got three kids, I live in Oregon, whatever. How would you then describe yourself?

[Speaker 1] (2:22:39 - 2:24:06)

Well, perhaps I would not use that many words but some words might be there. I wouldn't say, I am formless spirit or anything like that. You wouldn't?

No. Hello, I am formless spirit. I once asked somebody, I met somebody at a reunion and they knew that I had already written The Power of Now so I was a spiritual teacher and so I asked, for some reason we had a conversation and I asked how old are you?

And he said, I was never born. He really wanted to teach me a lesson. Oh boy.

So you can be quite normal in your interaction but more important is on a sensing level, you are there as a field of aware presence and in an interaction with another human being, what matters is not so much the words that are being said, there is a deeper level of the awareness that arises, the field, I call it the field of awareness that arises between two human beings. The field of presence that arises when those human beings or even just one of them is not totally identified with their thinking mind and the ego. Then I can be there as a conscious presence.

Right now as I sit here, I can, I'm here as a conscious presence.

[Speaker 2] (2:24:07 - 2:24:12)

So you wouldn't say, I'm Eckhart formless spirit, you would just say, I'm Eckhart.

[Speaker 1] (2:24:13 - 2:24:13)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:24:13 - 2:24:16)

And if they say, well hey, what do you do?

[Speaker 1] (2:24:16 - 2:25:01)

Yes, then I give a conventional answer, I'm a writer. And then they ask, what do you write about? And then depending on, I kind of sense where they are at, whether it's a genuine question and they truly want to know or whether it's a question when I come into the States from Canada every week, they ask me, what do you do?

And then I say, I'm a writer. And then they ask, what do you write about? And then I'm not going to give a deep answer because they don't want a deep answer.

They're not really interested. No. So I give conventional answers.

And yet, in every human interaction, even such an interaction as this, when the...

[Speaker 8] (2:25:01 - 2:25:01)

Imaginary.

[Speaker 1] (2:25:02 - 2:25:12)

Always what is, you need to be able to sense that there is a presence underneath whatever you're saying.

[Speaker 2] (2:25:12 - 2:25:12)

That's right.

[Speaker 1] (2:25:12 - 2:25:15)

Feel your own presence underneath it.

[Speaker 2] (2:25:15 - 2:25:42)

And that's what we're going to be talking about next week, is to be able to bring, that is our role in this lifetime, is to bring that sense of presence, who you really are, not the small little self that is you know, has eating disorders or shops too much or all the other things that we define in our horizontal lives as ourselves, but to bring that presence into your active life. That's right. That is our goal.

[Speaker 8] (2:25:42 - 2:25:43)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:25:43 - 2:26:11)

Yes. Alright, let's talk about the joy of being. Unhappiness or negativity is a disease on our planet.

What pollution is on the outer level is negativity. Page 213, everybody. What pollution is on the outer level is negativity on the inner.

It is everywhere. Not in just places where people don't have enough. I love this.

But even more so where they have more than enough. Their fluent world is even more deeply identified with form, more lost in content, more trapped in ego.

[Speaker 1] (2:26:12 - 2:26:12)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:26:12 - 2:26:13)

I thought that was interesting.

[Speaker 1] (2:26:13 - 2:27:20)

Yes. Sometimes you see, you know, when you visit certain places where people have relatively little, often you see more happy faces and radiant faces than in our rich society. So the passage is about negativity and there's an enormous amount of negativity in the collective energy field of our planet, but it is generated by individuals.

So it's everybody's task to be alert so that when negativity arises within them, they recognize it and then ask themselves whether that is what they choose. When you recognize it, you can be there as the presence and you have a choice. Is negativity ever the optimum way of dealing with any situation?

And if you look closely you'll see it never is a good way of dealing with any situation.

Okay, you say on page 214, the joy of being, which is the only true happiness, cannot come to you through any form, possession, achievement, person or event. And that means people who think that I'm with you and I love you and you're going to bring me joy, cannot. Yes.

You either are joy or you're not. Yes. Okay.

Through anything that happens, that joy cannot come to you ever. It emanates from the formless dimension within you, from consciousness itself and thus is one with who you are.

[Speaker 1] (2:27:55 - 2:28:42)

Yes, it comes from within and not from without. People conventionally expect it to come to them from without and then it usually doesn't because you need to discover it in yourself first and this is why when you try to manifest things in your life, which is a fine thing to do, but the vital question is, have you, first of all, already come to that place of fullness and joy within yourself right now? Have you found a right relationship with the present moment?

If you haven't, because that's where it resides. It's only by having a right relationship with the present moment that the joy can arise from within you.

[Speaker 2] (2:28:42 - 2:30:06)

You talk about that on 210 when you say to awaken within the dream is our purpose now. When we are awake within the dream, the ego-created earth drama comes to an end and a more benign and wondrous dream arises, this new earth. Also, let's go to page 215 everybody.

The top of 215 you talk about a powerful spiritual practice is consciously to allow the diminishment of ego because what we've been learning through A New Earth is that most of us have, until reading this book, believe we were our egos. Believe we were, as Eckhart has said earlier in tonight, we believe we were our horizontal life without the vertical. We believe we were our past.

We believe we are what we're going to do and what we have done. And the now was always just a sort of means to an end. So, you say a powerful spiritual practice is consciously to allow the diminishment of ego when it happens without attempting to restore the ego.

I recommend that you experiment with this from time to time. For example, when someone criticizes you blames you or calls you names I gotta tell you, it's hard to say is that so? Instead of immediately retaliating or defending yourself do nothing.

Allow the self-image to remain diminished and become alert to what that feels like deep inside you. So what's that supposed to do for us?

[Speaker 1] (2:30:09 - 2:30:38)

I'm not saying in each case you should do that. Experiment with this from time to time. Particularly when nothing depends on that situation.

So you don't have to explain something so that a situation can be put right or whatever. Somebody just calls you we talked about it the other day. Somebody cuts you off in traffic?

Yes. So that would be a good practice. But it's totally pointless to retaliate.

[Speaker 9] (2:30:38 - 2:30:38)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (2:30:38 - 2:31:12)

It makes no sense whatsoever. But the retaliation when somebody calls you names in traffic or whatever. Or does something to upset you.

Yes. Try doing nothing. Yes.

The retaliation is automatic and unconscious because it comes from the ego. Because when somebody calls you stupid for example. Right.

Or somebody calls you idiot it injures the ego. It hurts the ego. And it's the ego that's being injured not you.

Not you. It's nothing because deep down you know that it's not you. It's just the ego image of who I think I am.

[Speaker 2] (2:31:13 - 2:31:19)

Well deep down you know it's not you. But if you are a person who lives unconsciously. If you live out of your ego you think it's you.

[Speaker 1] (2:31:19 - 2:31:30)

Yes. And immediately the ego will go into what I call instant self repair mechanism. And this instant self repair mechanism which is totally unconscious.

[Speaker 2] (2:31:30 - 2:31:32)

Says I am not stupid.

[Speaker 1] (2:31:32 - 2:32:08)

Well it will call the other person something worse than stupid. And by that the ego believes that it has repaired itself and on that level it has. So this person has taken something away from you.

It's the imaginary ego. And then you take something away from that other person. That's how the egos work.

And then of course it's probably not the end because the other person is going to retaliate again. Right. And now you're in it.

The whole madness starts. Now you're in the drama. Yes.

So this is a good example where you can practice being non-reactive so when somebody calls you something remain totally.

[Speaker 2] (2:32:08 - 2:32:29)

And you say when that happens just do it for a few seconds. It may feel uncomfortable as it will. Just to keep your mouth shut.

I've had that this week. Just to keep your mouth shut. It's hard.

It feels like you've shrunk in size momentarily. Then you may sense an inner spaciousness that feels intensely alive. You haven't been diminished at all.

In fact you have expanded. What do you mean by that?

[Speaker 1] (2:32:30 - 2:33:15)

Yes. So somebody you are not what you are not defending is your egoic identity. The image identity.

And that suddenly that has become diminished by somebody calling you stupid for example. This entity has become diminished. You don't resist the diminishment.

So it has become smaller so to speak. And therefore suddenly something that is deeper than that can suddenly come through because the ego has shrunk in size. I got it.

No the ego doesn't like that. That's right. It's a wonderful experiment when you allow the ego to shrink and then suddenly you feel there is a power underneath that that's far greater than the ego.

[Speaker 2] (2:33:15 - 2:33:17)

And it shrinks every time you become aware of it.

[Speaker 8] (2:33:17 - 2:33:18)

Yes. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:33:18 - 2:33:20)

Even when you don't do what you are supposed to do?

[Speaker 8] (2:33:20 - 2:33:21)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:33:21 - 2:33:22)

Okay.

[Speaker 8] (2:33:22 - 2:33:22)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:33:23 - 2:33:36)

I like this question from Suhad in Clifton, New Jersey. How can we use the high quality no that you talk about on page 216 in our lives? Can you please provide us with some real life examples?

216. High quality no.

[Speaker 1] (2:33:37 - 2:34:47)

What did you mean by high quality no? In some cases sometimes people misunderstand when I say say yes to the present moment. They believe then whenever somebody asks you something, you have to say yes.

No, when I say yes to the present moment, it's to do with an inner state of consciousness that is open to what is. That does not resist what is. It does not necessarily mean that every time somebody asks you something, you say yes.

So, let's say a person comes to you, you've known him, you've already lent him money five times, he's never returned it. Or two. Two is enough.

And so he says, I need another $500 now. And then you perhaps this may be a good opportunity and occasion where you can use a high quality no that is not reactive and does not make that person wrong and so he becomes angry or shouts at him. So you are dishonest, you haven't returned my money, and I'm not giving you a penny more.

This is a low quality no. It's a low quality. A high quality no is to say...

[Speaker 2] (2:34:47 - 2:34:55)

Who do you think you are? Stories in order to make wrong. Yes, I've given you money so many times before.

[Speaker 1] (2:34:55 - 2:34:57)

Yes, and then you make yourself into a victim.

[Speaker 2] (2:34:58 - 2:35:02)

Or make yourself into the great person who's been so benevolent.

[Speaker 1] (2:35:02 - 2:35:26)

Yes, whatever the egoic game is. So the high quality no is to simply state, well, I've already given you that money twice and you haven't returned it yet so I won't give you any more. You have to return my money first.

I'm not going to give you... Can you sense that there's no negativity? You simply state clearly, this is what I'm going to do or not do.

I won't give you any more because you haven't returned that.

[Speaker 2] (2:35:26 - 2:36:31)

Yes. That happened to me recently. Somebody was asking me, and I said, no, I won't do that.

And no emotion attached to it at all. Alright, I just want to say here that the... I love this on 220.

What you see, hear, feel, touch, or think about is only one half of reality, so to speak. It is form. In the teaching of Jesus, it's simply called the world and the other dimension is the kingdom of heaven or eternal life.

Then toward the bottom of the page, second to last paragraph, you say, the collective disease of humanity is that people are so engrossed in what happens, so hypnotized by the world of fluctuating forms, so absorbed in the content of their lives, they have forgotten the essence, that which is beyond content, beyond form, beyond thought. They're so consumed by time that they have forgotten eternity, which is their origin, their home, their destiny. Eternity is the living reality of who you are.

And that's what I felt on that mountain that day.

[Speaker 1] (2:36:31 - 2:37:24)

Yes. Yes. And you can actually sense it, although that's the wonderful thing when you can be surrounded by the stillness.

Yeah. But the amazing thing is you can actually sense that even in the midst of chaos, even in the midst of noise, I have felt also what you describe, I've also very often felt that in nature. But I have also felt that extreme peace in situations where one wouldn't expect it.

I felt it in the middle of London, in busy streets walking around, especially after I went through this shift. Before I went through this shift I was always anxious and fearful and I couldn't stand the traffic and the noise. And suddenly I was able to just walk along Piccadilly Circus and be totally at peace as if I were on a mountaintop inside.

So when you...

Mountaintop inside.

[Speaker 1] (2:37:26 - 2:37:27)

Inside, yeah.

[Speaker 2] (2:37:27 - 2:37:29)

And that's what presence is, is it not?

[Speaker 1] (2:37:29 - 2:37:29)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:37:29 - 2:37:32)

Presence is being on the mountaintop inside.

[Speaker 1] (2:37:32 - 2:37:53)

Yes. That stillness is always there in you as the essence of who you are. And when we call it stillness we are already limited because it's so vast you cannot describe it with one word.

Right. So whatever word you use is already a limitation. But words are limited of course because words refer to tangible things but not to the inner reality.

So before we say goodbye let's sum up what we've covered in this class. Knowing who you really are means knowing.

[Speaker 1] (2:38:02 - 2:39:25)

Yes. Knowing at a level beyond the level of concepts. Knowing yourself ultimately is being yourself fully.

Being in touch with being. The being that you are. To sense the I am that is the essence of your identity when you remove all the identifications that usually you say after you say I am you say what you are.

But if you say I am and add nothing to it that gives a good practice. It can get you in touch with the essence. I am not this.

I am not that. I am. It's a simple meditation.

Repeat the words I am to yourself. It's so powerful. I started to do that.

It is so powerful when you do that. And don't fill in the blank after the words. Very powerful.

Another similar one is Who am I? It's a question but don't look to the mind for an answer. In fact don't look for any answer especially not on the level of mind.

Who am I? And then allow the stillness to be there after the question. Don't look for an answer.

And in not looking for an answer there is the answer but not a mental concept as of sensing. Feeling. I am.

[Speaker 2] (2:39:27 - 2:41:02)

And just be with that. And so for whether it's an addiction or an eating disorder or nothing. You think you have a really wonderful life.

But you are connected to all the things in your life. To the content of your life. Just being able to sit with yourself and to say those words to yourself.

I am. And to recognize them. To know them.

Like honey. To know them. Thank you again.

I want to thank you all for joining us. The 7th class will be available on demand tomorrow. Finding who you truly are for free here at oprah.com.

And if you want to download or watch any of our classes of course you know this by now. You can do that tomorrow at oprah.com and at iTunes. It's free because of the generous support of people like Nature Made Soft Gel Vitamins.

This week update your workbook and get ready for our next class on chapter 8. It's the Discovery of Inner Space. I love this.

It's my next favorite chapter. I think 7, 8, and 9 are really the essence of the book. Inner Space is about allowing the inner space of your life to connect to the outer purpose of your life.

The inner and outer purposes of your life. Right? That's right.

Love it. Again we thank you. This was a long chapter.

Lots to cover. I would say to everybody, I mean I was sick in bed this weekend and read it again for the third time. Every time I read it I go a little deeper and awaken a little more.

So this is one you need to be with for a while.

[Speaker 1] (2:41:02 - 2:41:02)

Definitely.

[Speaker 2] (2:41:02 - 2:41:03)

Over and over.

[Speaker 1] (2:41:03 - 2:41:10)

And after you've read it once you don't need to read long pages. Just read sometimes half a page is enough.

Yes. One page. What I do is I go back and read.

This is what I would do. As you're using your highlighters, just go back and read what you've highlighted and just be with that. Because the things that you highlight are usually things that resonate with you more deeply.

It's a good way of reviewing it. And every time you come back to it, you know, two weeks from now you'll get something that you didn't get the first time.

[Speaker 8] (2:41:31 - 2:41:32)

Oh yes. Oh yes. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:41:32 - 2:41:33)

Thank you.

[Speaker 8] (2:41:33 - 2:41:34)

Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (2:41:34 - 2:41:35)

Thank you Eckhart. Thanks everybody.

2008-Eckhart Tolle Oprah A New Earth Audiobook Podcast Chapter08

CHAPTER VIII THE DISCOVERY OF INNER SPACE According to an ancient Sufi story, there lived a king in some Middle Eastern land who was continuously torn between happiness and despondency. The slightest thing would cause him great upset or provoke an intense reaction, and his happiness would quickly turn into disappointment and despair. A time came when the king finally got tired of himself and of life, and he began to seek a way out.

He sent for a wise man who lived in his kingdom, and who was reputed to be enlightened. When the wise man came, the king said to him, �I want to be like you. Can you give me something that will bring balance, serenity and wisdom into my life?

I will pay any price you ask.� The wise man said, �I may be able to help you, but the price is so great that your entire kingdom would not be sufficient payment for it. Therefore it will be a gift to you if you will honour it.� The king gave his assurances, and the wise man left. A few weeks later he returned and handed the king an ornate box carved in jade.

The king opened the box and found a simple gold ring inside. Some letters were inscribed on the ring. The inscription read, �This too will pass.� �What is the meaning of this?� asked the king. The wise man said, �Wear this ring always. Whatever happens, before you call it good or bad, touch this ring and read the inscription. That way you will always be at peace.

This too will pass.� What is it about these simple words that make them so powerful? Looking at it superficially, it would seem, while those words may provide some comfort in a bad situation, they would also diminish the enjoyment of the good things in life. �Don�t be too happy, because it won�t last.� This seems to be what they are saying when applied in a situation that is perceived as good. The full import of these words becomes clear when we consider them in the context of two other stories that we encountered earlier. The story of the Zen Master, whose only response was always �Is that so?�, shows the good that comes through inner nonresistance to events, that is to say, being at one with what happens. The story of the man, whose comment was invariably a laconic �maybe�, illustrates the wisdom of nonjudgment.

And the story of the ring points to the fact of impermanence which, when recognized, leads to nonattachment. Nonresistance, nonjudgment and nonattachment are the three aspects of true freedom and enlightened living. Those words inscribed on the ring are not telling you that you should not enjoy the good in your life, nor are they merely meant to provide some comfort in times of suffering.

They have a deeper purpose � to make you aware of the fleetingness of every situation, which is due to the transience of all forms, good or bad. When you become aware of the transience of all forms, your attachment to them lessens and you disidentify from them to some extent. Being detached does not mean that you cannot enjoy the good that the world has to offer.

In fact, you enjoy it more. Once you see and accept the transience of all things and the inevitability of change, you can enjoy the pleasures of the world while they last, without fear of loss or anxiety about the future. When you are detached, you gain a higher vantage point from which to view the events in your life, instead of being trapped inside them.

You become like an astronaut who sees the planet earth surrounded by the vastness of space and realizes a paradoxical truth � the earth is precious and at the same time insignificant. The recognition that this, too, will pass brings detachment, and with detachment another dimension comes into your life � inner space. Through detachment, as well as non-judgment and inner non-resistance, you gain access to that dimension.

When you are no longer totally identified with forms, consciousness, who you are, becomes freed from its imprisonment in form. This freedom is the arising of inner space. It comes as a stillness, a subtle peace deep within you, even in the face of something seemingly bad.

This, too, will pass. Suddenly there is space around the event. There is also space around the emotional highs and lows, even around pain.

And above all, there is space between your thoughts. And from that space emanates a peace that is not of this world, because this world is form, and the peace is space. This is the peace of God.

You can enjoy and honor the things of this world without giving them an importance and significance they don�t have. You can participate in the dance of creation and be active without attachment to outcome and without placing unreasonable demands upon the world. Fulfill me, make me happy, make me feel safe, tell me who I am.

The world cannot give you those things, and when you no longer have such expectations, all self-created suffering comes to an end. All such suffering is due to an overvaluation of form and an unawareness of the dimension of inner space. When that dimension is present in your life, you can enjoy things, experiences and the pleasures of the senses without losing yourself in them, without inner attachment to them, that is to say, without becoming addicted to the world.

The words �This, too, will pass� are pointers towards reality. In pointing to the impermanence of all forms, by implication, they are also pointing to the eternal. Only the eternal in you can recognize the impermanent as impermanent.

When the dimension of space is lost or rather not known, the things of the world assume an absolute importance, a seriousness and heaviness that in truth they do not have. When the world is not viewed from the perspective of the formless, it becomes a threatening place, and ultimately a place of despair. The Old Testament prophet must have felt this when he wrote �All things are full of weariness, a man cannot utter it�, Object Consciousness and Space Consciousness Most people�s lives are cluttered up with things, material things, things to do, things to think about.

Their lives are like the history of humanity, which Winston Churchill defined as �one damn thing after another.� Their minds are filled up with a clutter of thoughts, one thought after another. This is the dimension of Object Consciousness that is many people�s predominant reality, and that is why their lives are so out of balance. Object Consciousness needs to be balanced by Space Consciousness for sanity to return to our planet and for humanity to fulfill its destiny.

The arising of Space Consciousness is the next stage in the evolution of humanity. Space Consciousness means that in addition to being conscious of things, which always comes down to sense perceptions, thoughts and emotions, there is an undercurrent of awareness. Awareness implies that you are not only conscious of things, objects, but you are also conscious of being conscious.

If you can sense an alert inner stillness in the background while things happen in the foreground, that�s it. This dimension is there in everyone, but most people are completely unaware of it. Sometimes I point to it by saying, �Can you feel your own presence?� Space Consciousness represents not only freedom from ego, but also from dependency on the things of this world, from materialism and materiality.

It is the spiritual dimension which alone can give transcendent and true meaning to this world. Whenever you are upset about an event, a person or a situation, the real cause is not the event, person or situation, but a loss of true perspective that only space can provide. You are trapped in object consciousness, unaware of the timeless inner space of consciousness itself.

The words �This too will pass� when used as a pointer can restore awareness of that dimension to you. Another pointer to the truth in you is contained in the following statement, �I am never upset for the reason I think.� Falling below and rising above thought. When you are very tired, you may become more peaceful, more relaxed than in your usual state.

This is because thinking is subsiding, and so you can�t remember your mind-made problematic self anymore. You are moving towards sleep. When you drink alcohol or take certain drugs, provided they don�t trigger your pain body, you may also feel more relaxed, more carefree, and perhaps more alive for a while.

You may start singing and dancing, which since ancient times are expressions of the joy of life. Because you are less burdened by your mind, you can glimpse the joy of being. Perhaps this is the reason alcohol is also called �spirit.� But there�s a high price to pay�unconsciousness. Instead of rising above thought, you have fallen below it. A few more drinks, and you will have regressed to the vegetable realm. Space consciousness has little to do with being �spaced out.� Both states are beyond thought. This they have in common. The fundamental difference, however, is that in the former you rise above thought, in the latter you fall below it. One is the next step in the evolution of human consciousness, the other a regression to a stage we left behind aeons ago.

Watching television is the favorite leisure activity, or rather non-activity, for millions of people around the world. The average American, by the time he is sixty years old, will have spent fifteen years staring at the TV screen. In many other countries the figures are similar.

Many people find watching TV relaxing. Observe yourself closely and you will find that the longer the screen remains the focus of your attention, the more your thought activity becomes suspended, and for long periods you are watching the talk show, game show, sitcom, or even commercials, with almost no thought being generated by your mind. Not only do you not remember your problems anymore, but you become temporarily free of yourself.

And what could be more relaxing than that? So does TV watching create inner space? Does it cause you to be present?

Unfortunately it does not. Although for long periods your mind may not be generating any thoughts, it has linked into the thought activity of the television show. It has linked up with the TV version of the collective mind, and is thinking its thoughts.

Your mind is inactive only in the sense that it is not producing thoughts. It is, however, continuously absorbing thoughts and images that come through the TV screen. This induces a trance-like passive state of heightened susceptibility, not unlike hypnosis.

That is why it lends itself to manipulation of public opinion, as politicians and special interest groups, as well as advertisers, know, and will pay millions of dollars to catch you in that state of receptive unawareness. They want their thoughts to become your thoughts, and usually they succeed. So when watching television, the tendency is for you to fall below thought, not rise above it.

Television has this in common with alcohol and certain other drugs. While it provides some relief from your mind, you again pay a high price. Loss of consciousness.

Like those drugs, it too has a strong addictive quality. You reach for the remote control to switch off, and instead find yourself going through all the channels. Half an hour or an hour later, you are still watching, still going through the channels.

The off button is the only one your finger seems unable to press. You are still watching, usually not because anything of interest has caught your attention, but precisely because there is nothing of interest to watch. Once you are hooked, the more trivial, the more meaningless it is, the more addictive it becomes.

If it were interesting, thought-provoking, it would stimulate your mind into thinking for itself again, which is more conscious and therefore preferable to a TV-induced trance. Your attention would therefore no longer be totally held captive by the images on the screen. The content of the program, if there is a certain quality to it, can to some extent counteract and sometimes even undo the hypnotic, mind-numbing effect of the medium of television.

There are some programs that have been extremely helpful to many people, have changed their lives for the better, opened their heart, made them more conscious. Even some comedy shows, although they may be about nothing in particular, can be unintentionally spiritual by showing a caricature version of human folly and the ego. They teach us not to take anything too seriously, to approach life in a light-hearted way, and above all, they teach by making us laugh.

Laughter is extraordinarily liberating as well as healing. Most of television, however, is as yet controlled by people who are totally controlled by the ego. And so the TV's hidden agenda becomes control of you by putting you to sleep, that is to say, making you unconscious.

Yet there is enormous and still largely unexplored potential in the medium of television. Avoid watching programs and commercials that assault you with a rapid succession of images that change every two or three seconds or less. Excessive TV watching, and those programs in particular, are largely responsible for attention-deficit disorder, a mental dysfunction now affecting millions of children worldwide.

A short attention span makes all your perceptions and relationships shallow and unsatisfying. Whatever you do, whatever action you perform in that state, lacks quality, because quality requires attention. Frequent and prolonged TV watching not only makes you unconscious, it also induces passivity and drains you of energy.

Therefore, rather than watching at random, choose the programs you want to see. Whenever you remember to do so, feel the aliveness inside your body as you watch. Alternatively, be aware of your breathing from time to time.

Look away from the screen at regular intervals so that it does not completely take possession of your visual sense. Don't turn up the volume any higher than necessary so that the TV doesn't overwhelm you on the auditory level. Use the mute button during commercials.

Make sure you don't go to sleep immediately after switching off the set, or, even worse, fall asleep with the set still on. Space between thoughts is probably already arising sporadically in your life, and you may not even know it. A consciousness mesmerized by experiences, and conditioned to identify exclusively with form, that is to say, object consciousness, finds it at first almost impossible to become aware of space.

This ultimately means that you cannot become aware of yourself because you are always aware of something else. You are continuously distracted by form. Even when you seem to be aware of yourself, you have made yourself into an object, a thought form, and so what you are aware of is a thought, not yourself.

When you hear of inner space, you may start seeking it and, because you are seeking it as if you were looking for an object or for an experience, you cannot find it. This is the dilemma of all those who are seeking spiritual realization or enlightenment. Hence Jesus said, The kingdom of God is not coming with signs to be observed, nor will they say, Lo, here it is, or, There.

For behold, the kingdom of God is in the midst of you. If you are not spending all of your waking life in discontent, worry, anxiety, depression, despair, or consumed by other negative states, if you are able to enjoy simple things like listening to the sound of the rain or the wind, if you can see the beauty of clouds moving across the sky, or be alone at times without feeling lonely or needing the mental stimulus of entertainment, if you find yourself treating a complete stranger with heartfelt kindness, without wanting anything from him or her, it means that a space has opened up, no matter how briefly, in the otherwise incessant stream of thinking that is the human mind. When this happens, there is a sense of well-being, of alive peace, even though it may be subtle.

The intensity will vary from a perhaps barely noticeable background sense of contentment to what the ancient sages of India called ananda, the bliss of being. Because you have been conditioned to pay attention only to form, you are probably not aware of it except indirectly. For example, there is a common element in the ability to see beauty, to appreciate simple things, to enjoy your own company, or to relate to other people with loving kindness.

This common element is a sense of contentment, peace, and aliveness that is the invisible background without which these experiences would not be possible. Whenever there is beauty, kindness, the recognition of the goodness of simple things in your life, look for the background to that experience within yourself. But don't look for it as if you were looking for something.

You cannot pin it down and say, now I have it, or grasp it mentally and define it in some way. It is like the cloudless sky. It has no form.

It is space. It is stillness, the sweetness of being, and infinitely more than these words, which are only pointers. When you are able to sense it directly within yourself, it deepens.

So, when you appreciate something simple, a sound, a sight, a touch, when you see beauty, when you feel loving kindness towards another, sense the inner spaciousness that is the source and background to that experience. Many poets and sages throughout the ages have observed that true happiness, I call it the joy of being, is found in simple, simple, seemingly unremarkable things. Most people, in their restless search for something significant to happen to them, continuously miss the insignificant, which may not be insignificant at all.

The philosopher Nietzsche, in a rare moment of deep stillness, wrote, For happiness, how little suffices for happiness! The least thing precisely, the gentlest thing the lightest thing, a lizard's rustling, a breath, a whisk, an eye-glance, little makes up the best happiness. Be still.

Why is it the least thing that makes up the best happiness? Because true happiness is not caused by the thing or event, although this is how it first appears. The thing or event is so subtle, so unobtrusive, that it takes up only a small part of your consciousness, and the rest is inner space, consciousness itself unobstructed by form.

Inner space consciousness and who you are in your essence are one and the same. In other words, the form of little things leaves room for inner space, and it is from inner space, the unconditioned consciousness itself, that true happiness, the joy of being, emanates. To be aware of little, quiet things, however, you need to be quiet inside.

A hiding place of a degree of alertness is required. Be still. Look.

Listen. Be present. Here's another way of finding inner space.

Become conscious of being conscious. Say or think, I am, and add nothing to it. Be aware of the stillness that follows the I am.

Sense your presence. The naked, unveiled, unclothed beingness. It is untouched by young or old, rich or poor, good or bad, or any other attributes.

It is the spacious womb of all creation, all form.

[Speaker 3] (26:19 - 26:21)

End of Disc Six Him?

[Speaker 1] (26:23 - 1:04:40)

A Zen Master was walking in silence with one of his disciples along a mountain trail. When they came to an ancient cedar tree, they sat down under it for a simple meal of some rice and vegetables. After the meal, the disciple, a young monk who had not yet found the key to the mystery of Zen, broke the silence by asking the master, Master, how do I enter Zen?

He was, of course, inquiring how to enter the state of consciousness which is Zen. The master remained silent. Almost five minutes passed while the disciple anxiously waited for an answer.

He was about to ask another question when the master suddenly spoke. Do you hear the sound of that mountain stream? The disciple had not been aware of any mountain stream.

He had been too busy thinking about the meaning of Zen. Now, as he began to listen for the sound, his noisy mind subsided. At first he heard nothing.

Then his thinking gave way to heightened alertness, and suddenly he did hear the hardly perceptible murmur of a small stream in the far distance. Yes, I can hear it now, he said. The master raised his finger and, with a look in his eyes that in some way was both fierce and gentle, said, Enter Zen from there.

The disciple was stunned. It was his first Satori, a flash of enlightenment. He knew what Zen was without knowing what it was that he knew.

They continued on their journey in silence. The disciple was amazed at the aliveness of the world around him. He experienced everything as if for the first time.

Gradually, however, he started thinking again. The alert stillness became covered up again by mental noise. And before long he had another question.

Master, he said, I've been thinking. What would you have said if I hadn't been able to hear the mountain stream? The master stopped, looked at him, raised his finger and said, Enter Zen from there.

Right action. The ego asks, How can I make this situation fulfill my needs? Or, How can I get to some other situation that will fulfill my needs?

Presence. Presence is a state of inner spaciousness. When you are present, you ask, How do I respond to the needs of this situation, of this moment?

In fact, you don't even need to ask the question. You are still, alert, open to what is. You bring a new dimension into the situation.

Space. Then you look and you listen. Thus you become one with the situation.

When instead of reacting against a situation, you merge with it, the solution arises out of the situation itself. Actually, it is not you, the person, who is looking and listening, but the alert stillness itself. Then, if action is possible or necessary, you take action or rather, right action happens through you.

Right action is action that is appropriate to the whole. When the action is accomplished, the alert spacious stillness remains. There is nobody who raises his arms in a gesture of triumph, shouting a defiant, Yay!

There is no one who says, Look, I did that. All creativity comes out of inner spaciousness. Once the creation has happened and something has come into form, you have to be vigilant so that the notion of me or mine does not arise.

If you take credit for what you accomplished, the ego has returned and the spaciousness has become obscured. Outnaming. Most people are only peripherally aware of the world that surrounds them, especially if their surroundings are familiar.

The voice in the head absorbs the greater part of their attention. Some people feel more alive when they travel and visit unfamiliar places or foreign countries, because at those times sense-perception, experiencing, takes up more of their consciousness than thinking. They become more present.

Others remain completely possessed by the voice in the head even then. Their perceptions and experiences are distorted by instant judgments. They haven't really gone anywhere.

Only their body is travelling, while they remain where they have always been—in their head. This is most people's reality. As soon as something is perceived, it is named, interpreted, compared with something else, liked, disliked, or called good or bad by the phantom self, the ego.

They are impresent in thought-forms, in object consciousness. You do not awaken spiritually until the compulsive and unconscious naming ceases. Or at least you become aware of it and thus are able to observe it as it happens.

It is through this constant naming that the ego remains in place as the unobserved mind. Whenever it ceases, and even when you just become aware of it, there is inner space, and you are not possessed by the mind anymore. Choose an object close to you—a pen, a chair, a cup, a plant—and explore it visually, that is to say, look at it with great interest, almost curiosity.

Avoid any objects with strong personal associations that remind you of the past, such as where you bought it, who gave it to you, and so on. Also avoid anything that has writing on it, such as a book or a bottle. It would stimulate thought.

Without straining, relaxed but alert, give your complete attention to the object, every detail of it. If thoughts arise, don't get involved in them. It is not the thoughts you are interested in, but the act of perception itself.

Can you take the thinking out of the perceiving? Can you look without the voice in your head, commenting, drawing conclusions, comparing, or trying to figure something out? After a couple of minutes or so, let your gaze wander around the room or wherever you are, your alert attention lighting up each thing that it rests upon.

Then listen to any sounds that may be present. Listen to them in the same way as you looked at the things around you. Some sounds may be natural—water, wind, birds—while others are man-made.

Some may be pleasant, others unpleasant. However, don't differentiate between good and bad. Allow each sound to be as it is, without interpretation.

Here, too, relaxed but alert attention is the key. When you look and listen in this way, you may become aware of a subtle and at first perhaps hardly noticeable sense of calm. Some people feel it as a stillness in the background.

Others call it peace. When consciousness is no longer totally absorbed by thinking, some of it remains in its formless, unconditioned, original state. This is inner space.

Who is the experiencer? What you see and hear, taste, touch and smell are, of course, sense-objects. They are what you experience.

But who is the subject, the experiencer? If you now say, for example, well, of course I, Jane Smith, senior accountant, forty-five years old, divorced, mother of two, American, am the subject, the experiencer, you are mistaken. Jane Smith and whatever else becomes identified with the mental concept of Jane Smith are all objects of experience, not the experiencing subject.

Every experience has three possible ingredients, sense-perceptions, thoughts or mental images and emotions. Jane Smith, senior accountant, forty-five years old, mother of two, divorced, American, these are all thoughts and therefore part of what you experience the moment you think these thoughts. They and whatever else you can say and think about yourself are objects, not the subject.

They are experience, not the experiencer. You can add a thousand more definitions, thoughts, of who you are, and by doing so will certainly increase the complexity of the experience of yourself, as well as your psychiatrist's income, but in this way you will not end up with the subject, the experiencer, who is prior to all experience, but without whom there would be no experience, the experiencer. You are, and who are you?

Consciousness, and what is consciousness? This question cannot be answered. The moment you answer it, you have falsified it, made it into another object.

Consciousness, the traditional word for which is spirit, cannot be known in the normal sense of the word, and seeking it is futile. All knowing is within the realm of duality, subject and object, the knower and the known. The subject, the I, the knower without which nothing could be known, perceived, thought or felt, must remain for ever unknowable.

This is because the I has no form. Only forms can be known, and yet without the formless dimension the world of form could not be. It is the luminous space in which the world arises and subsides.

That space is the life that I am. It is timeless. I am timeless, eternal.

What happens in that space is relative and temporary, pleasure and pain, gain and loss, birth and death. The greatest impediment to the discovery of inner space, the greatest impediment to finding the experiencer, is to become so enthralled by the experience that you lose yourself in it. It means consciousness is lost in its own dream.

You get taken in by every thought, every emotion and every experience to such a degree that you are in fact in a dreamlike state. This has been the normal state of humanity for thousands of years. Although you cannot know consciousness, you can become conscious of it as yourself.

You can sense it directly in any situation, no matter where you are. You can sense it here and now, as your very presence, the inner space in which the words on this page are perceived and become thoughts. It is the underlying I am.

The words you are reading and thinking are the foreground, and the I am is the substratum, the underlying background to every experience, thought, feeling. The Breath Discover inner space by creating gaps in the stream of thinking. Without those gaps, your thinking becomes repetitive, uninspired, devoid of any creative spark, which is how it still is for most people on the planet.

You don't need to be concerned with the duration of those gaps. A few seconds is good enough. Gradually they will lengthen by themselves without any effort on your part.

More important than their length is to bring them in frequently so that your daily activities and your stream of thinking become interspersed with space. Someone recently showed me the annual prospectus of a large spiritual organization. When I looked through it, I was impressed by the wide choice of interesting seminars and workshops.

It reminded me of the Smörgåsbord, one of those Scandinavian buffets where you can take your pick from a huge variety of enticing dishes. The person asked me whether I could recommend one or two courses. I don't know, I said, they all look so interesting.

But I do know this, I added. Be aware of your breathing as often as you are able, whenever you remember. Do that for one year, and it will be more powerfully transformative than attending all of these courses.

And it's free. Being aware of your breathing takes attention away from thinking and creates space. It is one way of generating consciousness.

Although the fullness of consciousness is already there as the unmanifested, we are here to bring consciousness into this dimension. Be aware of your breathing. Notice the sensation of the breath.

Feel the air moving in and out of your body. Notice how the chest and abdomen expand and contract slightly with the in and out breath. One conscious breath is enough to make some space where before there was the uninterrupted succession of one thought after another.

One conscious breath, two or three would be even better, taken many times a day, is an excellent way of bringing space into your life. Even if you meditated on your breathing for two hours or more, which some people do, one breath is all you ever need to be aware of, indeed ever can be aware of. The rest is memory or anticipation, which is to say thought.

Breathing isn't really something that you do, but something that you witness as it happens. Breathing happens by itself. The intelligence within the body is doing it.

All you have to do is watch it happening. There is no strain or effort involved. Also, notice the brief cessation of the breath, particularly the still point at the end of the out breath, before you start breathing in again.

Many people's breath is unnaturally shallow. The more you are aware of the breath, the more its natural depth will re-establish itself. Because breath has no form as such, it has since ancient times been equated with spirit, the formless one life.

God formed man of dust from the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and the man became a living creature. Breathing, Atman, is derived from the ancient Indian Sanskrit word Atman, meaning the indwelling divine spirit or God within. The fact that breath has no form is one of the reasons why breath awareness is an extremely effective way of bringing space into your life, of generating consciousness.

It is an excellent meditation object precisely because it is not an object, has no shape or form. The other reason is that breath is one of the most subtle and seemingly insignificant phenomena, the least thing that according to Nietzsche makes up the best happiness. Whether or not you practice breath awareness as an actual formal meditation is up to you.

Formal meditation, however, is no substitute for bringing space consciousness into everyday life. Being aware of your breath forces you into the present moment, the key to all inner transformation. Whenever you are conscious of the breath you are absolutely present.

You may also notice that you cannot think and be aware of your breathing. Conscious breathing stops your mind. But far from being in a trance or half asleep, you are fully awake and highly alert.

You are not falling below thinking, but rising above it. And if you look more closely you will find that those two things, coming fully into the present moment and ceasing thinking without loss of consciousness, are actually one and the same, the arising of space consciousness. Addictions A longstanding compulsive behavior pattern may be called an addiction.

And an addiction lives inside you as a quasi-entity or sub-personality, an energy field that periodically takes you over completely. It even takes over your mind, the voice in your head, which then becomes the voice of the addiction. It may be saying, ìYouíve had a rough day, you deserve a treat.

Why deny yourself the only pleasure that is left in your life?î And so, if you are identified with the internal voice due to lack of awareness, you find yourself walking to the fridge and reaching for that rich chocolate cake. At other times, the addiction may bypass the thinking mind completely and you suddenly find yourself puffing on a cigarette or holding a drink. ìHow did that get into my hand?î Taking the cigarette out of the packet and lighting it, or pouring yourself a drink were actions performed in complete unconsciousness.

If you have a compulsive behavior pattern such as smoking, overeating, drinking, TV watching, internet addiction, or whatever it may be, this is what you can do. When you notice the compulsive need arising in you, stop and take three conscious breaths. This generates awareness.

Then for a few minutes be aware of the compulsive urge itself as an energy field inside you. Consciously feel that need to physically or mentally ingest or consume a certain substance, or the desire to act out some form of compulsive behavior. Then take a few more conscious breaths.

After that you may find that the compulsive urge has disappeared, for the time being. Or you may find that it still overpowers you and you cannot help but indulge or act it out again. Donít make it into a problem.

Make the addiction part of your awareness practice in the way described above. As awareness grows, addictive patterns will weaken and eventually dissolve. Remember, however, to catch any thoughts that justify the addictive behavior, sometimes with clever arguments, as they arise in your mind.

Ask yourself, ìWho is talking here?î And you will realize the addiction is talking. As long as you know that, as long as you are present as the observer of your mind, it is less likely to trick you into doing what it wants. Inner Body Awareness Another simple but highly effective way of finding space in your life is closely linked to the breath.

You will find that by feeling the subtle flow of air in and out of the body, as well as the rise and fall of your chest and abdomen, you are also becoming aware of the inner body. Your attention may then shift from the breath to that felt aliveness within you, diffused throughout the body. Most people are so distracted by their thoughts, so identified with the voices in their heads, they can no longer feel the aliveness within them.

To be unable to feel the life that animates the physical body, the very life that you are, is the greatest deprivation that can happen to you. You then begin to look not only for substitutes for that natural state of well-being within, but also for something to cover up the continuous unease that you feel when you are not in touch with the aliveness that is always there, but usually overlooked. Some of the substitutes people seek out are drug-induced highs, sensory overstimulation such as excessively loud music, thrills or dangerous activities, or an obsession with sex.

Even drama in relationships is used as a substitute for that genuine sense of aliveness. The most sought-after cover-up for the continuous background unease are intimate relationships. A man or a woman who is going to make me happy.

It is, of course, also one of the most frequently experienced of all the let-downs. And when the unease surfaces again, people will usually blame their partner for it. Take two or three conscious breaths.

Now see if you can detect a subtle sense of aliveness that pervades your entire inner body. Within, so to speak. Sense briefly specific parts of your body.

Feel your hands, then your arms, feet and legs. Can you feel your abdomen, chest, neck and head? What about your lips?

Is there life in them? Then become aware again of the inner body as a whole. You may want to close your eyes initially for this practice.

And once you can feel your body, open your eyes, look around and continue to feel your body at the same time. Some readers may find there is no need to close their eyes. They can in fact feel their inner body as they read this.

Inner and Outer Space Your inner body is not solid but spacious. It is not your physical form but the life that animates the physical form. It is the intelligence that created and sustains the body.

Simultaneously coordinating hundreds of different functions of such extraordinary complexity that the human mind can only understand a tiny fraction of it. When you become aware of it, what is really happening is that the intelligence is becoming aware of itself. It is the elusive life that no scientist has ever found because the consciousness that is looking for it is it.

Physicists have discovered that the apparent solidity of matter is an illusion created by our senses. This includes the physical body, which we perceive and think of as form, but 99.99% of which is actually empty space. This is how vast the space is between the atoms compared to their size, and there is as much space again within each atom.

The physical body is no more than a misperception of who you are. In many ways, it is a microcosmic version of outer space. To give you an idea of how vast the space is between celestial bodies, consider this.

Light traveling at a constant speed of 186,000 miles or 300,000 km per second takes just over one second to travel between the earth and the moon. Light from the sun takes about eight minutes to reach the earth. Light from our nearest neighbor in space, a star called Proxima Centauri, which is the sun that is closest to our own sun, travels for four and a half years before it reaches the earth.

This is how vast the space is that surrounds us. And then there's the intergalactic space, whose vastness defies all comprehension. Light from the galaxy closest to our own, the Andromeda galaxy, takes 2.4 million years to reach us. Isn't it amazing that your body is just as spacious as the universe? So your physical body, which is form, reveals itself as essentially formless when you go deeper into it. It becomes a doorway into inner space.

Although inner space has no form, it is intensely alive. That empty space is life in its fullness, the unmanifested source out of which all manifestation flows. The traditional word for that source is God.

Thoughts and words belong to the world of form. They cannot express the formless. So when you say, I can feel my inner body, that is a misperception created by thought.

What is really happening is that the consciousness that appears as the body, the consciousness that I am, is becoming conscious of itself. When I no longer confuse who I am with the temporary form of me, then the dimension of the limitless and the eternal, God, can express itself through me and guide me. It also frees me from dependency on form.

However, a purely intellectual recognition or belief that I am not this form does not help.

The all-important question is, at this moment, can I sense the presence of inner space, which really means, can I sense my own presence, or rather, the presence that I am? Or we can approach this truth using a different pointer.

Ask yourself, am I aware not only of what is happening at this moment, but also of the now itself, as the living, timeless inner space in which everything happens? Although this question seems to have nothing to do with the inner body, you may be surprised that by becoming aware of the space of now, you suddenly feel more alive inside. You are feeling the aliveness of the inner body, the aliveness that is an intrinsic part of the joy of being.

We have to enter the body to go beyond it and find out that we are not that. As much as possible in everyday life, use awareness of the inner body to create space. When waiting, when listening to someone, when pausing to look at the sky, a tree, a flower, your partner or child, feel the aliveness within at the same time.

This means part of your attention or consciousness remains formless, and the rest is available for the outer world to form. Whenever you inhabit your body in this way, it serves as an anchor for staying present in the now. It prevents you from losing yourself in thinking, in emotions or in external situations.

Perceive and experience, consciousness is born into form. It is reincarnating, into a thought, a feeling, a sense perception, an experience. The cycle of rebirth that Buddhists hope to get out of eventually is happening continuously, and it is only at this moment, through the power of now, that you can get out of it.

Through complete acceptance of the form of the now, you become internally aligned with space, which is the essence of now. Through acceptance, you become spacious inside. Aligned with space instead of form.

That brings true perspective and balance into your life. Noticing the gaps. Throughout the day there is a continuously changing succession of things that you see and hear.

In the first moment of seeing something or hearing a sound, and more so if it is unfamiliar, before the mind names or interprets what you see or hear, there is usually a gap of alert attention in which the perception occurs. That is the inner space. Its duration differs from person to person.

It is easy to miss because in many people those spaces are extremely short, perhaps only a second or less. This is what happens. A new sight or sound arises, and in the first moment of perception there is a brief cessation in the habitual stream of thinking.

Consciousness is diverted away from thought because it is required for sense perception. A very unusual sight or sound may leave you speechless, even inside, that is to say, bring about a longer gap. The frequency and duration of those spaces determine your ability to enjoy life, to feel an inner connectedness with other human beings as well as nature.

It also determines the degree to which you are free of ego, because ego implies complete unawareness of the dimension of space. When you become conscious of these brief spaces as they happen naturally, they will lengthen, and as they do, you will experience with increasing frequency the joy of perceiving with little or no interference of thinking. The world around you then feels fresh, new and alive.

The more you perceive life through a mental screen of abstraction and conceptualization, the more lifeless and flat the world around you becomes. Lose yourself to find yourself. Inner space also arises whenever you let go of the need to emphasize your form identity.

That need is of the ego. It is not a true need. We have already touched briefly upon this.

Whenever you relinquish one of these behavior patterns, inner space emerges. You become more truly yourself. To the ego it will seem as if you were losing yourself, but the opposite is the case.

Jesus already taught that you need to lose yourself to find yourself. Whenever you let go of one of these patterns, you de-emphasize who you are on the level of form, and who you are beyond form emerges more fully. You become less, so you can be more.

Here are some ways in which people unconsciously try to emphasize their form identity. If you are alert enough, you may be able to detect some of these unconscious patterns within yourself. Demanding recognition for something you did and getting angry or upset if you don't get it.

Trying to get attention by talking about your problems, the story of your illnesses, or making a scene. Giving your opinion when nobody has asked for it and it makes no difference to the situation. Being more concerned with how the other person sees you than with the other person, which is to say, using other people for egoic reflection or as ego enhancers.

Trying to make an impression on others through possessions, knowledge, good looks, status, physical strength, and so on. Bringing about temporary ego inflation through angry reaction against something or someone. Taking things personally.

Feeling offended. Making yourself right and others wrong through futile mental or verbal complaining. Wanting to be seen or to appear important.

Once you have detected such a pattern within yourself, I suggest that you conduct an experiment. Find out what it feels like and what happens if you let go of that pattern. Just drop it and see what happens.

De-emphasizing who you are on the level of form is another way of generating consciousness. Discover the enormous power that flows through you into the world when you stop emphasizing your form identity. Stillness It has been said, stillness is the language God speaks, and everything else is a bad translation.

Stillness is really another word for space. Becoming conscious of stillness whenever we encounter it in our lives will connect us with the formless and timeless dimension within ourselves, that which is beyond thought, beyond ego. It may be the stillness that pervades the world of nature, or the stillness in your room in the early hours of the morning, or the silent gaps in between sounds.

Stillness has no form. That is why through thinking we cannot become aware of it. Thought is form.

Being aware of stillness means to be still. To be still is to be conscious without thought. You are never more essentially, more deeply yourself than when you are still.

When you are still, you are who you were before you temporarily assumed this physical and mental form called a person. You are also who you will be when the form dissolves. When you are still, you are who you are before beyond your temporal existence.

Consciousness. Unconditioned. Formless.

Eternal.

[Speaker 2] (1:05:04 - 1:05:32)

I feel that way and I'd like to again thank all of the students from around the world who are watching who are willing to awaken to the deeper meaning of your lives. Last week one of the things that Eckhart said that really struck me, you said that the opposite of death is not life. The opposite of death is birth.

Life has no opposite. So I think that's a good place to begin our moment of silence. Can we go into silence?

Life has no opposite.

[Speaker 1] (1:05:32 - 1:05:54)

Life has no opposite and perhaps as we go into the silence to feel yourself to be life rather than a person. A person is here only for a few years, but you are basically life experiencing itself temporarily as this person.

[Speaker 2] (1:05:54 - 1:05:56)

As this person, this personality, this ego.

[Speaker 1] (1:05:56 - 1:06:27)

But underlying it, you are life that is eternal. And so when you go into stillness, it's easy to sense that underneath the personality there is an aliveness, there is a presence, there is a consciousness that is timeless. And that's the life beyond the form of life that you are.

And that's why it has no opposite. That's right. Because it's forever.

Yes. And all the opposites only exist in the world of form.

[Speaker 2] (1:06:27 - 1:06:28)

In the world of form. I get that.

[Speaker 1] (1:06:29 - 1:06:42)

So as we go into the silence, into the stillness, let's see if we can just feel that in the background you are life. Or rather to say, I am life.

[Speaker 2] (1:06:43 - 1:06:43)

I am life.

[Speaker 1] (1:06:45 - 1:06:57)

Eternal, timeless. So we go into the stillness now and get in touch with that eternal life.

[Speaker 2] (1:07:37 - 1:07:45)

How wonderful. How wonderful to be able to get into touch with that. That's the inner space that you're talking about in Chapter 8.

[Speaker 1] (1:07:45 - 1:07:46)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:07:46 - 1:07:56)

Which is all about the discovery of inner space. That's what we're discussing tonight. Let's start with an overview of what this chapter is about.

What is inner space? What you just described?

[Speaker 1] (1:07:58 - 1:09:08)

I don't remember when this term first came to me. It must have been during a talk. I don't believe I used that term in The Power of Now.

I realized that most people's mind is full of stuff. Full of one thought after another. Full of continuously arising thoughts, emotions.

And their external life is full of things that need doing. One thing after another. One thing after another.

So I observed that in many people's lives there seems to be no space. There's only one thing after another. One thought after another.

One thing to do after another. One thing to be worried about after another. So I noticed this absence of space in human beings.

And really that inner space or spaciousness is what we could also call the stillness. But I use different terms because any one term limits it. When we talk about stillness, yes it is stillness, but it's much vaster than just stillness.

[Speaker 2] (1:09:08 - 1:09:10)

And vaster than being still.

[Speaker 1] (1:09:10 - 1:10:52)

Yes. So it's realizing that within you there's not only objects in your consciousness that continuously arise in your consciousness as sense perceptions. You experience things.

Sense perceptions arise continuously and each sense perception becomes an object in your consciousness. And then thoughts arise continuously and every thought becomes also an object that arises in your consciousness. Now, and this is what most people's lives consist of.

Continuously objects arising in consciousness. And I call that object consciousness. And that is what most people know.

And they also know themselves as an object in their consciousness. They have an image of who they are. They have certain opinions about who they are.

And so you become an object to yourself and that is the ego. So most, a mental object. You make yourself into a mental object.

And then you have a relationship with yourself as a mental object. It's a little bit insane, but it's normal. So now the incredible realization, this is where the spiritual dimension starts.

There is no spiritual dimension in object consciousness. You can have all kinds of interesting sounding or even religious sounding doctrines. If there is no space in you, spaciousness, where suddenly a gap arises in between thoughts.

If there's no spaciousness, then you haven't touched yet the spiritual dimension. And this book, I believe, is helping many people to find that space within.

[Speaker 2] (1:10:52 - 1:11:30)

You say on page 227, object consciousness needs to be balanced by space consciousness for sanity to return to our planet and for humanity to fulfill its destiny. The arising of space consciousness is the next stage in the evolution of humanity. Space consciousness means that in addition to being conscious of things, which always comes down to sense perceptions, thoughts and emotions, there is an undercurrent of awareness.

Awareness implies that you are not only conscious of things, but you're also conscious of being conscious. That's what you're talking about.

[Speaker 1] (1:11:30 - 1:12:14)

Yes. And that's an amazing thing. At first, if you just listen to being conscious of being conscious, the mind says, what does that mean?

You can only, you have to experience what that is to know what it means. So to be conscious of being conscious, for example, you can do it by looking at something, just if people haven't had a taste of this yet. For example, you look at a flower and you're conscious of the image, what you see, the sense perception.

Now, the question is, can you also be conscious of yourself as the perceiving presence, without which there would be no perception?

[Speaker 2] (1:12:15 - 1:12:15)

Correct.

[Speaker 1] (1:12:15 - 1:13:01)

And so, and that is the consciousness. So while you look at a flower, I'm saying flower because natural things can get you in touch with that dimension more easily. While you look at a flower, can you sense yourself as the presence that is looking, that is making the perception possible?

And then you have two dimensions. You're conscious of being conscious and you're conscious of what you're looking at. You live in two worlds at the same time.

And that brings in, that means in the background of your life, there is suddenly a vast, but intensely alive peace. Because being conscious of being conscious is very peaceful. That's where the true inner peace arises.

[Speaker 2] (1:13:02 - 1:13:13)

And that if you don't have that in your life, if you're not able to find that space between the thinking and the perception, perception, perception, you're not, then...

[Speaker 1] (1:13:13 - 1:13:24)

Then you lose yourself... In things. In things, you lose yourself in the world...

Yeah. And you lose yourself in your own mind. You continuously get drawn into every thought that arises.

[Speaker 2] (1:13:24 - 1:13:28)

Yeah. Well, one of the things, I know you met Dr. Jill Boat Taylor today.

[Speaker 11] (1:13:28 - 1:13:28)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:13:28 - 1:14:22)

And I interviewed her on my radio show, The Soul Series on XM Radio. And for those of you who have been enjoying our webcast with Eckhart Tolle, the Monday following our final webcast, I will have an interview with her on the web. Dr. Jill Boat Taylor is a brain scientist who had had a stroke several years ago. And during the process of having the stroke, in the middle of having the stroke, she lost her left, the left hemisphere of the brain, which was language and the ego and all of that. But the right hemisphere remained conscious and she was aware that she had lost the ego. And this sense of losing your mind that you have been talking to us about happened to her, was thrust upon her through the stroke.

[Speaker 1] (1:14:22 - 1:14:22)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:14:22 - 1:14:22)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (1:14:23 - 1:14:28)

So, I believe what happened to her was what we are talking about. She became conscious of consciousness itself.

[Speaker 2] (1:14:28 - 1:14:30)

She became conscious of consciousness.

[Speaker 1] (1:14:30 - 1:14:30)

Yeah.

[Speaker 2] (1:14:30 - 1:14:31)

Through the stroke.

[Speaker 1] (1:14:31 - 1:14:58)

Yes. And really, when we say that, when we express it in language, and language always brings in a kind of duality. When I say, I become conscious of consciousness, it sounds as if I were separate from consciousness.

Right. This is because of the structure of language. In reality, what's happening is that consciousness, which is what I am, everyone is conscious in essence, consciousness is becoming conscious of itself.

[Speaker 2] (1:14:58 - 1:15:15)

And you don't know that until, and that's why that tape is going around the web of Dr. Jill Bowe Taylor, you don't know that until you can quiet the mind enough to know that you are not all of these thoughts that you have in your head, you are not your thoughts, but you are life itself.

[Speaker 11] (1:15:15 - 1:15:15)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:15:15 - 1:15:20)

That is what she also says in her book and in her lectures.

[Speaker 1] (1:15:20 - 1:15:20)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:15:21 - 1:15:21)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (1:15:21 - 1:15:57)

That's a wonderful realization, just when it comes to you, a person for the first time, it's just, whoa. Whoa. And that frees you from a lot of things that before were so heavy, the world can become such a burden to people, and your own mind can become such a burden, it creates so much suffering in people's lives.

If people had to live with somebody who inflicts all that negativity on them that they inflict on themselves through their own mind, they would have left that person a long time ago, but you can't leave your mind, you can only go beyond it.

[Speaker 2] (1:15:57 - 1:16:10)

And so being able to be conscious of your consciousness or aware of yourself as a perceiving entity or perceiving presence is really what the true awakening is about.

[Speaker 1] (1:16:10 - 1:16:10)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:16:10 - 1:16:11)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (1:16:11 - 1:16:16)

Yes. Yes. That's the awakening to who you are beyond the external appearance.

[Speaker 2] (1:16:16 - 1:16:29)

And that is what we're doing when we're angry and you see your ego flare up and all of that is to be able to step back and perceive yourself as the consciousness observing yourself as the angry person.

[Speaker 1] (1:16:30 - 1:16:30)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:16:30 - 1:16:30)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (1:16:31 - 1:16:32)

Yes. There's a, in the background.

[Speaker 2] (1:16:33 - 1:16:33)

A space in between that.

[Speaker 1] (1:16:33 - 1:16:34)

That's right.

[Speaker 2] (1:16:34 - 1:16:45)

And so the inner space you're talking about is the space between I am angry, I'm, you know, saying all of these things, and then there is a, there is the other self that is observing that.

[Speaker 1] (1:16:45 - 1:17:01)

Yes. Yes. Now, if you're angry and if the presence can be there in the background, that means there's already, you're already very present because it's not easy to remain present when there's anger, because anger has an enormous power.

So...

[Speaker 2] (1:17:01 - 1:17:08)

But if you're observing it, then you can say, I'm out of control. You know, people have done that, you can say to yourself, I'm out of control, I need to calm down.

[Speaker 1] (1:17:08 - 1:17:12)

Yes. Yes. But if you know that you're out of control, you're not completely out of control.

That's right. That's right.

[Speaker 1] (1:17:13 - 1:17:22)

That's right. So, and if, so if you know that you are, have been taken over by anger, you haven't been completely taken over because there's a knowing in the background.

[Speaker 2] (1:17:22 - 1:17:41)

Yeah. And I think a lot of parents have experienced this. You know, when your kids do something and it's so upsetting to you and you know in that moment I should not try to discipline them because I'm too angry to discipline them.

That part of you that knows that you're too angry to discipline them is the space that you're talking about.

Yes. Yes. Yes.

Yes. Got that. And so, and that's a, if you don't have that space, then you are completely controlled by the anger.

You become the anger. That's right. That's right.

[Speaker 2] (1:17:51 - 1:18:01)

That thing that allows you to step back is what you're talking about. I got it. I got it.

I got it. I got it. That part of you that says, I can step back and see I'm acting a fool.

[Speaker 1] (1:18:01 - 1:18:15)

Yes. And so if you, if you know that you are acting a fool, then it's not, there is a sanity there that's observing the insanity. And if you know that you are...

[Speaker 2] (1:18:15 - 1:18:18)

But sometimes people know they're acting a fool and they just keep on acting a fool.

[Speaker 1] (1:18:18 - 1:18:24)

Yes. That's possible too. For a while it can happen that the old, certain old behavior patterns...

[Speaker 2] (1:18:24 - 1:18:26)

But generally if you know you can pull yourself back.

[Speaker 1] (1:18:26 - 1:18:27)

Yes. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:18:28 - 1:18:31)

And that which knows is the inner space that you're talking about.

[Speaker 1] (1:18:32 - 1:19:02)

Yes. There was a film, A Beautiful Mind some years ago about this scientist. With Russell Crowe.

Yes. And so here he became delusional, this scientist, completely absorbed by his mind and had all kinds of delusions. And at some point in the middle of the film, he suddenly realizes that these are delusions and he realized that he's insane.

And also the viewer at that moment realized it is so well done because until that point even the viewer doesn't know that.

[Speaker 2] (1:19:02 - 1:19:03)

Not quite sure. Yes.

[Speaker 1] (1:19:03 - 1:19:16)

And at that moment the healing begins because with the realization that I am insane, sanity has arisen. The observing presence is there. The observing presence.

And after that he could function again.

[Speaker 2] (1:19:16 - 1:19:18)

Is observing presence and inner space the same thing?

[Speaker 1] (1:19:19 - 1:19:22)

Yes. But observing should not be confused with judging.

[Speaker 2] (1:19:22 - 1:19:23)

I got it.

So there's no judgment. It's a clear... It's like a mirror.

It's like a mirror showing you what's there.

[Speaker 2] (1:19:30 - 1:19:42)

So there are literally two dimensions. There is the personality acting out of, you know, form and perceptions and all of that. And then there is the observer of that.

[Speaker 1] (1:19:43 - 1:20:08)

And the observer is not judging what is being observed. If the observer begins to judge, then it's the mind that has come back in. It just is.

And the observer is timeless and whatever the observer is observing, the behavior, the thinking is conditioned by the past. So you're bringing the timeless dimension into this world of time.

[Speaker 2] (1:20:08 - 1:20:31)

Yes. And those of you who are reading Dr. Jill Boat Taylor's book, Stroke of Insight, what she said to me today, because she's been following our classes, and she was saying, you know, what Eckhart calls consciousness, I call right brain. Yes.

Yeah. Right brain versus left brain. Left brain is gone.

The right brain is the higher consciousness.

[Speaker 11] (1:20:32 - 1:20:32)

Yes. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:20:33 - 1:21:01)

So, as I've said before, I love the message boards on Oprah.com, and I saw a posting that I wanted to share with everyone. It's from someone who calls himself Student 99. It said, I've seen many, many posts by concerned Christians.

Is Student 99 here? I thought we had him. I heard he was on Skype.

Well, I don't mean here, here, Dean. I know he's not in the building. Bring up Student 99.

So, Student 99, is that you?

[Speaker 7] (1:21:02 - 1:21:02)

Yeah.

[Speaker 2] (1:21:02 - 1:21:47)

Hi, I'm Skye. I love this email. I love the fact that you have a face and a body and everything, because you just were an entity on the web to me, posted by Student 99 that says, I have seen many posts by concerned Christians wondering whether this book is a threat to their faith.

And you said, as a Christian, you don't think it is, and here is why. You want to tell us why? Because I thought this was such a beautiful email.

And you know, I've gotten some flack from some Christians. I've even been called the Antichrist, which I've been kind of amused by that, for introducing this book to the world. So I was interested in hearing what you had to say, Student 99, whose name is really Alan from Eugene, Oregon.

Hi, Alan.

Hi, Oprah. Hi, Eckhart. Hello.

Hi.

[Speaker 2] (1:21:51 - 1:21:57)

You said... Well, you know... Go ahead.

Go ahead. Okay. You go ahead.

So I'm going to let you tell me what you said in the email.

[Speaker 7] (1:21:58 - 1:22:39)

Well, basically, you know, I observed some people that were posting that were in a lot of distress, and because they felt that the book was an attack on their faith, many of them had not read the book. And so I wanted to just provide a little bit of perspective on that. From my perspective, I felt like Eckhart's book allowed me to do more than just quote what Jesus said, and to actually understand the depth of what he was teaching and be able to practice what he taught, rather than just quote what he taught.

[Speaker 2] (1:22:39 - 1:24:01)

Well, let me read what you said specifically, because I thought you said it so beautifully here. Most Christians understand the concepts from the Bible of surrendering their lives to God and living a loving life and living in the peace that passes understanding. Christians can quote Jesus' saying such as, be perfect as your Father in heaven is perfect, or judge not that you be not judged, or you must die to live, or deny yourself, take up your cross and follow me.

Unfortunately, not all Christians have succeeded in following up the talk with the walk. This is because these quotes point to an internal transformation, which some Christians have not yet fully experienced. That is why I strongly recommend this book, you said, Alan.

It provides for very powerful tools for being able to successfully follow Jesus' teachings, rather than just quoting them. The book doesn't ask anyone to change their religion of choice, but does help tremendously in successfully applying faith. In a nutshell, you say, Alan, the book shows how to apply forgiveness to every person and every situation.

It shows how to shine the light of awareness on our unconscious hatred of this moment and thereby overcome the cares of this world. If you want to go deeper than knowing about God at the level of thoughts and experience God at the level of knowing, I welcome you to join us in reading A New Earth, Blessings from Student99. Isn't that well said, Eckhart?

[Speaker 1] (1:24:01 - 1:24:04)

Oh, yes. Wonderful. Yeah.

Yeah. Thank you.

[Speaker 7] (1:24:05 - 1:24:21)

Alan, thank you for that. Sure. And, you know, I had left the church and I ended up being able to return to church because of understanding how to apply the concepts in this book.

[Speaker 2] (1:24:22 - 1:24:41)

Well, that's good. Well, thank you so much. Thank you so much.

I don't read all the negative stuff, though, because it doesn't help me. So I'm only, you know, I'm only interested in speaking to people who want to hear what we have to say. And if you don't agree with what I'm saying, that's really OK.

I bless everybody and their path, whatever that is. Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (1:24:42 - 1:25:09)

And I've had letters from some priests and nuns and Buddhist monks, and they all found the book very helpful. They went more deeply into their own tradition, because when you go deep enough into your own tradition, eventually all traditions, eventually you end up in the same place, the same realization. On the surface, the traditions are different.

There's only one God at the center.

[Speaker 2] (1:25:10 - 1:25:20)

There is only one God. I believe that. The source of all things, all creation.

So Peter is Skyping us from his dining room in Phoenix, Arizona. I love to see where people are. Is that a green dining?

Is that green?

[Speaker 4] (1:25:21 - 1:25:22)

Yes, it is.

[Speaker 2] (1:25:22 - 1:25:38)

That's my favorite color. My gosh, that's such a lovely color. Peter is Skyping us from his dining room in Phoenix, where he and a group of friends gather every Monday night to watch our live webcasts.

I think that's so great. I hear you adopted a dog and named it Oprah. Is that true?

[Speaker 4] (1:25:39 - 1:25:51)

Come on, Oprah. Come on. Let me see her.

She came to us the first night of the webcast. The system went down, so it crashed. We had all the people gathered, and she came into my life that night.

[Speaker 2] (1:25:52 - 1:25:59)

Wow. Oh, my cutie pie. She's holding up her name.

[Speaker 4] (1:25:59 - 1:26:00)

So she's a new addition to my family.

[Speaker 2] (1:26:00 - 1:26:11)

That's so great. That's really great. You say you were addicted to smoking for 30 years but quit 11 weeks ago after reading A New Earth.

This ties into your question, correct?

[Speaker 4] (1:26:12 - 1:26:32)

Exactly. We started our group four weeks before the actual webcast, and we were reading the chapter on number eight. So I applied the techniques to quitting smoking.

And with about five minutes work and about three hours time, I completely stopped. No urges, no more cravings, nothing. No willpower or anything like that.

It was so easy. It was amazing.

[Speaker 2] (1:26:32 - 1:26:34)

What is it that you applied?

[Speaker 4] (1:26:35 - 1:27:05)

Becoming conscious of the feelings. I had run out of cigarettes, and I thought I had to go to the store. But when the craving came, I said, OK, let's be with the craving.

Let's feel it. What does it actually feel like? Usually, we just react.

And I actually sat there and closed my eyes and felt it. And it started to dissolve. And it went away.

And about two or three hours later, another craving came. And I did the same thing. And this time, the feeling went away even faster.

And then finally, when it came back about a third time, when I put my mind to it, it just completely disappeared.

[Speaker 2] (1:27:06 - 1:27:06)

Wow.

[Speaker 4] (1:27:06 - 1:27:07)

Gone. It never came back.

[Speaker 2] (1:27:08 - 1:27:24)

So were you also doing, I think Eckhart suggests in the addiction section, taking deep breaths sometimes when you feel like you need the craving for whether it's cigarettes or food or whatever, to take the three deep breaths and see what happens if the feeling dissipates? Did you do that?

[Speaker 4] (1:27:25 - 1:27:55)

Yes, I did. I took the breaths to basically create stillness, to become calm. So I took long, deep breaths and just sort of calmed down and then just started to feel the feelings and watch the thoughts.

And I've tried to quit hundreds of times and sometimes a couple of months successfully. But there was always willpower involved. There's always a craving still there.

There's always a, you know, if I just had one that was always still in the back of my mind, that's no longer there. I can go out with my friends on a Friday night. They can all be smoking.

And I don't even want to look at one.

[Speaker 2] (1:27:55 - 1:27:57)

What in the world happened to you?

[Speaker 4] (1:27:58 - 1:27:59)

It was miraculous.

[Speaker 2] (1:27:59 - 1:28:21)

Yes, that's great. And have you been able to apply the teachings from the book in other areas of your life? I mean, for myself, I've just found that being able to go back to my breath in the middle of the day when things get crazier, I mean, something Eckhart said, I think, on one of the beginning classes about one complete full breath is a meditation.

[Speaker 4] (1:28:23 - 1:28:25)

Well, that's where the question comes in. Because I do have other issues.

[Speaker 2] (1:28:25 - 1:28:27)

One conscious breath is a meditation.

[Speaker 4] (1:28:27 - 1:28:31)

Earlier in the book, in the chapter, he talks about going below thought.

[Speaker 2] (1:28:31 - 1:28:31)

Yes.

[Speaker 4] (1:28:31 - 1:28:59)

And he described my situation exactly like he's here. You talk about alcohol, using food and TV just to go below thoughts, sort of to numb the senses, numb your thoughts, and just sort of go into trance, if you will. And I do that a lot.

And I've been trying to break away from that by using the techniques. And I have not had the same success. And you also say, don't make it a problem.

But I think I've made it a problem. And I want to kind of break from that.

[Speaker 2] (1:29:01 - 1:29:09)

So you're asking a question about how to use this more forcefully or whatever for alcohol?

[Speaker 4] (1:29:10 - 1:29:22)

Yeah, with alcohol especially and food. I tend to overeat when I'm tired. And I just want to relax.

And food, alcohol, TV tend to be the things I use. And that brings you below thought when we're trying to be above thought.

[Speaker 2] (1:29:22 - 1:29:23)

Right.

[Speaker 4] (1:29:23 - 1:29:27)

And when I try and do that, I'm not as successful. I get very frustrated.

[Speaker 2] (1:29:27 - 1:29:29)

OK, what do you want to say, Eckhart?

[Speaker 1] (1:29:29 - 1:30:50)

Well, it's a wonderful success story as far as the smoking is concerned and bringing, experiencing how awareness can dissolve old patterns. In some cases, instantly. And in other cases, it takes more time for awareness to dissolve the old pattern.

And awareness has to be brought to the pattern when it arises repeatedly. And it does not mean that every time awareness meets the pattern that awareness is going to win. Win may not be the right word.

Because awareness, of course, is never fighting anything. Awareness is just there as the conscious presence. So bringing conscious presence, for example, into the urge to have a drink.

Not that one or two drinks are a problem. But if drinking drags you down to below thinking, then, of course, it is helpful to bring presence into the urge when it arises in the same way that you did when you felt the urge come upon you to smoke. So have you practiced that?

Have you been able to feel the urge to drink and then bring awareness to that? And what happened?

[Speaker 4] (1:30:51 - 1:30:56)

Yes, I have. And it kind of postpones. And eventually, I kind of break down.

[Speaker 1] (1:30:57 - 1:32:04)

Yes, I believe I mentioned in the book that bring awareness to it. And it may well happen that the desire, the urge is still there after 10 minutes of awareness. I believe I mentioned that.

It does not mean that you have lost. It means that the desire is very strong. And at that point, perhaps you will have a drink.

And when it happens again, you bring awareness to it again. Eventually, something will happen to the pattern. It's very rare to have instant success as you did with smoking.

It does happen in some cases. But bring awareness to old patterns, whatever it is, addictive patterns, behavior patterns. Bring awareness.

And eventually, they cannot coexist for that long. So it's a continuing practice. But don't expect perfection.

Don't expect you to be the perfect human being who never touches a drink again or whatever. As I said to Oprah, I enjoy a drink occasionally.

[Speaker 2] (1:32:05 - 1:32:35)

And I said, woo-hoo. So what he's saying also, and you said this in the beginning, Peter, don't judge it. And as you begin to practice, what I hear you say is this miracle that you experienced with cigarettes is just that because it rarely happens that you start this one time and it works immediately.

What you're saying is the more you apply the practice of bringing consciousness to this desire or craving, to this craving, that it will gradually lessen.

[Speaker 1] (1:32:35 - 1:32:35)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:32:35 - 1:32:38)

It will lessen. It will weaken. It will weaken.

[Speaker 1] (1:32:38 - 1:33:00)

Yes. You can also apply it to other things like many people are addicted to television. One day without watching TV would be dreadful for them.

So you could perhaps, as a practice, like a spiritual practice, you could say one day a week, I'll see what happens if I don't watch television. Don't do it when the Oprah show is on.

[Speaker 2] (1:33:00 - 1:33:02)

Thank you. For that part.

[Speaker 1] (1:33:03 - 1:33:16)

One day a week, I'll practice. And then observe inside yourself what it feels like, what the need to switch on, the need to be entertained, the need to be stimulated, to absorb what's on the screen.

[Speaker 2] (1:33:18 - 1:33:21)

So one day practice. Thank you so much, Peter. Those are friends behind you?

[Speaker 4] (1:33:22 - 1:33:24)

Yes, they're my neighbors. Hi.

[Speaker 2] (1:33:25 - 1:33:46)

Peter, move out of the way so we can see them, so we can say hi to everybody. Hi, everybody. Hi, Oprah.

Hi, Peter. Hi to Peter's group. That's so great there in Phoenix.

Yay, guys. Thank you for watching. Thank you.

Thank you. Thanks, Peter. Thank you so much.

Thank you so much. And all the best to Oprah, you know.

[Speaker 1] (1:33:49 - 1:33:51)

Oprah's very cute. Oprah's very cute.

[Speaker 2] (1:33:51 - 1:33:59)

We're talking about the dog. Okay, we've got Eric on the line calling from Copenhagen, Denmark. Eric, what's your question?

[Speaker 8] (1:34:00 - 1:34:10)

Hi, Oprah. Hi, Eckhart. Hi.

Hi, my question is in reference to page 224, when Eckhart writes the phrase, these two shall pass.

Oh yeah, love that.

[Speaker 8] (1:34:12 - 1:34:54)

Yeah, and I feel it's a real powerful phrase that brings a person into the present moment. And it's also used as a slogan in 12-step recovery programs. And when someone's been living very much in the ego-informed surrenders and enters a 12-step program, which I did over five years ago, and I currently act as a sponsor for newcomers, am I acting too much in the ego because I'm constantly working these 12 steps and sharing them and your concepts with others?

And also, if this is the case, how can I live in consciousness and work at 12-step programs with the meetings and sponsorship without the ego being so much at the forefront? Correct.

Well, that's a good question. The criterion is whether you yourself are still living it on a daily basis. If you're living the truth of it, this two shall pass is only a pointer towards a particular state of consciousness that is a state of detachment.

Not that you don't care, but it's a state of you still care deeply, but there is a detachment from what's happening, an inner sense of freedom in the background. So when you use these tools, for example, a phrase or a pointer, sometimes people who teach these things professionally, after a while, they stop practicing themselves and they just use them as a formal thing, and then the ego can come back in.

[Speaker 2] (1:35:42 - 1:35:43)

Because you think you know everything.

[Speaker 1] (1:35:43 - 1:36:36)

Yes, yes. And then you are not living it, you're teaching it, but you're not yourself living it anymore. And that is the question that only you can answer, whether you are still living the reality that's beyond this pointer, that what the pointer points to.

And if you are living it, the ego has not taken over and you're doing wonderful and very helpful work. I know that the 12-step program has been extremely helpful for many people. I've had many people who've come to spirituality through that.

So I'm sure you're doing wonderful work and continue to be alert and awake so that there's a certain amount of self-observation just to make sure that you are still there yourself, that you come from that place so that the mind doesn't take over.

Okay, Eric.

[Speaker 8] (1:36:38 - 1:36:40)

Yeah, that sounds great. Thank you very much.

[Speaker 2] (1:36:40 - 1:37:28)

Thank you, Eric. So let's begin, because I think that's a huge part of chapter eight in the discovery of inner space. The story that you began with the ancient Sufi story from the Middle East about a king who's continuously torn between happiness and depression.

On page 223, you write, the slightest thing would cause him great upset or provoke an intense reaction, and his happiness would quickly turn into disappointment and despair. A time came when the king finally got tired of himself and of life, began to seek a way out. He sent for a wise man who lived in his kingdom, who was reputed to be enlightened.

And when the wise man came, the king said to him, I wanna be like you. Can you give me something that will bring balance, serenity, and wisdom into my life? I will pay any price you ask.

What is that price the king had to pay? What is the price all of us have to pay?

[Speaker 1] (1:37:29 - 1:37:55)

Well, first of all, of course, the price the king asked, well, how much does it cost? How much is it going to cost? And the wise man said to him, it is of such value that even your whole kingdom could not pay for it.

Now, what that means is that the primary thing in your life is nothing external. What is primary in your life is your inner state of consciousness.

I got that.

[Speaker 1] (1:37:56 - 1:38:10)

And compared to that, you could have the greatest riches if you are in a state of anxiety, of fear, negativity, nothing is worth that.

[Speaker 2] (1:38:10 - 1:38:18)

You know, in the Bible and in the church, I don't know if it's in the Bible, but I know in the church, we sing this song called, it is well with my soul.

[Speaker 1] (1:38:19 - 1:38:19)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:38:19 - 1:38:40)

So unless it is well with your soul, it does not matter what your outward state is. Where are you living? How big, how many square feet you have?

How many cars, whatever acclaim you have received in the world, unless it is well with your soul or your inner state of being. Yes. Your inner space, then you're not well.

Yes. And so that's the, always to bear that in mind. What is, am I at one with life at this moment?

What is my inner state at this moment? Your primary concern in any situation needs to be your inner state. Your secondary concern is the outer situation because only when you're in a state of rightness, of presence, can you adequately deal with outer situations.

So what is the price? There is no price in terms of monetary value, anything like that. We could say that the price to pay is you let go of the false self.

That is the price you pay. The false mind made self, the price to pay is identification with that false, the false I, the false me. And so that's a relatively easy price to pay because it's wonderful to let go of that.

[Speaker 2] (1:39:38 - 1:39:43)

But the wise man gives the king a ring. Yes. And inside the ring, the inscription is.

[Speaker 1] (1:39:44 - 1:40:05)

This too shall pass. This too shall pass. And he says, whatever situation arises in your life, before you call it good or bad, before you react, before you judge it, touch this ring and remember the inscription that you, and this too shall pass.

[Speaker 2] (1:40:05 - 1:40:40)

Now, I find that to be very helpful. As a matter of fact, when I was going through last year, this crisis at my school, that was one of the things I said to myself every day is, live in this moment, let's handle this moment as it comes and this moment as it comes, and then what comes next, I'll handle that moment. And I always knew this too shall pass.

Works for me very well. And I'm sure a lot of other people, if you're in a difficult stage in your life, you're going through, you know, trauma or divorce or whatever to know that this too shall pass. But when I'm feeling happy and feeling joyful, I don't wanna think this too shall pass.

That can actually also be very peaceful.

[Speaker 2] (1:40:44 - 1:40:51)

If you know that it is transient, I know that- No, but you're having such a good time and then you're thinking, this too shall pass, so don't get too happy.

[Speaker 1] (1:40:51 - 1:40:57)

If you don't know that this too shall pass, then what can happen? You will cling to the situation internally.

[Speaker 2] (1:40:57 - 1:40:57)

I got it.

[Speaker 1] (1:40:57 - 1:41:11)

I got that. And if you cling to the situation and then it passes as it will. As it will.

Or even if it doesn't pass yet, it might last for a little while, even while the clinging itself means already some fear is coming in.

Oh, I see that.

[Speaker 1] (1:41:12 - 1:41:24)

Through the holding on, you don't want this situation to leave you or you don't want to leave the situation. The clinging means brings already up some fear and that means you can't enjoy it as much really.

[Speaker 2] (1:41:24 - 1:41:53)

I just had a great epiphany, not even for myself, but for all the people that I know that our key word here is clinging. So many people do this in relationships. They're holding on to a relationship that has already shown itself to be transient.

It's moving on to the next level. And what so many people do, they want to hold on and let it be as it always was. And it's in the process of passing.

And you should let it pass.

Yes, allowing change to happen and becoming comfortable with change. This is part of this too shall pass because we live in this world where things continuously pass away. The Buddhists call it impermanence.

It's one of the deepest truths of the Buddha.

[Speaker 2] (1:42:12 - 1:42:20)

And the problem lies when you expect it to be the same as it always was. And that's where so many people get in trouble in their relationships especially.

[Speaker 1] (1:42:20 - 1:42:32)

Yes. And it's an inability to let go. Inability to let go of situations, of people.

And that eventually brings suffering.

[Speaker 2] (1:42:32 - 1:43:02)

Yeah, just recently a friend of mine was telling me about her husband had said to her, he wasn't sure he wanted to remain in the relationship. He wasn't sure. And there's, you know, seeking counseling about that.

And he's now, you know, sleeping in a different bedroom and all that stuff. And she's trying to hold on and wants things to be the way they were and wants to have a baby and all of that. And you would say, put that ring on.

[Speaker 1] (1:43:02 - 1:43:44)

Yes. So especially don't cling. If you don't cling, that means there's no fear in the situation.

The fear comes through the clinging, through not wanting the change. And so if you approach the situation without fear, then one of two things can happen in a situation like this. There may become a deepening in the relationship.

When a relationship hits a crisis, it may be time for the relationship to dissolve or it may be time for a deepening. And so- How do you know the difference? When there's no fear, then you will know either it will deepen or it will end.

Wow, or it will pass on. The fear keeps you stuck where you are.

[Speaker 2] (1:43:45 - 1:44:18)

Got it. I got it. So let's see some of the email questions you've been sending during our class.

Linda in Tokyo, Japan. How do I tell the difference between an ego decision or a conscious decision? I'm in a sexless marriage and want to leave.

Oh, I'm scared. I've been living in the moment for the past eight weeks. My answer is not coming to me.

That's what Linda wants to know. How do I tell the difference between an ego decision or a conscious decision? Yes.

I'm in a sexless marriage and I want to leave, but I'm scared. You just said it. You just said it.

[Speaker 1] (1:44:18 - 1:44:54)

Yes. And an additional thing here, sometimes something comes to you. This is what I'm going to do, your mind says.

Okay, now I know what I have to do. The question is, where does that realization of what you have to do come from? Does it come from the ego?

Or does it come from the deeper level of your being? How can I tell the difference? There's a qualitative difference, a difference in one could say vibrational frequency.

Correct. If it comes from the deeper level of yourself out of the stillness, it's always associated with peace.

[Speaker 11] (1:44:54 - 1:44:54)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (1:44:55 - 1:45:06)

It's a peaceful realization. If it's agitated or if it's fearful and says, now I know what I have to do, or if it's angry, agitated, fearful, it comes from the upper level.

And another thing I would say to Linda in Tokyo, Japan, you're absolutely correct. Another thing, it comes from, if it's coming from inner space that we're talking about in chapter eight, if it's coming from consciousness or inner space and not your ego, not only will you feel peace, but you won't have to ask 15 other people, is it the right thing? You will know it's the right thing.

You will know it's the right thing. And I have found that if you are operating from consciousness, your higher consciousness, or as we're calling it in this chapter, inner space, that whether it's buying a pair of shoes or making a life decision, if it comes from the place of inner space, you know the answer. When it's outside yourself, if it's in your ego mind, you have to ask the store clerk, you have to ask your friends, you have to ask everybody, what do you think?

What do you think? What do you think of these shoes? What do you think?

What do you think? But when you are, when it's well with your soul, the answer's clear. That's how you know.

[Speaker 1] (1:46:07 - 1:46:15)

Quiet, peaceful, certainty. Yes. Powerful, quiet, peaceful.

You know what you have to do. You know what's right for you.

[Speaker 2] (1:46:16 - 1:46:40)

It's like the other day I had to cancel an engagement and I was saying I never cancel things, but after I canceled, I felt such a calm. And I knew that that was the right decision. Yes.

Although it might be upsetting to other people, I felt such a calmness about it. And that is true for anybody who's making a decision. When you make the right decision, you feel a calmness and a peace about it.

[Speaker 1] (1:46:40 - 1:46:48)

Yes. And that also relationships, leaving a relationship, if it comes from the right place, you leave, but you're peaceful. Right.

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:46:49 - 1:46:50)

You're not afraid.

[Speaker 1] (1:46:50 - 1:46:50)

No.

[Speaker 2] (1:46:51 - 1:46:54)

You're not afraid. You still could be sad about it though. Yes.

[Speaker 1] (1:46:54 - 1:46:55)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:46:55 - 1:46:58)

Sadness can happen. You could be sad about it, disappointed about it.

[Speaker 1] (1:46:58 - 1:47:34)

Interesting thing about sadness is, or sadness, of course, also arises when somebody passes away close to you. There can be sadness. And if there's acceptance, then, because death is one of the prime examples of everything passing away.

Before life form passes away, everybody, if you live with a partner, either your partner will leave you or you will leave sooner or later through death. So that's the allowing change to happen.

[Speaker 2] (1:47:35 - 1:48:00)

Allowing change to happen. And you say the key to understanding this too will pass at the top of page 225 is knowing that non-resistance, not resisting, non-judgment and non-attachment are the three aspects of true freedom and enlightened living. Hard to be non-resistant, non-judgmental and non-attached when it's your husband who says, I don't longer want to be in this relationship.

[Speaker 1] (1:48:00 - 1:48:17)

Yes. Yes. And if you share a great deal of past with another person, it could also be a family member or a parent, then it's sometimes harder to be present when there's a huge amount of past in the relationship.

[Speaker 2] (1:48:17 - 1:48:33)

I got that. But once you see and accept the transience of all things, page 225, and the inevitability of change, you can enjoy the pleasures of the world while they last without fear of loss or anxiety about the future.

[Speaker 1] (1:48:33 - 1:48:33)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:48:33 - 1:48:35)

I thought that was so brilliant the way you did that.

[Speaker 1] (1:48:36 - 1:48:43)

That's the beautiful thing about being able to enjoy the things of this world, knowing that nothing is going to last.

[Speaker 2] (1:48:43 - 1:48:44)

Nothing's going to last.

[Speaker 1] (1:48:44 - 1:48:50)

And you can actually enjoy it more deeply now without the fear that it might finish. Because it is gonna finish. Yes, yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:48:51 - 1:48:51)

It is gonna finish.

[Speaker 1] (1:48:51 - 1:48:55)

And then something else will take its place. It's continuous coming and going.

[Speaker 2] (1:48:55 - 1:49:22)

I got that. Tonight we're Skyping again with a study group in Los Angeles who've gathered at the Bodhi Tree bookstore. It's a landmark in West Hollywood.

Hi, everybody at the Bodhi Tree. Hi. Oh, gosh.

There's our Bodhi followers. Nick has a question about finding his purpose. And I know it's something that's been on the minds of quite a few of our students.

Hello, Nick. Let's hear it. Hey, Oprah, what's up?

Hey. Everything's up.

[Speaker 3] (1:49:24 - 1:49:50)

My question is basically, well, you have to worry about a lot of stuff in life. You have to go to work. You have to pay your bill.

Your cell phone bill works in the now, but if you don't work today, it's not gonna work a month from today. So how do you live in the now and still worry about your IRAs, investing in your future, what you're gonna do as far as, you know, money, paying your bills, doing what you have to do, you know, in this ego-censored world, especially in Los Angeles. So.

So what you're saying is, what if, how is this becoming who we are truly, what if becoming who we were truly meant to be really isn't financially practical is what you're asking, right?

[Speaker 3] (1:50:04 - 1:50:33)

Yeah, what if I wanted to go on a mountain somewhere and just become who I was? I eventually would, I guess, starve or freeze, but I mean, you know, how do you integrate this in your everyday life? Sort of being in the now, being the essence of who you are, without suffering in the long run, without, you know, the squirrel would suffer, the squirrel would die if it didn't put away nuts for the future, so.

Okay, okay.

[Speaker 2] (1:50:33 - 1:50:43)

Yeah, I'd seen a question that you'd sent earlier, Nick, where you'd said, it's all fine and dandy to read about becoming who you truly are and being who you were meant to be, but how do we do that and still pay all of our bills?

[Speaker 3] (1:50:44 - 1:50:45)

Right, right.

[Speaker 2] (1:50:46 - 1:50:46)

Okay.

[Speaker 1] (1:50:46 - 1:51:51)

Okay, thank you, thank you, good question. However, the question, the first few words of your question already contained an error, and it's easy, if an error keeps into a question, then it's hard to answer it truly. The error was, you said we have to worry about paying our bills and all kinds of things.

Is that true? No, you have to pay your bills, but you don't have to worry about paying your bills. And the squirrel has to put away the nuts, but the squirrel is not worried about the nuts, only humans are worried about their nuts.

So, you can, being present with what you do does not mean that you neglect your daily affairs and so on, it means you deal with them in a different and in fact, more powerful and more effective way. You give up the worrying part, you still pay your bills, but you let go of the worrying about paying your bills. In that way, you learn from the squirrel how to live.

[Speaker 2] (1:51:51 - 1:51:54)

Because worrying is your choice, you see that, don't you, Nick?

Worrying is your choice. At times when I don't worry, I've had moments in my life where I didn't worry, I just kind of let the waves of the world roll over me, and I kind of did nothing about situations and hoped that they would work out themselves, and they didn't. I mean, worrying did help me in the past to actually get things together and get my life on track.

I guess to be, for me in my life, to be in the essence, to be with my spiritual self, it doesn't, it's not enough. I have to really be actively worried about the actual day-to-day business of surviving. Which most people have to do, you know.

[Speaker 1] (1:52:30 - 1:54:00)

I would still argue with that. It is true that you need to take action. It is not true that you need to worry in order to be able to take action.

So you can actually experiment with, in your daily life, start with little situations. Let's say there's a pile of bills that you have to pay. How do you approach these bills?

Are you going to worry the night before, or on the day, or am I going to be able to pay you? You just take one bill after another, you look at it, you face it. Okay, do I have the money in my bank account or not?

If you don't have the money in my bank account, I have to do something to make more money. What is it possible, what can I do now? Put that aside, look, this action I can take.

Pick up the phone, make a phone call. Do the present, effective, powerful, but no worry. If you, then you will see your whole life will become not only more effective and more powerful, but also much easier.

It flows with greater ease. Nothing in nature is worried. All the animals do what they have to do, but they don't worry about it.

Everything is active in nature. The trees are active, the grass, the flowers, everything is active and putting out energy. It's only the humans that worry about it and think they need worry in order to survive in this world.

You don't need worry, you need action, but not worry.

[Speaker 2] (1:54:00 - 1:54:12)

That's an interesting point. If you've ever been on safari or seen animals on a hunt or actually seen a kill, they go out in search of, and we've, I've, everybody I'm sure watched the planet, or you watched the Planet Earth series, right, Nick? Where you see the animals.

[Speaker 3] (1:54:12 - 1:54:19)

No. Oh, Nick, you got it. You know what?

What he was saying, I'm sorry. Nick, you gotta get the Planet Earth.

[Speaker 2] (1:54:20 - 1:54:34)

And you get to see all these animals hunting other animals. And I just, you just made me think of what you were saying. As the animals hunting the other animal, it's just doing it.

It's not worrying. I hope I find a rabbit today. I hope I find a rabbit today.

Yeah.

[Speaker 11] (1:54:34 - 1:54:34)

Yeah.

[Speaker 2] (1:54:35 - 1:54:38)

Go ahead, Nick, go ahead. You want to continue? Yeah.

[Speaker 3] (1:54:38 - 1:54:52)

That reminds me of the lily in the valley. It doesn't worry about clothing itself in the Bible. It just does.

It just exists. It worries not, or the sparrow or the crow does not worry how it's gonna get its next meal. It just, it just does.

[Speaker 1] (1:54:52 - 1:54:52)

Yes.

[Speaker 3] (1:54:52 - 1:55:01)

And that reminds me of that right there. Yes. But I'm thinking, I guess I'm thinking of those hippies in India that still haven't come back.

They're just, they're just broken.

[Speaker 2] (1:55:02 - 1:55:30)

Yeah, yeah. Nick is saying, Nick is saying, well, that's really good for that Bible stuff and for the lilies of the valley. But listen, I'm living in L.A. and I gotta worry about this. Is there anybody else there at the Bodhi tree behind you that, is there anybody that disagrees with Nick that has, you know, similar issues and you're not worried about it? You've been able to apply. Come up to the microphone here.

Let's get, hey, come on up there. Hi.

[Speaker 10] (1:55:31 - 1:55:32)

Hi.

[Speaker 2] (1:55:32 - 1:55:33)

Hi, you are. Hi, who are you?

[Speaker 10] (1:55:34 - 1:55:34)

I'm Jessica.

[Speaker 2] (1:55:34 - 1:55:38)

Oh, hi, Jessica. Hi. So what do you want to say about what we've been talking about?

[Speaker 10] (1:55:39 - 1:56:09)

You know, there's a, it's on page 238 and it's about becoming one with the situation and that the solution arises out of that. And I've always kind of been a more of a take action person first and then deal with the inner peace and all that later. But I was wondering, how do you deal with things like that in relationships and things like weight management and all of those issues?

Do you just become still and just hope for an answer to come or do you still actively seek one out?

[Speaker 1] (1:56:10 - 1:58:28)

So what you're referring to is on this page, it says you don't react. What I'm saying there is you don't react against a situation when a situation arises that- You merge with it. Yes.

And the solution rises out of the situation. Now this should not be confused with becoming inactive or just sitting there and looking and not doing anything. What it means is there's no inner resistance to that arising situation.

Sometimes things happen when you have a project, you have some work to do, and something happens to, some obstacle arises in what you want to do. A person, a situation arises. And so for many people, as soon as an obstacle arises, they become resistant and they go into a negative state and try to fight the obstacle.

They're fighting the obstacle rather than accepting the moment as it is internally and say, oh, the situation has changed. We talked about change. Situations change continuously and the world does not necessarily do what it wants you to do, what you want it to do.

So you face a situation and any change that happens is immediately accepted inside. And through the acceptance, you respond to the situation. So you're not accusing, you're not making wrong, you're not complaining about the situation to yourself and others.

So many people burn up a huge amount of energy uselessly that they could use to deal with the situation, but they burn up a huge amount of energy complaining in their heads and to others about what has happened. Instead of looking at what has happened and saying, oh, this is how it is, what can I do now? A moment of stillness and then action happens.

No complaining, no resisting, no fighting against, not making a person or situation into an enemy. That again, burns up a lot of useless energy and brings up a lot of energy that is going to sabotage what you want to do.

[Speaker 2] (1:58:28 - 1:58:42)

So again, you say when instead of reacting against the situation, you merge with it, the solution arises out of the situation itself. Actually, it's not you, the person who's looking and listening, but the alert stillness itself or the inner space.

[Speaker 1] (1:58:42 - 1:58:55)

When I say the solution arises out of the situation, it does not mean that you don't do anything. In some cases, it is you who's going to take the action, but it will come out of a powerful place of being one with the situation.

[Speaker 2] (1:58:56 - 2:01:02)

Yeah, I think too, Jessica, ask Nick to come back to the microphone. Thanks, Jessica.

Nick, come back up here, we're not through with you.

I think too, I think you really represent a whole lot of people, particularly young people who have said to me personally or have emailed and think that being in alignment with who you're truly meant to be and awakening to your purpose represents passivity, that you're just sort of sitting around just waiting on a woo-hoo moment and not really doing anything. The real purpose of this entire book and the work of spirituality is to get you, to get us to align our personalities with our soul or higher consciousness so that the work that you do in the world comes from the place of the higher consciousness and you use your ego or personality to serve that. You allow your personality to serve the calling of consciousness that has put you here on the earth in the first place.

And when you do that, everything has a flow to it. You're in the right job that gives you the right amount of money for you at any given time because you are in alignment. So you're not worrying about things because you're not living beyond your means.

You're not stressing about things because you're not allowing your ego to determine and define who you are in the world. So you're not acting out of an external self but acting out of the place of inner space or consciousness so everything is in alignment. And that's not passive.

That's not woo-hoo, I can't pay my bills and so let me find myself later. That is aligning your personality with the higher consciousness so that your higher consciousness, you operate from a place of being and the inner space is directing and guiding your life and not the outer space. You get it?

[Speaker 3] (2:01:03 - 2:01:14)

Yeah, I do. Sorry if I made you mad, Oprah. But I do, that's wonderful.

Thank you so much. Pleasure to be here.

[Speaker 2] (2:01:15 - 2:01:34)

No, I'm not mad, but I just, I hear this a lot. I mean, earlier today, my stylist was saying, well, what about my passion? What about my passion?

You want me to just give up my passion? No, this isn't about giving up your passion. It's about feeling your passion more deeply.

Yes, yes. And being in alignment with that.

[Speaker 3] (2:01:36 - 2:01:57)

How do you know if what you want, what your passion is, isn't just ego-driven? What if I just wanted to be like, I don't know, a rock star and that's just completely ego-driven and that didn't help the world in any way, but if I kept on working towards it, it would just not be serving anyone but myself. What if my passion is wrong?

If it's wrong. Sorry, too many questions.

No, it's fine. No, go ahead, go ahead. Eckhart, answer that.

Sometimes you may not know until you have achieved what you wanted to achieve, whether it was ego or not. When you get what you wanted to achieve and very soon you find it does not satisfy you, then it was the ego. So you can, it's a learning process.

Nobody's saying you shouldn't try to achieve this or that. If the impulse is there to have this or that, do it and see what happens. If it doesn't satisfy you, it's the ego.

And the greatest rock stars are those who are rock stars because they sing or they perform because they had to. And whether they were performing to grand crowds or in their garage space to just their family members, they sing because they have to. The greatest dancers are those who dance because they have to and they become rock stars or dancing stars because that is coming from such a pure place of passion.

And that's what the world feels because those are the people who last. The people who are operating from the passionate, true space and not just doing it because they wanna make the money or because of the ego self. That's what I think.

But it's nice talking to you, Nick.

[Speaker 3] (2:03:18 - 2:03:21)

Thank you, sorry it took so long, but it was a pleasure being here.

[Speaker 2] (2:03:21 - 2:03:48)

Thanks everybody at the Bodhi Tree, Jessica, Nick and all our Bodhi buddies. Okay, now we have an email from Sumaya in Bethlehem who wanted to say that I live under military occupation. I've witnessed the demolishing of my home and I do not know how to apply your theories when the outside is so out of my control.

How can I be at peace when there are soldiers outside my door? There's a question for you.

That is of course the experience of many people in this world. If you look what's happening in this world, people are confronted with violence all the time, with loss, they lose their homes, they lose family members. Is it possible here to enter a state of surrender?

Is it possible to accept the seemingly unacceptable? And for some people it has been possible. I know it is possible to accept what seems unacceptable.

And if you accept the unacceptable, you will go very deep very quickly. And what otherwise would take many years of realization to realize, it will take you to a very deep point if you accept something, great loss in your life. In prison, I continuously get letters from people in prison now.

This is unacceptable. Some prisons are dreadful places. And some people there live in agony and suffering and anger and resentment.

And some, a minority, a few have realized that they can live in the state of inner surrender, which is not negative. It's a complete acceptance that this is as it is right now.

[Speaker 2] (2:05:15 - 2:05:18)

Because they are in non-resistance, non-judgment and non-attachment.

[Speaker 1] (2:05:18 - 2:05:51)

Yes, because, and you accept it because, why should you accept it? Because it is at this moment, it is. So no matter what it is, accepting the isness of this moment brings you to a place of inner freedom and also a place of power.

You have to go, in order to accept the unacceptable, you have to go really very deep and bring a very deep yes to this moment. An uncompromising yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:05:52 - 2:06:25)

I think that a lot of people have trouble with the word accepting it, because accepting says to people, I must then also condone it. What you're saying is stop, by your term accept, you mean don't deny that it's happening. As you resist it, if you continue to resist it, the example you used earlier in our classes is, you're in the mud, you're stuck in the mud, the wheels are in the mud, you must first accept that I'm stuck in the mud before you can get yourself out of the mud.

Yes, yes. You can't keep saying, I'm not in the mud.

[Speaker 1] (2:06:25 - 2:06:37)

No, and you don't say, I shouldn't be, why did this happen to me? I can't believe I'm in the mud. And then all the energy goes into the complaining and into the resistance.

Correct, got it, got it.

Christina lives in Toronto, Canada, and Skyping us from her family room. Christina, your question, hello.

[Speaker 9] (2:06:43 - 2:06:44)

Hi, Oprah, hi Akbar.

[Speaker 2] (2:06:44 - 2:06:45)

Hi.

[Speaker 9] (2:06:46 - 2:07:29)

I have been afraid to drive for about 16 years now. I was in a serious car accident, and it has stopped me from being responsible in my family life. My husband has so much burden.

He has to take our kids to their activities and so forth, take time off of work to take them to doctor's appointments. So my question is, but just recently from reading A New Earth, I've started to drive. So yay, but my question is, how do I remain in the inner spaciousness that you speak about on page 238, so that I can stay behind the wheel?

I mean, things are going well right now, but if that fear comes creeping back, how do I handle it?

[Speaker 2] (2:07:29 - 2:07:33)

I don't know if I want you behind the wheel if I'm on the road and you're trying to do that.

[Speaker 11] (2:07:33 - 2:07:34)

Oh, don't say that.

[Speaker 1] (2:07:34 - 2:09:38)

No, okay, okay. Well, first, you're now able to drive. That's wonderful.

The old fear is gone, but now a new fear has arisen, and that fear is about whether the fear is going to come back or not. And so that is often the case. People develop a fear about a fear.

Am I going to be in fear again? The mind tends to do that kind of thing because it projects itself into the future and says, am I going to remain fearless or is the fear going to come back? So realize that that is your mind trying to figure something out and thereby creating a new level of fear on top of the original fear that has already dissolved.

So trust that it's not going to come back, but something you can do to help it is to actually consciously enjoy the driving and enjoy sitting in the car, enjoy sitting at the traffic light, enjoy the driving itself. I enjoy driving. It's a very peaceful thing to do for me.

So, and be comfortable with being in the car and what I used to do often in the, don't do it so much anymore, I would get into my car and drive out to some lonely place and sit in the car and meditate or write. I liked being in the car. So use the enjoyment.

The more you find the enjoyment, the less likely the fear is going to come back. So seek the enjoyment of, it is to do with enjoying the present moment, the driving itself, the movement and so on. And don't go into your mind, don't follow up that thought when it says, oh, is it going to last?

Is this state of being without fear going to last?

To stay in the moment.

[Speaker 1] (2:09:39 - 2:10:11)

Stay in the moment. The more you're in the moment, the less likely fear is going to come back. It can't really come back when you are in the now.

It's only when you leave the now, then it'll come back. Either you go into the past and you remember something that happened in the past, you've left the now, or you go into the future and say, am I going to have fear again at some point? So the more you stay in the now, the more you're keeping out fear.

Fear comes through past or future.

[Speaker 2] (2:10:13 - 2:10:22)

Thank you. Thank you. Thank you so much.

Thank you. Okay, Yvonne. Okay, Yvonne.

Okay. Yes. Hi.

What's your question? I like this question.

[Speaker 5] (2:10:23 - 2:10:52)

It's about this two shall pass and the quote about it. Forget the quote now, shoot. How do you be a voice for change in the planet where things are going wrong and still be present in the stillness and create the action without being taken down by all the horrendous things that are happening?

It seems to me like a paradox to be present and then to work for change in the future.

Yeah, you said, how can I be a voice for planetary change and really say, I don't mind what happens because there's so much- I don't mind what happens. So much crazy stuff is going on in the world. How can you just say- Do not mind animal abuse.

Right, not mind animal abuse, not mind all the violence going on in the world and just say, this too shall pass.

[Speaker 1] (2:11:11 - 2:12:27)

First, of course, the English language has two expressions that are related and yet very different. Sometimes, I don't mind is interpreted by people as meaning I don't care. So I don't care and I don't mind are very different.

I don't mind does not mean that you don't care. It means there is a space of freedom inside you and that is a peaceful place. And unless you are rooted in that peaceful place within, you cannot ultimately be an agent for true positive change in this world.

Your state of consciousness is what transmits itself through whatever you do. Your state of consciousness is primary. And only if your state of consciousness is at peace can whatever you do reflect that.

And you can be a bringer of peace into this violent and insane world. And you can then, through whatever you do externally, can bring sanity into this logic insane world.

[Speaker 2] (2:12:27 - 2:12:40)

Whether it's about that particular thing you're concerned about or not, because if you are in a state of consciousness where you are at peace, everything that you do in the world will bring peace to the world. And that's how you change the world.

[Speaker 1] (2:12:40 - 2:13:07)

Yes, and everything you do will be much more empowered. It will be empowered by that consciousness rather than coming from antagonism, coming from the thinking I have to fight these people, making situations or people into enemies. That's all the old consciousness.

You cannot change this world through the old consciousness or applying the structures and the ways of the old consciousness.

[Speaker 2] (2:13:07 - 2:13:25)

Yeah, one of the things you shared with us earlier, what he was saying, Yvonne, in one of the early classes is that you cannot make change by fighting against anything. And a surefire way of knowing that something is going to fail is when you say it's the war against. The war against anything cannot win.

[Speaker 1] (2:13:25 - 2:13:49)

No. So if you cannot fight, it does not mean that you cannot take action. You can take powerful action, but it comes out of that basic place of inner peace.

People don't realize, many people don't realize yet that very powerful action come out of the place of inner peace. They believe they need to be agitated to bring about change.

[Speaker 5] (2:13:51 - 2:14:11)

Coming from inner peace, motivate other people to sort of mind what's going on so that they might do things differently in their lives that impact the planet as a whole. That's the thing that kind of worries me, that the concept can give people apathy and like, oh, I'm going to throw my cigarette on the ground and it's going to go into the ocean and I don't mind what happens.

[Speaker 1] (2:14:12 - 2:14:30)

No, that's not it. You see the consequences of any action. If you're present, then you will not do unconscious things that actually produce suffering.

It's only when you're not present that you will produce suffering in one form or another.

[Speaker 2] (2:14:31 - 2:14:31)

Got that.

[Speaker 1] (2:14:31 - 2:15:15)

When you're present, you do not generate suffering for yourself or others. It's the only place from where you don't generate suffering. And then you are already the beginning of the change of the world.

And then it doesn't matter what you do, you may just disseminate information, but the information to make people aware of certain things. Some people, this can be a very important thing to do. And the way in which you disseminate the information will also be empowered by your state of consciousness.

It will not make others wrong, other people wrong, and thereby produce a reaction. And then you're trapped in the same old thing.

[Speaker 2] (2:15:15 - 2:15:38)

You've experienced that, right, Ivan? You've been on the street and somebody is trying to hand out something. And if it's a person who's really agitated or you can feel or sense their anger and agitation, you don't wanna take the pamphlet.

But if the person hands it to you or whatever it is with a sense of calm or peace, then you're more inclined to wanna even engage with them.

[Speaker 5] (2:15:38 - 2:16:06)

I've experienced that as myself, like 15 years ago in college, being the staunch environmentalist and telling people what to do. And of course, watching them do the opposite, inspiring the exact opposite that I wanted. So I've worked the last 10 years since the power of the now to be present.

But in order to do that, I had to like stop looking at the atrocities of the world. And now I'm ready to come back and I want to keep the spiritual side, but at the same time, not let the world get me down, but be able to do something and be a part of positive change.

[Speaker 1] (2:16:06 - 2:16:24)

That's your challenge now. That's your challenge now. And your spiritual practice now is to balance the two so that you can be active and bring about change in the world without losing your rootedness in being and your presence.

So that's a balancing act.

[Speaker 5] (2:16:24 - 2:16:25)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (2:16:25 - 2:16:26)

And that's what you have to do now.

[Speaker 5] (2:16:26 - 2:16:43)

Thank you for sharing how to do it. I'm learning slowly what you just said about accepting the acceptance, the deep acceptance of the world as it is. That hit me finally.

I'm starting to understand the depth and not the accept of it's okay, just that this is happening.

[Speaker 2] (2:16:44 - 2:16:49)

That it is happening. Yes. And that the angrier you're more upset you get about it, it's still happening.

[Speaker 5] (2:16:50 - 2:16:59)

Oh yeah. That doesn't serve anything. I get that.

But then how do you keep going? But it's a slow process. There's two more weeks, two more chapters.

I'm hoping.

[Speaker 2] (2:17:00 - 2:17:19)

Thanks. Inner purpose is going to help that a lot. Thank you.

Tell Nick to be sure to show up for inner purpose. I got a few things to say. Thanks everybody.

Natalie lives in Australia, but is on holiday with her family and is Skyping us from her friend's kitchen in England. Hi, Natalie.

[Speaker 6] (2:17:19 - 2:17:21)

Hi, Oprah. Hi, Oprah. How are you?

[Speaker 2] (2:17:22 - 2:17:23)

We're both well. Thank you.

[Speaker 6] (2:17:24 - 2:18:25)

This is so exciting for me. On page 239 in your book, you say that some people feel more alive when they travel and visit unfamiliar places or foreign countries because those times sense perceptions, experiencing takes up more of their consciousness than thinking. Since the class on the third chapter, I've been sharing an amazing holiday with my family and our friends here.

I've been able to enjoy my holiday so much more by practicing the teachings that I've read about in the book and the things I've learned from the class. But my life back home is not like my holiday. It's really busy.

I've got a job and three children and my husband has his own business. And on reflection, I think I've filled up any free time I've had so that I wasn't alone with that constant noise in my head. I feel really great at the moment and I want to feel the same when I go home.

So my question is, how do I transition between this wonderful holiday and go back to my normal life at home?

[Speaker 1] (2:18:28 - 2:20:09)

Okay, okay. That's a good question. Yes, yes.

Thank you. Yes, it's a good question. The everydayness of many people's lives can really pull you into a place of unconsciousness because the repetitiveness of one's life.

So it's up to you when you get home to invite a different state of consciousness as much as possible into your daily life, into the daily routine of your life. Invite a state of presence when you are engaged in things that you do every day repetitively, things that usually are a means to an end, driving those kids to school, going, doing the shopping, doing, you can see how many things are a means to an end in one's daily existence. And that's not a very powerful way to live when almost everything you do in your daily existence is a means to some end because you have to do this and this.

So bring in presence where, instead of treating whatever you do as a means to an end, as much as possible, make it into an end in itself. For example, when you're driving from here to there, be absolutely present every moment. Look around, be alert as if you were seeing things for the first time, the trees, the people, the traffic.

And you do that by not labeling things.

[Speaker 1] (2:20:11 - 2:20:41)

Not labeling mentally what you're experiencing. Be there as a conscious presence when you're doing shopping at the supermarket. Perceiving without naming is what you are.

Perceiving without naming. Be there with every step, look at the things around you, what do I need to get? To be conscious of every movement, of everything around you so that it's not an everyday thing.

It's that everything that you do is happening just now. It's not a repetition.

And I promise you, if you start to do this in your everyday life, what he says on page 252, as much as possible in everyday life, use awareness of the inner body to start to create space. When waiting, when listening to someone, when pausing to look at the sky, all on page 252, a tree, a flower, your partner or child, feel the aliveness within at the same time. This means part of your attention or consciousness remains formless and the rest is available for the outer world of form.

Whenever you inhabit your body in this way, it serves as an anchor for staying present in the now, prevents you from losing yourself in thinking, in emotions or in external situations. When you really get that, what he's saying on page 252, Natalie, everything around you takes on a magical quality. I can really testify to that, that just doing routine things becomes almost like you have wow moments doing the smallest things, washing the- I've been feeling that at the moment because we've been seeing so many amazing things and meeting so many different people and being in places where they speak different languages.

But I know at home, what I do is when I'm doing something, I'm thinking about the next thing that I'm going to be doing. So I really need to, I can really take that on. Thank you so much.

[Speaker 2] (2:22:03 - 2:22:38)

What I would like to say to you and everybody else, when you start to put this into practice, and I've been doing it myself during the past eight weeks, when you start to actually put it into practice, everything is amazing. Everything starts to be amazing. The fact that you're breathing in and out of your lungs starts to be amazing.

That's what the now does. It brings you into a level of consciousness and presence. So just being is amazing.

And you don't have to leave home to experience that. Isn't that the- That's right.

[Speaker 1] (2:22:38 - 2:22:39)

That's the key, isn't it? Yes, that's the key, yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:22:40 - 2:22:45)

What is on the back board? I thought I saw my name there when there was a wide shot there. Does that say Oprah?

[Speaker 6] (2:22:46 - 2:22:54)

That's from my Georgie. She's asleep because it's about 3 a.m., but she wanted to say hi, so that's her hi, Oprah. Hi, Georgie.

[Speaker 2] (2:22:55 - 2:23:20)

Hi. Thank you. Thank you very much, Natalie.

But that's- Bye, thank you. Thank you. What Natalie was talking about is the whole point of awakening to your life's purpose.

And next week, we're gonna be talking about inner purpose, which is what I was trying to say to Nick, maybe too stridently. It's happened a couple times where I'm like saying to Gail, Gail will say, I don't understand.

[Speaker 1] (2:23:20 - 2:23:28)

I'll go, well, the reason is- Well, Nick represents about 50 million other people who are the same.

[Speaker 2] (2:23:28 - 2:24:09)

That's right, who are feeling that, well, listen, I gotta make money. I gotta make money. But what we're gonna be talking about next week, Nick, is when you align the inner purpose and let the inner purpose determine what your outer actions are, then you're not worried.

That's right. You never worry. No matter how much money you're making, you're not worried because you're on purpose with your life.

You're on purpose with your life. Yeah, well, I think a lot of people feel like this is all kind of, sometimes they feel like this is ooey gooey stuff. And yes, and I'll get spiritual, but let me make some money first.

Yeah, I wanna be spiritual and all that, but I gotta make some money first.

[Speaker 1] (2:24:09 - 2:24:18)

Yeah, that's actually in the New Testament where he says, let me first do this. They invite you to the kingdom of heaven.

[Speaker 2] (2:24:18 - 2:24:18)

That's right.

[Speaker 1] (2:24:19 - 2:24:29)

Let me first do this with another excuse. Let me first do this. First, I have to do this.

Yes. Then I'll be ready. Of course, it never happens.

That's right. The then never comes.

[Speaker 2] (2:24:30 - 2:24:45)

So there is Barbara in Shanghai, China, who writes, I find it really difficult to be the observer of a challenging work environment, especially when I'm frustrated with employees and have to discipline my staff. What are some of the practical steps I can take to overcome the situation?

[Speaker 1] (2:24:47 - 2:26:02)

Well, there you use whatever the practical things that are described in the book, conscious, one or two conscious breaths as often as possible, getting in touch with the feeling of the inner body, the aliveness of the inner body while you are listening to people, especially, then already a different energy is there. You are listening from a different state of consciousness when you're in touch with the inner body, especially while you listen. Right.

And a lot of thing, a person who is running an office or whatever our questioner does, they probably have to deal with many people every day, which involves listening to people in addition to, of course, speaking to people. So be there as the, feel the aliveness within as you listen, as much as possible, take conscious breaths while you are engaged in things. That's right.

Bringing spaces, little spaces into your daily existence. Gaps. Little gaps.

That is more important than doing, it's wonderful to do a meditation at the end of the day, but bringing little gaps into your everyday activities is even more important.

I love what you talk about on page 232 and 233. You tell people to avoid watching television programs and commercials that assault you with a rapid succession of images that change every two or three seconds. Rather than watching at random, choose the programs you wanna see whenever you remember to do so, feel the aliveness also inside your body as you watch.

Alternatively, be aware of your breathing from time to time, looking away from the screen at regular intervals so that it doesn't completely take possession of your visual sense. We just did a show the other day and this mom, it was a show about giving up what you'd be willing to live without. And this family was gonna give up their computers or they did give up their computers and their televisions for a week.

And their little five-year-old boy was crying because he had to give up the computer. His mom walked in the room, stood behind him, was behind him, called his name and he still couldn't hear her because he was so mesmerized by the video game he was playing. What are we doing to ourselves and more importantly to our children through the video games, the television, which is a form of like hypnosis almost for people.

[Speaker 1] (2:27:17 - 2:27:47)

Yes, and it pulls your attention out of the body. It's like a leaking, an energy leakage, especially for young children when the energy gets drawn out very easily. So it's continuous energy leakage and they cannot focus on, because of the rapidly changing images on TV screen in many programs, the ability to have a prolonged focus on something is greatly diminished.

[Speaker 2] (2:27:47 - 2:27:54)

Well, I thought that, that's why we have so many children with ADD because they've grown up in a world where they can only, there's 30 seconds, 30 seconds and 30 seconds.

[Speaker 1] (2:27:54 - 2:28:38)

Yes, that means the quality of your life is also diminished because the quality of your life very much depends on the degree of your attention. Attention is quality. So if you cannot give attention to anything for very long, that diminishes the quality of your life and what you can do.

So parents need to be careful with their children. I'm not saying remove all these things immediately from your children because they are addictive, but very gently don't reduce the amount of time they spend with video games and they reduce gently the amount of time they spend watching television.

Because they cause you, as you say, so when watching television, the tendencies for you to fall below thought, not rise above it. Television has this in common with alcohol and certain other drugs. While it provides some relief from your mind, you again pay a high price, loss of consciousness.

[Speaker 1] (2:28:54 - 2:28:54)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:28:54 - 2:29:03)

And here we have- That's what it's designed to do, isn't it? For the most part. Yes, it's, here we have- Our show though is designed to make you more conscious.

I will have to say that.

[Speaker 1] (2:29:03 - 2:29:18)

I know that. When I wrote there somewhere, there are some television shows that have been helpful to many people and have raised people's consciousness. It says that somewhere in the book.

It does. I saw you in my mental, in my mind.

[Speaker 2] (2:29:18 - 2:29:33)

Thank you. You could have just said, oh, the Oprah show. Yes, I saw you wrote that there are some television shows.

You could have just put in parentheses, the Oprah show, for example. Yes. Yeah, but for the most part, television is designed to numb us out.

[Speaker 1] (2:29:33 - 2:30:10)

Yes. And here we have the interesting concept of rising above thinking and falling below thinking. So what we are engaged in here, now most people are at the thinking level.

They are controlled by their mind. They are identified with their mind. This work that we are doing here, if you can call it work, it's not work really, is rising above thinking.

Being present means you have risen above thinking. You are fully conscious, but there's little or no thought activity.

[Speaker 2] (2:30:10 - 2:30:28)

Can you tell me why you say on page 233, make sure you don't go to sleep immediately after switching off the set, or even worse, fall asleep with the set still on? I know my friend Gail sometimes is watching TV and she goes, I don't know if I was watching or my feet were watching because she goes to sleep with the TV on.

[Speaker 1] (2:30:29 - 2:31:05)

So then all the turmoil that you've just been watching and you've just spent a significant amount of time below thought in a state of unawareness and unconsciousness, and if you go from, that will affect the quality of your sleep and you will notice also when you wake up in the morning, you won't be as refreshed. It's vital to go into sleep from a place of consciousness rather than unconsciousness. Then the quality of your sleep will be much better and you will wake up feeling renewed.

[Speaker 2] (2:31:06 - 2:31:14)

I noticed that. See, I don't watch television before going to bed. Hardly watch television at all, but I noticed that if I meditate before going to sleep, I have a better sleep.

[Speaker 1] (2:31:15 - 2:32:05)

Yes, and what I recommend to people is as they lie in bed, ready to go to sleep, lie on your back, flat on your back, and bring attention, scan your body with your attention from your feet to your head, your hands, your arms, and then feel the internal aliveness of the body as you lie there. You lie in the energy field of your body. That means there's also very little or no thinking going on because the attention moves into the body.

And there, from there, you go to sleep. Hold that for five, 10 minutes. It's a very pleasant way of saying goodbye to that day and of going into sleep.

It feels very much alive. It's joyful, actually, to lie there in that energy field.

[Speaker 2] (2:32:05 - 2:32:18)

And that energy field that you're talking about is exactly what this whole chapter is about, is the energy field of inner space. Go inside the body and allow yourself to be the observer of the body.

[Speaker 1] (2:32:18 - 2:32:44)

Yes, and then you connect with the energy. You merge the energy field. And of course, the body is mostly empty space, 99.999% empty space. Physicists tell us the space between the molecules, the atoms that make up the body, the spaces in between the atoms is so vast that your body is 99.999% empty space.

That's a lot for my brain to take in right now. But I do wanna thank you for joining us. This eighth class will be available on demand tomorrow for free here at oprah.com.

And if you wanna download or watch any of our classes, you can do that tomorrow, also at oprah.com and iTunes. It's free because of the generous support of nature-made soft gel vitamins. This week, you can update your workbook, get ready for our next class, chapter nine.

We're coming to the end. Your inner purpose, your inner purpose. For all of you who read this book, looking for your inner purpose, this is what it's all about, people.

Thank you.

[Speaker 1] (2:33:23 - 2:33:23)

Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (2:33:24 - 2:33:38)

For bringing us into inner space. Next week is inner purpose. And as I was saying to Nick earlier, inner purpose, when it defines what you do in the world, put you in alignment and all things come.

As they should.

[Speaker 1] (2:33:38 - 2:33:41)

And then there comes the alignment of inner purpose and outer purpose.

[Speaker 2] (2:33:43 - 2:33:55)

That's it. Thanks, everybody. Good night.

Let's do our high five. We almost didn't do it last week and people complained. Bye, everybody.

Bye. Bye.

2008-Eckhart Tolle Oprah A New Earth Audiobook Podcast Chapter09

[Speaker 1] (0:00 - 39:18)

CHAPTER NINE YOUR INNER PURPOSE As soon as you rise above mere survival, the question of meaning and purpose becomes of paramount importance in your life. Many people feel caught up in the routines of daily living, which seem to deprive their life of significance. Some believe life is passing them by, or has passed them by already.

Others feel severely restricted by the demands of their job and supporting a family, or by their financial or living situation. Some are consumed by acute stress, others by acute boredom. Some are lost in frantic doing, others are lost in stagnation.

Many people long for the freedom and expansion that prosperity promises. Others already enjoy the relative freedom that comes with prosperity, and discover that even that is not enough to endow their lives with meaning. There is no substitute for finding true purpose.

But the true or primary purpose of your life cannot be found on the outer level. It does not concern what you do, but what you are, that is to say, your state of consciousness. So the most important thing to realize is this.

Your life has an inner purpose and an outer purpose. Inner purpose concerns being and is primary. Outer purpose concerns doing and is secondary.

While this book speaks mainly of your inner purpose, this chapter and the next will also address the question of how to align outer purpose and inner purpose in your life. Inner and outer, however, are so intertwined that it is almost impossible to speak of one without referring to the other. Your inner purpose is to awaken.

It is as simple as that. You share that purpose with every other person on the planet, because it is the purpose of humanity. Your inner purpose is an essential part of the purpose of the whole, the universe and its emerging intelligence.

Your outer purpose can change over time. It varies greatly from person to person. Finding and living in alignment with the inner purpose is the foundation for fulfilling your outer purpose.

It is the basis for true success. Without that alignment, you can still achieve certain things through effort, struggle, determination and sheer hard work or cunning, but there is no joy in such endeavor, and it invariably ends in some form of suffering. Awakening Awakening is a shift in consciousness in which thinking and awareness separate.

For most people it is not an event but a process they undergo. Even those rare beings who experience a sudden, dramatic and seemingly irreversible awakening will still go through a process in which the new state of consciousness gradually flows into and transforms everything they do, and so becomes integrated into their lives. Awareness Instead of being lost in your thinking, when you are awake you recognize yourself as the awareness behind it.

Thinking then ceases to be a self-serving, autonomous activity that takes possession of you and runs your life. Awareness takes over from thinking. Instead of being in charge of your life, thinking becomes the servant of awareness.

Awareness is conscious connection with universal intelligence. Another word for it is presence, consciousness without thought. The initiation of the awakening process is an act of grace.

You cannot make it happen, nor can you prepare yourself for it or accumulate credits towards it. There isn't a tidy sequence of logical steps that leads towards it, although the mind would love that. You don't have to become worthy first.

It may come to the sinner before it comes to the saint, but not necessarily. That's why Jesus associated with all kinds of people, not just the irrespectable ones. There's nothing you can do about awakening.

Whatever you do will be the ego trying to add awakening or enlightenment to itself as its most prized possession and thereby making itself more important and bigger. Instead of awakening, you add the concept of awakening to your mind, or the mental image of what an awakened or enlightened person is like, and then try to live up to that image. Living up to an image that you have of yourself or that other people have of you is inauthentic living, another unconscious role the ego plays.

There's nothing you can do about awakening. If it has either already happened or not yet happened, how can it be the primary purpose of your life? Does not purpose imply that you can do something about it?

Only the first awakening, the first glimpse of consciousness without thought, happens by grace, without any doing on your part. If you find this book incomprehensible or meaningless, it has not yet happened to you. If something within you responds to it, however, if you somehow recognize the truth in it, it means the process of awakening has begun.

Once it has done so, it cannot be reversed, although it can be delayed by the ego. For some people, the reading of this book will initiate the awakening process. For others, the function of this book is to help them recognize that they have already begun to awaken, and to intensify and accelerate the process.

Another function of this book is to help people recognize the ego within them whenever it tries to regain control and obscure the arising awareness. For some, the awakening happens as they suddenly become aware of the kinds of thoughts they habitually think, especially persistent negative thoughts that they may have been identified with all of their lives. Suddenly, there is an awareness that is aware of thought, but is not part of it.

What is the relationship between awareness and thinking? Awareness is the space in which thoughts exist when that space has become conscious of itself. Once you have had a glimpse of awareness or presence, you know it firsthand.

It is no longer just a concept in your mind. You can then make a conscious choice to be present rather than to indulge in useless thinking. You can invite presence into your life, that is to say, make space.

With the grace of awakening comes responsibility. You can either try to go on as if nothing has happened, or you can see its significance and recognize the arising of awareness as the most important thing that can happen to you. Opening yourself to the emerging consciousness and bringing its light into this world then becomes the primary purpose of your life.

I want to know the mind of God, Einstein said. The rest are details. What is the mind of God?

Consciousness. What does it mean to know the mind of God? To be aware.

What are the details? Your outer purpose and whatever happens outwardly. So while you are perhaps still waiting for something significant to happen in your life, you may not realize that the most significant thing that can happen to a human being has already happened within you, the beginning of the separation process of thinking and awareness.

Many people who are going through the early stages of the awakening process are no longer certain what their outer purpose is. What drives the world no longer drives them. Seeing the madness of our civilization so clearly, they may feel somewhat alienated from the culture around them.

Some feel that they inhabit a no-man's land between two worlds. They are no longer run by the ego, yet the arising awareness has not yet become fully integrated into their lives. Inner and outer purpose have not merged.

A Dialogue on Inner Purpose The following dialogue condenses numerous conversations I have had with people who were looking for their true life purpose. Something is true when it resonates with and expresses your innermost being, when it is in alignment with your inner purpose. This is why I am directing their attention to their inner and primary purpose first.

I don't know exactly what it is, but I want some change in my life. I want expansion. I want to be doing something meaningful, and, yes, I want prosperity and the freedom that comes with it.

I want to do something significant, something that makes a difference in the world. But if you ask me what exactly I want, I would have to say that I don't know. Can you help me find my life purpose?

Your purpose is to sit here and talk to me, because that's where you are and that's what you're doing, until you get up and do something else. Then that becomes your purpose. So my purpose is to sit in my office for the next thirty years until I retire or get laid off?

You are not in your office now, so that's not your purpose. When you do sit in your office and do whatever you do, then that is your purpose. Not for the next thirty years, but for now.

I think there's some misunderstanding here. For you, purpose means what you are doing now. For me, it means having an overall aim in life, something big and significant that gives meaning to what I do, something that makes a difference.

Shuffling papers in the office is not it, I know that. As long as you are unaware of being, you will seek meaning only within the dimension of doing and of future, that is to say, the dimension of time. And whatever meaning or fulfillment you find will dissolve or turn out to have been a deception.

Invariably, it will be destroyed by time. Any meaning we find on that level is true only relatively and temporarily. For example, if caring for your children gives meaning to your life, what happens to that meaning when they don't need you and perhaps don't even listen to you anymore?

Meaning to your life? You depend on others being worse off than yourself so that your life can continue to be meaningful and you can feel good about yourself. If the desire to excel, win or succeed at this or that activity provides you with meaning, what if you never win or your winning streak comes to an end one day, as it will?

You would then have to look to your imagination or memories, a very unsatisfactory place to bring some meager meaning into your life. Making it, in whatever field, is only meaningful as long as there are thousands or millions of others who don't make it. So you need other human beings to fail so that your life can have meaning.

I'm not saying here that helping others, caring for your children or striving for excellence in whatever field are not worthwhile things to do. For many people, they are an important part of their outer purpose. But outer purpose alone is always relative, unstable and impermanent.

This does not mean that you should not be engaged in those activities. It means you should connect them to your inner, primary purpose, so that a deeper meaning flows into what you do. Without living in alignment with your primary purpose, whatever purpose you come up with, even if it is to create heaven on earth, will be of the ego or become destroyed by time.

Sooner or later, it will lead to suffering. If you ignore your inner purpose, no matter what you do, even if it looks spiritual, the ego will creep into how you do it, and so the means will corrupt the end. The common saying, the road to hell is paved with good intentions, points to this truth.

In other words, not your aims or your actions are primary, but the state of consciousness out of which they come. Fulfilling your primary purpose is laying the foundation for a new reality, a new earth. Once that foundation is there, your external purpose becomes charged with spiritual power, because your aims and intentions will be one with the evolutionary impulse of the universe.

The separation of thinking and awareness, which lies at the core of your primary purpose, happens through the negation of time. We are not speaking here, of course, of the use of time for practical purposes, such as making an appointment or planning a trip. We are not speaking of clock time, but of psychological time, which is the mind's deep-seated habit of seeking the fullness of life in the future where it cannot be found, and ignoring the only point of access to it, the present moment.

When you look upon what you do or where you are as the main purpose of your life, you negate time. This is enormously empowering. The negation of time in what you do also provides the link between your inner and outer purposes, between being and doing.

When you negate time, you negate the ego. Whatever you do, you will be doing extraordinarily well, because the doing itself becomes the focal point of your attention. Your doing then becomes a channel through which consciousness enters this world.

This means there is quality in what you do, even in the most simple action, like turning the pages in the phone book or walking across the room. The main purpose for turning the pages is to turn the pages. The secondary purpose is to find a phone number.

The main purpose for walking across the room is to walk across the room. The secondary purpose is to pick up a book at the other end, and the moment you pick up the book, that becomes your main purpose. You may remember the paradox of time we mentioned earlier.

Whatever you do takes time, and yet it is always now. So while your inner purpose is to negate time, your outer purpose necessarily involves future and so could not exist without time. But it is always secondary.

Whenever you become anxious or stressed, outer purpose has taken over and you lost sight of your inner purpose. You have forgotten that your state of consciousness is primary. All else, secondary.

Would living like this not stop me from looking to achieve something great? My fear is that I will remain stuck with doing little things for the rest of my life, things that are of no consequence. I am afraid of never rising above mediocrity, never daring to achieve anything great, not fulfilling my potential.

The great arises out of small things that are honored and cared for. Everybody's life really consists of small things. Greatness is a mental abstraction and a favorite fantasy of the ego.

The paradox is that the foundation for greatness is honoring the small things of the present moment instead of pursuing the idea of greatness. The present moment is always small in the sense that it is always simple, but concealed within it lies the greatest power. Like the atom, it is one of the smallest things yet contains enormous power.

Only when you align yourself with the present moment do you have access to that power. Or it may be more true to say that it then has access to you and through you to this world. Or when he said, It is not I but the Father within me who does the works.

And I can of my own self do nothing. Anxiety, stress and negativity cut you off from that power. The illusion that you are separate from the power that runs the universe returns.

You feel yourself to be alone again, struggling against something or trying to achieve this or that. But why did anxiety, stress or negativity arise? Because you turned away from the present moment.

And why did you do that? You thought something else was more important. You forgot your main purpose.

One small error, one misperception creates a world of suffering. Through the present moment you have access to the power of life itself, that which has traditionally been called God. As soon as you turn away from it, God ceases to be a reality in your life and all you are left with is the mental concept of God, which some people believe in and others deny.

Even belief in God is only a poor substitute for the living reality of God manifesting every moment of your life. Would complete harmony with the present moment not imply the cessation of all movement? Doesn't the existence of any goal imply that there is a temporary disruption in that harmony with the present moment, and perhaps a re-establishment of harmony at a higher or more complex level once the goal has been attained?

I imagine that the sapling that pushes its way through the soil can't be in total harmony with the present moment either, because it has a goal, it wants to become a big tree. Maybe once it has reached maturity it will live in harmony with the present moment. The sapling doesn't want anything because it is at one with the totality, and the totality acts through it.

Look at the lilies of the field, how they grow, said Jesus. They toil not, neither do they spin. Yet even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.

We could say that the totality, life, wants the sapling to become a tree, but the sapling doesn't see itself as separate from life and so wants nothing for itself. It is one with what life wants. That's why it isn't worried or stressed.

And if it has to die prematurely, it dies with ease. It is as surrendered in death as it is in life. It senses, no matter how obscurely, its rootedness in being, the formless and eternal one life.

Like the Taoist sages of ancient China, Jesus likes to draw our attention to nature because he sees a power at work in it that humans have lost touch with. It is the creative power of the universe. Jesus goes on to say that if God clothes simple flowers in such beauty, how much more will God clothe you.

That is to say, that while nature is a beautiful expression of the evolutionary impulse of the universe, when humans become aligned with the intelligence that underlies it, they will express that same impulse on a higher, more wondrous level. So be true to life by being true to your inner purpose. As you become present and thereby total in what you do, your actions become charged with spiritual power.

At first there may be no noticeable change in what you do, only the how changes. Your primary purpose is now to enable consciousness to flow into what you do. The secondary purpose is whatever you want to achieve through the doing.

Whereas the notion of purpose before was always associated with future, there is now a deeper purpose that can only be found in the present, through the denial of time. When you meet with people, at work or wherever it may be, give them your fullest attention. You are no longer there primarily as a person, but as a field of awareness, of alert presence.

The original reason for interacting with the other person, buying or selling something, requesting or giving information and so on, now becomes secondary. The field of awareness that arises between you becomes the primary purpose for the interaction. That space of awareness becomes more important than what you may be talking about, more important than physical or thought objects.

The human being becomes more important than the things of this world. It does not mean you neglect whatever needs to be done on a practical level. In fact, the doing unfolds not only more easily, but more powerfully when the dimension of being is acknowledged and so becomes primary.

The arising of that unifying field of awareness between human beings is the most essential factor in relationships on the new earth. Is the notion of success just an egoic illusion? How do we measure true success?

The world will tell you that success is achieving what you set out to do. It will tell you that success is winning, that finding recognition and or prosperity are essential ingredients in any success. All or some of the above are usually by-products of success, but they are not success.

The conventional notion of success is concerned with the outcome of what you do. Some say that success is the result of a combination of hard work and luck, or determination and talent, or being in the right place at the right time. While any of these may be determinants of success, they are not its essence.

What they tell you, because it doesn't know, is that you cannot become successful. You can only be successful. Don't let a mad world tell you that success is anything other than a successful present moment.

And what is that? There is a sense of quality in what you do, even the most simple action. Quality implies care and attention, which come with awareness.

Quality requires your presence. Let's say that you are a business person and after two years of intense stress and strain you finally manage to come out with a product or service that sells well and makes money. Success?

In conventional terms, yes. In reality, you spend two years polluting your body, as well as the earth, with negative energy, made yourself and those around you miserable, and affected many others you never even met. The unconscious assumption behind all such action is that success is a future event and that the end justifies the means.

But the end and the means are one. And if the means did not contribute to human happiness, neither will the end. The outcome, which is inseparable from the actions that led to it, is already contaminated by those actions and so will create further unhappiness.

This is karmic action, which is the unconscious perpetuation of unhappiness. As you already know, your secondary or outer purpose lies within the dimension of time, while your main purpose is inseparable from the now and therefore requires the negation of time. How are they reconciled?

By realizing that your entire life journey ultimately consists of the step you are taking at this moment. There is always only this one step, and so you give it your fullest attention. This doesn't mean you don't know where you are going.

It just means this step is primary, the destination secondary. And what you encounter at your destination once you get there depends on the quality of this one step. Another way of putting it, what the future holds for you depends on your state of consciousness now.

When doing becomes infused with the timeless quality of being, that is success. Unless being flows into doing, unless you are present, you lose yourself in whatever you do. You also lose yourself in thinking as well as in your reactions to what happens externally.

What exactly do you mean when you say you lose yourself? The essence of who you are is consciousness. When consciousness, you, becomes completely identified with thinking and thus forgets its essential nature, it loses itself in thought.

When it becomes identified with mental-emotional formations such as wanting and fearing, the primary motivating forces of the ego, it loses itself in those formations. Consciousness also loses itself when it identifies with acting and reacting to what happens. Every thought, every desire or fear, every action or reaction is then infused with a false sense of self that is incapable of sensing the simple joy of being and so seeks pleasure and sometimes even pain as substitutes for it.

This is living in forgetfulness of being. In that state of forgetfulness of who you are, every success is no more than a passing delusion. Whatever you achieve, soon you will be unhappy again, or some new problem or dilemma will draw your attention in completely.

What My Inner Purpose Is To finding out what I am supposed to do on the outer level. The outer purpose varies greatly from person to person, and no outer purpose lasts forever. It is subject to time and then replaced by some other purpose.

The extent to which dedication to the inner purpose of awakening changes the external circumstances of your life also varies greatly. For some people, there is a sudden or gradual break with their past. Their work, living situation, relationships, everything undergoes profound change.

Some of the change may be initiated by themselves, not through an agonizing decision-making process, but by a sudden realization or recognition, this is what I have to do. The decision arrives ready-made, so to speak. It comes through awareness, not through thinking.

You wake up one morning and you know what to do. Some people find themselves walking out of an insane work environment or living situation. So before you discover what is right for you on the external level, before you discover what works, what is compatible with the awakening consciousness, you may have to find out what is not right, what no longer works, what is incompatible with your inner purpose.

Other kinds of change may suddenly come to you from without. A chance meeting brings new opportunity and expansion into your life. A long-standing obstacle or conflict dissolves.

Your friends either go through this inner transformation with you or drift out of your life. Some relationships dissolve, others deepen. You may get laid off from your job or you become an agent for positive change at your workplace.

Your spouse leaves you or you reach a new level of intimacy. Some changes may look negative on the surface, but you will soon realize that space is being created in your life for something new to emerge. There may be a period of insecurity and uncertainty.

What should I do? As the ego is no longer running your life, the psychological need for external security, which is illusory anyway, lessens. You are able to live with uncertainty, even enjoy it.

When you become comfortable with uncertainty, infinite possibilities open up in your life. It means fear is no longer a dominant factor in what you do and no longer prevents you from taking action to initiate change. The Roman philosopher Tacitus rightly observed that the desire for safety stands against every great and noble enterprise.

If uncertainty is unacceptable to you, it turns into fear. If it is perfectly acceptable, it turns into increased aliveness, alertness and creativity. Many years ago, when as a result of a strong inner impulse, I walked out of an academic career that the world would have called promising, stepping into complete uncertainty.

And out of that, after several years, emerged my new incarnation as a spiritual teacher. Much later, something similar happened again. The impulse came to give up my home in England and move to the west coast of North America.

I obeyed that impulse, although I didn't know the reason for it. Out of that move into uncertainty came the power of now, most of which was written in California and British Columbia while I didn't have a home of my own. I had virtually no income and lived on my savings, which were quickly running out.

In fact, everything fell into place beautifully. I ran out of money just as I was getting close to finishing writing. I bought a lottery ticket and won $1,000, which kept me going for another month.

Not everybody, however, will have to go through drastic change in their external circumstances. At the other end of the spectrum, you have people who stay exactly where they are and keep doing whatever they are doing. For them, only the how changes, not the what.

This is not due to fear or inertia. What they are doing already is a perfect vehicle for consciousness to come into this world, and it needs no other. They, too, bring into manifestation the new earth.

Anybody? If fulfilling your inner purpose is being at one with the present moment, why should anybody feel the need to remove themselves from their current work or living situation? Being at one with what is doesn't mean you no longer initiate change or become incapable of taking action.

But the motivation to take action comes from a deeper level, not from egoic wanting or fearing. Inner alignment with the present moment opens your consciousness and brings it into alignment with the whole, of which the present moment is an integral part. The whole, the totality of life, then acts through you.

What do you mean by the whole? On the one hand, the whole comprises all that exists. It is the world, or the cosmos.

But all things in existence, from microbes to human beings to galaxies, are not really separate things or entities, but form part of a web of interconnected, multidimensional processes. There are two reasons why we don't see this unity, why we see things as separate. One is perception, which reduces reality to what is accessible to us through the small range of our senses, what we can see, hear, smell, taste and touch.

But when we perceive without interpreting or mental labelling, which means without adding thought to our perceptions, we can actually still sense the deeper connectedness underneath our perception of seemingly separate things. The other more serious reason for the illusion of separateness is compulsive thinking. It is when we are trapped in incessant streams of compulsive thinking that the universe really disintegrates for us, and we lose the ability to sense the interconnectedness of all that exists.

Thinking cuts reality up into lifeless fragments. Extremely unintelligent and destructive action arises out of such a fragmented view of reality. However, there is an even deeper level to the whole than the interconnectedness of everything in existence.

At that deeper level, all things are one. It is the source, the unmanifested one life. It is the timeless intelligence that manifests as a universe unfolding in time.

The whole is made up of existence and being, the manifested and the unmanifested, the world and God. So when you become aligned with the whole, you become a conscious part of the interconnectedness of the whole and its purpose, the emergence of consciousness into this world. As a result, spontaneous helpful occurrences, chance encounters, coincidences and synchronistic events happen much more frequently.

Carl Jung called synchronicity an acausal connecting principle. This means there is no causal connection between synchronistic events on our surface level of reality. It is an outer manifestation of an underlying intelligence behind the world of appearances and a deeper connectedness that our mind cannot understand.

But we can be conscious participants in the unfolding of that intelligence, the flowering consciousness. Nature exists in a state of unconscious oneness with the whole. This, for example, is why virtually no wild animals were killed in the tsunami disaster of 2004.

Being more in touch with the totality than humans, they could sense the tsunami's approach long before it could be seen or heard and so had time to withdraw to higher terrain. Perhaps even that is looking at it from a human perspective. They probably just found themselves moving to higher terrain.

Doing this because of that is the mind's way of cutting up reality, whereas nature lives in unconscious oneness with the whole. It is our purpose and destiny to bring a new dimension into this world by living in conscious oneness with the totality and conscious alignment with universal intelligence. Can the whole use the human mind to create things or bring about situations that are in alignment with its purpose?

Yes. Whenever there is inspiration, which translates as in spirit, and enthusiasm, which means in God, there is a creative empowerment that goes far beyond what a mere person is capable of.

Okay, hi everybody, welcome to class number nine of our New Earth web series. We're here with author Eckhart Tolle, number nine, we're counting down. We're down to the last two chapters of our book and it is my most sincere hope that all of our classes so far have been leading you to find more purpose and joy in your own lives and tonight's class, tonight's lesson is really about bringing clarity to finding your inner purpose.

And so I think this is my most exciting chapter of all. I know I say that every chapter. I didn't say that last chapter and I'll tell you why in a few moments, but before we begin the class, I'm going to let you lead us in our moment of silence or moment of silence today.

Good, so we are already familiar with the silence that we start with and this time I'd like to use a very short, very powerful line from the Old Testament and I believe that this will be especially helpful for those Christians who are not quite comfortable with silence and somehow feel that silence is not compatible with Christianity or Christian teachings, which is not the case at all. Perhaps it has been overlooked in the past couple of centuries in Christianity, but it is certainly compatible. And so this is one of my favorite lines from the Old Testament and that can take us very powerfully into stillness and this line is, Be still and know that I am God.

Meaning, God is found precisely in that inner stillness, through the realm of inner stillness that you can reach what we call God, but which nobody can understand through the mind. It's a mystery, the mystery which you cannot really explain or name, which we call God, is the depth of that. We touch that when we go into stillness.

So these beautiful lines point to that inner experience. So I'll say it again and when I've said it, we just become still for a moment. Be still and know that I am God.

I love that. That's one of my favorite Bible passages. That and lead me to the rock that is higher than I.

Well, today, tonight, we're discussing chapter 9, your inner purpose. Finding your purpose is what I believe we're all put on the planet to do. So many people spend their lives trying to figure out what job to do, what to do, what to do, what to do.

I think when you figure out what your purpose is and you align the outer purpose with the inner purpose, then the job really doesn't matter. That's the essence of what you're saying in this chapter. Let us begin, page 257.

As soon as you rise above mere survival, the question of meaning and purpose becomes a paramount importance in your life. Many people feel caught up in the routines of daily living, you say, that seem to deprive their life of significance. Some believe life is passing them by or has passed them by already.

Others feel severely restricted by the demands of their job and supporting a family. Some are consumed by stress, lost in frantic doing. Many people long for the freedom and expansion that prosperity promises.

Others already enjoy the freedom that comes with prosperity and discover that even that's not enough to endow their lives with true meaning. There is no substitute for finding true purpose. So how do we do it?

[Speaker 1] (44:11 - 46:50)

Now, what you just read basically, of course, means that many people spend their lives in a state of almost permanent dissatisfaction, unfortunately. So they may be looking for some purpose or they may have given up hope that there is some purpose for them and they're just surviving or making a living. Or caught up in the doing.

Caught up in the doing, in the stress of it. And so usually when we talk about purpose, when people talk about purpose, they think of purpose in terms of future. Where am I going?

What am I supposed to do? What's the direction I'm going? What is my goal, the goal that I want to achieve?

And that, of course, is there, it has its place, but I call that the outer purpose. More fundamental than the outer purpose is what most people usually overlook. And that is the realization that what matters most is finding your inner purpose.

Now, to most people that initially doesn't mean anything, inner purpose. And this is why I explain it briefly in the dialogue that is there in that chapter where somebody asks about, I want to know what my purpose is. And I tell that person, your purpose is to be here at this moment and asking that question.

Because this is where you are. So inner purpose is aligning your life fully with the present moment. So that you are no longer out of alignment with the present moment, which leads to the state of dissatisfaction that we talked about.

That is the reality for many people. So you have to go, first of all, beyond the state of dissatisfaction that is so many people's reality. But you cannot go beyond the state of dissatisfaction through some future goal that says one day I would like to be in a state of fulfillment or satisfaction.

No, you have to enter the state of fulfillment and satisfaction by becoming one internally with the present moment. And your purpose then, your inner purpose, is that alignment with where you are right now. To be totally where you are and whatever you are doing, even if it doesn't look like the life purpose that you want for the next 30 years, whatever you are doing now, to be total in doing it.

No matter what it is, to be true to life by being true to this moment. Yeah.

[Speaker 2] (46:50 - 48:05)

As you say on page 271, there is always only this one step. And so you give it your fullest attention. This doesn't mean that you don't know where you're going.

It just means that the step that you're taking right now is primary. The destination is secondary. And what you encounter at your destination once you get there depends on the quality of this one step.

I love this so much because I discovered this when I was in the third grade. I couldn't articulate it this way in the third grade. When I was in the third grade, I turned in a book report early in Ms. Driver's class. And the reaction that I got from my third grade teacher taught me or informed me that when you do your best, when you do your best in any given moment, that is well received. Because my third grade teacher told all the other teachers in the teacher's lounge and I became known as this kid who really loved to read. And that's why we're sitting here today because of that.

But I learned in the third grade this whole process of whatever you're doing in any given moment, if you do it your best, it leads you to the next best moment. So you don't have to worry about what's the next moment coming if you only do your best in this moment.

[Speaker 1] (48:05 - 48:29)

That's right, because when the next moment comes, it comes as this moment. Right. The future, you never experience the future as the future.

You experience the future when it comes as the now because that's all there is. It's all there ever is. And that's an amazing realization for people to realize life is always just this.

It's always the now.

Yeah. It's interesting because last week we had Nick from the Bodhi Tree. And you said when Nick was up talking about he had to worry, well, you have to worry about your bills.

And you said, well, you don't have to worry about it.

[Speaker 1] (48:41 - 48:42)

You have to pay your bills.

[Speaker 2] (48:42 - 48:59)

You have to pay your bills, but you don't have to worry about paying your bills. I don't know about the rest of you, but that lesson has sort of been with me all week. So anytime I'd find myself in the mind worrying about something, I don't have to worry about this.

I can either figure out what to do about it or release that thought.

[Speaker 1] (48:59 - 49:00)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (49:00 - 49:00)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (49:00 - 49:16)

Yes. So if the bill is here but the money is not there right now, I can't do anything, put it aside. And then see what action can I take now.

And then you do whatever action you can take now. Yeah. If you can't take any action, then you just be with it.

Yeah. Right.

But I love that when I read that there is always only this one step. And so you give this one step your fullest attention. That's in the middle of page 271, everybody.

And this doesn't mean you don't know where you're going. It just means that this step is primary and the destination is secondary. And what happens is most people are living their lives as though the destination, the end.

Yes. The end is what it's all about.

[Speaker 1] (49:40 - 50:05)

As if the end were more important than the means. The means. And so the means and the end, however, are one.

Right. So if there's dissatisfaction and a denial of the present moment, which is a denial of life. Right.

You're not honoring life if you don't honor this moment by being open to this moment. Then that is how you will experience the future because the future is no more than an extension of now. Right.

[Speaker 2] (50:05 - 51:02)

You also say on page 271, the unconscious assumption behind all such action is, is that success is a future event. And that the end justifies the means. But the end and the means are one.

You say that. Let's say you're a business person after two years of intense stress and strain. You finally managed to come out with a product or service that sells well and makes money.

Success in conventional terms, yes. But in reality, you spent two years polluting your body as well as the earth with negative energy. You made everybody crazy.

Don't say that. Made everybody and everybody around you crazy and affected others you didn't even know. The unconscious assumption behind all of this action is that success is a future event and that the end justifies the means.

But the end and the means are one. And if the means did not contribute to human happiness, neither will the end. Yes.

So whatever the end result is, it's going to carry the energy of what it took to get there.

[Speaker 8] (51:02 - 51:03)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (51:03 - 51:04)

That's it. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (51:05 - 51:06)

Yes. That's exciting.

[Speaker 1] (51:06 - 51:18)

Yes. And that means you actually, you determine what kind of future you're going to experience by deciding to be totally aligned with the present moment.

[Speaker 2] (51:18 - 52:07)

That's right. It's your state of consciousness now that will determine whatever is manifested in the future. And when that happens, that'll just be now.

I got that. I got that very much. OK, so let's let's continue with this lesson before we go to Ivy a little bit.

You say the true, true or primary purpose of your life cannot be found on the outer level. To me, that's the essence of what this book is all about. Everybody who's searching and waiting for answers and looking for it on the outer level.

It does not concern what you do, but what you are, that is to say, your state of consciousness. So the most important thing to realize is this. Your life has an inner purpose and an outer purpose.

Inner purpose concerns being and is primary. Outer purpose concerns doing and is secondary. You want to elaborate on that?

So once you realize that the primary purpose of your life is this is the inner and this is what becomes the main purpose, then the secondary purpose, the outer purpose falls into place by being true to life and being true to now. Life will bring to you whatever is most appropriate. As far as your inner purpose is concerned, life will become helpful.

Suddenly, sometimes the helpful idea comes from within a sudden realization. Oh, this is what I want to do. This is what I have to do.

But the realization only came because you were aligned with the present moment.

[Speaker 2] (52:53 - 53:00)

So let's say this. Everybody, everybody who was born is alive and breathing, has an inner purpose.

[Speaker 1] (53:01 - 53:40)

Yes. The inner purpose is the same for all of humanity, which is being aligned with life, saying yes to life by saying yes to now. Aligned with the power of the present moment, which is the power of life.

That's everybody's purpose. Then the outer purpose varies from person to person. How that translates into what you do varies from person to person.

And even in one lifetime, it can vary. You may have a certain outer purpose for 10 or 20 years of your life and suddenly change completely. So that that varies and is subject to time.

It doesn't necessarily last your whole lifetime.

[Speaker 2] (53:40 - 54:04)

You say finding and living in alignment with the inner purpose is the foundation of fulfilling your outer purpose. It's the basis for true success. Without that alignment, you can still achieve certain things through effort, through struggle, through determination and sheer hard work or cunning.

But there is no joy in such endeavor and in such endeavor. And it invariably ends in some form of suffering.

[Speaker 1] (54:04 - 54:18)

Yes. That is you're struggling to make it. You're struggling and fighting and basically you're making you're fighting against life or the world.

Me against the universe is what the ego, how the ego sees it.

And isn't it sort of like swimming upstream? I always compare it to swimming upstream. When you're like going against the grain of your life, there's a flow to all of our lives.

And if you are suffering, if you are in pain, if you can't figure out what it is you're supposed to do, if you're worried, worried, worried all the time. It is because you're going against the flow or the grain of your life.

[Speaker 8] (54:41 - 54:41)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (54:41 - 54:43)

Means you're going against inner purpose.

[Speaker 8] (54:44 - 54:44)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (54:44 - 54:47)

That when you align with inner purpose, everything flows.

[Speaker 1] (54:48 - 54:48)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (54:48 - 54:48)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (54:49 - 55:13)

And any negative state, whenever negativity arises and you dwell in negative inner states, then you're not going with the flow of life. You're against the flow of life. And then you experience life as not helpful.

You experience life as even as hostile because you are in a state of inner denial. You're in a state of negativity. You're not open to life.

Okay. I got that. I really got that.

I really got that. Another friend of mine, a teacher who wrote a book called Seat of the Soul, Gary Zukav calls it, says, when the personality or ego comes to serve the energy of the soul or consciousness, we've been calling that, when the personality comes to serve the energy of the soul, that is authentic empowerment. I take that to mean from Seat of the Soul that when you align your personality or use your personality to serve the inner purpose, to serve the soul or the consciousness, then you are your most powerful.

[Speaker 1] (55:50 - 56:05)

Yes. In the world. Yes.

And then you're not run by the mind anymore because the mind becomes the servant of what I sometimes call awareness or presence. The mind then serves something greater than itself, which is the consciousness.

[Speaker 2] (56:05 - 56:34)

You say on page 259, instead of being lost in your thinking, when you are awake or aware, you recognize yourself as the awareness behind it. Thinking then ceases to be a self-serving, autonomous activity that takes possession of you and runs your life. Awareness takes over from thinking.

And instead of being in charge of your life, love this everybody, instead of being in charge of your life, thinking becomes the servant of awareness.

[Speaker 1] (56:34 - 56:42)

Yes. And then the mind is quite helpful. So the mind can be used for many wonderful things.

Right. When it no longer controls you.

[Speaker 2] (56:42 - 57:08)

I got it. So in essence, our goal on Earth as human beings, these spiritual beings in the body, higher consciousness inside this flesh-filled membranous whatever body, our goal is to allow the light of inner purpose or consciousness to come through everything that we do.

[Speaker 1] (57:08 - 57:23)

Yes. This is why we're here. And that is then also the entire universe is the purpose of the universe, one could say, is the flowering of consciousness.

Right. It moves towards more and more consciousness.

[Speaker 9] (57:24 - 57:24)

Okay.

[Speaker 1] (57:24 - 57:38)

So we then become bringers of that, which is why we are here. So then the consciousness, you could call it the light, the light of the source, the light of God comes through the human form. That's right.

[Speaker 2] (57:38 - 57:54)

And so when you allow the light of God, the light of consciousness to come through you, and it is allowed to fuel whatever it is you do, whatever it is you do will be fueled with a spiritual power that will allow you to be the best at what you do.

[Speaker 1] (57:55 - 58:14)

Yes. And then that also means that what you do is not of primary importance, but how you do what you do is what matters, how you do it. And you could be doing something that the world would regard as relatively insignificant and yet make an enormous difference to the consciousness on the planet.

[Speaker 2] (58:15 - 58:23)

Ivy is Skyping us from her living room in Richmond, Virginia. Hi, Ivy. I hear you have a question about one of my favorite quotes.

Go ahead. What is the question?

[Speaker 5] (58:23 - 59:31)

Well, my question deals with trying to find a career path that merges your inner purpose with outer purpose. And on the top of page 274, you say, Eckhart says, there may be a period of insecurity and uncertainty. And he goes on to say that if you're able to live with uncertainty, even enjoy it, you become comfortable with uncertainty.

Infinite possibilities open up in your life. And my question is this. I'm 26 years old.

And in the past few months, I've tried to find a career path that merges my inner purpose with my outer purpose and haven't really been able to do so. I began to think a lot about my life's purpose and question whether or not I would ever find a career that merged my life's work with something I was passionate about. So my question really is twofold.

The first is, how should I approach finding a career that is fulfilling but doesn't strengthen my ego? And secondly, and perhaps the more pressing question for me is, how do I do this while also becoming comfortable and embracing the uncertainty that's defining my life right now?

Good question. Yes. So to what extent have you become successful in embracing and accepting this time of your life that you don't know yet what your purpose is?

To what extent are you able to say, well, can I become comfortable with not knowing? Have you been able to do that?

[Speaker 5] (59:57 - 1:00:05)

There are periods where I've been able to, but mostly it's just a lot of thinking and feeling very uncomfortable about not knowing.

[Speaker 1] (1:00:06 - 1:02:13)

Yes. And often the uncomfortableness are certain thoughts that go through your mind that tell you that it's not okay to be in this state. And then you have certain emotions, which are the body's reaction to those thoughts.

So when these thoughts arise, they tell you it's not okay. The way you are right now is not okay. Realize that these are thoughts that arise in your mind, conditioned by the surrounding culture and so on.

And you don't necessarily need to believe in each thought that comes and tells you it's not okay not to know what to do. Life is an adventure. It's not a package tour.

When you travel, you can take a package tour and everything is already planned. There's no uncertainty. And every year you go to a nice hotel in a more exotic country, but you won't even know it's exotic because your hotel room is the same as every other hotel room.

You're totally sure that everything is planned. You know beforehand where you're going to be in ten days' time exactly. That's not an adventure and it's unlikely that you are going to evolve internally through a trip like that.

But if you went into a true trip into some exotic country, thrown back on your own resources, then you would encounter true adventure. And you would probably not be the same person when you come back. Why not?

Because we are constantly faced with uncertainty. And if you're able to accept that, you can actually enjoy the adventure. I'm giving this analogy of a trip because life is a journey.

And so the person who cannot enjoy the uncertainty when adventure comes is going to be in a continuous state of negativity, of fear. I don't want to be here. I'd rather be at home.

So realize that life is an adventure and part of the adventure of life is being in that state that you are in now. If everything were already clear to you now, everything were already mapped out, there would be no evolution of yourself as a human being.

And may I say, Ivy, that is part of what being 26 is all about. That is what 26 is. You're trying to figure it out.

That is what the 20s are for.

[Speaker 1] (1:02:25 - 1:02:57)

Yes. And another very helpful thing to remember is one of the most wonderful things in your period of life is to make mistakes. Yeah.

Because mistakes means you realize, oh, that's not that wasn't my purpose. Yes. And so you're a little bit closer to your true purpose.

And then perhaps you think, oh, maybe that is my purpose. And then after a while you realize, no, that's not. It's very helpful to make mistakes because gradually you begin to realize what it is that is right for you.

Yeah.

And many times, as Eckhart says in this chapter, Ivy, and you will find in your 20s, the 20s are about figuring out where you want to be. And there's this frustration. That's why they call that show The Young and the Restless because there's a restlessness about it.

And I know that because I've kept journals since I was 15. In my 20s, I'm just restless, restless, restless. And when I was your age, 26, I was an anchorwoman in television doing the evening news.

I hated it every single day. And what I now realize, and even then, my displeasure with being in that place every day was really informing me what I needed to do. What I needed to do was to get out of that space.

And many times, being in a space that you can clearly identify as this is, I do not want to do this. I want to be in television, I knew, but I do not want to do this. And I had my father and everybody around saying, you're going to give up that job in television?

I knew I could not do that. News felt exploitive to me. So many times, if you're in a position where you know what you don't want to do, isn't that also helpful, Eckhart?

[Speaker 1] (1:04:07 - 1:04:25)

Oh, yes, yes. For a while, I thought my life purpose was to be an academic at university. And then the realization, after years of spending time working hard to become a professor, I realized that's not my life purpose at all.

But I had to go through that.

[Speaker 2] (1:04:25 - 1:04:28)

Didn't you give up a promising career as an academic?

[Speaker 1] (1:04:28 - 1:05:53)

Yes. I gave up the PhD. I gave up the promising career.

And my relatives, my mother, thought I was insane to give that up. But I knew this is what I had to do. It was so clear.

There was no doubt about it anymore. For a little while, there was doubt, and then the realization was so strong, I had to walk out of there. And that led to a period of uncertainty.

For a few years, I didn't know what am I supposed to do with my life. Here I am. I was just barely managing to survive.

And gradually, I lived, but I was not unhappy. I was happy with the present moment then already. And then gradually, something evolved.

People started asking me questions. People that I met casually in parks. And gradually, a kind of spiritual teaching started to happen.

And after a little while, when somebody called me for the first time, Oh, you are a spiritual teacher. Oh, that's what I am. And so the purpose came by itself.

It came just out of that state of just being with what is and not being unhappy with not knowing. Being at ease with not knowing. Then, it's much more likely to come to you when you are at ease with not knowing.

So the question that you can ask yourself, can I be at ease with not knowing?

[Speaker 2] (1:05:53 - 1:06:16)

Because what you say on 274 that Ivy had mentioned earlier, you become comfortable with uncertainty. Infinite possibilities open up in your life. And it means when you become comfortable with uncertainty, it means fear is no longer a dominant factor in what you do and no longer prevents you from taking action to initiate change.

That's the big thing.

[Speaker 8] (1:06:16 - 1:06:16)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:06:16 - 1:06:26)

Because as long as you are afraid, you cannot allow the energy of what is supposed to happen to come into your life, as long as you are afraid, right? The fear blocks that.

[Speaker 1] (1:06:26 - 1:06:26)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:06:26 - 1:06:27)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (1:06:28 - 1:06:53)

So be alert and watch your mind to see what kind of thoughts it produces. Feel also there may be the emotion of fear, as Oprah says, arising occasionally, associated with a thought. Like what's going to happen to me.

Yes. Because the mind wants to know what the future is going to bring. But how dead life would be, how dreadfully boring it would be if you knew already what's going to happen.

[Speaker 2] (1:06:53 - 1:07:21)

Well, part of that is because, too, people get afraid because of, again, what Nick said. Nick is our spiritual teacher. Because of what Nick said last week about worrying about your bills because you're living outside yourself.

You're creating more debt, creating more debt, creating more debt, allowing yourself to operate from the thinking mind. Yes. At the time that you made these decisions for yourself, you were living on, practically, you said, at the poverty level.

[Speaker 1] (1:07:22 - 1:07:22)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:07:22 - 1:07:22)

So.

[Speaker 1] (1:07:23 - 1:07:38)

Yes. And so you survive somehow. You make it.

One more question before you go. Is there anything in your life that you truly enjoy? Are there certain things that you enjoy doing that may not be necessarily associated in your mind with career?

[Speaker 5] (1:07:41 - 1:07:45)

Not really. That I can think of. Nothing I can think of.

[Speaker 1] (1:07:45 - 1:07:52)

Okay. Then what's left is for you to enjoy the present moment and make that your spiritual practice. Yeah.

[Speaker 2] (1:07:53 - 1:08:03)

Okay. But I thought you were saying earlier, Ivy, about, you know, trying to align your passion, what you love, and getting paid for it. Isn't that what you were talking about earlier?

[Speaker 5] (1:08:03 - 1:08:13)

Well, something I was passionate about. To align something. To align what I'm passionate about once I figure that out.

I don't really know what that is right now.

[Speaker 2] (1:08:14 - 1:08:31)

Yeah. Well, to reiterate something that Eckhart was saying last week, it doesn't come out of your head. For everybody who's looking for that answer, for the purpose of your life, or what should I be doing, it does not come from your head.

It's not something that you're ever going to think up.

[Speaker 1] (1:08:31 - 1:08:32)

No.

[Speaker 2] (1:08:32 - 1:09:11)

You don't think it. It comes from that space that we opened tonight's session with, being still and knowing that I am God. Being still and allowing the presence of a universal energy, the presence of consciousness to come through you in such a way that it's a feeling.

It is a feeling. It is not something you're going to think up how to do it. And you will just start to feel that I feel better doing this thing than I feel doing the other thing.

It's a feeling that comes to you, not something that comes in your head.

[Speaker 1] (1:09:11 - 1:09:29)

That's right, yes. And you need to be careful that you are not in a state of dissatisfaction because when you're in dissatisfaction, the answer is not likely to come, neither from within nor from without. So keep your inner space clear, aligned with now, so that no negativity arises.

[Speaker 2] (1:09:30 - 1:10:04)

And then may I add also, for you and everybody else who's trying to get this whole idea of purpose, some clarity about that, when you allow yourself to be still with it, you're not afraid of the uncertainty. The universe rises up to meet you. Eckhart says in here, I can't remember what page in this chapter, but he talks about how coincidences happen, little things and big things happen.

So you then have to be alert and paying attention to your life so when the opening shows itself, you're ready.

[Speaker 1] (1:10:04 - 1:10:26)

Yes, and that's much more likely to come when you're in a state of clarity aligned with now than the answer can come from within or the answer can come from without. As some chance encounter, something you see in the paper, or something you can't even think where it might come from, a synchronistic event, a coincidence.

[Speaker 2] (1:10:26 - 1:10:27)

It shows itself.

[Speaker 1] (1:10:27 - 1:10:28)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:10:28 - 1:10:33)

That's right. In ways that you hadn't seen before. Thank you, Ivy, from Richmond, Virginia.

Thank you. Thank you so much.

[Speaker 8] (1:10:34 - 1:10:34)

Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (1:10:34 - 1:10:50)

So you say on 261, while you're perhaps still waiting for something significant to happen to your life, you may not realize that the most significant thing that can happen to a human being has already happened within you, the beginning of the separation process of thinking and awareness.

[Speaker 1] (1:10:51 - 1:11:18)

Which is the awakening, which is another way of explaining what the term awakening means, that before your awareness or your consciousness was totally identified with thought processes, with thinking. But now, and this is the case for everybody who reads this book and finds it meaningful. Right.

It means if you are reading this book and you find it meaningful, something within your response, it means you have already begun to awaken.

[Speaker 9] (1:11:18 - 1:11:19)

To awaken, yeah.

[Speaker 1] (1:11:19 - 1:11:24)

If you haven't, the book will be meaningless. Got it.

[Speaker 2] (1:11:24 - 1:12:03)

You say as long as you are unaware of being on 263, you will seek meaning only within the dimension of doing and the future, that is to say, the dimension of time. Whatever meaning or fulfillment you find will dissolve. Invariably, it will be destroyed by time.

And meaning, we find on that level, is true only relatively and temporary. So you're saying looking outside yourself, you're not going to find the meaning. No, that's right.

So let's go to the Beauditry Bookstore in West Hollywood. Is Nick there tonight? Well, Nick, step on up to the microphone.

You're back. So glad to see you.

[Speaker 4] (1:12:04 - 1:12:04)

Good to be here.

[Speaker 2] (1:12:05 - 1:12:07)

Okay. You have a question tonight?

[Speaker 4] (1:12:08 - 1:12:55)

I do. And actually, my question kind of relies on a premise that's not exactly stated in the book. But the premise is God is love.

And if God is love and you love what you're doing, as far as a career, then does God then sanction that career? And is it then meant to be? Is it right if, let's say, if you don't go to church, but if you enjoy doing something like reading, and if you're reading constantly and you get a more spiritual feeling from reading than ever walking into a church, then isn't that right?

Isn't that in alignment with, or is love not anything that matters in a career choice?

[Speaker 1] (1:12:56 - 1:15:37)

Well, good question. Now, love, of course, is used in a very loose sense. It means so many different things to different people.

And the expression, I love this or that, or I love doing this or that, is used casually by people, often meaning totally different things. For example, if somebody is obsessed with what they do in an ego way, totally focused, but in a negative way to a large extent, totally obsessed with what they are doing, an outside observer might say, oh, he loves what he's doing. He loves it so much that he gets up at 5 every morning and doesn't leave the office until 10 at night.

But he's totally obsessed with what he's doing, and there's no love in it. It's an obsession. But because love is used in such a loose way, sometimes we call that love.

So when you actually love what you are doing, it's a totally different energy field that moves into what you are doing. It means you are aligned completely with what you do. And then, yes, then you do bring a different consciousness.

You bring the unconditioned consciousness into this world through whatever you do. And it might be a doing, or it may just be being somewhere. You mention a church, you can find God in many places.

Any place is holy. And the present moment, when you only pay attention to it completely, then you realize actually it's sacred. The present moment is sacred when you really bring attention to it.

And then it doesn't matter where you are. You can be in a building, you can be out in nature, you can be in the middle of a traffic, and you really bring your attention to this moment and you realize there is a sacredness here. You may be able to feel it more deeply when you are out in nature than in the middle of LA freeway, but even there it can be sensed if you are present enough.

And there, that's love. There love arises. And if you are doing something and you are totally in what you do, not obsessed, not wanting the future more than you want the present, but totally wanting the present, totally wanting what you are doing, then, yes, then you love what you are doing.

That is true love. And anybody who embodies that energy is creating the new earth.

[Speaker 4] (1:15:39 - 1:15:40)

So that's correct then.

[Speaker 1] (1:15:40 - 1:15:40)

Yes.

[Speaker 4] (1:15:41 - 1:16:20)

There's a difference. I guess I'm thinking of Joseph Campbell where he talks about following your bliss, and he talks about how appetitive desires like eating and sex and drugs, things through the body, loves that come through the body, are nothing compared to the love that comes from the spirit, which makes everything else pale in comparison. And that is the bliss that Joseph Campbell talks about.

Yes. And that's what I think you mean when you say that we are present and we are doing what we are supposed to do because we feel that feeling that makes everything else pale in comparison. Yes.

Nick, that's what he's talking about at the bottom of 261. So while you're perhaps still waiting for something significant to happen in your life, you may not realize the most significant thing that can happen has already happened within you, the beginning of the separation process of thinking and awareness. When you take yourself out of your head and take yourself out of the doing, doing, doing, doing, doing, and allow yourself to connect with the consciousness or spirit or soul, whichever word you want to use for it, that is connected to all consciousness.

The spirit that is connected to the greater spirit is what he's talking about. Yes. You got it, Nick.

Thanks. It's a lot of hard work. Nick, listen, I didn't worry this week because he's told you not to worry.

Have you been worried about your bills this week?

[Speaker 1] (1:17:10 - 1:17:12)

Yeah, a little bit.

[Speaker 2] (1:17:13 - 1:17:15)

Oh, wow.

[Speaker 1] (1:17:15 - 1:18:10)

Thanks, everybody. One more thing just to add to this. When the doing, when you're doing in that state of consciousness, that means whatever you do is not primarily a means to an end.

Correct. But an end in itself. Right.

You know what you want to achieve through the doing. That's fine. But the essence of the doing is in the doing, not the goal that you want to achieve through it.

So often the question you can ask yourself is, is what I'm doing right now primarily a means to an end, or am I total in what I do? And there's a different quality flows into what you do when it is not just a means to an end. And that is doing in the state of presence, and different energy flows into that.

[Speaker 2] (1:18:10 - 1:19:00)

I love that. We're at the bottom of 263. You say, for example, if caring for your children gives meaning to your life, because everybody's looking for meaning, what happens to the meaning when they don't need you anymore and perhaps don't even listen to you anymore?

If helping others gives meaning to your life, you depend on others being worse off than yourself so that your life can continue to be meaningful and you feel good about yourself. If the desire to excel, win, or succeed, I'm at the top of 264, everybody, at this or that activity provides you with meaning, what if you never win or your winning streak comes to an end? Making it in whatever field is only meaningful as long as there are thousands or millions of others who don't make it.

So you need other human beings to fail so that your life can have meaning. I was going to ask, though, what if you're making it, you're aligned with your purpose?

[Speaker 1] (1:19:00 - 1:19:06)

Yes. Now, after that, it doesn't say that those things should not be pursued immediately after what you just read.

[Speaker 2] (1:19:06 - 1:19:22)

Yes. It says, I'm not saying here that helping others, caring for your children, or striving for excellence, in whatever field, are not worthwhile things to do. For many people, they're important.

In the end, though, you say it means you should connect them to your inner primary purpose so that a deeper meaning flows into what you do.

[Speaker 1] (1:19:22 - 1:20:33)

Yes. For example, then, if, for example, we talked about looking after your children, and that being the main purpose of your life, and again, we have the two dimensions of purpose, outer purpose, which is what a good parent does anyway, you look after the needs of the child, you protect the child as much as possible, but is the inner purpose there also? The inner purpose is there when a field of awareness arises between you and the child.

There's a space. Are you able to give the child spaciousness or space? Are you able to be open and listen to the child in a nonjudgmental way?

Are you able to be with your child? Are you able to be with your child, or are you lost in doing? Is it continuous doing, or can you bring being into your relationship with your child?

And if you bring being in, that is you're fulfilling the inner purpose. And then, when the child grows up, it's much less likely or improbable that you will get attached to your role of parent. And you will then be able to let go of the role and then be able to be whatever you need to be in any given situation.

All right. You say if you ignore your inner purpose, that's why I keep reading from the book because I think I want to stress how important it is to connect your inner purpose. If you ignore your inner purpose, bottom of 264, no matter what you do, even if it looks spiritual, the ego will creep into how you do it, and so the means will corrupt the end.

The common saying, the road to hell is paved with good intentions, points to this truth. So in other words, not your aims or your actions are primary, but the state of consciousness out of which they come. Fulfilling your primary purpose is laying the foundation for a new reality, a new earth.

Doesn't that mean that it's not just what you do, but it's the intention behind what you do it?

[Speaker 1] (1:21:17 - 1:21:52)

Yes. The consciousness that flows into what you do and there's no future is always secondary in the doing. That is, your future is not that you look forward to primarily, but totality in what you do, being totally here.

Any performer, any artist knows this very well. When you are total, then a completely different energy arises.

That's right.

[Speaker 1] (1:21:53 - 1:22:11)

I sometimes, you see, the moment the artist performs, sometimes there's an empowerment that suddenly comes in because then, it's sometimes only then that this person can be absolutely total in the present moment.

[Speaker 2] (1:22:11 - 1:22:15)

Yeah, yeah, yeah. I see that. I was with Tina Turner and Cher this weekend.

[Speaker 8] (1:22:15 - 1:22:16)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:22:16 - 1:22:56)

The show that we're doing on May 8th, everybody don't miss that, Tina Turner and Cher, and watching them in rehearsal, you know, sitting in the, you know, we're just all sitting in the bleachers and watching and then when they each came to the stage, something happened where there was like, they were infused by something from another level that you could see. Something came over them on the stage and whatever that was, this is so interesting, watching them perform, you say, I want some of that. I want some of that.

And what that is, is the presence or level of consciousness that they're bringing. Yes. Not just the beat and the rock and roll.

No.

[Speaker 2] (1:22:57 - 1:22:57)

No.

[Speaker 1] (1:22:57 - 1:23:04)

And that's also what people respond to. They go there because they can sense that there's something there that is very powerful.

[Speaker 2] (1:23:04 - 1:23:07)

Very powerful, yeah. Inspiration and enthusiasm.

[Speaker 1] (1:23:08 - 1:23:08)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:23:08 - 1:23:29)

Yeah, and you say when the combination of inspiration and enthusiasm, something happens that's bigger than one person. Yes. Yeah.

So Gwen and Bob have spent the last 17 years teaching at schools on U.S. military bases throughout Europe. They now live outside Munich, Germany, and are Skyping us from their kitchen. Hi, Gwen and Bob, from Munich.

[Speaker 9] (1:23:29 - 1:23:29)

Hi Oprah.

[Speaker 2] (1:23:30 - 1:23:34)

Hi. Hello to you all. It's the middle of the night there, early morning.

What's your question?

[Speaker 6] (1:23:35 - 1:24:28)

Well, my question is about apologizing. Reading on page 258, you say the most important thing to realize is you're like us, inner and outer purpose. And I have found that apologizing when it's the right time helps me get back in alignment.

However, when I've been wronged by someone, I expect to hear that apology to help build the relationship and get it back to a positive way. And I like feeling comfortable around others. And when there's not closure and apologies don't come, I feel very uncomfortable.

And I'm beginning to wonder if this is my ego at play and how can I maintain an inner and outer alignment when I don't feel I've had an appropriate apology from the person I expected it from.

[Speaker 2] (1:24:28 - 1:24:46)

Well, you just answered your own question, really. I'm going to let Eckhart answer that. But you just answered your own question because you just, key word here, appropriate.

I've not received the appropriate apology from people. That would be your ego that needs that appropriate apology. Take it away, Eckhart.

[Speaker 1] (1:24:48 - 1:26:09)

Mr. Tholen. And adding to that, of course, the ego, another thing the ego does, it keeps accounts and it says, you owe me. And in this case, of course, it says, you owe me an apology.

Now, this is good because this is an opportunity for you to become aware of the ego in you. So whenever the ego arises and you recognize it as the ego, it's a great opportunity of saying, oh, there's the ego. There are the thoughts that the ego produces in my mind which say, he should apologize, she should have apologized.

And another thought that comes, I can't be comfortable with this person anymore unless he or she apologizes. So you can observe the thoughts that the ego produces and you can observe the emotions that are there as a result of those thoughts. So it's a wonderful opportunity for you to see your own ego, which is no more than the human ego.

It means there's anything wrong with you. Right. But to observe the ego in action.

This is always the greatest thing. And then at that moment when you become aware of this kind of thought, emotional, mental-emotional pattern in you, who are you? When you recognize it, you're already in the space of awareness from where you recognize it.

[Speaker 2] (1:26:09 - 1:26:12)

And you take away its power. You diminish its power.

[Speaker 1] (1:26:12 - 1:26:36)

Yes. And so people, there are many reasons why people don't apologize. People don't apologize because they may not even know that there is anything to apologize in their view of things.

Or they may not apologize because their interpretation of what's happened is the complete opposite of your interpretation. And perhaps they think or their ego thinks that you should apologize. Or, or.

I like to think I do. I get it.

[Speaker 2] (1:26:41 - 1:26:55)

But also that's how you're using it based on what you're saying, based on what you've just told us here. It's your ego's way of feeling superior because you like to think you do. And you're the one that goes and says, well, I apologized and you didn't.

Or you can keep a resentment inside for quite a while. And in that resentment, whenever you think of that person or you meet that person, there's a little resentment at the back, which is also the ego. The ego loves hanging onto resentments.

And when resentments go on for a long time, as I've described somewhere in the book, they become grievances. Right. Grievances are heavy, long-term resentments.

So you can observe that in yourself and, again, be happy that you are observing, able to observe the ego in you. It's a wonderful thing to be able to do that. And, of course, and then the other person who is not apologizing, perhaps it's the ego who prevents them from apologizing because the ego in many people, this is not a particular function perhaps of your ego, but in many other people, the ego finds it almost impossible to apologize because it believes that it would be losing something by apologizing, which is, of course, a delusion.

So these things happen. It's a wonderful opportunity for you to see your own ego. And by seeing it, awareness grows in you.

That's right. Bob, what's your question for Eckhart?

[Speaker 7] (1:28:10 - 1:28:26)

Yes, on page 265, Eckhart refers to your external purpose becomes charged with spiritual power because your aims and intentions will be one with the evolutionary impulse of the universe.

[Speaker 2] (1:28:26 - 1:28:27)

I love that.

[Speaker 7] (1:28:27 - 1:28:30)

What is the evolutionary impulse of the universe?

[Speaker 2] (1:28:30 - 1:29:05)

That is so great. Let's read that one more time. Once that foundation, he says, fulfilling your primary purpose is laying the foundation for a new reality, a new earth.

Once that foundation is there, your external purpose becomes charged with spiritual power because your aims and intentions will be one with the evolutionary impulse of the universe. Thank you. Because I had written aha and did three little, I've read it three times, and I got stars, circles, everything around that.

That's great. Thank you for bringing that up, Bob. Okay.

What do you mean by that?

[Speaker 1] (1:29:05 - 1:31:09)

Now, I'm not sending you back to the book, but the answer is somewhere in the book. But I'm not sending you there now, so let's look at it. Okay.

The evolutionary purpose of the universe is the growth of consciousness. It's going towards, something is flowing into this world of so-called matter, physicality. Something is flowing into this world of physicality or matter that comes from a different dimension almost, one could say.

Well, how do I know this? Because I know it in myself. And I know it, I've observed it in other people too.

Something is flowing into this world of this heavy, it seems to be very heavy, the heaviness of matter. Something very different flows in, which I call consciousness, which you can call spirit. So, a spirit is beginning, has already started a long time ago, but now beginning more fully through the human form, amongst other forms, to come into this world more and more fully.

This is the arising of awareness, the arising of presence. And all that is part of the greater evolution because there's a famous dictum, which is so true, as above, so below. So, whatever happens here on this planet and in the human form will be reflected throughout the universe.

These are universal movements, as above, so below, as below, so above. So, what happens here in the microcosm of the earth will also be happening in the macrocosm. So, when I say, people might ask me, how do you know what the purpose of the universe is, the evolution of the universe is?

Because I know it in myself. If you know it in yourself, you know many, many answers, even about the macrocosm, because the macrocosm is no more than a reflection of the inner.

[Speaker 2] (1:31:10 - 1:31:25)

And you see it all the time in nature. Yes. You see it all the time in nature.

The whole process that's going on in nature is also going on with humans. Yes. We compare ourselves to nature.

Yes. Yeah, the principles are the same. Yeah.

Did that answer your question, Bob?

[Speaker 1] (1:31:27 - 1:31:58)

Kind of. No, you have to really know the answer. You have to go within.

It's not through the mind or through somebody like listening to me and then saying, okay, I believe what you said. I don't want anybody to believe what I said. I want people to really go within and verify within themselves whether or not that is true in their own experience.

So by becoming more conscious of your inner being, many answers will come.

Okay, let me take a stab at it, interpreting what I hear Eckhart saying. He's saying that there is a universal source or power of energy that all of us, that we all stem from that universal power or source or energy. You're with me, right?

And you can call it God. You can call it whatever you choose to call it. You can call it higher consciousness or you can call it universal energy.

You can call it the divine. When you tap into the part of you that we're calling consciousness or presence or inner purpose, when you tap into that, that is connected to the source of all universal power and energy. You're with me so far?

Yeah. Okay. And when you tap into that part of you that is connected to all universal power and energy, your aims and intentions will be one with what all universal power and energy is striving for.

And what it's striving for is for you to allow the consciousness to come through you as a human being. So that's what he means by evolutionary impulse. The impulse of the universe is to support you and you bringing about your higher consciousness.

That's why you're here, is to allow that part of you that is connected to all that is universal energy, the source or God. To better explain it, it is the God in you. When you allow the God in you to come forth, the God of all things supports that.

[Speaker 1] (1:33:53 - 1:34:08)

Yeah. And you just gave us a demonstration of that because the whole energy shifted when you spoke those words. A very powerful energy came through.

So beyond what you said, the energy that came through with it was actually a demonstration of that.

[Speaker 2] (1:34:08 - 1:34:13)

Well, thank you. That's true. Did it?

Yeah. You got it now, Bob?

[Speaker 7] (1:34:14 - 1:34:14)

Yeah.

[Speaker 2] (1:34:14 - 1:34:16)

Can I ask one more thing? Sure, sure.

[Speaker 7] (1:34:16 - 1:34:35)

Would there be a way to convey Eckhart's teachings on awareness to Christians who are probably offended by labels like evolution? Is there a way to convey this message?

[Speaker 6] (1:34:36 - 1:34:39)

Of the awakening without getting into the evolution.

[Speaker 7] (1:34:39 - 1:34:43)

To people who are going to really shut down when they hear the word evolution.

[Speaker 1] (1:34:44 - 1:35:00)

Well, if they are completely shut down, then, of course, there's no way they are going to listen to you. But not all those people are going to be completely shut down. I don't believe that evolution is necessarily a problem for all Christians.

Yeah.

[Speaker 2] (1:35:00 - 1:35:17)

And evolutionary process, the evolutionary impulse of the universe is about the evolvement as the earth. Because even as Christians, you know that the earth keeps evolving. It keeps evolving.

It keeps moving forward. We as human beings keep evolving.

[Speaker 1] (1:35:17 - 1:35:19)

You can see it in your own life.

[Speaker 2] (1:35:19 - 1:35:33)

You can see it in your own life. You're not the same as you were 25 years ago. That is your evolutionary process as Bob and Gwen here on the planet.

Bob and Gwen have evolved as Christians.

[Speaker 8] (1:35:33 - 1:35:34)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:35:34 - 1:36:43)

And even as you are a practicing Christian in the beginning of practicing Christianity, your faith may not be as strong or you may not be as tested. But you evolve in the process of your Christianity. Actually, can you ask somebody in the back to bring me the e-mail, Dean, that came in from a message board this week that the woman who talked about Father, Son, and Holy Ghost as consciousness and that there was a beautiful e-mail that came on the message board from a woman who's, you know, a practicing Christian who said that she was Catholic.

And I'm going to try to get the e-mails because she best... And I had an aha moment reading it because I thought, oh, that's right. The Holy Trinity, the Holy Spirit is the higher consciousness that you're talking about.

And you just call it consciousness. But as a Christian, it is the Holy Spirit where Jesus said, I leave you with the Holy Spirit. Yes.

You see that, right, Bob? Oh, yeah. Yeah.

[Speaker 6] (1:36:43 - 1:36:59)

It's just the use of that word sometimes puts some people off that might otherwise have the door to be awakened. And just knowing that word is in the book, they might just say, oh, I'm not quite ready to do that yet. Evolution.

Evolution.

[Speaker 1] (1:37:00 - 1:37:16)

Well, I think it will particularly put people off who take a literal, absolutely literal interpretation of Genesis. But most Christians, I believe, don't take an absolutely literal interpretation of Genesis. And they would be...

[Speaker 2] (1:37:16 - 1:37:18)

And if you do, then that's not for you.

[Speaker 1] (1:37:18 - 1:37:19)

No, that's fine.

[Speaker 2] (1:37:19 - 1:37:21)

Then this isn't the path that you need to follow.

[Speaker 1] (1:37:21 - 1:38:55)

Yes. But if you're open to the idea that the creation may not be literally true, but that there is actually, it's a description of an evolutionary process, not of blind chance. This is what Christians object to mostly.

And I also see it. It's absurd. It's not blind chance.

Evolution is not something of coming together over billions of years of atoms and molecules accidentally to bring about this beautiful universe. I do not believe that there is no guiding intelligence behind evolution. There is.

That is so obvious when you look at the world and you look at yourself. You know the famous analogy of the monkey and the typewriter? No, I don't.

Oh, they say… The famous analogy? This is to describe what evolution means by people who believe it is blind chance.

It's a mechanical, mechanistic thing that how evolution happened, all chance events. That would mean if you put a monkey at a typewriter, and this monkey is immortal, and this monkey starts hitting the keys of the typewriter and goes on for a billion years or two billion years or longer, they say if evolution as chance development is true, then eventually the monkey is going to produce by chance the works of Shakespeare over a billion years. Right.

It's not going to happen.

[Speaker 2] (1:38:55 - 1:41:36)

Right. I miss that monkey and the typewriter analogy somewhere in my college upbringing. But you see the…

Yes, I see it. I see it. He has a quote.

Bob and Gwen, can we go back to them? This is from somebody named Button 20. Did you see this last week?

No. You don't see the message boards, do you? Actually, she's Joni in Long Beach, actually.

She said, my faith was strong. Oprah, Oprah, Oprah. My faith was strong, but now it's growing stronger and stronger every day.

The words of the Bible, she said, are just jumping out at me. How could I have not seen them so clearly before? Like, be still and know that I am God.

I will not leave you alone. I will always be with you. This book, New Earth, has put into words what I've always felt from within.

As a Catholic, I can describe my faith very simply. It's based on the Holy Trinity, which is in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit. That's it in a nutshell.

The rest of the Bible is just the history lesson as to how all that came about. To say it another way, God created the world, saw what a mess we were making, sent his Son down to teach us how to live. Then Jesus said, when he knew he was going to have to leave us, I will ask my Father, and he will give you another advocate, the Holy Spirit, to be with you always, the Spirit of Truth, which the world cannot accept because it neither sees nor knows it, because it remains in you and will be in you.

John 14, 16. And here it is again, she writes. John 14, 26, 27.

The Holy Spirit, that the Father will send in my name, will teach you everything and remind you of all that I have told you. Peace I leave with you. My peace I give to you.

Not as the world gives do I give it to you. Do not let your hearts be troubled or afraid. And you know what, Oprah?

I got it this time when I read it. I really got it. People wouldn't be so afraid if they only knew that the energy flowing through their very being, which I choose to call the Holy Spirit, is the most fabulous, wireless connection to the most powerful source in the universe, the God that created us.

May God bless you and keep you safe in his grace. You're truly one of his messengers. And that's from Joni of Long Beach, California.

And she ends with, Life is a gift. Live every day as a thank you note. Very good.

Isn't that fantastic? I mean, I just thought this was so fantastic. So I'm happy to share that with you.

That's what one Christian had to say. Okay?

[Speaker 6] (1:41:38 - 1:41:39)

Thank you. It's very nice.

[Speaker 2] (1:41:39 - 1:42:11)

I thought that was great too. Joni of Long Beach. I almost Skyped her this week.

Isn't that perfection? I thought that was perfection. Thanks Gwen and Bob.

Thank you guys. Thank you. Well, shall we continue here?

You say your inner purpose is to awaken. It's as simple as that. You share that purpose with every other person on the planet because it is the purpose of humanity.

So, let's again talk about what it means to awaken. Doesn't the very word purpose imply that you can do something about it? Purpose means on purpose.

[Speaker 1] (1:42:11 - 1:42:13)

That's right. I asked that question.

[Speaker 2] (1:42:13 - 1:42:16)

You say you can't make it happen that it is an act of grace, this awakening.

[Speaker 1] (1:42:16 - 1:42:47)

Yes, and what I talk about is the first moment of awakening. It happens or it doesn't happen. The first moment, which is the disidentification from the stream of thinking and the arising.

It might only be a glimpse at first. The arising of awareness. You're suddenly becoming aware that there is a realm.

Underneath thinking, there's a realm of stillness inside you. You touch it. Maybe you're out in nature and suddenly, as you did when you were on the mountaintop.

[Speaker 2] (1:42:47 - 1:42:56)

Oh, I had another one. You know what? I had another one just Friday.

This is going to be on this Friday. But this past Friday, I was at Tom Cruise's house. You know Tom Cruise.

[Speaker 1] (1:42:57 - 1:42:57)

Not personally.

[Speaker 2] (1:42:58 - 1:42:58)

Okay.

[Speaker 1] (1:43:02 - 1:43:04)

I know he jumped on your sofa.

[Speaker 2] (1:43:04 - 1:44:41)

Oh, you even know that. Okay. You even know that.

Okay. We're going to talk about that. Now I'm jumping on his.

I'm going to give him a chance to jump on his. Anyway, Tom Cruise lives in the... I could cry just thinking about it.

He lives in the most magnificent place I have ever seen, read, heard, or experienced in my life. I tell you. I drove through his house through this grove of aspen trees for like a half mile before we get to the gate.

He lives at the top of a mountain. The house sits in the center, and you're surrounded by all the mountains of telluride. We went outside through his bedroom to stand on the balcony, and there are all these aspen trees around, and the mountains, and absolute stillness.

Absolute stillness. My eyes started to water. I've never seen anything more beautiful or felt anything so deep, so rich.

Aside from that time I was on my mountain. I said to him, first of all, what it takes to be the kind of person that comes to this, that has that as your space. He's had a lot of things going on in his life, and I said, no matter what, you have this.

You have this place to come to. My God. I felt so filled up when I left from the stillness.

[Speaker 8] (1:44:42 - 1:44:42)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:44:43 - 1:44:54)

We stood out on Tom's balcony, and I said, Tom, can you hear the silence? It has its own language. He said, yeah, you're right, it does.

It has its own language.

[Speaker 1] (1:44:55 - 1:44:56)

Was he already aware of it?

[Speaker 2] (1:44:56 - 1:45:15)

No, he was aware of it. He was aware of it, yeah. That was my moment with Tom Cruise.

That you'll get to see. Now, when you see us on television this Friday, you won't get all of that because it's all about the interview and stuff, but I had a spiritual moment with Tom at the top of the mountain.

Yeah. Well, these are wonderful moments of grace, but you don't necessarily need to be in those beautiful places. It's a great act of grace when it happens.

Yeah. But that stillness is primarily an inner dimension, and it can arise anywhere. But sometimes it's good to have experience in there where the environment is most conducive to experiencing ultimately the inner because if you don't feel it on the inner, you won't really be aware of the silence around you.

That's right. It's only through the inner that you can be aware of the outer silence. So to be aware of silence, how can you be aware of silence?

Only by being still. Yeah, yeah, yeah. Because it's only the stillness in you that is aware of the silence.

If your mind were totally occupied with noisy thinking, you wouldn't even know it's still around you. Or you would say for a moment, oh, it's very still, and then you carry on thinking. Right.

You wouldn't really experience it. So there's the equivalent of outer stillness. This is the outer dimension of spirit.

You can sense the spirit that's out there in nature, but you can only sense it because you already have it within you. It's that in you that responds, that senses it. So only people whose mind is not totally noisy can actually be aware of silence.

And so I sometimes observe, when I go for a walk in the forest every day, and often I see people who are jogging or walking their dogs, and very few are really there. They're talking on the phone, they have headphones on, they're talking to their friends, and all that immersive thinking could be anywhere, in the office.

[Speaker 2] (1:47:12 - 1:47:30)

Right. Someone asked, Eckhart, everything you say in your book resonates with my spirit, so I believe it to be true. However, do people ever ask you how you know all of this?

If so, how do you respond? Where does your knowledge come from? This is Renee in Indianapolis.

Where does your knowledge come from? How do you know what you know?

[Speaker 1] (1:47:31 - 1:48:21)

The essence of it comes through inner realization. In other words, it's by touching the consciousness that one is, that you are. It comes through becoming still and listening for what comes out of the stillness.

It's not primarily based on knowledge, although, of course, I have read spiritual books, quite a few. I use sometimes some of the terminology that is already in existence, has been in existence for a long, long time. But the book is more than just a compilation of other spiritual books that I have read.

The essence of the book is in my own realization. In other words, the answers come by being still. When I write, I sit there with a notepad, a pen, and become still.

[Speaker 2] (1:48:22 - 1:48:22)

Not on a computer?

[Speaker 1] (1:48:23 - 1:48:23)

No.

[Speaker 2] (1:48:23 - 1:48:23)

Okay.

[Speaker 1] (1:48:24 - 1:48:50)

Everything is done by hand. And then I wait for some movement of thought to come out of the stillness. And then gradually a thought formulates itself, and then there is a critical faculty that says, okay, does that make sense?

Sometimes it does, sometimes it doesn't. If it doesn't make sense, I become still again. And then perhaps a thought that is more suited to what I can sense comes up, and then I write it down.

So did you write this book from the place of inner space? Last week we talked about inner space, and I was a little frustrated until the end of the class because I was trying to get this concept of inner space across to all of our viewers and listeners. And at the end of last week's class, as we'd gone off the air here, Eckhart said, I said, remember I said to you I'm a little frustrated?

And you said, because you cannot understand it through concepts and language, that inner space isn't something you can understand with your mind.

[Speaker 1] (1:49:25 - 1:49:42)

No. So as an explanation, it's not very satisfying when one talks about inner stillness and then people try to understand, okay, what's he actually talking about? And you can see already when you're in your head, inner stillness, what's that about?

That doesn't make any sense. Of course it doesn't to the mind.

[Speaker 2] (1:49:42 - 1:49:43)

People say it's all that woo-woo stuff.

[Speaker 1] (1:49:43 - 1:50:06)

Yes, that's what some journalists often say. They come to spirituality and say, oh, it's all that stuff. They don't give themselves a chance.

You really have to give yourself a chance and see whether you can sense in yourself that to which these words point. Yes. And only then does it become real and alive.

[Speaker 2] (1:50:06 - 1:50:40)

And that is the same thing we're saying to Bob and Gwen. When Bob is trying to say, what do you mean by the evolutionary impulse of the universe? What that really means is that when you are in alignment, when your inner purpose is aligned with what you do, that you will be supported by the Spirit of God or by universal energy in such a way that life opens up to you.

And people think, oh, it's about you being lucky or, gee, isn't that strange that this happened or serendipitous things happened. Things fall into line when you are in alignment.

[Speaker 1] (1:50:41 - 1:51:11)

Yes, that they fall into line. That's one way or another. Everybody can experience that.

So why not give it a try? Live as if the present moment were more important than past and future. On a practical level, of course, you still use past and future.

But give your attention to this. Spend a few days or a few weeks living in that way. Immediately surrendering negativity when it arises and recognizing it as ego-based or pain-body based.

Because all negativity is ego-based?

Well, negativity loves ego. It's a denial of life. The moment you identify with negativity, that's part of the ego.

So experiment with... Because you've lived in one particular state of consciousness for many years, try something different and see what happens. And what happens primarily and first of all is an inner shift.

And after a little time gap sometimes, it gets reflected in the outer realm also. But that's no longer the main thing because the main thing is already that you enter that state of peaceful, alive presence in yourself when you're aligned with what is. Aligned with the now.

And that's what matters. The rest is the icing on the cake. When good things happen to you, it doesn't mean you now feel good because something good has happened to you.

Something good has happened to you because you've already found the goodness within you.

[Speaker 2] (1:52:12 - 1:52:17)

That's right. So you can only manifest that which you already are.

[Speaker 1] (1:52:17 - 1:52:50)

Yes. Yes, you already are that. Whatever people are looking for, whatever form, they already are that.

They're looking for God. And I'm not saying that this form is God. I'm not saying that this person is God.

I'm saying the essence, if you go deep enough within, there is a realm where you and God merge. And it's everybody's destiny and purpose to live from that place of connectedness.

[Speaker 2] (1:52:50 - 1:53:07)

Yes, because the I am, the I am, is I am that which comes from God. Yes. I am that which comes from God.

Laurie lives in New Brunswick, Canada, and she's Skyping us from her family room in St. John. Hello, Laurie.

[Speaker 3] (1:53:08 - 1:53:10)

Hello, Oprah. Hello, Eckhart.

[Speaker 2] (1:53:10 - 1:53:13)

Welcome to our conversation here this evening.

Thank you. It's a pleasure to be here. What do you want to say to us?

I would like to comment on the dialogue on inner purpose that begins on page 262. There are parts of that dialogue, the parts that were written in italics, that could have been me speaking word for word. In fact, those were the reasons that I think I was drawn to the book in the first place.

I turn 38 this summer, and I've had two members of my immediate family die in their mid-30s. So their deaths have left me very keenly aware of the immediacy of my own living and how important it is for me to align my life, however long it shall be, with my inner purpose and to make sure that the relationships that I have with people, my husband and my children especially, are genuine and that I conduct my life from that place of higher consciousness. So my question is, I'm so aware of how important and precious every moment of this human experience is, I don't want to waste a moment of it on anger or resentment or disappointment.

Some days I'm just more conscious than others. So I ask Eckhart, do you believe that two people can actually live in an intimate relationship with one another, either as partners or as parent and child, without wanting from one another? And do two people have to be at the same place in their spiritual awakening for this to happen?

Thank you. Thank you. Good question.

Now when I say without wanting, what I mean of course is without saying, I want you, you are my property, you must not leave me, otherwise I will get extremely angry. I'm not saying that you might not say to your partner, I want you to take out the garbage because I took it out yesterday. On a practical level, there may be some wanting.

So the question is, can two people live together without that deep psychological wanting that wants to cling to the other person, says fulfill me or make me happy, don't you dare leave me. That, right, that is the question. But I would like to change the question a little bit from can two people, because you cannot be responsible for somebody else, ask yourself the question, can I live with my partner or whoever without bringing in this unconscious energy of wanting which comes from the ego?

Can I live with a person like that? Because it only requires really one person to go through this shift in consciousness. So only you can really answer the question and it's not an abstract question, it's a question that you can only apply to the present moment, to really answer it as a live question rather than an abstract thing whether can people live in fully conscious together is an abstract question.

A more powerful and a more vital question is can I? And even that not for the rest of my life, not like that, no, now. So you bring, to find the answer, a vital answer that is true for you, you have to remember that question as you live, situations arise in your relationship, see at this moment, can I be free of that egoic wanting and needing?

And if you cannot be free at this moment of this egoic wanting and needing and because you cannot be free, negativity arises, because the partner is not responding to the wanting and needing or isn't even there, hasn't come home yet, whatever, then this is your chance again to be aware, as I meant to the other questioner a little earlier on, this is your chance to become aware of the ego in you as the wanting.

So even if the answer can I be free of wanting is no, obviously I can't because there is still wanting in me, then at least you are able to recognize the ego and that means how are you able to recognize the ego? You are becoming aware. And only when you dwell in awareness in your relationship can you be free of those unconscious movements.

Yeah, I think that wanting that you're talking about is wanting you to be a certain way to help fill me up. Yes. That's what he's talking about, not in terms of practical, I need you to pick up the laundry, I want you to pick up the milk, I want you to, that's very different than I want you to be what I want you to be so that you make me whole.

You know that whole, you know, Tom Cruise as a matter of fact, Jerry Maguire line, you complete me, wanting somebody to complete you is what he's talking about because nobody can.

[Speaker 3] (1:58:34 - 1:59:04)

Yes, I think I misinterpreted that as being wanting, you know, wanting recognition from your spouse or wanting gratitude or wanting respect or things like that. And I couldn't quite figure out how you live in an intimate relationship without wanting those things. And for me, in our, we have a busy household.

We have five little boys all under the age of nine. There's always somebody wanting something around here.

Where are you, in a closed off room somewhere? With the door locked?

[Speaker 3] (1:59:08 - 1:59:12)

I am, and it's also 10 o'clock, so they're all in bed.

[Speaker 2] (1:59:12 - 1:59:12)

Okay.

[Speaker 3] (1:59:13 - 1:59:47)

But for me, I think, and you've talked a lot about people having their own spiritual practice. And I guess for me right now, it's living amidst the chaos of the day and not getting mired down in the muck of the daily routine and being able to stay above that, being unflappable and keeping that sense of inner peace, even though it's a little bit chaotic in the immediate surrounding.

[Speaker 2] (1:59:48 - 1:59:50)

Right, with five boys under nine. Oh, my God.

[Speaker 1] (1:59:50 - 2:00:43)

It's a noisy house. Yeah, a good practice here is not wanting this moment to be different from the way it is. Just this moment.

That's where you relinquish the wanting. That is the main relinquishment or letting go of wanting. Not wanting this moment, and it's always this moment, to be different.

So if the children are screaming and there's mayhem, that's what is. And then you deal with what is. But not the internal rejection of what is.

So not wanting really deep down is not wanting this moment. This moment may come in the form of a person, your partner, the children. At this moment, this is what is.

And not wanting this moment to be different from the way it is. Then you are aligned. And then you act.

You take action. You can tell them, stop doing that. But internally, you are free.

You're not reacting internally.

Well, what about what Laurie was saying about wanting recognition? Not just from your spouse. A lot of people, you do things and you want people to recognize that you've done.

To be, you know, I don't know, admired or, you know, receive affection in your relationship. Is that your ego?

[Speaker 1] (2:01:03 - 2:01:35)

It often is. But if you believe that the world is withholding from you, I say that somewhere in the book. Yes, you say that.

Give what you think people owe you. Give it. And then you see a reciprocal movement.

Not even necessarily from the very same people you're giving it to. But the universe reciprocates. If you give recognition, gratitude, whatever it is, you give it out.

Even to strangers. Recognition, a smile, giving. So there's a flow of energy.

[Speaker 2] (2:01:35 - 2:01:43)

Because what you give out, what you put out is going to come back always. Always, always, always. That's a universal law.

Thank you, Laurie.

[Speaker 3] (2:01:44 - 2:01:44)

Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (2:01:45 - 2:01:48)

Thank you for your moment of calm with the five boys.

[Speaker 3] (2:01:48 - 2:01:51)

I'm going to miss this on Monday night.

[Speaker 2] (2:01:51 - 2:01:55)

Well, thank you very much. Is this your time for yourself?

[Speaker 3] (2:01:55 - 2:02:01)

This is. Yeah, it's great. We work hard to carve out those moments of stillness around here.

[Speaker 2] (2:02:02 - 2:02:27)

Well, we're going to continue with something we call the Soul Series on Monday nights. There's a great, great interview that I've done with Dr. Jill Bolte-Taylor. Her mind actually, as we mentioned last week, she lost the left hemisphere of her brain through a stroke.

And the right hemisphere was still working. So all of the chatter stopped. And she was in bliss.

And she said, even though I was drooling, I was drooling, she was in heaven. She was in bliss.

Yes, I haven't used the terms right and left hemisphere in the book. And I rarely use scientific terms. But that is how she sees it.

I think she's right. That's right. So the right hemisphere is to do with unity of knowing, not conceptual stillness.

[Speaker 2] (2:02:43 - 2:02:45)

She said she felt the connection to all things.

[Speaker 1] (2:02:45 - 2:02:46)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:02:46 - 2:03:35)

Yeah, from the right hemisphere. That's beautiful. So here we are at week nine.

Only one more class to go. And I bet so many people can relate to this. Many people, you say on page 262, who are going through the early stages of awakening, are no longer certain what their outer purpose is.

A woman from Milwaukee, Oregon, just wrote, can you still be 52 years old and be in the same place Ivy was at the beginning of this show, not knowing what you want to do? What drives the world, you say, no longer drives them. Seeing the madness of our civilization so clearly, they may feel somewhat alienated from the culture around them.

So what do you do in this case? If you're at this point in your life where reading this book is shaking you up and you realize more than ever what you don't want to do, you realize I have been on the wrong course. You realize you have an awakening.

Now what do you do? I'm all awakened.

[Speaker 1] (2:03:36 - 2:05:44)

Now what? Well, the awakening, of course, is the realization of your inner purpose primarily. So don't come into conflict with where you are now or what you're doing now.

If you cannot surrender to what you're doing now and be okay with it, at least bring acceptance. We talk about it in the next chapter. At least bring acceptance to whatever you're doing now so that you're okay with it.

That is vital. Then you are in a state of clarity. You enter a state of clarity when you are no longer in opposition to your present moment, life where you live or what you are doing.

If you cannot surrender, if whatever you are doing continues to produce unhappiness in you, and no matter how hard you try, then, of course, it's a clear sign that you need to leave that situation. Right. So either you let go of the resistance and see if you can.

Sometimes people say, No, I can't. But what they really mean is, No, I'm not willing to. Not willing to, which is very different.

You need to see the difference between not being able to and not being willing to. The difference is, whatever applies to you, am I not willing to accept this moment, or am I truly incapable of accepting this moment? If you find you're truly incapable of accepting this moment when you're doing your job or whatever you're doing, then this is a sign that it's time for change.

Got it. Many times you will be able to have this energy flow into what you're doing already and transform how you do perhaps what you've been doing for many years, perhaps in a state of resistance, and suddenly how you do it changes. You're no longer doing it in a state of inner resistance, and then you bring a completely different energy into what you do.

Consciousness flows into what you do. And often, either this is deeply fulfilling and it affects many people around you, or it could also happen that now that you're no longer resisting what you do, change suddenly comes into your life.

I got that. This is a beautiful quote from page 266. You say that the great arises out of small things that are honored and cared for.

Everybody's life really consists of small things. Greatness is a mental abstraction and a favorite fantasy of the ego. The paradox is that the foundation for greatness is honoring the small things of the present moment instead of pursuing the idea of greatness.

Yes. It's that one step.

[Speaker 1] (2:06:15 - 2:08:44)

That's right. So many people have this idea, I want to achieve something great or be somebody great, and they neglect the step that leads to greatness. They don't honor this step at this moment because they have this idea of some future moment where they're going to be great.

And then it's surprising when you truly look at people, perhaps, who you would say have achieved great things, that even in their life it really is a sequence of small steps because every moment is quite small. You are wherever you are at this moment. Some people believe, not to mention you, some people believe I'm doing great work.

I mean, I am because the consciousness is moving through this form. I don't feel personally responsible for what I do as such. But even there, it is small steps.

When the writing happens, there's a notepad and a pen, and there's the present moment and there's the stillness. Very small. There's not some idea, I'm going to create a work that's going to change everybody's consciousness.

No, I'm just true to this moment. This moment requires a blank piece of sheet of paper and a pen and a stillness. It's a small thing.

Or when I give a talk, maybe 2,000 people come. If I had this idea, I'm now going to give an important, big talk that would lead to stress and fear because maybe it's not going to be that great. But with every step being present, the car comes to pick me up.

If you step into the car, then I sit in the car. The car moves towards the venue where the talk is going to be. I look out of the window.

Simple. People walking past, the tree, the sky. Just this moment.

Step out. Sit in the waiting room, the green room to wait for the talk to start. Breathing.

Simple. Nothing big. Just a little moment.

This moment. Being true to that. Then step onto the stage.

There's an empty chair. I sit in it. Still.

Breathe. I know there's 2,000 people there. And I also know I have no idea what's going to come out of this mouth.

Being happy with not knowing. Still. Not big.

It's all small. It's all a sequence of very small moments. And by being true to the small moment, something great arises.

[Speaker 2] (2:08:44 - 2:09:20)

Yeah. And the biggest lesson from tonight is by being true to the small moments, by being true to this moment, it means to bring the sense of presence, the sense of consciousness to every single moment so that everything that you do is fueled from a deeper level than your ego. Everything you do is fueled from a deeper level than your thoughts.

That everything you do is fueled from your being, and that is what gives meaning and purpose to whatever you do. Yes. That's the essence.

[Speaker 1] (2:09:20 - 2:09:27)

Yes. Right. It's wonderful to see you when the power comes through.

You talk. It's beautiful. The words are so true.

Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (2:09:28 - 2:11:14)

Thank you, everybody. I want to thank you for joining us tonight. As I said, next week will be our last class on A New Earth, the finale, but we don't want the discussion to end there.

Please join me on Monday, May 12th, for the start of my Soul Series just to continue this conversation. For those of you who've been enjoying these webcasts here on Oprah.com, for the first time we'll be broadcasting the videotaped sessions of my XM radio show. It's where I get to talk to spiritual teachers.

I've been doing that for a couple of years now. I talk to spiritual teachers, thinkers, and scholars about my favorite subject, the evolution of the soul. People like Dr. Joe Bolte-Taylor, Wayne Dyer, Elizabeth Lesser, Jon Kabat-Zinn, Byron Katie, Sarah Bonbronick, Kathy Freston, and others. So keep Monday nights at 8 p.m. reserved for Oprah.com. If you can, get away from the five noisy boys, whatever's going on in your life. Tonight's class will be available on demand tomorrow for free here at Oprah.com.

And if you want to download or watch any of our classes, you can do that tomorrow also at Oprah.com and iTunes. It's free because of the generous support of nature-made soft gel vitamins. This week you can update your workbook and get ready for our last class, Chapter 10, A New Earth, How to Bring Awareness to Every Moment of Your Life.

There really is no higher calling. We're going to go for two hours next week for the benefit of wrapping up all the things we've been talking about these past 10 weeks. This was great.

Thank you. This was a good class. Thank you.

We'll see you at number 10, coming up, number 10. Bye, everybody. Thanks for your message boards.

Wasn't this great?

2008-Eckhart Tolle Oprah A New Earth Audiobook Podcast Chapter10

Chapter 10. A New Earth. Astronomers have discovered evidence to suggest that the universe came into existence 15 billion years ago, in a gigantic explosion, and has been expanding ever since.

Not only has it been expanding, but it is also growing in complexity and becoming more and more differentiated. Some scientists also postulate that this movement from unity to multiplicity will eventually become reversed. The universe will then stop expanding and begin to contract again, and finally return to the unmanifested, the inconceivable no-thingness out of which it came, and perhaps repeat the cycles of birth, expansion, contraction and death again and again.

For what purpose? Why does the universe go to all the bother of existing, asks physicist Stephen Hawking, realizing at the same time that no mathematical model could ever supply the answer. If you look within rather than only without, however, you discover that you have an inner and an outer purpose, and since you are a microcosmic reflection of the macrocosm, it follows that the universe too has an inner and outer purpose, inseparable from yours.

The outer purpose of the universe is to create form and experience the interaction of forms, the play, the dream, the drama, or whatever you choose to call it. Its inner purpose is to awaken to its formless essence. Then comes the reconciliation of outer and inner purpose, to bring that essence, consciousness, into the world of form and thereby transform the world.

The ultimate purpose of that transformation goes far beyond anything the human mind can imagine or comprehend. And yet, on this planet, at this time, that transformation is the task allotted us. That is the reconciliation of outer and inner purpose, the reconciliation of the world and God.

Before we look at what relevance the expansion and contraction of the universe has to your own life, we need to bear in mind here that nothing we say about the nature of the universe should be taken as an absolute truth. Neither concepts nor mathematical formula can explain the infinite. No thought can encapsulate the vastness of the totality.

Reality is a unified whole, but thought cuts it up into fragments. This gives rise to fundamental misperceptions, for example, that there are separate things and events, or that this is the cause of that. Every thought implies a perspective, and every perspective by its very nature implies limitation, which ultimately means that it is not true, at least not absolutely.

Only the whole is true, but the whole cannot be spoken or thought. Seen from beyond the limitations of thinking and therefore incomprehensible to the human mind, everything is happening now. All that ever has been or will be is now, outside of time, which is a mental construct.

As an illustration of relative and absolute truth, consider the sunrise and sunset. When we say the sun rises in the morning and sets in the evening, that is true, but only relatively. In absolute terms, it is false.

Only from the limited perspective of an observer on or near the planet's surface does the sun rise and set. If you were far out in space, you would see that the sun neither rises nor sets, but that it shines continuously. And yet, even after realizing that, we can continue to speak of the sunrise or sunset, still see its beauty, paint it, write poems about it, even though we now know that it is a relative rather than an absolute truth.

So let us continue to speak for a moment of another relative truth, the coming into form of the universe and its return to the formless. Which implies the limited perspective of time, and see what relevance this has to your own life. The notion of my own life is, of course, another limited perspective created by thought, another relative truth.

There is ultimately no such thing as your life, since you and life are not two, but one, your life. The coming into manifestation of the world, as well as its return to the unmanifested, its expansion and contraction, are two universal movements that we could call the outgoing and the return home. Those two movements are reflected throughout the universe in many ways, such as in the incessant expansion and contraction of your heart, as well as in the inhalation and exhalation of your breath.

They are also reflected in the cycles of sleep and wakefulness. Each night, without knowing it, you return to the unmanifested source of all life when you enter the stage of deep dreamless sleep, and then re-emerge again in the morning, replenished. Those two movements, the outgoing and the return, are also reflected in each person's life cycles.

Out of nowhere, so to speak, you suddenly appear in this world. Birth is followed by expansion. There is not only physical growth, but also growth of knowledge, activities, possessions, experiences.

Your sphere of influence expands and life becomes increasingly complex. This is a time when you are mainly concerned with finding or pursuing your outer purpose. Usually there is also a corresponding growth of the ego, which is identification with all the above things, and so your form identity becomes more and more defined.

This is also the time when outer purpose, growth, tends to become usurped by the ego, which, unlike nature, does not know when to stop in its pursuit of expansion and has a voracious appetite for more. And then, just when you thought you made it or that you belong here, the return movement begins. Perhaps people close to you begin to die, people who were a part of your world.

Then your physical form weakens. Your sphere of influence shrinks. Instead of becoming more, you now become less, and the ego reacts to this with increasing anxiety or depression.

Your world is beginning to contract, and you may find you are not in control anymore. Instead of acting upon life, life now acts upon you by slowly reducing your world. The consciousness that identified with form is now experiencing the sunset, the dissolution of form.

And then one day, you too disappear. Your armchair is still there, but instead of you sitting in it, there is just an empty space. You went back to where you came from just a few years ago.

Each person's life, each life-form in fact, represents a world, a unique way in which the universe experiences itself. And when your form dissolves, a world comes to an end, one of countless worlds. AWAKENING AND THE RETURN MOVEMENT The return movement in a person's life, the weakening or dissolution of form, whether through old age, illness, disability, loss, or some kind of personal tragedy, carries great potential for spiritual awakening, the disidentification of consciousness from form.

Since there is very little spiritual truth in our contemporary culture, not many people recognize this as an opportunity, and so when it happens to them or to someone close to them, they think there is something dreadfully wrong, something that should not be happening. There is in our civilization a great deal of ignorance about the human condition, and the more spiritually ignorant you are, the more you suffer. For many people, particularly in the West, death is no more than an abstract concept, and so they have no idea what happens to the human form when it approaches dissolution.

Most decrepit and old people are shut away in nursing homes. Dead bodies, which in some older cultures are an open display for all to see, are hidden away. Try to see a dead body, and you will find that it is virtually illegal, except if the deceased is a close family member.

In funeral homes, they even apply make-up to the face. You are only allowed to see a sanitized version of death. Since death is only an abstract concept to them, most people are totally unprepared for the dissolution of form that awaits them.

When it approaches, there is shock, incomprehension, despair, and great fear. Nothing makes sense anymore, because all the meaning and purpose that life had for them was associated with accumulating, succeeding, building, protecting, and sense gratification. It was associated with the outward movement, and identification with form, that is to say, ego.

Most people cannot conceive of any meaning when their life, their world, is being demolished. And yet, potentially, there is even deeper meaning here than in the outward movement. The onset of old age, through loss or personal tragedy, that the spiritual dimension would traditionally come into people's lives.

This is to say, their inner purpose would emerge only as their outer purpose collapsed, and the ego would begin to crack open. Such events represent the beginning of the return movement towards the dissolution of form. In most ancient cultures, there must have been an intuitive understanding of this process, which is why old people were respected and revered.

They were the repositories of wisdom and provided the dimension of depths without which no civilization can survive for long. In our civilization, which is totally identified with the outer and ignorant of the inner dimension of spirit, the word old has mainly negative connotations. It equals useless, and so we regard it as almost an insult to refer to someone as old.

To avoid the word, we use euphemisms such as elderly and senior. The first nation's grandmother is a figure of great dignity. Today's granny is, at best, cute.

Why is old considered useless? Because in old age, the emphasis shifts from doing to being, and our civilization, which is lost in doing, knows nothing of being. It asks, being?

What do you do with it? In some people, the outward movement of growth and expansion gets severely disrupted by a seemingly premature onset of the return movement, the dissolving of form. In some cases, it is a temporary disruption, in others, a permanent one.

We believe that a young child should not have to face death. But the fact is that some children do have to face the death of one or both parents through illness or accident, or even the possibility of their own death. Some children are born with disabilities that severely restrict the natural expansion of their lives, or some severe limitation comes into a person's life at a relatively young age.

The disruption of the outward movement at a time when it is not meant to be happening can also potentially bring forth an early spiritual awakening in a person. Ultimately, nothing happens that is not meant to happen, which is to say, nothing happens that is not part of the greater whole and its purpose. Thus, destruction or disruption of outer purpose can lead to finding your inner purpose and subsequently the arising of a deeper outer purpose that is aligned with the inner.

Children who have suffered greatly often grow into young adults who are mature beyond their years. What is lost on the level of form is gained on the level of essence. In the traditional figure of the blind seer or the wounded healer of ancient cultures and legend, some great loss or disability on the level of form has become an opening into spirit.

When you have had a direct experience of the unstable nature of all forms, you will likely never overvalue form again and thus lose yourself by blindly pursuing it or attaching yourself to it. The opportunity that the dissolution of form and in particular old age represents is only just beginning to be recognized in our contemporary culture. In the majority of people, that opportunity is still tragically missed because the ego identifies with the return movement just as it identified with the outward movement.

This results in a hardening of the egoic shell, a contraction rather than an opening. The diminished ego then spends the rest of its days whining or complaining, trapped in fear or anger, self-pity, guilt, blame or other negative mental-emotional states or avoidance strategies such as attachment to memories and thinking and talking about the past. When the ego is no longer identified with the return movement in a person's life, old age or approaching death becomes what it is meant to be, an opening into the realm of spirit.

I have met old people who were living embodiments of this process. They had become radiant. Their weakening forms had become transparent to the light of consciousness.

On the new earth, old age will be universally recognized and highly valued as a time for the flowering of consciousness. For those who are still lost in the outer circumstances of their lives, it will be a time of a late homecoming, when they awaken to their inner purpose. For many others, it will represent an intensification and a culmination of the awakening process.

GOING MOVEMENT The natural expansion of one's life that comes with the outward movement has traditionally been usurped by the ego and used for its own expansion. Look what I can do. I bet you can't do that, says the small child to another as he discovers the increasing strength and abilities of his body.

That is one of the ego's first attempts to enhance itself through identification with the outward movement and the concept of more than you, and to strengthen itself by diminishing others. It is, of course, only the beginning of the ego's many misperceptions. However, as your awareness increases and the ego is no longer running your life, you don't have to wait for your world to shrink or collapse through old age or personal tragedy in order for you to awaken to your inner purpose.

As the new consciousness is beginning to emerge on the planet, an increasing number of people no longer need to be shaken to have an awakening. They embrace the awakening process voluntarily, even while still engaged in the outward cycle of growth and expansion. When that cycle is no longer usurped by the ego, the spiritual dimension will come into this world through the outward movement, thought, speech, action, creation, as powerfully as through the return movement, stillness, being, and dissolution of form.

Until now, human intelligence, which is no more than a minute aspect of universal intelligence, has been distorted and misused by the ego. I call that intelligence in the service of madness. Splitting the atom requires great intelligence.

Using that intelligence for building and stockpiling atom bombs is insane or, at best, extremely unintelligent. Stupidity is relatively harmless, but intelligent stupidity is highly dangerous. This intelligent stupidity, for which one could find countless obvious examples, is threatening our survival as a species.

Without the impairment of egoic dysfunction, our intelligence comes into full alignment with the outgoing cycle of universal intelligence and its impulse to create. We become conscious participants in the creation of form. It is not we who create, but universal intelligence that creates through us.

We don't identify with what we create and so don't lose ourselves in what we do. We are learning that the act of creation may involve energy of the highest intensity, but that it is not hard work or stressful. We need to understand the difference between stress and intensity, as we shall see.

Struggle or stress is a sign that the ego has returned, as are negative reactions when we encounter obstacles. The force behind the ego's wanting creates enemies, that is to say, a reaction in the form of an opposing force equal in intensity. The stronger the ego, the stronger the sense of separateness between people.

The only actions that do not cause opposing reactions are those that are aimed at the good of all. They are inclusive, not exclusive. They join, they don't separate.

They are not for my country, but for all of humanity. Not for my religion, but the emergence of consciousness in all human beings. Not for my species, but for all sentient beings and all of nature.

We are also learning that action, although necessary, is only a secondary factor in manifesting our external reality. The primary factor in creation is consciousness. No matter how active we are, how much effort we make, our state of consciousness creates our world, and if there is no change on that inner level, no amount of action will make any difference.

We would only recreate modified versions of the same world again and again, a world that is an external reflection of the ego. Consciousness is already conscious. It is the unmanifested, the eternal.

The universe, however, is only gradually becoming conscious. Consciousness itself is timeless and therefore does not evolve. It was never born and does not die.

When consciousness becomes the manifested universe, it appears to be subject to time and to undergo an evolutionary process. No human mind is capable of comprehending fully the reason for this process, but we can glimpse it within ourselves and become a conscious participant in it. Consciousness is the intelligence, the organizing principle behind the arising of form.

Consciousness has been preparing forms for millions of years so that it can express itself through them in the manifested. Although the unmanifested realm of pure consciousness could be considered another dimension, it is not separate from this dimension of form. Form and formlessness interpenetrate.

The unmanifested flows into this dimension as awareness, inner space, presence. How does it do that? Through the human form that becomes conscious and thus fulfills its destiny.

The human form was created for this higher purpose, and millions of other forms prepared the ground for it. Consciousness incarnates into the manifested dimension, that is to say, it becomes form. When it does so, it enters a dreamlike state.

Intelligence remains, but consciousness becomes unconscious of itself. It loses itself in form, becomes identified with forms. This could be described as the descent of the divine into matter.

At that stage in the evolution of the universe, the entire outgoing movement takes place in that dreamlike state. Glimpses of awakening come only at the moment of the dissolution of an individual form, that is to say, death. And then begins the next incarnation, the next identification with form, the next individual dream that is part of the collective dream.

When the lion tears apart the body of the zebra, the consciousness that incarnated into the zebra form detaches itself from the dissolving form and, for a brief moment, awakens to its essential, immortal nature as consciousness, and then immediately falls back into sleep and reincarnates into another form. When the lion becomes old and cannot hunt anymore, as it draws its last breath, there is again the briefest of glimpses of an awakening, followed by another dream of form. On our planet, the human ego represents the final stage of universal sleep, the identification of consciousness with form.

It was a necessary stage in the evolution of consciousness. The human brain is a highly differentiated form through which consciousness enters this dimension. It contains approximately 100 billion nerve cells, called neurons, about the same number as there are stars in our galaxy, which could be seen as a macrocosmic brain.

The brain does not create consciousness, but consciousness created the brain, the most complex physical form on earth, for its expression. When the brain gets damaged, it does not mean you lose consciousness. It means consciousness can no longer use that form to enter this dimension.

You cannot lose consciousness because it is, in essence, who you are. You can only lose something that you have, but you cannot lose something that you are. Awakened doing is the outer aspect of the next stage in the evolution of consciousness on our planet.

The closer we get to the end of our present evolutionary stage, the more dysfunctional the ego becomes, in the same way that a caterpillar becomes dysfunctional just before it transforms into a butterfly. But the new consciousness is arising even as the old dissolves. We are in the midst of a momentous event in the evolution of human consciousness, but they won't be talking about it in the news tonight.

On our planet, and perhaps simultaneously in many parts of our galaxy and beyond, consciousness is awakening from the dream of form. This does not mean all forms, the world, are going to dissolve, although quite a few almost certainly will. It means consciousness can now begin to create form without losing itself in it.

It can remain conscious of itself even while it creates and experiences form. Why should it continue to create and experience form? For the enjoyment of it.

How does consciousness do that? Through awakened humans who have learned the meaning of awakened doing. Awakened doing is the alignment of your outer purpose, what you do, with your inner purpose, awakening and staying awake.

Through awakened doing, you become one with the outgoing purpose of the universe. Consciousness flows through you into this world. It flows into your thoughts and inspires them.

It flows into what you do and guides and empowers it. Not what you do, but how you do what you do determines whether you are fulfilling your destiny. And how you do what you do is determined by your state of consciousness.

A reversal of our priorities comes about when the main purpose for doing what you do becomes the doing itself, or rather, the current of consciousness that flows into what you do. That current of consciousness is what determines quality. Another way of putting it?

In any situation and in whatever you do, your state of consciousness is the primary factor. The situation and what you do is secondary. Future success is dependent upon and inseparable from the consciousness out of which the actions emanate.

That can be either the reactive force of the ego, or the alert attention of awakened consciousness. All truly successful action comes out of that field of alert attention, rather than from ego and conditioned, unconscious thinking. The Three Modalities of Awakened Doing There are three ways in which consciousness can flow into what you do and thus through you into this world.

Three modalities in which you can align your life with the creative power of the universe. Modality means the underlying energy frequency that flows into what you do and connects your actions with the awakened consciousness that is emerging into this world. What you do will be dysfunctional and of the ego, unless it arises out of one of these three modalities.

They may change during the course of a day, although one of them may be dominant during a certain stage in your life. Each modality is appropriate to certain situations. The modalities of awakened doing are acceptance, enjoyment and enthusiasm.

Each one represents a certain vibrational frequency of consciousness. You need to be vigilant to make sure that one of them operates whenever you are engaged in doing anything at all, from the most simple task to the most complex. If you are not in the state of either acceptance, enjoyment or enthusiasm, look closely and you will find that you are creating suffering for yourself and others.

Whatever you cannot enjoy doing, you can at least accept that this is what you have to do. Acceptance means, for now, this is what this situation, this moment, requires me to do, and so I do it willingly. We already spoke at length about the importance of inner acceptance of what happens, and acceptance of what you have to do is just another aspect of it.

For example, you probably won't be able to enjoy changing the flat tire on your car at night in the middle of nowhere and in pouring rain, let alone be enthusiastic about it. But you can bring acceptance to it. Performing an action in the state of acceptance means you are at peace while you do it.

That peace is a subtle energy vibration which then flows into what you do. On the surface, acceptance looks like a passive state, but in reality it is active and creative, because it brings something entirely new into this world. That peace, that subtle energy vibration, is consciousness, and one of the ways in which it enters this world is through surrendered action, one aspect of which is acceptance.

If you can neither enjoy or bring acceptance to what you do, stop. Otherwise, you are not taking responsibility for the only thing you can really take responsibility for, which also happens to be the one thing that really matters. Your state of consciousness.

And if you are not taking responsibility for your state of consciousness, you are not taking responsibility for life. Enjoyment. The peace that comes with surrendered action turns into a sense of aliveness when you actually enjoy what you are doing.

Enjoyment is the second modality of awakened doing. On the new earth, enjoyment will replace wanting as the motivating power behind people's actions. Wanting arises from the ego's delusion that you are a separate fragment that is disconnected from the power that lies behind all creation.

Through enjoyment, you link into that universal creative power itself. When you make the present moment instead of past and future the focal point of your life, your ability to enjoy what you do, and with it the quality of your life, increases dramatically. Joy is the dynamic aspect of being.

When the creative power of the universe becomes conscious of itself, it manifests as joy. You don't have to wait for something meaningful to come into your life so that you can finally enjoy what you do. There is more meaning in joy than you will ever need.

The waiting-to-start-living syndrome is one of the most common delusions of the unconscious state. Expansion and positive change on the outer level is much more likely to come into your life if you can enjoy what you are doing already, instead of waiting for some change so that you can start enjoying what you do. Don't ask your mind for permission to enjoy what you do.

All you will get is plenty of reasons why you can't enjoy it. Not now, the mind will say. Can't you see I am busy?

There's no time. Maybe tomorrow you can start enjoying. That tomorrow will never come, unless you begin enjoying what you are doing now.

When you say, I enjoy doing this or that, it is really a misperception. It makes it appear that the joy comes from what you do. But that is not the case.

Joy does not come from what you do. It flows into what you do, and thus into this world from deep within you. The misperception that joy comes from what you do is normal, and it is also dangerous because it creates the belief that joy is something that can be derived from something else, such as an activity or a thing.

You then look to the world to bring you joy, happiness. But it cannot do that. This is why many people live in constant frustration.

The world is not giving them what they think they need. Then what is the relationship between something that you do and the state of joy? You will enjoy any activity in which you are fully present, any activity that is not just a means to an end.

It isn't the action you perform that you really enjoy, but the deep sense of aliveness that flows into it. That aliveness is one with who you are. This means that when you enjoy doing something, you are really experiencing the joy of being in its dynamic aspect.

That's why anything you enjoy doing connects you with the power behind all creation. It will bring empowerment and creative expansion into your life. Make a list of a number of everyday routine activities that you perform frequently.

Include activities that you may consider uninteresting, boring, tedious, irritating or stressful. But don't include anything that you hate or detest doing. That's the case either for acceptance or for stopping what you do.

The list may include travelling to and from work, buying groceries, doing your laundry, or anything that you find tedious or stressful in your daily work. Then, whenever you are engaged in those activities, let them be a vehicle for alertness. Be absolutely present in what you do and sense the alert, alive stillness within you in the background of the activity.

You will soon find that what you do in such a state of heightened awareness, instead of being stressful, tedious or irritating, is actually becoming enjoyable. To be more precise, what you are enjoying is not really the outward action but the inner dimension of consciousness that flows into the action. This is finding the joy of being in what you are doing.

If you feel your life lacks significance or is too stressful or tedious, it is because you haven't brought that dimension into your life yet. Being conscious in what you do has not yet become your main aim. The new earth arises as more and more people discover that their main purpose in life is to bring the light of consciousness into this world and so use whatever they do as a vehicle for consciousness.

The joy of being is the joy of being conscious. Awakened consciousness then takes over from ego and begins to run your life. You may then find that an activity that you have been engaged in for a long time naturally begins to expand into something much bigger when it becomes empowered by consciousness.

Some of those people who, through creative action, enrich the lives of many others, simply do what they enjoy doing most without wanting to achieve or become anything through that activity. They may be musicians, artists, writers, scientists, teachers or builders, or they may bring into manifestation new social or business structures, enlightened businesses. Sometimes for a few years their sphere of influence remains small and then it can happen that suddenly or gradually a wave of creative empowerment flows into what they do and their activity expands beyond anything they could have imagined and touches countless others.

In addition to enjoyment, an intensity is now added to what they do and with it comes a creativity that goes beyond anything an ordinary human could accomplish. But don't let it go to your head, because up there is where a remnant of ego may be hiding. You are still an ordinary human.

What is extraordinary is what comes through you into this world. But that essence you share with all beings. The 14th century Persian poet and Sufi master Hafiz expresses this truth beautifully.

I am a hole in a flute that the Christ's breath moves through. Listen to this music. Then there is another way of creative manifestation that may come to those who remain true to their inner purpose of awakening.

Suddenly one day they know what their outer purpose is. They have a great vision, a goal, and from then on they work towards implementing that goal. Their goal or vision is usually connected in some way to something that on a smaller scale they are doing and enjoy doing already.

This is where the third modality of awakened doing arises. Enthusiasm. Enthusiasm means there is deep enjoyment in what you do plus the added element of a goal or a vision that you work towards.

When you add a goal to the enjoyment of what you do, the energy field or vibrational frequency changes. A certain degree of what we might call structural tension is now added to enjoyment. And so it turns into enthusiasm.

At the height of creative activity fueled by enthusiasm, there will be enormous intensity and energy behind what you do. You will feel like an arrow that is moving towards the target and enjoying the journey. To an onlooker, it may appear that you are under stress, but the intensity of enthusiasm has nothing to do with stress.

When you want to arrive at your goal more than you want to be doing what you are doing, you become stressed. The balance between enjoyment and structural tension is lost, and the latter has won. When there is stress, it is usually a sign that the ego has returned and you are cutting yourself off from the creative power of the universe.

Instead, there is only the force and strain of egoic wanting, and so you have to struggle and work hard to make it. Stress always diminishes both the quality and effectiveness of what you do under its influence. There is also a strong link between stress and negative emotions, such as anxiety and anger.

It is toxic to the body and is now becoming recognized as one of the main causes of the so-called degenerative diseases such as cancer and heart disease. Unlike stress, enthusiasm has a high energy frequency and so resonates with the creative power of the universe. This is why Ralph Waldo Emerson said that nothing great has ever been achieved without enthusiasm.

The word enthusiasm comes from the ancient Greek, en- and theos, meaning in God. And the related word, enthusiasain, means to be possessed by a god. With enthusiasm you will find that you don't have to do it all by yourself.

In fact, there is nothing of significance that you can do by yourself. Sustained enthusiasm brings into existence a wave of creative energy, and all you have to do then is ride the wave. Enthusiasm brings an enormous empowerment into what you do, so that all those who have not accessed that power would look upon your achievements in awe and may equate them with who you are.

You, however, know the truth that Jesus pointed to when he said, I can of my own self do nothing. Unlike egoic wanting, which creates opposition in direct proportion to the intensity of its wanting, enthusiasm never opposes. It is non-confrontational.

Its activity does not create winners and losers. It is based on inclusion, not exclusion of others. It does not need to use and manipulate people, because it is the power of creation itself and so does not need to take energy from some secondary source.

The ego's wanting always tries to take from something or someone. Enthusiasm gives out of its own abundance. When enthusiasm encounters obstacles in the form of adverse situations or uncooperative people, it never attacks but walks around them Enthusiasm, or, by yielding or embracing, turns the opposing energy into a helpful one, the foe into a friend.

Enthusiasm and the ego cannot coexist. One implies the absence of the other. Enthusiasm knows where it is going, but at the same time it is deeply at one with the present moment, the source of its aliveness, its joy and its power.

Enthusiasm wants nothing because it lacks nothing. It is at one with life, and no matter how dynamic the enthusiasm-inspired activities are, you don't lose yourself in them. And there remains always a still but intensely alive space at the center of the wheel, a core of peace in the midst of activity that is both the source of all and untouched by it all.

Through enthusiasm you enter into full alignment with the outgoing creative principle of the universe, but without identifying with its creations, that is to say, without ego. No attachment, one of the great sources of suffering. Once a wave of creative energy has passed, structural tension diminishes again and joy in what you are doing remains.

Nobody can live in enthusiasm all the time. A new wave of creative energy may come later and lead to renewed enthusiasm. When the return movement towards the dissolution of form sets in, enthusiasm no longer serves you.

Enthusiasm belongs to the outgoing cycle of life. It is only through surrender that you can align yourself with the return movement, the journey home. To sum up, enjoyment of what you are doing combined with a goal or vision that you work towards becomes enthusiasm.

Even though you have a goal, what you are doing in the present moment needs to remain the focal point of your attention. Otherwise you will fall out of alignment with universal purpose. Make sure your vision or goal is not an inflated image of yourself and therefore a concealed form of ego.

Such as wanting to become a movie star, a famous writer, or a wealthy entrepreneur. Also make sure your goal is not focused on having this or that, such as a mansion by the sea, your own company, or ten million dollars in the bank. An enlarged image of yourself or a vision of yourself having this or that are all static goals and therefore don't empower you.

Instead, make sure your goals are dynamic, that is to say, point towards an activity that you are engaged in and through which you are connected to other human beings as well as to the whole. Instead of seeing yourself as a famous actor and writer and so on, see yourself inspiring countless people with your work and enriching their lives. Feel how that activity enriches or deepens not only your life but that of countless others.

Feel yourself being an opening through which energy flows from the unmanifested source of all life through you for the benefit of all. All this implies that your goal or vision is then already a reality within you on the level of mind and of feeling. Enthusiasm is the power that transfers the mental blueprint into the physical dimension.

That is the creative use of mind and that is why there is no wanting involved. You cannot manifest what you want, you can only manifest what you already have. You may get what you want through hard work and stress but that is not the way of the new earth.

Jesus gave the key to the creative use of mind and to the conscious manifestation of form when he said, Whatever you ask in prayer, believe that you have received it and it will be yours. The outward movement into form does not express itself with equal intensity in all people. Some feel a strong urge to build, create, become involved, achieve, make an impact upon the world.

If they are unconscious, their ego will, of course, take over and use the energy of the outgoing cycle for its own purposes. This, however, also greatly reduces the flow of creative energy available to them and increasingly they need to rely on efforting to get what they want. If they are conscious, those people in whom the outward movement is strong will be highly creative.

Others, after the natural expansion that comes with growing up has run its course, lead an outwardly unremarkable, seemingly more passive and relatively uneventful existence. They are more inward looking by nature and for them the outward movement into form is minimal. They would rather return home than go out.

They have no desire to get strongly involved in or change the world. If they have any ambitions, they usually don't go beyond finding something to do that gives them a degree of independence. Some of them find it hard to fit into this world.

Some are lucky enough to find a protective niche where they can lead a relatively sheltered life, a job that provides them with a regular income or a small business of their own. Some may feel drawn towards living in a spiritual community or monastery. Others may become dropouts and live on the margins of a society they feel they have little in common with.

Some turn to drugs because they find living in this world too painful. Others eventually become healers or spiritual teachers, that is to say, teachers of being. They would probably have been called contemplatives.

There is no place for them, it seems, in our contemporary civilization. On the arising new earth, however, their role is just as vital as that of the creators, the doers, the reformers. Their function is to anchor the frequency of the new consciousness on this planet.

I call them the frequency holders. They are here to generate consciousness through the activities of daily life, through their interactions with others, as well as through just being. In this way, they endow the seemingly insignificant with profound meaning.

Their task is to bring spacious stillness into this world by being absolutely present in whatever they do. There is consciousness and therefore quality in what they do, even the simplest task. Their purpose is to do everything in a sacred manner.

As each human being is an integral part of the collective human consciousness, they affect the world much more deeply than is visible on the surface of their lives. The new earth is no utopia. Is the notion of a new earth not just another utopian vision?

Not at all. All utopian visions have this in common. The mental projection of a future time when all will be well, we will be saved, there will be peace and harmony and the end of our problems.

There have been many such utopian visions. Some ended in disappointment, others in disaster. At the core of all utopian visions lies one of the main structural dysfunctions of the old consciousness.

Looking to the future for salvation. The only existence the future actually has is as a thought form in your mind. So when you look to the future for salvation, you are unconsciously looking to your own mind for salvation.

You are trapped in form, and that is ego. And I saw a new heaven and a new earth, writes the biblical prophet. The foundation for a new earth is a new heaven, the awakened consciousness.

The earth, external reality, is only its outer reflection. The arising of a new heaven and by implication a new earth are not future events that are going to make us free. Nothing is going to make us free because only the present moment can make us free.

That realization is the awakening. Awakening as a future event has no meaning because awakening is the realization of presence. So the new heaven, the awakened consciousness, is not a future state to be achieved.

A new heaven and a new earth are arising within you at this moment. And if they are not arising at this moment, they are no more than a thought in your head, and therefore not arising at all. What did Jesus tell his disciples?

Heaven is right here in the midst of you. In the Sermon on the Mount, Jesus makes a prediction that to this day few people have understood. He says, Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth.

In modern versions of the Bible, meek is translated as humble. Who are the meek or the humble, and what does it mean that they shall inherit the earth? The meek are the egoless.

They are those who have awakened to their essential true nature as consciousness and recognize that essence in all others, all life forms. They live in the surrendered state and so feel their oneness with the whole and the source. They embody the awakened consciousness that is changing all aspects of life on our planet, including nature, because life on earth is inseparable from the human consciousness that perceives and interacts with it.

That is the sense in which the meek will inherit the earth. A new species is arising on the planet. It is arising now, and you are it.

I'm coming to you with a special two-hour finale of our New Earth webcast series. For ten weeks we've all met every Monday night for a global conversation. It's been really quite special, a global conversation about consciousness from the UK to Hong Kong, Russia to all 50 states here in America.

I just again want to say thank you to every one of you for helping us to create this new earth here with Eckhart Tolle and with me. So many of you have written to say that you want this forum to continue, so beginning next Monday, May 12th, I hope you'll join me for the start of my soul series webcast here on Oprah.com. For the first time we'll be broadcasting the videotaped sessions of my XM radio show.

Many of you didn't know I have a radio show. Yeah, I have a day job, a night job, a middle job. It's where I get to talk to spiritual teachers and have been doing so for quite some time.

Spiritual teachers and thinkers and scholars about this, my favorite subject, the evolution of our soul. So keep Monday's reserved for Oprah.com. You can begin downloading next Monday.

Tonight's the last chapter, chapter 10 of A New Earth. And before we get started, let's begin with silence.

[Speaker 1] (56:41 - 56:41)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (56:42 - 56:43)

Would you like to lead us, sir?

[Speaker 1] (56:43 - 57:55)

A moment of stillness. Now, as you know, you need to put your attention somewhere in order to find the stillness. Attention needs to move out of the dimension of thinking.

So we have practiced in the past with putting our attention into the inner feeling of aliveness in the body. We've also, I believe, put our attention on our breath and we've put our attention on sense perceptions, whatever we can see or hear outside. But this time we go one step further and I suggest this is a little bit more subtle.

As we enter this moment of stillness, we put our attention on the fact that we are conscious. In other words, we become aware that there is a light in us. I'm using light metaphorically.

A presence, a space of awareness that is pure attention. So instead of being aware of something, our breath or the inner body or sense perceptions, let's just be aware that we are aware. You feel your own presence and become still.

[Speaker 12] (57:55 - 58:56)

Let's be aware that we are aware and become still. That was good.

[Speaker 2] (58:57 - 1:01:09)

I think even Dean, the stage manager, became aware. He was aware. Right, Dean?

The themes of Chapter 10 are truly the culmination, I think, of what all of our work has been about. How to bring consciousness to every moment and to every action of our lives. And in the process, learning that we are far greater than anything that we could have imagined ourselves to be.

So we're going to get started. You talk about the brief history of your life on page 282. The coming into manifestation of the world as its return to the unmanifested, its expansion and contraction.

On the previous page, you talked about the Earth expanding, the universe really expanding and contracting. Those two movements are reflected throughout the universe in many ways, such as in the incessant expansion and contraction of our heart, as well as the inhaling and exhaling of our breath. They're also reflected in the cycles of sleep and wakefulness.

Each night without knowing it, I love this, you return to the unmanifested, capital S, source of all life, when you enter the stage of deep dreamless sleep and then reemerge again in the morning replenished. Those two movements, the outgoing and return, are also reflected in each person's life cycles. Out of nowhere, so to speak, you suddenly appear in this world.

Birth is followed by expansion. There's not only physical growth, but also growth of knowledge and activities and possessions. This is a time when you're mainly concerned with finding or pursuing your outer purpose.

Each person's life, each life form, in fact, represents a world, a unique way in which the universe experiences itself. And when your form dissolves, a world comes to an end out of countless worlds. I thought that was so beautiful.

That's the bottom of page 283, everybody. Each person's life, each life form, in fact, represents a world, a unique way in which the universe experiences itself. So we are manifestations of the universe experiencing itself as each of us.

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (1:01:09 - 1:01:35)

And that takes you out of this illusion that all you are is this limited little person. On the surface of things, you are this person with a name and a form, but in the depths of your being, you are the universe experiencing itself in this form. And just this thought brings about a little shift in the way in which you perceive yourself.

[Speaker 2] (1:01:35 - 1:01:36)

And everybody else.

[Speaker 1] (1:01:36 - 1:01:37)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:01:38 - 1:01:49)

We are the universe, or the source of all life, or the creator, or God, whichever name you choose to use, expressing itself in our particular form.

[Speaker 1] (1:01:49 - 1:02:07)

Yes, in and through this form. So there's not... People usually perceive themselves as being this is me, and there's the universe, or the world, and there's the me and the rest of the world.

But you are the universe. You are the life. We're not separate.

[Speaker 2] (1:02:08 - 1:02:34)

Each person's life, each life form represents a world, a unique way in which the universe experiences itself. And when your form dissolves, a world comes to an end, one of countless worlds. Wow, that's really powerful.

So let's talk about the awakening and the return movement. What is the return movement in a person's life?

[Speaker 1] (1:02:35 - 1:03:57)

Usually you start off with the outward movement as you grow up, and as you go into adolescence and adulthood. You start building your life. You acquire experiences.

You acquire knowledge. You acquire possessions. Your sphere of influence extends.

So that's the expansion. You grow. And usually that goes up to a certain age.

It varies from person to person. I talk about it also. Unless this period of expansion is interrupted by some traumatic event, we can come to that a little bit later.

So there's the expansion, and then when people reach a certain age, suddenly a different movement starts, thinks the body is no longer as strong, not working so well anymore. People around you begin to die. They reach a certain age.

And so there's another movement that at some point comes into people's lives, which we could call the dissolution of form. It's gradually happening. And in our culture, we don't like to talk about that.

And this is why most old people are hidden away in homes. You rarely see. You have to go to third world countries to really see the reality of human life.

[Speaker 2] (1:03:58 - 1:04:08)

And also we have such a fear of it, and not just a fear, a disdain for it. So we do everything to make ourselves look younger. Everything is about looking younger, being younger, younger, younger, younger.

[Speaker 1] (1:04:08 - 1:05:53)

Yes. Now the return movement is also where the spiritual dimension can come into your life very strongly, when the form with which perhaps for many years you had been identified, which is the physical form, and the form of my life, all the things that you had built up and identified with, your job, your status, your profession, your possessions. And when that begins to become a little bit shaky, then it is very often at that point that there's the possibility for the spiritual dimension to come into your life, when the solidity of the outer forms becomes diminished.

Right. So traditionally, there's still the, in India for example, there's still a tradition when a man reaches a certain age, he withdraws from society. Sometimes even, some people still practice it, but not so many these days.

He even leaves his family if he knows that his family is being looked after. He leaves and becomes a solitary mendicant or monk in order to go deeply within. But you don't need to do that.

All we need to be aware is that when the return movement starts, when the forms that you had identified with begin to break down, that is a wonderful time for going back home, for the return movement into spirituality, so that you become aware of your own consciousness, rather than what consciousness had identified with that was your life before.

You mean form.

[Speaker 1] (1:05:54 - 1:05:55)

Form, yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:05:55 - 1:05:59)

And so it's sort of the return back to formlessness.

[Speaker 1] (1:05:59 - 1:06:57)

Yes, but consciously. It's a conscious return to see what is the source of my very being. You could say when the world begins to become shaky, then you go back to the source out of which it all came, which is God ultimately, God within, the source within.

So there are these two movements in a person's life. Now in our civilization, the whole civilization, the outgoing and the return. Now our civilization is only interested, it seems, in the outgoing movement.

People are interested in accumulating, in building up, in creating, making a life for yourself, being successful. Of course that has its place. That's fine.

What our civilization knows very little about is the return movement.

You say then one day, you too disappear. Your armchair is still there, but instead of you sitting in it, there's just an empty space. You went back to where you came from from just a few years ago.

Each person's life, each person's life is a form of self. And when your form dissolves, a world comes to an end, one of countless worlds. A return movement in a person's life, the weakening or dissolution of form, whether through old age, illness, disability, loss or some kind of personal tragedy, carries great potential for spiritual awakening.

That's why you say some older people become sort of luminescent.

[Speaker 1] (1:07:33 - 1:08:01)

Yes. Some and others for example, and so negative inner states arise, people become angry or bitter or complain all the time or talk about the past all the time, then they resist whatís happening.

[Speaker 2] (1:08:02 - 1:08:09)

Yeah, because they canít accept, which weíre going to talk about those three modalities, acceptance, enjoyment and enthusiasm.

[Speaker 1] (1:08:09 - 1:08:18)

So here comes the acceptance of, when old age approaches, the acceptance that this can be also very beautiful if youíre open to that.

You say because in old age the emphasis, the top of 286 everybody, because in old age the emphasis shifts from doing to being, and our civilization which is lost in doing knows nothing of being. It asks being, ìWhat do you do with that?î What do you do with it? But the older you get, the more conscious you become that being is of more value to you than doing.

And the whole point of A New Earth is for everybody to realize no matter what age you are, that being is of more value to us than doing, and that itís only the being that you bring into your doing that matters.

[Speaker 1] (1:09:01 - 1:09:15)

Yes, and you donít have to wait for old age for this to happen. You can become conscious of this at any age, and then the way in which you interact with the world is very different.

[Speaker 2] (1:09:16 - 1:09:50)

Right, 287, ìWhen the ego is no longer identified with the return movement in a personís life, old age or approaching death becomes what itís meant to be, an opening into the realm of spirit.î And many times, obviously, you donít have to approach death in order to open into the realm of spirit, as so many of you have told us in your message boards, that this whole book is about opening to the realm of spirit, okay? You say, ìIn a new earth, on our new earth, old age will be universally recognized and highly valued as a time for the flowering of consciousness.î

Yes, in a way we lost it because that was already there in ancient cultures where old age was greatly honored, for example, in the Native American culture, a grandmother is a, when somebody is called a grandmother, itís a title of great distinction and everybody has great respect for the grandmother because the grandmother embodies that wisdom, not only wisdom, she also embodies the opening into the realm of spirit. The elder of a tribe, for example, they embody the opening into the realm of spirit and through those old people, everybody can contact that realm, so itís very vital to have that.

We lost it and now we are going to find that again, where old age is honored rather than looked down upon. So thereís the grandmother, and I mention in the book, you have the grandmother of the Native American. In our civilization, you have the granny, and I say the granny at best is cute, but thereís no depth to that, to how we perceive it.

Because we donít honor. No, that dimension has virtually disappeared from our civilization, the dimension of depth, the dimension of spirit, the dimension of the sacred, which is so vital for human life.

[Speaker 2] (1:11:14 - 1:11:23)

And what kind of effect does that have on us, not honoring that age and that which is sacred within the age and the depth of that, what kind of effect does that have on us?

[Speaker 1] (1:11:23 - 1:11:51)

Well, it means the whole dimension of spirit, which is lost, so all our life becomes completely superficial, and when life becomes completely superficial, you are identified with the surface movement of your life, and because of that lack of depth, people become very unhappy, because thereís only the surface of their life, possessions, achieving this or that, getting recognition. And role-playing. Role-playing.

[Speaker 2] (1:11:51 - 1:12:00)

And also what you call on page 289, I like this, ìintelligent stupidity.î Yes. ìIntelligent stupidity.î Yes. Tell us what you mean by that.

[Speaker 1] (1:12:00 - 1:12:32)

Well, an example I give is, you need great intelligence to split the atom, to do that, but then what do we do with that? We make an atom bomb, a destructive weapon, out of something that could be a wonderful thing. So on the one hand, humans seem very intelligent, and then what they do with that intelligence very often is extremely stupid, and it becomes destructive.

[Speaker 2] (1:12:32 - 1:12:36)

Because thatís where ìintelligent stupidityî comes in.

[Speaker 1] (1:12:36 - 1:12:53)

Yes, and thatís because the dimension of spirit is missing. Intelligence that is not connected to the deeper dimension of awareness or spirit, whatever you want to call it. And being.

Yes. Is very destructive. Right.

Sooner or later, it becomes destructive.

[Speaker 2] (1:12:54 - 1:13:29)

Yes. I love what you say on page 290. This is, you know, Iíve read the book now several times, thatís why this should be your new summer read, everybody, because when you go back and read it again, you will find things that you didnít experience the first time.

Repeated readings, very helpful. Or the second time. Yes.

Or the third time. This is what I got, just yesterday I was reading it once again, this chapter. Struggle or stress is a sign that the ego has returned, as are negative reactions when we encounter obstacles.

So whenever you encounter obstacles in your life, it is because your ego is forefront, at the forefront.

[Speaker 1] (1:13:29 - 1:13:40)

Yes. It doesnít mean that you donít encounter challenges in your life, but to make them into, if you consider a challenge an obstacle that you need to fight against, that means the ego is there.

Right. This is 290. The force behind the egoís wanting creates enemies.

That is to say, reaction in the form of an opposing force, equal in intensity. Thatís what an enemy is. The stronger the ego, the stronger the sense of separateness between people.

The only actions, this is one of my favorite quotes, I love this, the only, see Iíve underlined this a few times, the only actions that do not cause opposing reactions are those that are aimed at the good of all.

[Speaker 1] (1:14:10 - 1:14:32)

Yes. So you no longer separate yourself and say this is, this is my, you consider in whatever you do, you consider the totality or the whole, not just my little needs, but how do I fit into the totality. And so then, this is no longer karmic action which produces suffering.

Right.

[Speaker 2] (1:14:32 - 1:14:58)

Weíre also learning that action, although necessary, is only a secondary factor in manifesting our external reality. The primary factor in creation is consciousness. No matter how active we are, I love this, how much effort we make, our state of consciousness creates our world.

And if thereís no change on that inner level, no amount of action will make any difference.

[Speaker 1] (1:14:58 - 1:15:22)

Yes. In other words, what you do is always secondary. Who you are is primary.

And that means not who you are in the eyes of the world or who you are in whatever image you might have about yourself, but whether you are connected within yourself with that dimension of being, spirit or consciousness.

[Speaker 2] (1:15:22 - 1:15:39)

You say it beautifully, 294, ìItís not what you do, but how you do what you do determines whether or not you are fulfilling your destiny.î Yes. Itís not what you do, but how you do it. And by that you mean the amount of presence or consciousness you bring to whatever you do.

[Speaker 1] (1:15:39 - 1:16:29)

Yes. Another aspect of that is whether whatever you are doing at any given moment, even the most, what the mind would say, insignificant thing, are you doing it in presence or is it just a means to an end because you want to get to some future moment? Right.

Just a simple example you could give, you can go to a restaurant and the way in which the waiter puts the plate on your table can be present and conscious and immediately you would be affected by that. Sometimes it happens that you have a waiter who is conscious and with care and attention he or she puts the plate in front of you. Right.

And you can sense a very different energy from a waiter who is just doing his or her job and he just puts it down.

[Speaker 2] (1:16:29 - 1:16:37)

And thatís in every aspect, thatís going through the toll booth, thatís picking up your laundry, thatís standing in line for french fries, thatís everything.

[Speaker 1] (1:16:37 - 1:16:37)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:16:37 - 1:16:40)

People either bring their presence or they donít.

[Speaker 1] (1:16:40 - 1:16:58)

Yes. And often itís a useful thing to remember to check inside yourself to see whether you are making, whatever you are doing at this moment, whether it is primarily a means to an end because you want to get somewhere else through what you are doing or whether you are giving it your fullest attention.

[Speaker 2] (1:16:58 - 1:17:06)

I think youíre going to have a generation of children growing up with unconscious parents because I recognize this with myself, Iíve been guilty of it since the Blackberries.

[Speaker 1] (1:17:06 - 1:17:07)

Yes. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:17:08 - 1:17:16)

If youíre riding in a car with friends or youíre any place with friends, everybody instead of talking now, everybodyís on their Blackberries to see who else is calling.

[Speaker 1] (1:17:16 - 1:17:19)

Yes, Iíve been wondering what they are doing when they go like that.

[Speaker 2] (1:17:19 - 1:17:28)

Oh, this is where everybodyís writing, everybody, youíre writing, instead of talking to the people who are there with you, youíre writing to the people who are not there to see what they have to say. Thatís what everybodyís doing.

Oh, yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:17:29 - 1:17:37)

And many times people are now on their cell phones or theyíre on their Blackberries and their kids are coming into the room and nobody ever even looks up.

[Speaker 1] (1:17:37 - 1:18:02)

And youíre not experiencing reality that is around you, youíre not experiencing the fullness of life around you and what youíre experiencing is a mental abstraction which is little letters that youíre putting in there, itís just mental abstraction. Youíre not even communicating truly with the person that youíre sending the message to because the communication is two or three times removed, youíre just sending little ciphers to them.

Okay. Well, weíre going to get into the three modalities of awakening where you say that unless you are at any given time having acceptance, enjoyment or enthusiasm for whatever youíre doing, you should stop doing it. Yes.

Because if youíre not accepting the moment, enjoying the moment or having enthusiasm for the moment, then you are in one way or another causing suffering.

Yes, itís a dysfunctional state, youíre in a dysfunctional state, youíre not aligned with the present moment, youíre not aligned with yourself, youíre not aligned with life. Completely dysfunctional and then you generate psychic disharmony around you. You make yourself unhappy, already youíre unhappy when youíre notÖ Because you canít accept the present moment.

And the unhappiness spreads because when youíre unhappy, others around you, you make them unhappy too. It spreads like a disease.

[Speaker 2] (1:18:53 - 1:19:56)

Well, I think, you know, as we here are already in Chapter 10, one of the biggest issues that Iíve heard so many people talk about, and last week a friend of mine started emailing me saying that how, you know, that she was following the classes and that itís very easy to have this resonate with you, but then when you have to go out into the world and actually deal with people, that it starts to get difficult. And that friend is Skyping us today who is an actress who played my daughter in the movie Beloved.

Oh. Yes. Sheís my baby girl.

Kimberly Elise played my baby girl. Hello, Kimberly. Hi.

Hi. Whoís been reading the book. Kimberlyís been reading the book and following the webcast and I was trying to email back and forth explaining this in email and as Eckhart says, emails are, you know, not a full form of communication when youíre trying to express these ideas.

So, go at it, Kimberly.

[Speaker 4] (1:19:57 - 1:21:41)

Okay. So, yes, as I was telling Oprah, itís been really exciting and enlightening to discuss in theory all the different concepts and ideas in the book and itís been attainable here in this loving cocoon which I live in and my book club members live in, but once you go out into the real world and have real life situations, youíre presented with a lot of challenges because not everybodyís read the book, not everybodyís on this journey, not everybody is striving to evolve or have awareness. A simple example, one of the book club members works for a very egotistical boss and is very sort of pushed and has unrealistic demands put upon her and sheís managed to sort of pull herself above it, become witness to the ego sheís dealing with and the ego within herself and as a consequence, sheís been perceived as sort of lax and dispassionate and disengaged in everything thatís going around because everybody else is so in the drama and she feels her job could be at stake because sheís being viewed this way. Thatís an example. So, my question is, if weíre in the process of evolving our state of consciousness, moving away from our egos and getting closer to our true selves, how do we manage, how, how, how do we manage to maintain this level of elevation when youíre forced in the real world to live and work with people who come from a strictly egotistical place and donít understand this awareness level and really can perceive you as being weak?

[Speaker 2] (1:21:43 - 1:21:47)

Good question. Good. Now letís hear what Eckhart has to say.

[Speaker 4] (1:21:49 - 1:21:50)

Okay.

[Speaker 1] (1:21:50 - 1:24:04)

So, you, we are gradually learning to live from a different state of consciousness. Now you cannot expect to be necessarily to be a master when you meet difficult people and already to be fully in that state of presence. Itís a gradual process where you bring presence into your life and as you invite presence into your life and at first donít even, donít even practice with the difficult boss, but leave him alone for a while.

First you invite presence into your life with small things. When youíre at home, one little movement, making tea, making, opening the curtains as you get up, looking out of the window without any judgment, just perceiving the light, the clouds. Bring as much as possible presence into your life in simple situations.

When you get into your car, you get in, close the door, be quiet for 20 seconds, 30 seconds, feel the inner body. Many opportunities are there whenever youíre waiting. I talk about that in both books, I believe.

Whenever youíre waiting for something or someone, drop the waiting and be present, be fully there, fully alert, fully accepting of that moment rather than wanting some other moment. So, and gradually you grow in presence power or presence power grows in you. And when as presence power grows in you, you can begin to apply it to slightly challenging situations which normally would have triggered, for example, some slight irritation.

And there you can observe, oh, thereís the old reaction as youíre waiting in line at the supermarket and you can see the irritation with the cashier or whoever is there ahead of you. And you can immediately be aware of that and see, well, it has no useful function, it does nothing except make me unhappy, and you can then let go of it and be clear and free and present at that moment.

[Speaker 2] (1:24:05 - 1:24:22)

Yeah, I think too, Kim, that one of the things that we all want when you read this and you feel so great, itís like sort of being, you know, when you feel so enthusiastic and you want everybody to get it as you get it, itís like developing a, like developing spiritual muscle.

[Speaker 11] (1:24:23 - 1:24:23)

Yes.

Itís like developing spiritual muscle. You canít go out and lift, you know, the 50-pound weight unless you have also lifted the 25-pound weight and the 10-pound weight. And so you have to start developing the muscle with things that you are more comfortable with.

And once youíve developed a strong enough muscle, the bosses become, the unruly bosses become easier to handle. In the beginning, you just canít say, Iím going to go out, Iím going to apply this principle and expect it to work, because you have to have the inner strength in which to deal with it. And also it comes from a greater awareness, I think, having had unruly bosses in my early years, it comes from a greater awareness of what your real purpose in life is.

I remember being in Baltimore in the early days of my career, having a boss who was a complete jerk, who was just a complete jerk. Iíd like to use another word for it, but Iíll just leave it at that.

[Speaker 1] (1:25:28 - 1:25:30)

Of course, thatís not his true self, but itís almost.

[Speaker 2] (1:25:30 - 1:25:30)

Okay.

[Speaker 1] (1:25:31 - 1:25:31)

Heavy overlay.

[Speaker 2] (1:25:31 - 1:26:13)

Having a boss whose true self was love and innocence and had a wonderful presence, but theÖ Heavy overlay. Heavy overlay was the, the ego self that he showed daily was a complete jerk. Something inside me knew I wasnít going to be here forever, there forever.

Power. I knew that I could tolerate it, I could deal with it, I could handle it, I could, you know, my place in it was not, I knew he ultimately had no power over me, that I needed to do what was necessary for this particular time in my life. But inside myself I knew, trouble donít last always, and I will not, this is not going to be the course of my life.

This too will pass.

[Speaker 2] (1:26:14 - 1:26:49)

This too will pass! I knew that this too will pass, and so I could go into the space every day doing what needed to be done, as perhaps maybe your friend needs to do, doing what needs to be done, and could do the thing that everybody else couldnít understand. I could offer, give that person what they thought they needed.

I could give them, I could create the space for them to be an even, to show themselves, to be whoever their ego at that particular time, you know, wanted to be. You see what Iím saying?

[Speaker 4] (1:26:50 - 1:27:01)

I do. I do. So as youíre, as youíre at that higher level of awareness, youíre able to look at a situation and see it as just a situation, but not your entire life.

[Speaker 2] (1:27:01 - 1:27:11)

Not my entire, not your entire life, because that person, ultimately I knew, Iím going to be here for a time, I need to learn this much here, and then Iím going to be gone.

[Speaker 4] (1:27:11 - 1:27:23)

And do you believe that there are just some people in this lifetime who will not get to this level of awareness, and that you just really have to focus on yourself?

[Speaker 2] (1:27:23 - 1:27:33)

Yeah, but thatís what I said to you, thatís what I was saying to you in the email, thatís not your job to worry about what other people are going to do. Your only role is to be, is to concern yourself with yourself. Isnít that true?

[Speaker 1] (1:27:34 - 1:27:34)

Yes. Oh, yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:27:34 - 1:27:34)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (1:27:35 - 1:27:35)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:27:35 - 1:27:36)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (1:27:36 - 1:28:19)

So, in one thing, as we said, and Oprah called it ìspiritual muscle,î and I called it ìgrowing in presence power,î itís the same thing, so presence builds up gradually. In the meantime, you can still practice, even in difficult situations, it might sometimes work even if your spiritual muscle is not yet highly developed, if you can remember just a little pointer, a little phrase, ìAm I able to accept this moment as it is?î And if this moment comes in the form of this obnoxious person, then the question is, ìCan I accept this obnoxious person at this moment?î

Can I accept this obnoxious person at this moment?

[Speaker 1] (1:28:21 - 1:28:25)

Because whatever arises in the present moment, can I be the space for this?

[Speaker 2] (1:28:26 - 1:28:41)

Yeah, and if youíre able to remove your ego from it, if youíre able to take your ego out of it, then it becomes just what it is, what you were saying, Kim, it becomes just another situation. If you can take your ego out of it, or your friend take the ego out of it, so itís not personal.

[Speaker 13] (1:28:41 - 1:28:42)

No.

[Speaker 2] (1:28:42 - 1:28:46)

Itís not personal at all. No. Yeah.

Thatís what I learned how to do.

[Speaker 4] (1:28:46 - 1:28:53)

So we can really take these opportunities that are so challenging as little gifts and opportunities to grow ourselves.

[Speaker 2] (1:28:53 - 1:29:27)

Not only that, it is the true, that is the spiritual path. You know, we talked at a previous class about how everybody has their cross to bear, and the truth is that when you confront an obnoxious boss or in difficult situations, therein lies your opportunity to build a spiritual muscle. Yes.

To build or create or allow presence to come through in a way that you get to show who you are, instead of being worried about what the other person is doing.

[Speaker 1] (1:29:27 - 1:29:46)

Yes. So difficult people or ego-controlled people have a very important spiritual function in this world. Eventually, they will become so unhappy that they will also go beyond that, but in the meantime, they are there as practice material for others.

[Speaker 2] (1:29:47 - 1:29:51)

Thatís right, because if everything was wonderful all the time, you would have no practice, no way to practice.

[Speaker 1] (1:29:51 - 1:29:52)

There would be no growth.

[Speaker 4] (1:29:52 - 1:29:54)

Thatís a good way to look at it.

[Speaker 2] (1:29:54 - 1:30:28)

Hey, I love your house, Kim. I hadnít seen your new house. How nice.

I know, you havenít. I know. Do you have a dog?

Oh my God, you have a dog and a fireplace? Very cool. Yeah.

Very cool, BG. Talk to you soon. Bye.

Bye. Very nice. Very interesting about the practicing of the spiritual muscle.

Yes. Now, notice when I was calling my former boss a jerk, and you said, ìThatís not who you never encountered obnoxious people in your life?î No, you do encounter obnoxious people.

[Speaker 1] (1:30:29 - 1:30:34)

Itís a question of lookingÖ Do you have only love for them? Not necessarily.

[Speaker 2] (1:30:34 - 1:30:35)

Okay, good.

[Speaker 1] (1:30:35 - 1:30:35)

No.

[Speaker 2] (1:30:36 - 1:30:38)

Okay. But itís a question of what? Did you say?

[Speaker 1] (1:30:39 - 1:31:03)

Of whether one is able to look through this overlay of ego or heavy pain body, which can be very strong, whether youíre able to go through that. Itís very hard to describe this process. When you are not judging the person mentally, not calling him or her anything, you still know that this person is obnoxious.

Yes. You know that.

[Speaker 11] (1:31:03 - 1:31:03)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (1:31:03 - 1:31:27)

You still know that this person is controlled by the ego. You know it even without formulating a concept in your mind. But you also know that beyond there is a beingÖ Right.

That is pure and innocent and as close to God as anybody.

[Speaker 2] (1:31:28 - 1:31:29)

As anybody.

SoÖ Okay. Is it possible to look through the ego in others?

[Speaker 2] (1:31:35 - 1:31:39)

Yeah, but Eckhart, you still donít have to want to deal with that person.

[Speaker 1] (1:31:39 - 1:31:41)

No. You may want to remove yourself.

[Speaker 2] (1:31:41 - 1:31:42)

Right.

[Speaker 1] (1:31:42 - 1:31:47)

And if that is possible, then that often is the best thing to do.

[Speaker 2] (1:31:47 - 1:31:55)

Thatís right. Because you can still say, ìI can bless you in your beingnessÖî Yes. ìÖbut what youíre showing me now is not what I want to deal with.î No.

[Speaker 1] (1:31:55 - 1:32:30)

Or you can walk out of a job if itís insane. The environment is insane. And the more present you are, the more certain you will beÖ About what to do.

About what to do. Absolutely. But we talked about this in one of the sessions, the realization of what you have to do comes from a powerful but peaceful place where youíre present.

Thatís right. So when youíre walking out of the office, youíre not walking out in anger when it comes through presence. Youíre walking out, youíre peaceful with everybody and say, ìThatís it.

Iím walking out of here.î Thatís it. Thereís power but no negativity.

[Speaker 2] (1:32:31 - 1:32:31)

I got that.

[Speaker 1] (1:32:32 - 1:32:35)

I got that. So itís beautiful when that happens.

[Speaker 2] (1:32:35 - 1:32:45)

When to say, ìI have had enough.î Yes. ìI have had enough.î And that comes from your inner purposeÖ Yes. As opposed to your outerÖ Yes.

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (1:32:45 - 1:33:07)

Now there may be other situations when youíre forced, for some reason youíre forced intoÖ Now, an extreme example is that youíre in an elevator and you getÖ the elevator gets stuckÖ Right. And there you are with an obnoxious person for one hour in the elevator. Or some people are stuck with somebody for some reason.

They canít go, leave the situation. Youíre maybe in the prison cell.

[Speaker 2] (1:33:07 - 1:33:13)

Or lots of people are inÖ they have to keep jobsÖ Yes. Where they are dealing with bosses who are obnoxious.

Thatís right.

[Speaker 2] (1:33:14 - 1:33:19)

Yeah. As we just heard Kimberly say. You have to keep a job.

You have to earn a living for yourself and your family.

[Speaker 1] (1:33:19 - 1:33:26)

Yes. And thereís a question of accepting that this is where this person is at without getting into reactivity.

[Speaker 2] (1:33:26 - 1:33:27)

And resisting it.

[Speaker 1] (1:33:27 - 1:33:29)

Resisting it. Right. Yeah.

[Speaker 2] (1:33:29 - 1:33:31)

I did it the right way.

[Speaker 1] (1:33:31 - 1:33:31)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:33:31 - 1:33:50)

Because I was in that situation for quite a long time. And literally just accepted it. And I would have friends say, ìHow can you put up with that?

How can you tolerate that?î Because I know, ìThis too shall pass.î And soÖ ìTrouble doesnít last always.î Intuitively you did that. Intuitively I knew that I wasnít going to be there forever.

[Speaker 1] (1:33:50 - 1:34:09)

I remember the same reading your friend Maria Shriver wrote a book and she describes her earlyÖ some of her early bosses dreadfulÖ Yes, yes. But somehow she was able to just say, ìThatís how it is.î She also knew she was going to be there for the rest of her lifeÖ She was going to be there forever. But for the time being, she kind ofÖ This is what I need to do.

Accepted and yes.

Thatís right. Kippy is an American who teaches gifted students at an elementary school on a U.S. Air Force base outside Tokyo, Japan. And sheís Skyping us from her home office with a reading group she started after hearing about our web classes.

How do you say ìhelloî in Japanese? Is it konnichiwa? Konnichiwa!

Konnichiwa!

[Speaker 1] (1:34:33 - 1:34:33)

Konnichiwa!

[Speaker 2] (1:34:34 - 1:34:34)

Konnichiwa!

[Speaker 1] (1:34:35 - 1:34:38)

And the same to you? Mushimushi.

Mushimushi.

[Speaker 1] (1:34:39 - 1:34:40)

Only on the telephone.

[Speaker 2] (1:34:41 - 1:34:44)

All right, Kippy, letís start with you. What is your question?

[Speaker 9] (1:34:45 - 1:35:05)

Okay. Eckhart, on page 301 you wrote, ìEnthusiasm means there is a deep enjoyment in what you do plus the added element of a goal or vision that you work toward.î My question is, is how can we have goals or visions if we are to always remain in the present?

Good question.

[Speaker 1] (1:35:07 - 1:35:09)

Good, yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:35:09 - 1:35:09)

Good question.

[Speaker 1] (1:35:09 - 1:35:10)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:35:10 - 1:35:11)

Thank you.

[Speaker 1] (1:35:12 - 1:37:51)

So the goal or vision when itísÖ is inside you as if it were already a reality. And in fact on some level it is a reality inside you already. So a trueÖ a goal that is powerful when youíre in touch with your own power is not a goal that you project yourself mentally to and say, ìI would like to achieve this or that at some future point.

I need that. I want that to complete myself.î Youíre reaching out towards that goal. Youíre losing yourself.

Youíre not present. But if you areÖ if you realize that whatever vision you hold is already a reality inside you, I give an example now, ìThe Power of Now.î Before I ever wrote the book, I had this vision of that that book was already on some level already there, had already been written. And so I felt all Iím doing is Iím externalizing whatís already there.

But I had this strong inner feeling that the book already exists inside me. I saw that it as a reality already. I didnít try to achieve writing a book.

The book was already there and all then I had to do was be open to this energy movement coming from within to manifest what was already there on a deeper level. And thatís why Jesus said, ìWhenever you ask for anything, believe that you already have received it and it will be yours.î So if you believe that you already have received it, it means it must already be a reality inside yourself so youíre not coming from lack or scarcity or neediness because then youíre notÖ thereís no power behind your vision or your goal. Youíre already coming from fullness.

So the goal is already a reality inside. You already feel as if you had it. Itís already a reality and what you feel about it is the fullness that is already there in the present moment.

And then you donít lose yourself, then you are fully there as you begin to respond to this inner impulse. You manifest it in your life, in the present moment. So itís not a future thing really.

A powerful goal when you visualize, a powerful goal is youíre not visualizing in order to achieve something in the future, youíre visualizing in order to bring something out thatís already inside you.

[Speaker 2] (1:37:52 - 1:38:36)

Wow. Thatís powerful but I can understand why a lot of people would be confused by it because then how do you ever achieve anything in the future? Isnít that what youíre saying too, Kippy?

Right, right. How do you ever achieve anything in the future? Say, I want to be an actress.

There are a lot of people I know at the Bodhi Tree who weíre going to talk to later. A lot of people at the Bodhi Tree who have day jobs where they really want, I want to be an actress. Thatís a future goal, I want to be an actor or an actress.

Or I want to get a job working for a major corporation. How do youÖ how can you not hold that as a vision for yourself?

[Speaker 1] (1:38:36 - 1:39:12)

You can. But what youíre visualizing is not yourself in some future state. The power that is there inside you that will manifest externally in time and in the future is already there.

Get in touch with the power. What would it feel like if you were an actress already successful? What does that feel like inside you?

And where does the power come from with which you can make a difference in peopleís lives when you are doing something like that? Where does the power reside?

[Speaker 2] (1:39:12 - 1:39:21)

Yeah, because you say, instead of saying, ìI want to be a great actress,î is, ìHow do I use this talent to manifest in such a way that causes people to feel a certain way?î Yes. Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (1:39:22 - 1:39:47)

Yes. So itís already a reality inside you. And then you can take steps towards implementing that.

But it comes from fullness rather than neediness. The mistake is not finding the place of power that is in the present moment and believing that something else that is not in the present moment is going to bring you to the place of power. Okay.

It wonít.

[Speaker 2] (1:39:47 - 1:41:02)

Okay. I just got it, Kipi. I just got it.

I just got it. What heís saying is, is that whatever goal that you have or vision that you have must come from the place of being or consciousness. And if it comes from a place of being or consciousness and not as an external goal that you have for yourselfóI think Iím getting it right, right?óif it comes from being or consciousness, then it comes through you out into the world instead of you reaching out into the world saying, ìThis is what I want for myself.î Yes. And so all thingsóand I can use the example of myself. I have always wanted to do exactly what Iím doing here with all of you tonight. Iíve always felt that deep inside me this is what I was meant to do.

I was meant to be a teacher. I was meant to use television as a platform for helping people to better know themselves. And whenóand knowing that, knowing that deep inside myself is what has helped bring this into fruition this wayó Yes.óinstead of saying, you know, ìOne day I want to have a webcast and have a million people on the webcast.î Yes. Yes. You see what Iím saying? Yes.

[Speaker 9] (1:41:03 - 1:41:04)

I do. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:41:04 - 1:41:35)

That it comes from the inner part of you. Thereís a feeling that comes from the consciousness part of yourself, the being of yourself that says, ìThis is what I now need to do.î And thatís why youíre saying it doesnít matter what you do. No.

Itís how you do what you do. Mm-hmm. And it doesnít matter what you do.

Everything that you do has to be fueled by consciousness or the spirit of God, which is another way of saying itó Mm-hmm.óby consciousness or the spirit of God. Otherwise it has no real meaning in your life.

[Speaker 1] (1:41:35 - 1:41:43)

Yes. And the place of power is in the present moment. Thatís the vital thing is you can only touch that power in the present moment.

Thatís right.

So if youíre notó And so you said last week itís about this stepó This. step today that it takes to get to the next step, then the next step, and the next step, and the next step. Yes.

You donít get there by thinkingó No.

[Speaker 1] (1:41:56 - 1:42:24)

Let me, you knowó And even if youíre doing something at the moment that life has given you that doesnít seem to be part of your visionó Your vision. Letís say youíre working in a restaurant, but your vision is being a great artistó Right.ómanifesting. You still need to honor whatever it is that youíre doing at this momentó Right.ófully and completely because it may, in some way, it may arise out of that. That may also be part of it.

Thatís right.

[Speaker 2] (1:42:25 - 1:42:33)

Because every step leads you to the direction. Itís the means and not the endó Yes.óthat counts. Yes.

The means and not the end.

[Speaker 1] (1:42:33 - 1:42:33)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:42:34 - 1:42:36)

You follow that, right, Kip? I do.

[Speaker 9] (1:42:36 - 1:42:37)

Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (1:42:37 - 1:42:40)

Anybody else want to say anything there? Hi, ladies.

[Speaker 11] (1:42:42 - 1:42:43)

Hi.

[Speaker 2] (1:42:43 - 1:42:46)

What time is it in Tokyo right now? Is it another day already?

[Speaker 9] (1:42:47 - 1:42:48)

Itís already, yes.

[Speaker 11] (1:42:48 - 1:42:51)

We are living on Tuesday. Yes. Tuesday morning.

[Speaker 2] (1:42:52 - 1:42:53)

Oh, Tuesday. Ten to five.

[Speaker 1] (1:42:54 - 1:43:02)

Well, so in Tokyo, itís tomorrow. Itís not the now. So, thisóTokyoó That card made her funny.

[Speaker 9] (1:43:04 - 1:43:06)

And youíll have beautiful weather tomorrow.

[Speaker 2] (1:43:07 - 1:43:13)

Oh, okay. Tokyo, itís tomorrow. Itís not now.

All right. Thank you guys so much. Thank you.

[Speaker 11] (1:43:13 - 1:43:14)

Thank you. Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (1:43:14 - 1:43:43)

Wow, thatís interesting because everything always comes back to that same point of whatever sense of presence or being, Holy Spirit, Spirit of God, whatever you choose to call it, name, because it doesnít have an ego, so it doesnít get hung up on what itís being called, that when you bring that into your life, it fuels everything that you do, and as you said last week, the evolutionary impulse of the universe rises up to meet you.

[Speaker 1] (1:43:43 - 1:44:22)

Yes. Yes. And so the question to ask yourself, itís a very simple question, am I okay with the present moment?

You need to be deeply okay with the present moment to find the power of the present moment, which is your own power, or the power of the universe, or the power of God. Am I okay? If youíre not okay with the present moment, letís say youíre working in a restaurant, but while youíre working in the restaurant you would rather be somewhere else, youíre not empowered.

Youíre only empowered that even while youíre working in the restaurant, and for some people thatís their life purpose, to work in a restaurant and to spread that presence through whatever they do, the people they meet there, thatís beautiful.

Yes, and what youíre saying in this book is that whatever you do, wherever you do, whatever you do, can have deep meaning and purpose to it, and for the rest of the world, if you bring your presence to it. Yes.

[Speaker 11] (1:44:38 - 1:44:38)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (1:44:38 - 1:44:46)

And we all have encountered that, the difference between people, whether itís a waiter, or the toll booth operator, or, you knowÖ Yes.

[Speaker 1] (1:44:47 - 1:44:47)

Enormous.

[Speaker 2] (1:44:47 - 1:45:10)

Yes, in every one of our life circumstances. Okay, Elzbieta is joining us from Poland. Did I pronounce your name correctly tonight?

Very well, yes, Elzbieta, hello. Elzbieta, where sheís been downloading all of the webcasts. Hello?

Is it Jyn Dubré? Hello? Can you hear me?

Yes.

[Speaker 5] (1:45:11 - 1:45:25)

Yes, I can. Oh, fantastic. I want to thank you both for this extraordinary webcast, the greatest book club Iíve ever seen.

Well, thank you. Thank you.

[Speaker 11] (1:45:25 - 1:45:26)

Whatís your question?

[Speaker 5] (1:45:27 - 1:45:37)

Iíd like to ask Eckhart to comment on a certain quote from a philosopher, Alan Watts, if I may?

[Speaker 1] (1:45:37 - 1:45:39)

Yes, please, go ahead.

[Speaker 5] (1:45:40 - 1:46:10)

Later I will also have a question, if possible. Go ahead. Okay, go ahead.

There is a certain pause, thatís why itís a little strange. So, the quote is from the book on the taboo against knowing who you are. ìThe most strongly enforced of all known taboos is the taboo against knowing who or what you really are, behind the mask of your apparently separate, independent and isolated ego.î Could you please comment on that?

Well, the taboo is not a taboo thatísÖ itís not called a taboo, but our civilization is ignorant of that dimension. And our civilization, to a large extent, is still run by the ego. And the ego does not want to know about the deeper dimension of spirit.

It feels threatened by that. The ego likes, perhaps, to have an ideology and call that spiritual. It has a certain rigid belief system and says that is spiritual, and identifies with that and calls other people enemies or evil who donít agree with that belief system.

But, so the ego feels threatened by the spiritual dimension within the human being. And it will do unconsciously anything to sabotage the arising of the spiritual dimension in our culture, in civilization or in human beings. And so you see, these are unconscious reactions.

Some people say that what we are doing is evil. These are unconscious reactions, again, by the ego to protect itself.

[Speaker 2] (1:47:27 - 1:47:31)

Wow. You mean, some people say what weíre doing here is evil.

[Speaker 1] (1:47:31 - 1:48:01)

Yes. Yeah. I donít know how it is possible, because bringing people to a greater presence and to a peaceful way to live, how that can be evil, I donít know.

But somehow they work it out in their minds. That this is evil. Yeah.

And so this is an unspoken taboo. There are no laws against spirituality, but the taboo is unspoken. Itís underneath the surface of things.

And the taboo has been created by the egoic civilizations that we inhabit.

[Speaker 5] (1:48:02 - 1:48:26)

Thank you. Yes, thatís very clear to me too. But I think that even though Alan Watts wrote it, I donít know, 30, 40 years ago, it still rings true, unfortunately.

So my question actually is, for those who misinterpret your teachings, could you clarify, do you consider your teachings to be a religion?

[Speaker 1] (1:48:28 - 1:49:34)

Certainly not. Itís not a religion. It is spiritual, which means this teaching, the truth of it, can be applied within any religion or within no religion.

The teaching is in essence spiritual. Itís not based on belief systems. Itís not based on thoughts.

Itís based on becoming present and still. And whether you are a Muslim or a Christian or a Buddhist orÖ Atheist? Atheist, it can be applied in your life.

The transformation of consciousness does not depend on your belief system. But it is possible, of course, if you have a rigid belief system, it can stop you fromÖ The belief system can sabotage the transformation. But it does not depend, the transformation does not depend on whatever belief system you have.

Certain belief systems are so rigid that they represent a barrier.

What do you say to those people though? I mean, I think that was one of the questions that somebody has tonight about other people who think that what you have written and what we have done here in communicating with people around the world about what youíve written is evil. What do you say to that?

[Speaker 1] (1:49:53 - 1:50:12)

Well, probably most of them have never looked at the book. Right. And many of them probably have never listened in to the webcast.

Right, right. So, because if they truly read a few pages in the book, they would see that thereís absolutely nothing that could be interpreted as evil.

[Speaker 2] (1:50:13 - 1:50:16)

As evil. Thank you, Elzbieta. Thank you so much.

[Speaker 5] (1:50:17 - 1:51:11)

I agree, absolutely. Oprah, can I also share one ìahaî moment? Sure, please.

Show an ìahaî. Share an ìahaî. Yes, please.

That would go back to the first chapter on page 12, where Eckhart writes about fear, greed or the desire for power are not the dysfunction, but are created by the dysfunction, which is a deep-seated collective delusion that lies within the mind of each human being. End of quote. I think that this is aÖ Well, thereís lots of great stuff in the book, and thereís an ìahaî almost on every page, but this one is very important, I think, because it seems to me seeing through the delusion can onlyÖ when we can see through the delusion, can we be really free of fear, greed and desire for power, which we all share, Iím afraid.

Thank you, Elzbieta. Thank you for sharing that all the way from Poland tonight. Thank you so much.

[Speaker 13] (1:51:16 - 1:51:16)

Thank you very much.

[Speaker 2] (1:51:16 - 1:51:17)

Thank you so much.

[Speaker 13] (1:51:17 - 1:51:18)

Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (1:51:18 - 1:51:29)

Beth from Green Bay, Wisconsin, sent in an email that caught my attention a few weeks back. I thought itíd be great to Skype with her for this last chapter. Hi, Beth.

Hi, Oprah. Hi.

Hi.

[Speaker 2] (1:51:30 - 1:51:33)

Why donít you read us your email? Okay.

[Speaker 6] (1:51:36 - 1:52:13)

Okay, I emailed in, ìIíve been working on this too shall pass, and Iíve noticed itís much easier to accept that this is my own life situation than it is for the worldís life situation. For example, I canít be cavalier about teenagers beating each other for video content on the Internet, I canít condone 13-year-old girls having spiritual weddings to much older men, and I cannot just accept that human beings will be tortured and killed for having a different religion, nationality, or skin color. Why is it so much easier to say thatís no big deal for me than it is for the rest of the world?

Why canít I let go of this global anger?î You have global anger.

Thatís a good word.

[Speaker 2] (1:52:14 - 1:52:16)

Thatís a good word for it.

[Speaker 1] (1:52:16 - 1:52:17)

Many people have that.

[Speaker 2] (1:52:17 - 1:52:22)

I was going to say, you can be angry for a very long time if youíre going to carry that around, but go ahead.

[Speaker 1] (1:52:23 - 1:52:34)

So have you already dropped anger on a personal level in your own life, being angry at people around you that you experience personally?

[Speaker 6] (1:52:35 - 1:52:51)

Very rarely do I get angry at anyone else anymore. Mostly itís my kids, but thatís just part of their growing up. Iím able to see that, why theyíre doing what theyíre doing, and have some compassion for them.

Itís just on a larger scale.

[Speaker 1] (1:52:52 - 1:55:01)

Yes, compassion. That is an important word. I also noticed in your question you used the word ìcondone,î which perhaps may be synonymous in your mind with acceptance.

Condone means to say itís okay to behave in such a way, that this is not what acceptance is about. Acceptance is to simply see what is, and to say this is what is right now. This is how these humans behave.

This is what theyíre doing right now. This is what is. And no matter what you think or how you judge that, you cannot argue with the fact that this is what is.

And thatís all acceptance is. It doesnít mean itís okay, I condone it, thereís nothing wrong with it. Itís to come to an inner acceptance of the is-ness of life right now.

And then you can look, and then you can see, once you have come to an acceptance of what is, you also see that, yes, it is mad, you can see it is mad. You can come to a place of compassion when you see that all these people are unconscious. They donít know what they are doing.

So, and then you can see evil, I mean thereís vast amounts of evil still happening on the planet, which means suffering that humans are inflicting on other humans, on other life forms, on the planet itself, on nature. All that you can see as manifestations of ignorance, spiritual ignorance, unconsciousness, ego, collective ego. And so once you see that, you can come to a place of compassion for those people who are still controlled by ego and who are acting unconsciously.

[Speaker 2] (1:55:01 - 1:56:08)

And also, doesnít it come to that phrase about accepting the things you cannot change, changing the things you can, and having the wisdom to know the difference. And the truth of everything that weíve been saying in these past two weeks, Beth, for you and everyone else, is that you begin to change the world by first changing yourself. And so the anger, all of us are putting energy into the world.

All of us are putting energy out into the world. And you raise the level of consciousness when you bring consciousness and presence to whatever it is you do. Thatís how you begin to change the world.

In your home, right now, what room are you in right now? This is a spare bedroom. We call it the home office.

Okay. In your home office, with your children, in your actions every day, being less angry in your personal life really helps diffuse it in the rest of the world. And people donít see that as a big deal, but if everybody did that, it would be diminished.

Yes. You are connected on an unseen level with all other humans. Thatís right.

And whatever energy you put out contributes to that particular vibration in the collective energy field of humanity. Correct. So if youíre putting out anger, then that connects with all the collective anger that is floating around on the planet, which is vast.

Uh-huh. It connects and feeds the collective anger.

[Speaker 2] (1:56:38 - 1:57:09)

Yes. And so isnít each of us, isnít it for each of us, weíre asked to do that which we can do? I mean, I feel this every time I go to Africa, that itís really easy to get overwhelmed by all of the massive problems encountered in that country.

You can get easily overwhelmed, and so the thing to do is to focus on that which you can change, that which you can have some impact on, and do that as well as you can. Yes.

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (1:57:09 - 1:57:15)

One little thing, perhaps, one thing that might seem insignificant, and you can make a change there.

[Speaker 2] (1:57:15 - 1:57:23)

But everything is significant, depending on what presence you bring to it. Beth, I hear youíve made some big changes since reading A New Earth. Tell us about them.

[Speaker 6] (1:57:23 - 1:57:53)

Oh, yes. Actually, I picked up A New Earth after my grandmother passed away in January. But some things have been happening along the line that I didnít really understand what was going on.

I left a job that was not good for me in November. I was able to spend more time with my grandmother, and we both prepared ourselves for her passing. Iíve quit smoking.

Iíve started running. I eat healthy foods. Iím not even sure who I am anymore.

And thatís a good thing. Yes. Thatís a good thing.

But I think the key word here is what Eckhart had said earlier. Accepting what is going on in the world isnít the same thing as condoning it, because there are a lot of terrible things going on in the world. No, I know.

[Speaker 6] (1:58:11 - 1:58:35)

And I donít know if itís because Iíve been a mom for so long. Itís just that I want to put myself maybe as a shield in front of these people to offer them some protection. And I donít know if thatís my own ego, but it doesnít feel like itís my ego.

Itís like, you know, you people donít deserve this. You deserve to have a better life. Youíre 13, 14 years old.

Itís not time for you to have a baby.

[Speaker 2] (1:58:36 - 1:58:45)

Are you talking about the polygamous story on the news? Yes. Yeah.

Yes. Okay. Thatís none of your business right now.

Your business is whatís going on in your house right now, Beth.

[Speaker 6] (1:58:46 - 1:58:52)

Yeah, and Iím happy to hear Eckhart says that grandmothers are going to be respected, because Iím going to be a grandmother in July.

[Speaker 2] (1:58:54 - 1:59:08)

Well, I donít know if theyíll be respected by July, but weíre working on it. Weíre working on it. Okay.

Thanks for that email. Thank you so much. Thank you.

Okay. I think weíve got some work to do.

Maybe just one.

Weíre going to get old age respected by July. Weíve got to get busy. Weíve got to sell some more books.

Thanks, Beth. We have a caller from France on the line. Michelle lives in Paris, has a question.

[Speaker 7] (1:59:24 - 2:00:50)

Yes. Hello, Oprah. This is Eckhart.

Hello. I actually have a million questions, but Iím only going to ask one. One thatís actually troubled me for a long time, and I think I can sum it up with a quote from the Bible.

ìIt is easier for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven.î And for me, I see the rich man as someone who is full of ego and full of mind, which can never enter into consciousness. And this relates to me and to my question, because I have a very strong and active mind, and itís my greatest asset, perhaps, but itís also my Achilles heel. And when I can reach a place of stillness or awakening, my mind wants to participate.

It wants to own the experience. And at some point, always succeeds in bringing form to the experience, turning it into a concept, trying to understand it, trying to link it with past experiences. And so, you speak about this space between ego and awareness, and I need to develop that space.

I need to be able to step further back from my mind. And itís very difficult. The mindís also very cunning, and it deceives me even into believing that Iím actually in that space.

What can I do? How can I work on this dilemma?

[Speaker 1] (2:00:51 - 2:03:14)

Well, the mind cannot recognize that space. It doesnít know anything about it. Itís completely meaningless to the mind.

But from what you are saying, I can see that you already are able to enter that space, for how long doesnít matter, but you are already able to have that inner space of stillness inside you, and your mind is almost denying that experience, certainly resisting it. So, first of all, itís the recognition that the most important thing, which is the initial disidentification from the process of thinking, has already happened inside you. That first disidentification from thinking and encountering that dimension of presence or stillness inside yourself, that has already happened.

Now, the mind is not happy with it. It doesnít want to go there, or it judges it in some way, or the mind says, ìOh, I want to interpret it in some way.î All you need to be there is, rather than fighting the mind or your thought processes, to recognize thoughts that arise as thoughts. And itís from the place of stillness, or spaciousness inside you, that you can recognize when thoughts come and say this or that about stillness, or about whatever you should be doing, something else, or whatever they say, you recognize these as just another thought, and another thought.

And when you recognize a thought as a thought, it does no longer, it no longer has this power to pull your attention in completely. So the important thing is not the fact that your mind is highly developed. That can be quite useful at some point when youíre not identified with it.

You can use your highly developed mind in the service of awareness, in the service of spirit, and thatís fine. But in the meantime, itís not being drawn into every thought that arises, or even fighting a thought and saying, ìGo away, I want to be still.î That doesnít work either.

[Speaker 7] (2:03:15 - 2:03:17)

You recognizeÖ If thatís a threat, Iím giving it power.

Yes, yes. You recognize the mind as mind. You recognize thinking as thinking.

So, you can then choose to be present, when youíre walking out in nature, for example, or when youíre sitting alone in your room. You choose to be present, and then you will notice the mind will occasionally try to come in and do or say something about it, or something totally different, or says you should be thinking about something else thatís more important than this. And then you can recognize these thoughts as just another thought that arises.

You can even say to yourself, ìOh, thereís another thought.î And then you get still again. And then a thought comes, ìOh, there comes another.î Not to give every thought that arises this importance, so that it draws you in, because the mind wants to do that. It wants all your attention, because itís had all your attention for such a long time.

So, itís a habit pattern of the mind. It wants to draw in your attention. And all you do is you take your attention out of the mind.

So, thatís really the process. Thoughts is, the mind is not the enemy. You would never win that fight against the mind if you made the mind into an enemy.

The mind is like a little restless child, you could say, or a restless puppy.

It goes about, and then you say, ìOh, itís just, itís nothing, itís not a big deal.î Yeah, and as we all get, you know, build our spiritual muscle here, we become more and more conscious of our consciousness. And recognize when the thoughts are just playing in your mind. And Iím sure that started to happen to you already, Michelle.

You just said, ìOh, thereís a thought, thereís another one, thereís another thought.î I mean, I would have to say over the ten weeks that weíve been doing this course, Iíve become really, really more skilled at, I will think about that later, sort of like Scarlett OíHara. I wonít think about that now, Iíll think about that later, because this is now, I want to be present with whateverís going on in this moment, so Iíll deal with that at a later time, when I choose to set aside time for thinking about that particular thing. Instead of just letting my thoughts rule everything, all the time.

Exactly, yeah.

[Speaker 7] (2:05:38 - 2:05:40)

Iíve been putting much, much effort into keeping my thoughts at bay.

[Speaker 2] (2:05:40 - 2:05:41)

Yes, thatís right.

[Speaker 7] (2:05:41 - 2:05:43)

Looking at them for what they are.

[Speaker 2] (2:05:43 - 2:05:55)

Just looking, ìOh, thereís another thought, there it is again.î And then the effort should be in keeping yourself in the moment. You know, my mantra is, ìBe here, be now.î Be here, be now, with whateverís going on.

[Speaker 1] (2:05:55 - 2:05:56)

Yes, absolutely.

[Speaker 2] (2:05:56 - 2:05:57)

Be here, be now.

[Speaker 1] (2:05:57 - 2:05:58)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:05:58 - 2:06:03)

Thank you so much. Wonderful, wonderful. Thank you so much.

Bonsoir. Bonsoir.

[Speaker 11] (2:06:03 - 2:06:04)

Bonsoir.

All right, letís talk about, you say, that the alignment of your outer purpose with your inner purpose, which we talked about last week, the inner purpose must fuel the outer purpose, otherwise, ultimately, itís not going to work for us. But the alignment of our outer purpose with the inner purpose is called awakened doing, and that awakened doing is the next stage in the evolution of consciousness on our planet. There are three modalities of awakened doing.

Acceptance, enjoyment, and enthusiasm. On page 295, you write, ìEach modality represents a certain vibrational frequency of consciousness.î That is, you need to be vigilant to make sure that one of them operates whenever you are engaged in doing anything at all. This is key, folks.

From the most simple task to the most complex. If you are not in a state of either acceptance, enjoyment, or enthusiasm, look closely and you will find that you are creating suffering for yourself and others. So letís explain each one of them.

You touched on it a little bit earlier when you were talking to Kippy, I think, about acceptance does not, no, that was Beth, that acceptance does not mean condonement. It means, I accept this moment for what it is.

[Speaker 1] (2:07:19 - 2:07:39)

Yes. And so when you are doing something, youíll be amazed if you become aware of this and observe people around you, how many people are constantly in a state of disharmony because they cannot be in either acceptance, enjoyment, or enthusiasm about what they are doing.

[Speaker 2] (2:07:39 - 2:07:52)

You use the example in the book of changing a flat tire. Now, you donít have to enjoy changing a flat tire, that you would have reached another level of consciousness where you can enjoy changing it, which Iím sure you could. You maybe could change it with enthusiasm.

[Speaker 1] (2:07:53 - 2:07:54)

Iíll let you know when it happens.

[Speaker 2] (2:07:55 - 2:08:19)

Okay, okay. But so, you donít have to enjoy changing the flat tire, but at least to accept the tire is flat, you will have a much better experience rather than cursing the fact that youíve had a flat tire, which is what most people do. The first time you get the flat tire, everybody goes, ìDamn!î ìI canít believe it.î And even more so if itís at night in the pouring rain. Thatís right.

Itís never convenient. So, the question then is, you have to check inside to see what is your inner state of consciousness that you are bringing to this action, to whatever you are doing. What is this inner state of consciousness?

What state am I in? And then often you will realize that you are in a state of denial of the present moment. So, you said acceptance, you just said this to Beth, is just saying, ìWhat is, is.î Is, and if this is what I have to do at this moment, then I might as well do it without resistance.

[Speaker 2] (2:08:57 - 2:09:08)

And that is the same as if itís a flat tire or if it is, as my friend Kimberly was saying earlier with the girl and her boss, ìMy boss is obnoxious.î Yes. ìThat is what is.î Yes.

[Speaker 1] (2:09:09 - 2:09:38)

ìI am not going to change that, so let me figure out how to deal with that.î And the acceptance really has to be applied only to the present moment. If the boss is there, sitting there, saying whatever he says, at this moment, am I able to accept this? Am I bringing acceptance to this?

Thatís right. Here we are talking more specifically about when you are performing some kind of action. Right.

And what is the question is, what energy flows into the doing?

Thatís right. Thatís the question.

[Speaker 1] (2:09:40 - 2:10:36)

Is it the energy of denial or negativity? And once you have developed a little bit of sensitivity, you can very easily tell by observing other people whether the energy that flows into what they do is contaminated with negativity or whether itís presence or consciousness that flows. Totally qualitative difference is enormous.

I mentioned the waiter as an example. How does he put the plate on the table? Is he just doing a job because he wants to get out of there as soon as possible or just making a living?

Or is he honoring this moment? And by honoring this moment, he is honoring you. He is honoring life.

And something flows into the simple movement of putting a plate on the table, just as one simple example, that changes the entire environment around him too.

I had this experience this weekend. I had to go somewhere and had to do something. And I was very upset with myself because I hadnít handled my schedule better.

So I had to fly into New York and then my schedule started like 8 oíclock in the morning. I was very upset that I hadnít given more time for myself because I was already exhausted. And I realized that I had to change my attitude, change the frequency, otherwise I was going to affect the outcome of everything I was doing that day.

So I couldnít have a shift in my own perception about the day. So I really literally went and sat with myself in the closet until I could shift my attitude into, well, I must accept the fact that I didnít look out for myself, I didnít prepare better, my schedule is now overcrowded, thatís the way it is, how can I move forward and make the best of it? Yes.

Because I was making myself angrier and looking for who I could blame.

[Speaker 1] (2:11:33 - 2:11:39)

Yes. And so if you hadnít done this, the energyÖ I realized I was going to ruin my whole day. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:11:40 - 2:11:42)

And everybody I encountered was going to feel that.

[Speaker 1] (2:11:42 - 2:11:52)

And everything that you would have done would have not truly been successful because success depends on what energy flows into what you do.

[Speaker 2] (2:11:52 - 2:11:53)

Okay.

[Speaker 1] (2:11:53 - 2:11:56)

And you affect everybody else also with that.

[Speaker 2] (2:11:56 - 2:12:07)

And that is why you must change the modality to if youíre not accepting, enjoying or enthusiastic, whatever that is, and work on changing your mood or donít do it.

[Speaker 1] (2:12:07 - 2:12:20)

Yes. Either accept what you do, which is the primary thing, or donít do it, remove yourself, donít do it, but donít contribute negative energy or suffering to this world.

[Speaker 2] (2:12:20 - 2:12:25)

I know. But most people are going to say, Iím sure, listening, saying, ìBut I had to do it. I had to do it.

[Speaker 1] (2:12:33 - 2:12:59)

I had to do it for others.î Once you know that that is your choice, it might change. Because really, to generate unhappiness for yourself and by implication for others really requires you to be unconscious. Right.

But when you make this process conscious and realize at this moment by resisting what Iím doing, Iím creating suffering for myself. Yes. And probably people around me too.

[Speaker 2] (2:12:59 - 2:13:04)

Okay. Thatís the energy that youíre bringing into it.

[Speaker 1] (2:13:05 - 2:13:05)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:13:05 - 2:13:10)

And the next modality for awakening is enjoyment.

[Speaker 1] (2:13:10 - 2:13:10)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:13:11 - 2:13:12)

Thatís a notch above acceptance.

[Speaker 1] (2:13:12 - 2:13:16)

Yes. Different frequency. Vibrational frequency.

[Speaker 2] (2:13:16 - 2:13:18)

Because everything is about vibrational frequency.

[Speaker 1] (2:13:19 - 2:13:19)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:13:19 - 2:13:24)

People are bringing energy to everything that they do.

[Speaker 1] (2:13:24 - 2:13:24)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:13:24 - 2:13:25)

Okay.

[Speaker 1] (2:13:33 - 2:13:40)

And when youíre in a state of enjoyment, one might almost say you do them naturally in a state of enjoyment. Things that you like doing.

[Speaker 11] (2:13:41 - 2:13:41)

Yeah.

[Speaker 2] (2:13:42 - 2:13:53)

I love this quote, Eckhart. On 297 you say, ìOn the new earth, enjoyment will replace wanting as the motivating power behind peopleís actions.î Yes. Whenís that going to happen?

[Speaker 1] (2:13:54 - 2:13:55)

Well, it has to.

[Speaker 2] (2:14:03 - 2:14:04)

Because you enjoy them.

[Speaker 1] (2:14:04 - 2:14:05)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:14:05 - 2:14:08)

And not because you want more and want more and want more.

[Speaker 1] (2:14:08 - 2:14:08)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:14:08 - 2:14:20)

Because so many people have expressed throughout this class on the message boards and in other areas how you get more things and get more things and you want more things and want more things and it leaves you with an empty space.

[Speaker 1] (2:14:20 - 2:14:52)

Yes. And it comes out out of the egoic state of scarcity or lack which is always there when the ego predominates. So I need that in order to fulfill myself, in order to find satisfaction.

I need to achieve this in order to be fully myself. This is the underlying assumption.

[Speaker 2] (2:14:53 - 2:14:54)

Right, of wanting.

[Speaker 1] (2:14:54 - 2:15:07)

And that is the old energy of wanting. And so you go out and it becomes very stressful to get away from this moment because the next one promises greater fulfillment.

[Speaker 12] (2:15:07 - 2:15:08)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (2:15:08 - 2:15:16)

The next one never comes because when it comes it's the now again which is a place you want to get away from. Completely insane. Right.

But normal.

[Speaker 2] (2:15:16 - 2:15:23)

Okay. So getting to the place where you can have enjoyment from things because enjoyment does what?

[Speaker 1] (2:15:24 - 2:15:34)

Enjoyment brings an enormous empowerment to what you do and what comes out of that.

[Speaker 2] (2:15:34 - 2:15:52)

When the creative power of the universe becomes conscious of itself it manifests as joy. You don't have to wait for something meaningful to come into your life so that you can finally enjoy what you do. There's more meaning in joy than you will ever need.

The waiting to start living syndrome is one of the most common delusions of the unconscious state.

[Speaker 1] (2:15:53 - 2:16:04)

That's important because many people are trapped in that delusion. They don't have a sense of aliveness.

[Speaker 2] (2:16:05 - 2:16:28)

Okay. I love this. 298 everybody.

Joy does not come from what you do. It flows into what you do and thus into this world from deep within you. The misperception that joy comes from what you do is normal and is always dangerous because it creates the belief that joy is something that can be derived from something else such as an activity or thing.

Don't people do things that bring them joy?

[Speaker 1] (2:16:29 - 2:16:42)

That's what it looks like but it's the same process that we talked about a little earlier when we talked about manifesting something from within. The joy is there. It comes from the fullness of life that you already sense within you at this moment.

[Speaker 2] (2:16:43 - 2:16:46)

Okay, so for example I have really enjoyed these webcasts.

[Speaker 1] (2:16:46 - 2:16:46)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:16:47 - 2:16:50)

I've really enjoyed doing these webcasts.

[Speaker 1] (2:16:56 - 2:16:58)

Whether it's for these lights or the cameras or even...

[Speaker 2] (2:16:58 - 2:17:03)

Doesn't it come from the community of people out there? I've really enjoyed having all these people join us.

[Speaker 1] (2:17:03 - 2:17:13)

But the joy is within you and then it flows out. It reaches everybody. Even through the cameras it can reach people and trigger joy in others.

[Speaker 2] (2:17:14 - 2:17:15)

Can you all feel my joy?

[Speaker 1] (2:17:15 - 2:17:28)

Yes, but only within them. So it's their own joy. When they feel your joy there's no such thing as my joy ultimately.

[Speaker 2] (2:17:28 - 2:17:30)

Oh, that's right. It's only our joy.

[Speaker 1] (2:17:31 - 2:17:34)

Yes, you could say that. There's our collective joy. Yes, yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:17:36 - 2:18:14)

Okay, that is exactly what I'm doing. The misperception that joy comes from what you do is normal, also dangerous, creates a belief that joy is something that can be derived from something else. You then look to the world to bring you joy, because the world's not giving them what they think they need.

You will only enjoy any activity in which you are fully present, any activity that is not just a means to an end. It isn't the action you perform that you really enjoy, but the deep sense of aliveness that flows into it. That aliveness is one with who you are.

I got that.

[Speaker 1] (2:18:16 - 2:18:28)

I'm sure many people touch that place within as they watch this webcast. They watch you talking, and they have that intense sense of aliveness within.

[Speaker 2] (2:18:28 - 2:18:32)

But is that enjoyment the same as pleasure?

[Speaker 1] (2:18:32 - 2:18:34)

No. It's not.

[Speaker 2] (2:18:34 - 2:18:36)

I asked that question of myself yesterday.

[Speaker 1] (2:18:36 - 2:18:43)

Pleasure comes from something outside of you. So you derive pleasure from something outside of you.

[Speaker 2] (2:18:43 - 2:19:03)

And I ask that because you say this means that when you enjoy doing something, you're really experiencing that sensation. I read that and I thought, what about people who enjoy gambling or enjoy...

[Speaker 1] (2:19:03 - 2:19:04)

These are pleasures.

[Speaker 2] (2:19:04 - 2:19:10)

Okay. Sex or enjoy being sadistic or enjoy harming other people.

[Speaker 1] (2:19:11 - 2:19:11)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:19:12 - 2:19:14)

Creation isn't behind that.

[Speaker 1] (2:19:15 - 2:19:30)

No. We sometimes call that enjoy, but there is no true joy in it. It's being addicted to a pleasure, something outside that feeds that pleasure by the definition means pleasing me.

[Speaker 2] (2:19:30 - 2:19:32)

Yes. Which would be ego.

[Speaker 1] (2:19:32 - 2:19:32)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:19:33 - 2:20:07)

Got it. Got it. Okay, let's go to our New Earth study group that has gathered every week for the past 10 weeks at Borders on Michigan.

Hi, everybody in Chicago. We got a warm day in Chicago. Aren't we happy?

I know. Thank you for your time and participation. We talked to Sharon during one of our classes.

I think it was around the second web class and Sharon's standing by now. I hear you're going to be making some big changes.

Yes, I am. What happened? Well, just like Eckhart was drawn to California to write The Power of Now, I went on Idealist.org and just decided to volunteer and someone responded back to me. And it's in The Hague in Netherlands. The thing is, is I have to do it. Everything has lined up and I'm just drawn to do this.

I have student loans because I have two graduate degrees and but yet I have all the money I need to do this. I have the support of my support system here. You know, through conversations I've had with different members of this book club, I realized, gosh, you know what?

I really want to do this. I absolutely want to do this. And when I'm not in a space of acceptance, I get scared and I say, this does not make sense.

Why am I doing this? I flew to Holland last week. No, two weeks ago.

I've been back a week and I interviewed with the gentleman I'm going to be working with. He is an academic. It's a it's an NGO and I connect with him.

I love what I'm actually doing research now that I'm back. I'm going back. I got an apartment.

I'm going to be there for some months, you know, maybe longer. And because I feel drawn to do this and I feel encouraged to do this and things have just unfolded where I can absolutely afford to do this. Then it's all.

I was downsized. It's all. Everything's lined up.

And I'm shocked by that. I absolutely. When I think consciously of it, I don't know.

This is not my life. This is not. This never has happened to me before.

But whenever I I go still. By the way, there was a Nick at the Bodie tree. Yeah.

And I was sitting in my room in in Holland. Crying the entire week, I hadn't been able to use my computer because, of course, I used it first day and I ran out of my my battery died on me and downstairs trouble troubleshoot it with the. Why were you crying over Nick?

Why were you crying over Nick? Because because he was talking about what I was feeling and worried about to be earning.

[Speaker 2] (2:22:58 - 2:24:06)

I said, yeah, that was a powerful thing that Nick said, because I think everybody's touched by that. I mean, any time ever since that Nick comment two weeks ago of what Eckhart said to Nick about worrying, I haven't had a worry since I thought, well, I can think about it. I can choose to do something about it, but I don't have to worry about it.

I thought that was really powerful for all of us. Really powerful. Yes, it was powerful.

So now you're in a situation, Sharon, don't question things lining up because that is what is supposed to be happening. And that is, I will say to everybody who is listening to us today, that is what happens when you become more conscious. You get to you are aware enough to see things line up, because when you move through the world unconsciously, you can't even see it line up.

You're not available to be a witness to the alignment. And so as soon as you become more awakened and the more awakened you become, the more things line up and you end up moving with Oprah moving with the flow of your life.

[Speaker 3] (2:24:07 - 2:25:34)

Right. But here's what's exciting whenever when I sit and I'm quiet. Yeah.

And I I just you know, so I was crying and I was able to watch it. Because I was able to borrow a plug from somebody else in the hotel. That alignment right there.

So it worked again. It lined up. So it was great.

So I'm sitting on the bed. I'm crying. I'm like, what am I doing with my life?

Then I'm watching Nick talk. I'm dying of laughter, of course, and I'm sure they heard me in the next rooms. But I said, wow, this is fantastic.

What's really neat is I after it was over, I shut down the computer and I sat and I said, OK, let's be still. You feel kind of strange about this. You don't feel you deserve this right now.

It's that's really what it was. And. I sat for a while and I said, OK, let me just sit with this.

If this is what I feel, will it kill me if I don't feel great right now? After that, I stayed up all night and I just smiled at the sunset. You know, the sun came up.

I packed slowly. I felt joy. And I have felt joy since coming back, except for driving in to, you know, to this last of our meetings, because I'm going to miss everyone.

And I realize also I'm letting go of something is over now for me. I'm not going to be going back into finance. I know that.

Yeah. And well, I want everybody.

[Speaker 2] (2:25:34 - 2:25:36)

Well, thank you so much, Sharon, for sharing.

[Speaker 3] (2:25:36 - 2:25:37)

I appreciate sharing.

[Speaker 2] (2:25:37 - 2:25:44)

Thank you. And everybody at the borders for your commitment to this work in our web series borders. Give yourselves a round of applause.

[Speaker 3] (2:25:45 - 2:26:15)

All our border buddy. Oh, can I say one last thing? Yeah.

Can I say one last thing? This, by the way, this group of people, I so love them. I'm going around saying that I love you.

I love you. This has been the best group. I'm taking classes.

Some people here teach and I'm taking classes with them. I've spoken to other people and learned so much about not just myself, but about the world. And I feel so joined with everyone.

This has been just the best experience for me. And thank you so much for it.

[Speaker 2] (2:26:15 - 2:26:42)

Great. Thank you. Thank you again.

Thank you. Our borders buddy. Isn't that the whole point of all of this is that when you become more awakened, everybody things begin to flow in your life in a way that they had not before.

And that's what's supposed to be happening. These, you know, you talk in the book about, you know, serendipitous encounters. I don't think you use the word, but things just start happening.

They line up.

[Speaker 1] (2:26:42 - 2:26:51)

Yes. Yes. You have to be there for this to happen.

If you're not there, you have to be there in the now so that life can work for you.

[Speaker 11] (2:26:52 - 2:26:52)

Uh-huh.

[Speaker 1] (2:26:52 - 2:27:00)

You can't, if you deny life by denying the now, life can't work. It's like shutting, closing the shutters. The sun can't come in.

[Speaker 11] (2:27:00 - 2:27:00)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (2:27:00 - 2:27:30)

The sun doesn't mind, but the sun, why not open the shutters and let the sun shine in, which is, the strange thing is that the, it's when you no longer deny the present moment, then not only do you see all the things that are lining up there to support you, it also means more things are coming into your life.

[Speaker 2] (2:27:30 - 2:27:30)

Absolutely.

[Speaker 1] (2:27:30 - 2:27:31)

To be of assistance.

[Speaker 2] (2:27:32 - 2:27:32)

Absolutely.

[Speaker 1] (2:27:33 - 2:27:35)

And so that's wonderful once you...

[Speaker 2] (2:27:35 - 2:27:37)

The evolutionary impulse of the universe...

[Speaker 1] (2:27:37 - 2:27:37)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:27:38 - 2:27:39)

...rises up to meet it.

[Speaker 1] (2:27:39 - 2:27:39)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:27:39 - 2:27:40)

It does.

[Speaker 1] (2:27:40 - 2:28:01)

It does not mean that you will never again encounter challenges. Right. Or if you have a, if you want to have a certain course of action, you want to go from here to there, always, of course, being conscious that the step you're taking at this moment is the most important step, but you might still want to go from here to there.

[Speaker 2] (2:28:01 - 2:28:03)

But it does reduce the fear.

Oh, yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:28:03 - 2:28:04)

It does reduce the fear.

[Speaker 1] (2:28:05 - 2:28:05)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:28:05 - 2:28:09)

Because you know, you can always bring your sense of presence to whatever the moment is.

[Speaker 1] (2:28:09 - 2:28:09)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:28:09 - 2:28:11)

And that you'll be all right.

[Speaker 1] (2:28:11 - 2:28:11)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:28:11 - 2:28:11)

That's right.

[Speaker 1] (2:28:12 - 2:28:47)

And as soon as you encounter a challenge, not resist it, but immediately come to an acceptance of the new situation and then see how that... Very often it turns around and becomes actually helpful. Yes.

In the same way that a martial arts master always uses the opposing energy. He never, the martial arts master does not fight against. He uses the opponent's energy and gives into it.

And he wins by not, by yielding to the oncoming energy.

[Speaker 2] (2:28:47 - 2:28:57)

Knowing how to surrender to the oncoming energy. Yes. Absolutely.

A question that we get asked all the time is, how old is Eckhart? How old are you?

[Speaker 1] (2:28:58 - 2:29:00)

This body is 60 years old.

[Speaker 2] (2:29:00 - 2:29:05)

Wow. And why did you say this body?

[Speaker 1] (2:29:05 - 2:29:28)

Well, I don't feel that I am this age. I mean, if you look within, nobody feels that. It's only if you identify with the body that you believe that you are a certain age.

The consciousness that I am is ageless. The consciousness that you are is ageless. And you, I'm sure you also feel that there's inside you a consciousness which has nothing to do with the age of the physical body.

[Speaker 2] (2:29:29 - 2:29:46)

Do you do something for your skin? No. These are all the questions that we have to ask of the 10th lesson because people write in and they say that Eckhart has such glowy skin.

Is there something you do especially for your skin, Eckhart?

[Speaker 1] (2:29:46 - 2:30:00)

Well, one confession I need to make here is, well, my skin is usually fine. I'm happy with my skin. But here, we have a very good makeup artist who does something to my skin before I come out here.

[Speaker 2] (2:30:00 - 2:30:01)

Really?

[Speaker 1] (2:30:01 - 2:30:01)

Yeah.

[Speaker 2] (2:30:02 - 2:30:07)

Stella. Stella does. So you're wearing like a little powder or something.

[Speaker 1] (2:30:07 - 2:30:07)

Whatever.

[Speaker 2] (2:30:08 - 2:30:09)

Yeah, yeah, whatever.

[Speaker 1] (2:30:09 - 2:30:25)

But it's so smooth. But my skin is fine. I mean, I'm happy with it.

If you don't accumulate a lot of past inside, then the aging process slows down quite a bit. Really?

[Speaker 2] (2:30:25 - 2:30:26)

Say that again.

[Speaker 1] (2:30:26 - 2:30:57)

If you do not accumulate a lot of past inside your psyche by hanging on to past, identifying with my past, deriving a sense of self from past, talking about the past, thinking about the past, then you carry this burden of past. But if you let go of that past and focus primarily on present moment, then the aging process, I believe that, and I've seen it in some people who are present, the aging process of the body actually slows down considerably. Wow.

[Speaker 2] (2:30:58 - 2:30:59)

So 6-0.

[Speaker 1] (2:30:59 - 2:31:00)

Yeah.

[Speaker 2] (2:31:00 - 2:31:07)

Your body is 6-0 years old. Yeah. Don't look at it.

You don't do anything like color your hair or anything?

[Speaker 13] (2:31:07 - 2:31:07)

No.

[Speaker 2] (2:31:07 - 2:31:08)

You don't.

No.

[Speaker 2] (2:31:11 - 2:31:19)

Okay. No Botox. Okay.

Yeah. Wouldn't we be a little disappointed to find out, Eckhart, Mr. No Ego is Botox.

[Speaker 1] (2:31:20 - 2:31:20)

What is that?

[Speaker 2] (2:31:20 - 2:31:37)

What is Botox? Never mind. It's too hard to explain what it is.

What is that? Can't even explain it. Now let's go to Denise who's Skyping us from her home office in Seattle, Washington.

Denise has a question that a lot of viewers have also asked. Denise? Go ahead.

[Speaker 10] (2:31:37 - 2:31:39)

Hi, Oprah. Hi, Eckhart. Hello.

[Speaker 2] (2:31:39 - 2:31:39)

Hi.

[Speaker 10] (2:31:39 - 2:31:51)

When I go to bed and I'm feeling conscious and aware, why then do I still have nightmares and do I have an ego while I'm sleeping? Good question.

[Speaker 1] (2:31:55 - 2:32:28)

Well, some dreams are dreams of that process, things that haven't been faced completely during the day. So many kinds of dreams are processing dreams. And then there are other dreams that bring up different energies.

There can be pain body coming into a dream. Ego can come into the dream because normally in a dream you are not conscious that you are dreaming. In exceptional circumstances you may be.

I don't know whether you're ever conscious in the dream that you are dreaming. Are you?

[Speaker 10] (2:32:30 - 2:32:31)

I can't remember.

[Speaker 1] (2:32:31 - 2:33:28)

No, probably not. So it is quite possible sometimes for the pain body to come up in a dream and the character that you represent in the dream is most likely an aspect of your ego. Ego in a dream, of course, you're completely identified with what's happening in the dream and there is usually, and this is why I asked you this question, there is usually an absence of the aware space where you are aware that you are a character in the dream.

And usually, so you can have the awareness in your daily life here, this is what this is all about, is to live in a way so that you have a dimension in your life that in the background of your life there is always the aware presence. From there you are conscious of whatever you are doing, whatever your mind is saying. In a dream that's missing, you don't have the level of awareness.

Awareness. Unless you're conscious in the dream, which I dream dreams and I'm conscious in the dream.

[Speaker 1] (2:33:33 - 2:33:33)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:33:33 - 2:33:37)

And I can say, I can be in a dream and then say, oh, I'm dreaming now.

[Speaker 1] (2:33:38 - 2:33:38)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:33:38 - 2:33:41)

And if it's not a dream I want to be in, I'll say, got to get out of here.

[Speaker 1] (2:33:42 - 2:33:42)

That's nice.

[Speaker 2] (2:33:42 - 2:33:43)

Yeah, yeah.

[Speaker 1] (2:33:43 - 2:33:46)

Or you could say in a dream, okay, I'm dreaming, I can do anything.

[Speaker 2] (2:33:46 - 2:33:59)

Yeah, I can do anything, I think I'll fly now. But you don't do that in your dreams, right? So the question is whether or not your dreams are your ego.

Sometimes they are not. Did you not also say, well, you did say in the book that sometimes when we dream we go back to source.

[Speaker 1] (2:34:00 - 2:34:01)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:34:01 - 2:34:01)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (2:34:01 - 2:34:17)

Yes. Well, there I talk about dreamless sleep. Yes.

Because, as you know, when you sleep you have the dream stage. Right. Which you go in and out of periodically and then occasionally you have the deep sleep state of dreamless sleep.

[Speaker 2] (2:34:17 - 2:34:25)

You say that on 282, I read that earlier. Each night without knowing it you return to the unmanifested source of all life when you enter the state of deep dreamless sleep.

[Speaker 1] (2:34:25 - 2:34:25)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:34:25 - 2:34:30)

And then re-emerge again in the morning, replenish. So you've gone back to source energy there.

[Speaker 1] (2:34:30 - 2:34:41)

Yes. So it does help. What do you do before going to sleep?

Is there when you, the last, let's say, the last 20 minutes or so? You're not watching the news, are you?

[Speaker 10] (2:34:42 - 2:34:45)

No, I'm reading the New Earth. And so...

[Speaker 1] (2:34:45 - 2:35:41)

Okay. Okay, but even that... I'm feeling...

That's good, but even that I would put it aside just for some minutes before you actually go to sleep so that there can be a space inside you rather than words. And some of the words may actually help you to get in touch with that space. But then the time comes when you put the book aside and the best, the most powerful, the most helpful way of going into sleep is by lying on your back, flat, arms stretched out and put attention into the inner energy field of your body and feel the aliveness from your toes to the tip of your head.

Scan your body with your attention a few times and then feel the entire energy field of the body as a single field of energy. And it's very beautiful to...

That has helped me a lot. That's actually, since you said that about three classes ago, has helped me do much better sleeping. What Eckhart is also, I think, emphasizing here for you, Denise, is that being more present in every moment of the day with whatever is going on in your life will allow you to not to have to deal with whatever you didn't deal with during the day in your dreams because dreams are often the manifestation of your subconscious mind trying to work things out that you didn't fully work out in the day, that you didn't work out. And so, again, the answer is being present with whatever is going on, dealing with whatever needs to be dealt with in the moment so that it doesn't show up later on in your dreams. And I do that particularly if, you know, I am not a television watcher because I'm on television like the cobbler's children has no shoes, but if I happen to be in a room and walk into a room and the television's on and it's something, a particularly disturbing image, rather than flip from that image or try to deny that I saw that image, I will literally take it in.

I will accept what I have seen and deal with it in my mind so that it doesn't show up later on in a dream and frighten me or disturb me. You know, so I try to deal with whatever is going to be disturbing when it is happening so that I don't have to process it later. Yes.

It's good.

[Speaker 1] (2:37:13 - 2:37:13)

Very good.

[Speaker 2] (2:37:13 - 2:37:17)

Yeah. I hope that helps. Thank you.

That makes sense. Thank you. Well, thank you.

[Speaker 1] (2:37:17 - 2:37:18)

Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (2:37:18 - 2:37:22)

Because, yeah, the dreams are just unmanifested stuff that you didn't deal with.

[Speaker 1] (2:37:22 - 2:37:47)

Yes. Occasionally, it happens that one has a deeper dream but they tend to be more rare where you might have a sudden insight coming into a dream that you didn't have before, a sudden realization or some kind of dream images that come that have a symbolic meaning in your life and are telling you something. That can happen occasionally also.

And that's beautiful when it happens.

[Speaker 2] (2:37:47 - 2:37:50)

Well, let's go to the third modality which is we've talked about acceptance.

[Speaker 1] (2:37:51 - 2:37:51)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:37:51 - 2:38:14)

If you can't bring acceptance, enjoyment or enthusiasm. And enthusiasm, which is what Kippy from Tokyo had brought up earlier, is the higher vibration of modality for awakening. That whenever you are enthusiastic that there is something else that comes into play there's an energy feel created that's bigger than you are.

[Speaker 1] (2:38:15 - 2:38:37)

Yes. Particularly, it's an energy that is of a creative kind, an energy that creates something, brings something into this world. I wouldn't say it's necessarily of a higher frequency.

It's a more powerful frequency because it's the outgoing movement that is connected, however, with the source.

[Speaker 2] (2:38:37 - 2:38:50)

Yes. And again, we say that that is the kind of enthusiasm that's just not wild, external enthusiasm, but enthusiasm born of the spirit. Enthusiasm born of consciousness.

[Speaker 1] (2:38:50 - 2:38:50)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:38:51 - 2:38:55)

We're not just talking about going to a Bears game, standing out there screaming for your team.

[Speaker 1] (2:38:55 - 2:39:35)

No. That's excitement. Sometimes the ego sometimes looks for states of excitement like that as substitutes for feeling the being.

For being. Out of touch with being. Then the ego looks for substitutes.

And excitement is one of them. Excitement sometimes through the media, through watching a violent film, or excitement through whatever. So acceptance, there are no clear dividing lines between these three modalities.

Sometimes acceptance suddenly shifts into enjoyment. And sometimes enjoyment shifts into enthusiasm.

To enthusiasm. Right.

[Speaker 1] (2:39:37 - 2:39:57)

So if you, let's say you're doing something that before you would have resented, and suddenly you're able to realize, okay, there's resentment and denial inside me. Let's see if I can accept that I have to do this right now. And so suddenly you bring acceptance to it.

And as you bring acceptance to it, you're actually beginning to enjoy what you're doing.

[Speaker 2] (2:39:58 - 2:40:20)

That is absolutely true. This thing I was telling you I had to do this weekend, I first was resenting it. I went and sat in the closet with myself so I could change my attitude.

I decided I'm going to accept it. And during the process of it, I decided, let me be 100% present and see what happens. If I could just be one, and that was my focus, just to be 100% present.

And I started getting the kick out of it.

[Speaker 11] (2:40:20 - 2:40:21)

Yes. Yeah. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:40:21 - 2:40:28)

Yeah. We're Skyping again with a study group that has gathered at the Bodhi Tree bookstore in West Hollywood. Hi everybody.

[Speaker 11] (2:40:30 - 2:40:31)

Hi Oprah.

[Speaker 2] (2:40:32 - 2:40:33)

Hi everybody and Nick.

[Speaker 11] (2:40:33 - 2:40:34)

It's Nick.

[Speaker 2] (2:40:35 - 2:40:44)

I see Nick there. Okay. Who's at the microphone?

Is that Tatiana? Hi Tatiana. Has a question?

Yes. Okay, go ahead.

[Speaker 8] (2:40:44 - 2:41:28)

Yes, I do. It's about acceptance and Eckhart says that acceptance looks like a passive state and I do have a big problem with that because sometimes I feel like I accept what is more and more in my life but at times I feel like I have to be proactive and I have to do something and at the same time I know that I have to step back and be aware and be in the moment and that creates even more stress like I'm not getting it, like I'm doing it wrong. And I feel like a loser sometimes. I feel like I'm not getting it.

So how do I make it go away like this guilt of you should know better?

[Speaker 1] (2:41:29 - 2:41:49)

Oh, well that's an additional question. That's an additional question so the first one is Okay, let's deal with the first part and the first part is The first part is that you believe that when you are in a state of acceptance you are no longer very effective that you cannot act effectively anymore. Is that what you believe?

[Speaker 8] (2:41:50 - 2:41:51)

Absolutely.

That's not the case. That's a wrong view of what acceptance means and this is why we've been talking about bringing acceptance into what you are doing so that acceptance is not separate from doing. Acceptance for it to be complete, true acceptance needs to flow into the doing rather than take you away from the doing and say okay there's nothing I can do in some cases of course there is nothing you can do in certain situations in which case you simply accept at this moment there's nothing I can do.

There are other situations where you can do something where doing actually the situation requires you if you truly respond to the situation in the present moment it requires you to take action to do something and then something for you to experiment with now from now on is to see if you can bring this energy field of acceptance and act out of that so that the action doesn't come out of inner resistance or neediness or denial or denial or anger it comes out of a more peaceful state and then you will experience how powerful your action can actually be.

Yeah, did you get that Tatiana? Yes, I get it. flows into the doing I think everybody who is misunderstanding is thinking that acceptance means that I'm saying this moment is okay and so I have to live with it and then do nothing with it or be passive he's saying you must first in one of the earlier classes you used the example of the bus in the mud the wheels are in the mud

yes, or you are I'm stuck in the mud let's say I'm walking out somewhere suddenly I'm stuck in the mud to my knees you're stuck in the mud to your knees

you must first accept that you're stuck in the mud to your knees you can't curse the fact that you're stuck in the mud to your knees you can't deny that you're stuck in the mud to your knees you can't the energy that you spend wanting not to be stuck in the mud to your knees is all wasted energy and it gets you stuck more deeply

[Speaker 1] (2:44:09 - 2:44:11)

[Speaker 2] (2:44:11 - 2:44:12)

gets you stuck more deeply

[Speaker 1] (2:44:12 - 2:44:12)

if you're struggling

[Speaker 2] (2:44:12 - 2:44:22)

you must accept and let the acceptance that you're stuck in the mud on your knees flow into now what do I do to get myself out of the mud

yes, and this now what do I do is a state of alert attention yes so you and that's a high frequency it's a state of it comes up okay, you almost listen it's not not an auditory listening but I'm using the analogy of listening it's a state of alert attention what do I do now and suddenly okay, there's a moment of space you don't know and then out of that you do the doing arises spontaneously or a thought comes into your head that tells you what to do and that will be empowered and that's you practice with little things first perhaps practice with things that usually you don't like doing so you bring a little bit of resistance to it even simple things you might not like going to the supermarket or you might not like driving to work or whatever it is

accepting what is

[Speaker 1] (2:45:13 - 2:45:14)

accepting what is

[Speaker 2] (2:45:14 - 2:45:24)

that's what acceptance means I accept what is in this moment and now we'll decide what do I do to change this moment yes but I won't deny this moment for what it is or wish that it was something else

and you won't feel guilty and you won't feel guilty Tatiana

[Speaker 1] (2:45:29 - 2:45:37)

now yes now can we come to the second part or the second question which is your mind is telling you something that you are not good enough

[Speaker 8] (2:45:37 - 2:45:39)

yes like I'm doing it wrong

[Speaker 1] (2:45:39 - 2:46:10)

yes so there's nothing wrong you now know what to do and don't believe your mind when it tells you you can't do it you are not good enough these are things that often the mind will throw up especially when people try to be present or to become to be still the mind will say not now because I have too much on my mind I've got too much to think I can't do it not now possibly not now maybe tomorrow I'll try again

yes yes it happens to me all the time

[Speaker 1] (2:46:13 - 2:46:21)

the mind will always tell you why you cannot be present now because the mind doesn't like presence because it's the end of the mind

[Speaker 2] (2:46:22 - 2:46:41)

yes Tatiana and everybody at the Bodhi Tree thank you so much Nick see what a powerful influence you've had for your you're worrying about Nick's worrying about his bill Sharon's in the hotel room crying because Nick's worrying about his bill unbelievable everybody at the Bodhi Tree thank you so much for your gathering and your sense of community

[Speaker 11] (2:46:41 - 2:46:43)

[Speaker 2] (2:46:43 - 2:47:08)

thank you Bodhi Buddies thank you our Bodhi Buddies thank you so much Tatiana so do you think that in these 10 weeks we have evolved I know somebody last week had a problem with the word evolution but do you think in these past weeks this community our new tribe of new earth readers we've evolved to a higher level of consciousness a new way of being in the world

yes

[Speaker 2] (2:47:09 - 2:47:10)

to creating a new earth

[Speaker 1] (2:47:10 - 2:47:29)

yes I believe for many people it's been an opening so that this suddenly this new dimension has come into their lives and once it has come into your life there's no going back it can be obscured for a while if you get identified with the mind again or with the pain body

[Speaker 2] (2:47:29 - 2:47:32)

because don't you have to work on it all the time

[Speaker 1] (2:47:32 - 2:48:27)

that helps even if you don't work on it it's there and eventually something will then happen in your life that will put you back in touch with it it could be a crisis but my recommendation is not to wait for a crisis in your life that forces you to become present again but to choose presence as much as possible in your daily life to choose the present moment to always check inside what your relationship is with the present moment the primordial question what's my relationship with this moment is it friendly or is it dysfunctional and that tells you everything if it's dysfunctional it means your future is going to manifest that if it's friendly open and accepting then the so called future is going to manifest that it's as simple as that do you ever have problems Eckhart? do you have problems?

[Speaker 1] (2:48:31 - 2:49:21)

no I don't create problems challenges happen always life will always challenge you in one way or another and that is good but there's no need to transform the challenges of life into problems by dwelling on things mentally if you cannot take any action at this moment to turn things around in your mind which is where worry comes in related to worry is problem making it's the mental problem making so I don't have problems not because there are no challenges in my life because no matter what stage in life you reach there's always some kind of challenge life is designed in that way the world is not here to make you conscious sorry the world is not here to make you happy it's here to make you conscious

yes and when you bring consciousness into your life for all of those who have been conflicted over the past weeks about their religious beliefs when you bring consciousness into your life what you're really saying is that you're bringing in allowing the spirit of that which is God to flow through you and be the preeminent force in your life isn't that what you're saying?

[Speaker 1] (2:49:46 - 2:49:51)

yes yes it's no longer the little me

[Speaker 2] (2:49:51 - 2:49:57)

the little me you are connecting yourself to the bigger source to the source of all things

[Speaker 1] (2:49:57 - 2:50:25)

yes and let it then flow through you and then this is for example where creativity comes into your life true creativity can only come in when you let that dimension into your life so the source energy manifests through you and creativity can start with a little thing like even a tiny creative thought or some new way of looking at something it's already a sign of creativity

but most important it's recognizing that when you can be conscious of the consciousness when you bring the presence of that which is consciousness or the spirit of a higher power or the spirit of God into your life and you allow that to direct your path that then all things come to you as they should

[Speaker 1] (2:50:44 - 2:50:45)

yes

[Speaker 2] (2:50:45 - 2:50:47)

yeah that's how you create the flow

[Speaker 1] (2:50:47 - 2:50:50)

yes that's the flow entering the flow yeah

[Speaker 2] (2:50:50 - 2:51:00)

and that is how you say a new species is arising on the planet it is arising now and we are it yes

[Speaker 1] (2:51:00 - 2:51:29)

yes this is such a enormous shift in consciousness that's happening it's almost this is why I use that expression it's almost as if we were transforming into a new species for the first time a conscious species it's almost as if humanity was only now beginning to actually wake up

[Speaker 2] (2:51:29 - 2:52:03)

yes but Mick would you share with the rest of the audience at the end of this just before we started this class I had said a thank you to all the the crews who made this possible and Oprah.com all the Oprah.com staff who's worked so hard the past ten weeks and our book club staff and producers and everybody we had a a thank you to everybody and Eckhart because of my my book and the condition of my book presented me with a a leather bound copy of A New Earth would you share with them what you wrote in my book

I wrote a little the little poem that I also quote in chapter ten by the Persian poet Hafiz which starts I am a hole in the flute that the Christ's breath moves through listen to this music that's the poem I am a hole in the flute I'm not the flute I'm a hole in the flute that the Christ's breath God's breath moves through listen to this music so I wrote this little poem and I said to Oprah she was a wonderful hole that energy is moving through her and the world is listening to this music

[Speaker 2] (2:53:04 - 2:53:44)

thank you for allowing me to do that thank you with this magnificent piece of work that you've given to us through your words and obviously you were the hole also for which Christ's breath the breath of God the breath of all energy in creation flowed through you in order for you to write this I mean as I have read it over and over again now on my fourth reading I marvel at how you were able to put these sentences together in such a way that they connect have connected to me and to all of you all around the world so thank you for this experience

[Speaker 1] (2:53:45 - 2:53:55)

thank you and everybody else of course is also that in essence you are the opening for that dimension to come into this world

that's right and anything that we do that is creative or is successful or is good comes from that source flowing through us

[Speaker 1] (2:54:05 - 2:54:06)

yes

[Speaker 2] (2:54:06 - 2:54:07)

it is not of our doing

no

but of the greater doing yes of consciousness so I want to thank you all for being a part of this really magnificent journey it's been a part of what I know is my life's calling to be able to be the hole for all of this to flow through so I especially want to thank you and you and Kim for coming to Chicago these past 10 weeks every single week to share a new earth with all of us as I said earlier I really encourage all of you to let this be your summer re-reading book and if you've enjoyed it you should pass it on there's no greater gift than sharing it that's why I wanted to share it with you all there's no greater gift than sharing it with somebody you care about and having their lives also be awakened and transformed by the words that point you in the direction of the experience of awakening so you can all begin to re-watch our webcast this summer please join me next Monday May 12th for the start of my soul series webcast because so many people said what do we do now here on Oprah.com I'll be talking to Dr. Jill Bolte-Taylor she's the brain scientist who had a catastrophic stroke and experienced much of what we've been talking about in our new earth webcast our soul series will continue throughout the summer with spiritual thinkers and authors from every walk of life so I hope you'll keep Monday's reserved for Oprah.com tonight's class will be available on demand tomorrow for free here at Oprah.com and if you want to download or watch any of our other classes you can do that tomorrow at Oprah.com and of course iTunes it's free because of the generous support of nature made soft gel vitamins what are we going to do next Monday?

[Speaker 1] (2:55:47 - 2:55:59)

another way of being able to continue to connect with the energy would be perhaps one is re-reading this book of course not necessarily from the beginning just opening it some places

[Speaker 2] (2:55:59 - 2:56:00)

that you've outlined yes

[Speaker 1] (2:56:00 - 2:56:16)

and also there are lots of I've done retreats and talks so on my website people can get talks or retreats and just listen and listening to a talk a two or three hour talk can get put you back in touch with the presence

that's right and you can always download the webcast

[Speaker 1] (2:56:19 - 2:56:20)

yes

[Speaker 2] (2:56:20 - 2:56:24)

yes and we'll be back in the fall there's no telling what we'll do

[Speaker 1] (2:56:24 - 2:56:24)

that's right

[Speaker 2] (2:56:24 - 2:56:47)

there's no telling this is just the beginning so thank you all and again as Gandhi said let's all go out in the world and be the change we want to see yes thank you yes thank you thank you thank you thank you thank you thank you thank you thank you thank you thank you thank you thank you thank you

2009 Eckhart Tolle TV Meditation August 09

Welcome to our live meditation. On the surface of things, there are a few thousand people in different parts of the planet looking at their computer screens, yourself included. And there may be friends or relatives who have asked you, are going to ask you, what are you doing?

There's always more than what you see on the surface. A few thousand people looking at their computer screens, becoming still, alert, present. That's all part of a transformation of collective consciousness that's happening on the planet.

So there's something occurring here that is far more profound than what it appears to be on the surface. And you and I are an essential part of that transformation of consciousness. And if you look more deeply, there isn't even you and I.

There's only the one essence that underlies all life, consciousness itself, manifesting through forms. Consciousness itself, however, is formless, the essence of who you are. Consciousness also manifests in time, through form, in time, because out here, there's time.

It's shortly after one o'clock in the afternoon on the West Coast here. And different times in different places. Conscious manifests gradually in time, manifests more and more in time through form.

But consciousness itself is timeless. It is the life essence, universal intelligence, formless, timeless. It emerges through the form.

It begins to shine through the form, through the mind, even through the physical form. It shines through the form. It emerges through you, through I.

And your mind may ask, tell me what to do now. And of course, there's nothing to do. Just to be aware that you are.

Be aware of your presence, of the light of your consciousness. It's not your consciousness. It's just a way of speaking.

Be aware of the light of consciousness in you. The light, the light in which these words are being perceived. And you may want to have a look inside yourself and see if you are still thinking as you look at me.

Are there thoughts going through your head? There's nothing wrong with that. I'm not saying there shouldn't be any thoughts going through your head.

Just find out, be aware if there are thoughts still going through your head as you look. Or do you find that there are actually spaces arising in yourself? An opening up of space where before there was the movement of the mind.

A space of no thought, just presence. That's the arising new consciousness, one could say. It's a new dimension arising.

Spacious alertness. That is the, you then, as this opens up, this is why we're here, to enter that dimension, to access that dimension. The most vital thing in your life.

Everything else is secondary. Successes, failures, this or that happening, your past, your future, so-called past, so-called future, which can never be experienced outside of the present moment. The present moment is the consciousness.

The present moment is who you are and the present moment is the timeless dimension. So we are accessing that discovering that inside. So the miracle then is the space opens up inside you and there's simple alert presence, spaciousness.

No loss of consciousness. Not going towards sleep but heightened consciousness. So you're touching the unconditioned, timeless dimension of consciousness itself.

That eventually does things even to this form. As you live in conscious connectedness with that dimension, it tends to also transform the outer realm of your so-called life because it brings in a new energy. It empowers your life not in an egoic sense.

I am all-powerful now in a very subtle, gentle way. A new power and intelligence flows into your life if you open yourself up to that new consciousness in your daily life as much as possible. Welcome it.

Look for it. How do you do that? How can you look for that?

Step one is are you thinking? Being aware that there's thinking happening inside you. Oh, that's an important step because when you're aware that your mind is active and perhaps uselessly active, which is a lot of the time, that's what the mind does, it just produces mental noise.

Useless thinking. Often self-destructive thinking, often negative thinking. More frequently you will find thinking dwells on that which is problematic, that which involves conflict, that which involves fear and anxiety, than thinking about that which is pleasant or good or joyful.

So the awareness that there's a lot of useless thought happening right now, that's a step, an important step. With that awareness comes choice. I'm talking from the viewpoint of the so-called person.

From that viewpoint of the so-called person suddenly there comes the element of choice. What is that choice? The choice to say I will take my consciousness out of the structures of thinking where it is impresent.

Consciousness gets captured continuously and used by the movement of thought, the mind. The choice is to say I'll take, I will remove my conscious attention from thinking and become present. And those of you who are not familiar with this ask how do I do that?

And there comes what you could call step two. I don't usually use steps but just temporarily let's just approach it in this way. Step two then is where do I put my attention if it's not in thinking?

Very simple thing for example you can do is ask yourself if you're breathing at this moment. Am I breathing? But don't answer it from memory.

It says of course I'm breathing because I'm still alive. If I wasn't breathing I wouldn't be alive. That's logical thinking.

But that's not direct evidence that you're breathing. The direct evidence that you're breathing you can only find by placing attention on the act of breathing. And then you can truly answer the question am I breathing at this moment?

Am I still breathing? Okay, let me have a look. Your attention moves to the intake, the inflow, and the outflow of breath.

You can feel the air moving into the body. You feel the air moving out of the body. You may feel it more as it enters the nose.

Some people feel it there most strongly or you may be able to follow with your attention. You follow the airflow into the body and out of the body. Wherever that is you know you can feel yourself breathing.

So now you know that you're breathing and what does that do? It takes your attention away from thinking. Conscious attention is consciousness.

So your consciousness instead of being trapped in the movement of thought you have to to know whether or not you're breathing you have to take your attention out of the movement of thought. That's what's happening when you're finding out whether you're breathing and you've put it inside and you think yes yes there's breathing happening or I am breathing. And that is called, it's an old very old way of entering the meditative state already recommended by the Buddha and that's called traditionally breath awareness and it's called the meditation technique.

But it's so simple and so natural to know that you're breathing. It's not really a technique. I'm not that fond of techniques because they tend to come in between you and who you are in your essence because here now I'm using a technique.

So if you use techniques choose techniques that are simple not complicated if you even want to call them techniques. Breath awareness. So if you do it now it's not a doing it's a it's a realizing of what's already there so in that sense it's not a doing.

Breath awareness in that sense is not a doing it's a an awareness arising right now and with that comes the spaciousness. You're touching the formless consciousness and breath is such an ideal meditation object so to speak because it is not an object it is not clearly defined in form. It is shapeless formless breath.

Just as consciousness itself is shapeless formless. And that's why breath has often been traditionally been equated with spirit the formless dimension. Both in the Old Testament and why it's such a favorite meditation technique in Buddhism for example.

But it's essentially a very such a simple thing to know that I'm breathing. And you're entering the present moment of course at the same time that's what the meditative state is. That's what presence is.

Presence is called presence because you're that you then suddenly you fully inhabit the now. You come to life. And if you're attentive you may be able to be aware of more than just one breath.

You're just you're breathing. And if you're very alert behind that breathing you can sense something very alive. You can't define it.

There's a background there that's intensely alive. Some people may call it peace deep inner peace. You may call it being.

You suddenly become aware that you are. Not that you are this or that or that. Not that you are 40 years old or you are this profession or you are that.

You're becoming aware of beingness of the aliveness within you of the I am. First person singular of to be I am. Of your presence.

Of your essence. That which has nothing to do with your past. Nothing to do with your future.

And that is inherently enlivening joyful. Awareness of your breath can also put you in touch with the awareness. It's somehow they're connected.

Awareness of the inner body. The aliveness within the body that I've often spoken about. Written about the awareness of the inner body.

Awareness that there is a field of aliveness permeating every cell of your body. Feel that aliveness that normally in our world a human being is not conscious of that because all their attention is in the movement of thinking in the head. Just to feel that sense of aliveness permeating your body.

Breath awareness can easily put you in touch with that. And somehow they go together. And that aliveness too is formless.

The physical body has a form. But that which underlies the form is formless. So as you sit here be aware of that inner aliveness.

And when I say be aware of that inner sense of aliveness that permeates every cell of the body. It sounds as if there were a subject and an object. I am aware of the aliveness.

But this is due to the structure of language. When you formulate a sentence you have a subject and an object. I am doing something.

But we have to go beyond that because that is not really how it is. It just appears to be as if I were aware of the aliveness permeating my inner energy field. But in reality the observer, so called the observer and the observed which is the aliveness are a single phenomenon, a single thing, a single no-thing.

They are really one. So it really is a becoming self-aware of your entire being. Your entire being becomes self-aware.

Not I am aware of this. I am aware of myself. So there is no subject and object except when we put it into language.

Self-awareness reflects back on itself. Observer and observed merge. And that is the state of traditionally called self-realization.

Not something mystical ultimately or weird or something to be attained after another 100 incarnations. No, but as a natural way of being and living. A state of connectedness with the source, with life itself.

If you don't find that you run around the planet back and forth for a few more years and that's it. Never gone beyond the surface of things. And all the things that you thought were important at the latest just when you are about to die you realize it wasn't important, not essentially.

And you will have missed the only thing that really is important. And if a whole civilization misses it, it quickly disappears. Even a civilization needs to be rooted to some extent in the eternal and timeless dimension.

It means it requires a few people, what the percentage is I don't know, to be rooted there. To keep the whole civilization anchored in being. That's of course what Jesus meant when he was sitting with two women, two sisters, Mary and Martha.

Martha goes about worrying about this and that, getting this and that ready. And Mary is just listening in a state of alert attention. And Jesus says, there's only one thing that really matters and she has chosen that thing.

It doesn't mean never to be active again, but to see where the true priorities lie. Then action can flow from that state of connectedness with being rather than come from a state of disconnectedness. And then it becomes quickly mad, pointless.

So as you sit here, either with your eyes closed or looking at the screen, can you be as much as possible free of mental noise and just be here as a spacious presence? Perhaps feel in the background the inner aliveness, the entire body alive within, no need to think, just as I'm not thinking. The words just come out of stillness.

There's no preparation. And when there's no speaking, there's no thinking. So we can be together in that state of simple alert presence.

That's the shift. And then in daily life, welcome that state of presence. Choose it, because you have a choice now.

Choose to take your attention out of useless thinking. Thinking is fine when it's helpful for this or that. It's good.

When thinking becomes negative, brings up problems that have no actual existence here and now, which actually means all problems, because in the here and now no problem can survive. There's only a situation, not a problem. When life becomes complicated and you start thinking how hard it all is, that means you've lost yourself, you've lost the present moment, you've lost the timeless dimension of consciousness, the I am.

And then, knowing that, you can choose to take your attention out of thinking, because it's pointless, it's recognized as pointless, and be simply here as an alert presence. And in any situation, be there as an alert presence. As you're driving towards an interview or whatever you're doing, instead of protecting yourself mentally, be there as an alert presence.

Feel the entire energy field. And there comes power. And then if you sit with the other person who's interviewing you for a job or whatever, be there, connected with the power within, which is the timeless consciousness.

And let your words come from there. Then the right thing will happen. Either you will get the job and it will be the right thing, or they will say, no, we don't want you, because they don't want that empowered consciousness there.

They want an ego. Or somebody senses that there is that genuineness to who you are, that absence of role playing, that absence of fear, am I going to get this job or not? There's just the presence.

There's just the state of connectedness with the power of now. And then you may find that even while you're thinking and doing things, there's still an awareness in the background that isn't lost. So you never completely lose yourself in thinking.

When you discuss things with people, observe how people discuss. They are completely lost. Every thought drags them along.

Every reaction drags them along. Lost in thoughts, lost in reactions, lost in emotion that reflects the thoughts. And here, as the new state of consciousness arises, there's in the background a space of awareness while thinking happens in the foreground.

That's the stillness in the background and you can sense it even while you discuss things. But now you discuss things without ego because ego is being lost in the forms, identification with forms, thought forms, emotional forms. And that's where all the collective madness of the planet comes from.

So you can participate in the game of life without ego and that is the only way things on our planet can change by enough humans entering that state of consciousness. Awareness or presence in the background even as you speak. Even as you discuss and say, No, this is not my viewpoint.

My viewpoint is this. I know that your viewpoint is different. I'll just now give you my viewpoint.

This is how I see things. No ego. Not making others wrong.

And learning to be. Just be. Not going to sleep and be.

Be awake. But just be. From time to time, just allow yourself to be.

There is no need to fill up every moment with doing. No matter how busy you are. Leave some room for being.

Occasionally just be. It doesn't have to be long. Just space.

One minute of space. It's timeless really. Just from the external viewpoint you call it one minute.

And then gradually being isn't lost even while you do. That's why we're here.

2009 Eckhart Tolle TV Questions And Answers

[Speaker 1] (0:25 - 1:02:29)

We need to understand a few basic things about this, and I'd like to remind you of something that's already been written in the power of now, and that is that your life consists of, what you call your life, is usually your life situation. Your life consists of your life situation, which is your job, your financial situation, your relationships, your living situation, your health situation, whether you're young or old, or whatever is happening in your life, all that makes up your life situation. And for most people, that's all there is.

They don't know anything else. Their whole life consists, what they call my life, when they refer to my life, they're talking about their life situation. And in the power of now, I differentiate between your life situation, which is one level, and a more fundamental level that I call your life.

We are going to talk about these two levels today at a time when, for many people, their life situation is becoming challenging. They're encountering new limitations suddenly coming into their life situation. The only difference between our present situation in the world and what normally happens is that many people experience similar things at the same time.

So many people at the present time experience some form of challenge or limitation coming into their life, as many of the structures, the external structures in the world, are becoming shaky, and some have collapsed already. You may remember from a New Earth, I speak about the collapse of Soviet communism, which nobody could have predicted. And I speak of the impending collapse of many of the structures that are ego-based, that are an external reflection of an inner state of consciousness, that is the ego.

And those structures, which, of course, includes financial structures and so on, are now beginning to collapse. And something totally new will arise. How long this collapse will take, I cannot say.

But everybody can clearly see, and even the experts are talking about systemic, I hear this word on the radio, a systemic crisis or something like that. In other words, the crisis is not to do with this or that on the surface of things, but concerns the very structure of these organizations, in the same sense that the human mind, the problems of the human mind have not to do with content of whatever is the content of your mind, but the very structure of the mind, the human mind that needs to change. So for many people, limitation in one form or another is coming into their life situation.

And that is actually not what the media wants us to believe. These things are dreadful. The challenge that many people are encountering at this time is actually that which will push them into a new state of consciousness.

That is the possibility, that is the promise. Whenever you encounter a crisis situation, whether it's personal or collective, there is the opening into a new way of being. The possibility, it doesn't mean that everybody will embrace that possibility.

So we need to first of all see, not believe what we are told in the media, that we should be in a state of fear, that the only real response, the only natural response to what's happening is a state of fear. That is an unconscious response. We need to see that change is absolutely necessary in this world, and the dissolution of many of the ego-based structures is absolutely necessary for the planet to survive and for humanity to survive.

So what's happening is not dreadfully bad. What's happening needs to happen. The totality, the intelligence behind phenomena is doing it.

So it is a good thing, and if challenges come into your life, which might mean limitation, financial limitation, you may have to move somewhere else, you may have to downgrade, uncertainty may come into your life. Oh, that shouldn't be happening. I should know what's going to happen for the next 20, 30 years of my life.

Well, you don't know anymore. And that is wonderful that there is suddenly an opening into uncertainty. So is it possible for you to embrace uncertainty and not demand that you should know what's going to happen to you in your life situation?

To embrace not knowing, to embrace uncertainty and to embrace, yes, yes, there are difficulties, there are challenging situations, but that is part of being here on this planet in this form. I'd like to remind you of, there's a book called The Road Less Traveled, and I never got to read the whole book. I basically got stuck on the first two sentences of the book, and those first two sentences of the book were so good that you didn't need to read anymore.

I don't know whether that's a good thing for an author to write such a good book, that all you need is the first two sentences. And if you don't get that, you can still read the rest of the book, but if you get that, well. So the first sentence is, life is difficult, okay?

And the second sentence, I don't know literally, but it says something like, and if you know that life is difficult and you accept that life is difficult, it's no longer difficult. It's only, it's difficult when, if you say it shouldn't be. But if you go with, yes, the uncertainty, this is part of being here in this form, there is continuous uncertainty, and the certainty, the rigidity of things is an illusion.

The certainty that all these structures are solid, and you can sometimes see it, that the world trade center looked very solid, and phew, gone. And all the structures, the big banks, they looked so solid, nothing could possibly happen there, they are forever, and within a few weeks, they're beginning to crumble. It's Soviet communism, nothing looked more solid than Soviet communism.

You say, this is so rigid, it can't possibly, must at least survive for another thousand years, the rigidity of it, and the people who embodied that, it's not going to move. When you saw the Soviet rulers greeting the military parades, huge tanks and rockets going past, nothing can be more solid than that, and within a year, collapsed, the whole thing collapsed. Now, one good thing, of course, about traveling to India is that the external reality is a little bit less solid than in the West, so you're less likely to delude yourself that you live in a solid reality that can be controlled or that you can be in control of, where you see the structures are actually a bit shaky everywhere, and even if you go into a luxury hotel, you never know what's going to happen. So, we are learning to go with the flow of things, as the expression goes, and the flow of things is fluid, it's not a continuous change, something new is arising, and why demand that there should be certainty in your life? Be open to uncertainty and see how empowering that actually is, and not say, okay, but what about my pension plan, the mutual funds?

I had saved all my life, and now, look, I got the statements, I lost 50% of it. Yes, so, but you're still here, that's your life situation. Whatever happens, your life situation, and you may remember a year ago, you were looking at your mutual funds, and said, wow, it's made so much money, it's great.

It feels good, and then you look at it again. Oh, okay, now I can relax now. And then you relax, and then the next one comes, and it's, oh my God, life is difficult.

Things are dissolving, and see, if you resist internally what is happening, as the media teaches you to do, then, of course, you resist the flow, you resist the arising of the new, the arising of the new state of consciousness, primarily, in you, and eventually, the arising of new external expressions of that state of consciousness, a new world. We don't need to be concerned about that. That comes of itself.

What we need to be concerned about is to be open to this transformation, to be open to not knowing. So there's our life situation, and it's interesting. There may be interesting changes happening in our life situation, and we say, that's fine.

Whatever change comes, you look at the situation and see, yes, all of a sudden, a limitation is coming into my life. I lost my job, and my investments are not worth that much anymore. Okay, then, how can you overcome these limitations?

Limitations can be overcome always on two levels. There is the external limitations. Limitations can be overcome on an external level, and other limitations can only be overcome on an inner level.

So you need to see, whatever situation you encounter in your life, is there anything I can do to overcome these limitations? It might involve moving somewhere else where you don't have a huge mortgage anymore. It might involve moving to a different location.

It might involve finding a different job or thinking outside of the box and doing something totally different you'd never even thought of, of thinking creatively. So whatever limitation you encounter in your life, you look at, first of all, at the externals of the situation. Is there anything I can do?

And then you become still. And then you start thinking again, and you look at the situation. What are the possibilities?

Then you become still again. Then you look again, you think, or you talk to someone. And then you go back into stillness, and that process may take a while, not necessarily just a day, of looking what it is, what is it that I can do, and going within where you're not looking for anything, but become comfortable with what is here and now.

And when you become comfortable with what is here and now, you're stepping out of your life situation into life. Life is now. Life has nothing to do with what's going on in your life.

It has nothing to do with past and future or what your relationships are or what your financial situation is or your living situation is or even your health situation is. That's all your life situation. That is not life.

Your life situation exists in time, past and future. Life is now. So it is vital that you learn to step out of your life situation so that, periodically, so that your life situation does not absorb your entire attention continuously, because if it does, it'll drain you and eat you up because you'll have continuous stuff to think about, one problem after another in my life, my life situation.

You know, do you think, oh, now I have to, what about that problem and that? And you're thinking about your, there's a continuous succession of problems that I need to worry about, and if I don't worry about it, it's all going to collapse totally, even worse than it has done so already. I need to be responsible and worry.

You're being eaten up by your life situation. Your mind, it comes down to your mind, because your mind gives power to your life situation. The continuous involuntary mind activity really is your life situation.

If you don't think about your life situation, there is no life situation. What situation? You come into, you step out of that periodically, vital to learn that, and come into life, and then the mind says, what do you mean by life?

Okay, let's see where that is, that life. You step out of time, your attention, you remove your attention from past and future, okay? How do you do that?

Well, a little help would be, what about now? What's wrong with now? Do I have a problem now?

Now? Of course I have a problem now, look at my bank statement. Of course I have a problem now, I need to move by the end of the month, of course I got noticed.

I'm not talking about the end of the month, or what's going to happen to your mutual funds. I'm talking about, do you have a problem now? No.

I can't see any. I'm trying hard to find a problem in this moment. Well, there's a stain, no there isn't, I'm just saying.

There's a stain here, is that a problem? No, it's a stain, okay. I have a backache, I don't, it's just an example.

I have a backache, is that a problem? Only if you start thinking about it and saying, am I going to have to live with that for the rest of my life? Or why do you always have a backache?

I wonder what's wrong with me. No, it's not a problem, it's a backache. It's just that.

You stay with what is now. Don't spin some stories about what is now. Don't, you know, you don't have to be judge it, compare it, say it shouldn't be.

You come into now. So the first level of now is whatever is around you, that's only level one. Level one of now is your sense perceptions.

Wow. And that's already a revelation. When you step out of being totally possessed, eaten up, eaten alive by your life situation, and you step out of that into just, even just becoming aware of sense perceptions, you're entering the now because you can only perceive now.

And you're not perceiving any problem. You're perceiving what is now. Sense perceptions, this room, the people, the incredible variety of human forms.

Amazing to see. Every human form is different and unique in some way. It's beautiful.

You can sit in a public place and be in the now and watch people. Nothing to do with your life situation. You're there as a presence, watching, perceiving this moment.

The incredible fullness of this moment around you in the form of life forms, human life forms, animal life forms, plant life forms, the air, the incredible forms and shapes that are continuously moving the spectacle of phenomena. Unbelievable variety. It's fantastic.

And you have no idea that this is going on around you when you're totally trapped in your life situation, which really is your mind. So we are learning periodically to step out of that level that I call life situation and enter life. Life is now.

This was level one of now, what is around you. Be alert to that because otherwise you miss the whole thing because you're so concerned about your conceptual reality, which really is what a life situation is. You're so concerned about your conceptual reality that you miss reality.

Your conceptual reality eats up your entire attention continuously and you're worrying about your life, which in reality is your life situation, but you call it your life. It's not life at all. And so this is a dreadful fate for a person to be consumed by their life situation.

And so they miss life. They're trying to find the life, the fullness of life in their life situation. And they're hoping that if they can eventually sort out their life situation so that they can find life.

But if your life situation is all you have, you're never going to find life because your life situation is a set of thoughts and concepts in your head. So to become empowered, you need to rise, one could say you rise above your life situation, which doesn't mean you don't deal with things anymore. You still deal with things, but you realize there is a level or a dimension to you that is far more powerful and vital than whatever is happening in your life.

So accessing that dimension is vital. And that really is what spirituality is all about. Not having some weird ideas about this or that, or beliefs, it's nothing to do with ideas.

It's nothing to do with concepts. There's no such thing as spiritual concepts. Concepts are not spiritual.

They're not even spiritual thoughts. There's no such thing as a spiritual thought. A thought is not spiritual because thought is form.

Spiritual is the formless dimension in yourself. Level one, then, whatever surrounds you. You can say, yeah, but this is still form too.

Yes, it's form too, but it's not a mind form. It's not a conceptual form. It's what is here in the world of physical forms.

Be open to that. Level one of the now. Level two of the now, don't get attached to the numbers.

I'm just saying two. Level two of the now is feeling that you're alive. Level two is, so your attention was on what is around you.

The world is multifaceted. There's incredible play of phenomena all around you, and you acknowledge that, and it's beautiful. It has nothing to do with what your relationships are doing at the moment or what your bank statements are doing at the moment or whether you have a job or you don't have a job or whether your wife has just left you or the husband has done this or whether you're, nothing to do with any of that.

You're stepping out into presence. Level two of presence is to feel that you're alive inside. You've already noticed that the world around you is alive.

Well, that's a big step forward. You have noticed that the world around you is vitally alive. So to notice that, you need to have stepped out of your life situation, your conceptual reality.

Wow. Okay, that was, you breathe. It's beautiful.

The play of forms. And then you feel that you inside are alive. Your body is alive.

You feel the aliveness in your hands, your arms, your legs, and the totality of aliveness, the global aliveness inside in the background. And you can still look around and see the incredible aliveness around you. Now, if you feel the body inside, you're already moving to an even more vital dimension than the vitality of life forms.

There's your body. It feels good to be embodied, to sense the aliveness, even in an everyday situation. When things are going, when you're listening to the news and say something dreadful has just happened, there will be negative growth next year in the economy.

Negative growth, what does that mean? We are now officially in a recession. Oh my God.

We are going to buy less at Christmas this, oh no. We are not going to run around like mad rabbits this Christmas. Oh, that's dreadful.

So even when you listen to the news, I'm exaggerating a little, but there's some truth in it. Even when you listen to the news, you can feel the aliveness within while they're saying we are now officially in a recession. The entire automobile industry of the United States may collapse and drag everybody else down.

And you feel the aliveness inside. So there you have something more vital than that. And if you are part of the automobile industry of the United States, and if it affects you directly or indirectly, when the situation arises externally, then you will deal with it.

You will address it in the now. And you accept whatever is, and you look at it, okay, what is it that I can do? And then you go into life, and then you go out again and look at your situation.

And you go back and find the balance between dealing with your life situation and entering life. So level two, set the aliveness in the body while you listen to the news, for example, or while the phone rings and somebody says, ah, ah, ah, oh dear, we need to do something. Well, if anybody comes to you and says, oh, we need to do something, you step out of the life situation and become present where there are no problems.

So you can hang on to your inner body. And then an even deeper level of your life situation, which, of course, they are all connected. They are ultimately all one.

At the deepest level, the one that contains it all is the realization that underneath it all, who you are is not the thoughts that go through your head or whatever's happening externally, but you can actually sense within yourself that you are that in which all the phenomena appear. That's the deepest level of life. Life is the consciousness that you are, the I, the I am.

You attach nothing else to I am. The I am, it's the deepest, who you are in your innermost identity. That is consciousness.

It is formless. It is the light in which everything appears. And to feel yourself, even at this moment, to feel that nothing that can be defined is who you are.

Nothing that can be thought is who you are. Nothing that happens around you has anything ultimately to do with who you are in your essence. Success or failure ultimately has nothing to do with who you are.

Success cannot give you your true reality. Failure, success is not who you are. It's all the play of forms.

It's all to do with time. It's your life situation. Stepping out of that, into the power and the fullness of the present moment where you know yourself as consciousness itself.

Another word you could use as a pointer is to realize the stillness within yourself. Consciousness is still, alive, vibrant, but still. Underneath all the things that are happening externally and internally in your mind and your emotional field, you remain as that.

And that can be in any situation when you are the master, the spiritual master, knows him or herself as consciousness in any external situation. You can actually sense a spaciousness inside you no matter what's happening. And even while you're thinking, well, you're going to think much less because there's no reason to think totally unnecessary things all the time.

To sense always in the background, the I am, the stillness, that which is precious, something very precious, indestructible. And sometimes you may need to encounter a life-threatening challenge that suddenly comes in to sense that. But whenever a form in your life begins to dissolve or collapse, there's a greater chance to discover within yourself that which is beyond form.

So let's say the entire stock market collapses and then you get your statement and it says zero. That moment of looking at your balance and you say your mutual funds have gone from $500,000 to $5. So this form that was important to you has dissolved.

And you look at that and instead of resisting, because this is what is, ultimately it's only a figure on a piece of paper. Only when you start thinking does it become a big problem. But the reality of it is you're opening this thing, you're taking it out of the envelope and you're reading and there is little scribbles, computer printout, which has a little figure on it.

And that's all that it is in the reality of the present moment. Unless you make a problem out of it and start thinking what's going to happen to me in the future? How am I going to survive in my old age?

I've worked for nothing, 30 years of work for nothing. What does all that mean? It means it's a story around the simplicity of a figure on a piece of paper.

And then once you are trapped in that, you're lost. So to see very clearly, this is the master, you're becoming a master when you just see the simplicity of any moment without going into spinning stories around me, my past, my future. It was all in vain, I failed, it's all been pointless.

I'm never going to make money again. All mind stories, mind-created stories. So the solution to your financial, other problems is stepping out as much as you can into the aliveness of the present moment, which is who you are in your essence.

You are the now in which everything happens, the consciousness in which everything unfolds, the timeless space, and then look at the situation. So you're coming from a, you're rooted in a deeper place. And then you're dealing with the externals.

But always be very careful because the externals have a pulling power and you're living in a world that's totally hypnotized by the externals. And in a world that continuously tells you how important the external is. And every time you listen to somebody say, this is so important, you should be worried.

You should be in fear. You should think about this. Let's discuss it.

And the world has this pulling power. So you need to realize everybody's hypnotized into believing that this is all that there is. And this is absolutely serious and important.

It is important perhaps, but it is only relatively important. It is not of absolute importance. Of absolute importance is finding the essence of who you are.

And then deal with things from there. So that a different energy flows into, even into what you do. So the two are not separate.

Even your so-called life situation changes, is affected by the power of life itself when you are aware of that in yourself. So a different level of consciousness flows into what you do. A different energy flows into what you do when you realize that whatever you do is at best only relatively important.

Whatever happens is relative. The only one thing is absolute, and that is finding life, or as Jesus calls it, the fullness of life, which has nothing to do with your life situation. And the strange thing is the life situation tends to unfold with greater ease when you are connected with something, that dimension that is deeper than life situations.

And then even on the external level of your life situation, there's things happen more lightly, more easily. And that's the beauty of it. And this is the practice then, and no better opportunity than the present time when you're being challenged rather than being deluded for a few more years that all is well when it isn't, because eventually things are going to dissolve around you anyway.

And if they dissolve, don't dissolve around you, then you dissolve before they do. So it's better to see that fact now than wait until you're 92 years old. You may not be that alert anymore to find the reality of who you are and the reality underneath phenomena.

So here's the mastery of life is to live in two dimensions simultaneously and then see what happens. You're practicing then every moment and whatever situation that arises in your life becomes a practice for staying present within that situation to feel the depths of who you are, the power of now, the power of consciousness as you deal with things. So this is what it means to become empowered.

That's what everybody wants, but they're looking for it where they can't find it. They're looking for some power in their external life situation. The power must come from within.

It does not come from your thoughts or from whatever happens out here. So another way of putting this is look at whatever limitations arise in your life. Let's say you're trapped somewhere in some unpleasant situation or place and you want to get out.

Look at the situation. What is it that I can do? Or perhaps there's nothing you can do.

All right, no, it's a beautiful thing to see. At this present moment, there's nothing I can do. I can't even pick up the phone.

It's Sunday today. I can't call anybody. They're all, nobody's at work.

There's nothing I can do except be with what is. The next day, action arises. Not losing yourself in the action, another important thing, because it's very easy once you start to speak and to act, you totally lose yourself in that.

You will get stressed. The slightest stress means you've lost yourself in your life situation again. It is possible to deal with things effectively without stress.

Just be more powerful than the situation. Most people, for most people, the situation is always more powerful than they, so they feel smaller than the situation. That's normal.

And that's a delusion because it all arises from consciousness. So you are actually far more powerful, the power of who you are is far greater than anything external, but that's, people don't know that. So they're always reacting to something, defending themselves against this or that, realizing that the situation actually has very little power.

And if your change of, your state of consciousness changes, external reality reflects the change. This does not mean that anything remains absolutely solid in external reality. It still is subject to continuous fluctuations.

So you don't attach yourself to anything, but it's beautiful to see that external reality reflects basically your predominant inner state. If your inner state is empowered, and it can only be empowered when you are not lost in your life situation, then the empowerment is reflected around you. And it may come in many forms.

It may come as financial abundance. It may come as anything, any form that the aliveness can take. So it's an incredible thing to discover that you are actually more powerful than the world around you.

Not in the narrow egoic sense that you say, I can control everything that happens, no. So this is a wonderful opportunity now to experiment with consciousness, with your life situation and your life. Where is the life at this moment?

Do you feel the aliveness of this moment? And then the universe uses you because it is going somewhere. There's an evolutionary impulse at work on this planet and everywhere else, because if it's happening here, it's happening everywhere, as above, so below.

Then the consciousness that wants to come into this world can freely flow through you and express itself. How? In many different ways.

According to your particular form, it might be some enlightened business. It may be that you are producing something that affects many people and brings that consciousness to others through some artistic creation, or this or that, innumerable possibilities, how you can be an opening for the evolutionary impulse of the universe that wants to come through. And then wherever you go, people will be affected by this transformed energy.

You cannot not affect the world. When you live in the new state of consciousness, whoever you come into contact with is affected by that. Even if you were a hermit, you would still affect the collective consciousness.

If you are a frequency holder, as I call it in a new earth, a frequency holder is somebody who is not very interested in going out into the world and changing the world or building up some huge, great organization to make the world a better place or to create a great work of art or to come up with some new discovery or write a great book. Not that there's anything wrong with these things. For some people, that is their life purpose.

But there are some other people who are not drawn to that, who are content with remaining in a relatively small circle of influence, a little, maybe just contemplatives is the old word for those people, people who feel, don't want to go out there and change the world. They just want to be present. And that's fine because they hold the frequency of that state of consciousness because whatever state of consciousness you are in affects the totality of consciousness, is part of the totality of consciousness.

So I was a frequency holder for a large part of my life, never very interested in going out into the world and achieving the great things. I was kind of happy being withdrawn and until something came into my life and I felt there's more that I can do, that was a thought that came. I was doing little work, workshops with people, 10 people at a time, 15 people for a number of years, giving talks in people's living rooms.

And then it was fine, in many ways, I felt happy being a semi-hermit and occasionally going out and doing little things, happy not being famous, that was never thought I would want to be famous. But then the thought came, I could do so much more in this world, but it doesn't seem to be happening. And one day I sat under an oak tree, you could call this, there's a question, later on we'll have some questions.

Somebody is asking a question about divine discontent. The question is, do you ever experience what might be called divine discontent? That is the discontent that leads to something very positive.

And you could say at that, there was a moment that came at that time when I experienced a mild form of divine discontent, which simply is a sense of, there's more than I can do, that I could do, but it's not happening. That's a mild form of divine discontent. It's not some unhappiness that says, oh, I have failed, I'm in my forties, and what have I achieved?

That's not divine discontent. That's just a form of normal unhappiness. With divine discontent, there is not some lot of mind activity around me and my life.

There's just a sense of this, my present life situation has these limitations around me, but I could go beyond that. I could be much vaster. The world needs what I know comes through me.

I know that the world needs that. So why isn't the world, I'm speaking for some of you too, why isn't the world opening up these channels for me? So that was the divine discontent.

So I sat under an oak tree in Somerset, where I would sometimes go, magnificent oak tree, and I said to the universe, which ultimately to myself, please use me. I was talking to myself ultimately, because I am that, please use me, I'm here. So I was a frequency holder, and yet after many years of a frequency holder, I had this sense of, okay, now expansion is what is called for in this world, a moment of divine discontent, please use me.

I didn't hear any answer. And then I said something that some years later, I almost said, maybe I said too much. I said, I want acceleration.

Okay, and then I went home and nothing happened for a few months. I didn't know that while nothing was happening for a few months in my little cottage in Somerset, somebody there, I don't take it literally, the countdown has already started, like the rocket ship, which goes 10, nine, eight, seven, six, and then one day I woke up and say, I have to move. I have to move to the West Coast of North America.

And that was the beginning. And so the rocket ship had taken off suddenly, and finally I landed at the desk of Oprah a few years later. I never wanted that much.

It's too much. And then the lesson was to surrender to that. It wasn't too much.

It was what was needed. If I'd been stuck to some previous idea that I had about how my life should unfold, I would be saying, oh, I'm overwhelmed, it's too much. Well, this is surrender now to what is now, surrender to this enormous energy stream that's coming through.

You asked for it, you said acceleration. And there it is. And continuously, even in this, my life, many people believe my life situation must be wonderful.

In many ways it is, but no life situation is totally satisfying. And there are always things that happen and change. There's no ultimate certainty in any life situation.

You cannot derive long-lasting satisfaction from any life situation, even if you become famous. I can tell you that now. Your life situation has not the power to satisfy you for long.

The satisfaction needs to be found in life, and life is now. And if you find that, then your life situation is fine. It unfolds and becomes empowered, probably.

So don't expect your life situation does not have the power to make you fulfilled. And it does ultimately not have the power to make you feel unfulfilled. You have to go deeper where you are bigger than that.

Although there was this divine discontent for a little moment, I'm certainly not happier or more fulfilled now than I was when I, as one magazine said, Eckhart Tolle suddenly emerged from complete obscurity. So when I lived in complete obscurity, I didn't know I was in complete obscurity, but... I was not less happy than I am now, and the state is the same.

So there's no sense, it is fulfilling to see that consciousness is evolving through this form, yes. But there's no increased happiness through that. The happiness was already there, basically, the sense of, because I was deeply rooted, as I still am, in life.

Life is always more vital to me than the life situation. I've always going, even now, I'm always a little bit out of balance, even now, although great things are happening, but I'm not recommending that to anybody. I'm just saying, I'm a little bit out of balance because I'm always more vitally drawn to the present moment and the aliveness of that than whatever I have to deal with on an external level.

So I'm always going a little bit too much, so sometimes it's a little bit chaotic around me because I don't deal with everything. If I dealt with everything, I would lose, I would become stressed, it's just too much. So many things just put aside, and then after a few months, they are not a problem anymore because the situation has changed.

And I don't do anything when I feel I'm not enjoying it anymore, stop. What's the point? What is the point in doing something that you cannot enjoy?

But don't prematurely say, okay, I definitely can't enjoy this. See if you can connect with the power of now and then do whatever you do. So don't immediately say, well, what I'm doing, definitely I could never enjoy, maybe, maybe not.

Just try connecting, stepping out of the situation into the power of now and then do. Perhaps you can enjoy it. And if you still can't, then go and do something else.

But no compromise, don't live with unhappiness or with continuous stress or frustration. That is dreadful way to live. The large part of the world lives like that.

So what a wonderful challenge here. And whatever comes where it's a life situation and the challenges of your life situation, they draw out that which is deeper. So without the challenges, you would be comfortably sitting in your armchair for the next 30 years or until you retire and watching your investments grow and grow and then drop dead.

And you would live with complete certainty that you're being looked after because you've got your life insurance and your investments are growing every year and there's nothing can possibly go wrong. And there's nothing, okay, everything is great. Watch TV every day for five hours.

And that's it. No evolution, no flowering of consciousness. And then there's somebody else who made a total mess of his or her life and ends up in prison and sits there for 20 years and suddenly wakes up in the midst of that and realizes I am life.

And the situation is just relatively unimportant to feel that who I am in my essence is beyond any limitation on the external level. So that's why I often get letters from people in prison that say, I have woken up in prison. I'm free.

I'm no longer unhappy. And I have another 20 years to do. No, I'm not unhappy anymore.

I rarely get people, I get letters from people who say, I've woken up because my investments are growing every year. In fact, I've never had a letter.

[Speaker 6] (1:02:35 - 1:02:35)

No.

[Speaker 1] (1:02:42 - 1:23:40)

Sometimes I get letters from people who wake up because they encounter some physical illness and often change happens then. Any challenge has the opportunity to wake up. If you're not being challenged by life, then wait, it'll come.

No, isn't that wonderful? That means whatever happens now, it's no longer some problem that comes into your life. It's a challenge.

It's not a dreadful thing. It's great. It's an opportunity to be more conscious, more present with what is.

So that brings us back to the first two lines of that book. Life is difficult. Of course, it's full of challenges.

But once you know that, and say, that's what it is, that's life, then it's no longer difficult. It just is what is. It only remains difficult if you have the idea stuck in your head that it shouldn't be.

It's a paradox. Life is difficult. And once you know that it's difficult, it's no longer difficult.

Knowing that it's difficult implies accepting that it's difficult. But to say it is difficult only when you resist life. So what this implies is it's when the resistance goes, then it's no longer called difficult.

It's challenging. And every challenge brings increased aliveness. My friend Steve, who is here, can testify to that because he was faced with a challenge recently of being stuck in a hotel room in Bombay with mad terrorists running all around the building for several days.

And he went deep inside. Wasn't difficult for him because he was already immersed in presence for many years. So he was able to step out of the situation, which certainly could be called difficult, and go deep within into the power of the present moment, into consciousness itself.

What signs do you see in the past year or so, either positive or negative, of the progress of the human race towards change and growth? Do you think we as a species are on the right track or have we gone even further astray? From Julie, are we on the right track or have we gone even further astray?

If you look for evidence of the one, you will find it. If you look for evidence of the other, you will also find it. So if you want to convince yourself or others that we are definitely not on the right track, you will find plenty of evidence that we are not on the right track.

Just watch the news every evening. And if all the information that you have or the facts that you gather come from the media, then perhaps you won't find that many facts that we are on the right track. But if you look elsewhere, you will find that indeed change is happening in many humans at this time.

One is that we are here now. We are here at this very moment in the now. We are part of that transformation of consciousness.

Why else should we be here? We have been led here because we are part of that universal movement of the transformation of human consciousness. And even in the news, occasionally you have little glimpses that some change is happening.

The transition in the United States, a more conscious president after eight years of unconsciousness, that is a good sign. I've seen some statements coming from Obama that are quite encouraging. Some people have asked me, has he actually read The Power of Now or New Earth?

I don't know. But if I hear things like, simple things, but surprising things coming from a politician, things like you don't need to be disagreeable when you disagree with somebody. A very simple truth, but coming from a politician, it's an incredible thing.

It's almost a miracle. Because the implication is that you don't need to be identified with your mind beyond that. Whatever opinion you might hold, you don't need to be so identified with your mental positions that immediately you make somebody who holds a different mental position into an enemy.

That's what he's really saying, but he's pressing it in very simple terms. And so, and that's a new thing. We haven't had that in a long time in politics.

Or even you have occasionally a person like we had in the past in Russia. Gorbachev, compared to the previous Soviet leaders, Gorbachev was a highly evolved Buddha. Perhaps he was a Buddha or is a Buddha.

But even if we only compare him to the previous leaders, it's like day and night. Gorbachev, I remember he said when there was another one of many crises between the United States and Russia, and they asked him, what is your opinion of this crisis situation? And he just said, this too will pass.

So that's, occasionally you see some consciousness coming even into politics. And so we have this, now there's a good chance that consciousness is flowing into that crisis. Area, there's no guarantee because what Obama is moving into now is he's moving into the old, already existing ego created structures.

Now the question is whether he is able to sustain that state of consciousness that he's in now that is not dominated by ego, but goes beyond egoic conflict. Whether after having moved into all the political, economic, military structures that have been created by the collective ego, are these structures, and not only in his own country, but also he then has relationships through the structures with other structures in other countries which are equally ego dominated. Whether he's able to sustain the state of relative awareness or presence within that, or whether he will be pulled into greater unconsciousness through moving into those egoic structures, or he's able to maintain it and transform to some extent the old structures from within.

It would be a miraculous thing, but not beyond possibility. It is possible that he's able to do that, but the forces of unconsciousness around him will be quite strong. There is, you may be familiar with the phrase, I think it's called the military industrial complex, I believe that's the phrase.

And I always thought that phrase must have been coined by somebody like Chomsky or somebody in the 60s. But in fact, I recently learned that actually it was President Eisenhower who used that term for the first time when he was leaving office. He was actually giving a warning because he could see that there was an energy formation there that had its own momentum.

It was a very powerful, and of course he didn't say that, but it's an egoic energy formation. It doesn't mean that the people in it are evil. It's just, it's an energy formation created by the collective ego.

And of course, that is still there. Obama, this is not going to disappear the moment Obama moves into the White House. So we have something coming together there and remains to be seen whether he's able to sustain consciousness or whether the structures will pull him into unconsciousness.

So what we are doing here is all, it's not separate from that because ultimately it is the collective consciousness that creates whatever government you have. Whatever predominates in the collective consciousness is then reflected externally. And so as we are here, part of the transformation of consciousness that will have an effect on, it will affect the totality of consciousness also.

So it's every single individual is vital in this. And any individual who is part of this transformation of consciousness as we are, otherwise we wouldn't be here. It goes beyond the personal.

We are part of the transformation of consciousness. And of course, that affects the totality of consciousness. So if there's beyond that, if there's something that you personally can do on the practical level, wherever you, wherever it might be in politics, if you're in politics or it might be at work, if you work for a corporation, it might be in your, some business that you have that is your own, anything that you can do and be more present with what you do and do it without the interference of the egoic consciousness, all that helps. So it's vital then that we bring this presence into whatever we do.

It is vital also that we don't complain too much about people who are not present yet because that's another way of being pulled into unconsciousness. The moment you complain about an unconscious person, and of course, when I use the term unconscious, I don't mean that they are, when I use the term unconscious, I mean that they are identified with the involuntary mind activity, which runs according to its old patterns. So they're completely in that, the old reactive patterns happen again and again and again, they're unconscious.

What they say is dominated, is controlled by that. That's unconscious. To be, not to be there as the aware presence behind your mind, but to be totally identified with the conditioned mind is unconsciousness.

So that's what unconscious means. So when you are confronted with an unconscious person, you can actually see that it's unconscious, but the important thing is not to complain about somebody else's unconsciousness. And to, how, that makes, that complaint is already an unconscious reactive pattern in you, and you are equating a pattern that operates in another human being with who that human being is.

So you've made it much more difficult for that human being by equating a pattern in that human being with who he or she is, you've made it more difficult for him or her to step out of it. And you yourself have become trapped again in a reactive pattern. So you see unconsciousness, spiritually speaking, still all around you, and that's fine.

You kind of look through it. You know it's there, but you look through. There on the surface, you have whatever reactive patterns the person manifests.

And you kind of, you see, it's like if you look through, not necessarily visual, I'm using a visual image, you sense your way through that, and you can feel that that is not who that person is. You don't have to tell this to yourself, but you can sense it. You can sense there is a human being underneath all that madness in everybody.

Even some politicians, not mentioning any names, there is a human being underneath there somewhere. Sometimes you have to look very deep, but it's there. So being pulled into unconsciousness can happen very easily.

We were talking it on the personal level and in politics. Similar example, just one more example of Second World War, we had in the person of Hitler and the movement of National Socialism, extremely, extreme egoic unconsciousness taking over a whole country. And so to some extent, the countries that were pulled into this, the Second World War, also were pulled into not as great unconsciousness as the originating unconsciousness, but into some unconsciousness also, because they did things which we would say, how can you bomb a city that is filled with civilians, millions of civilians, knowing exactly there's no military value whatsoever, we are complaining about terrorists, and the so-called good people, of course, the originating unconsciousness was even greater and even worse.

But it pulled even the other powers into bombing cities, even with atom bombs and firebombs, where there were only women and children, there were not even any men left because they were all fighting somewhere. So sometimes the response then becomes equally unconscious. So evil, if you want to call it evil breeds further evil, if you're not very careful, very present, or the response to terrorism, a few mad terrorists.

We have a question here, perhaps I'll read it, that's our next, and then we can come to some spoken questions. Every question is interesting, but this is from an anonymous questioner. One of the most puzzling human behaviors for me is to witness an act of retribution.

9-11 happens, and rather than stopping and asking who perpetrated this act of violence and what healing needs to occur, our response is to ask who did this so that we can inflict equal or greater pain and misery, thereby escalating the pain and generating cycles of violence that become even more difficult to stop as we have witnessed in the Middle East. Can humanity stop acting from its most base response? This touches on what we have just been talking about.

Can humanity stop acting from its most base response, which is the unconscious response? And the questioner mentions 9-11 happens, and rather than stopping and asking who perpetrated this act of violence and what healing needs to occur, our response is to ask who did this so that we can inflict equal or greater pain and misery. Well, the only thing that's even more stupid than this is to...

Even more stupid than hitting back at the unconscious person is to hit back somebody who didn't even do it. Just because you have to hit back, somebody, anybody will do. So the question is, can humanity stop acting from its most base response?

Yes. The most vital question is always to bring it back to yourself because it always starts with the individual. Can I, so humanity is replaced with the word I, can I stop acting from my most base response, which is the old reactive pattern?

Or what, it might not even be aggression, it can be other reactive pattern, but it's an old reactive pattern and it's ego. Can I, well, you have to see when the next challenge comes into your life, whether or not the answer is yes or no. So I can't answer that, only you can answer it, but to answer it, even that, you have to see when the next challenge comes into your life and then say, okay, can I stop acting from my most base response?

It's a somewhat complicated question, but simple question or another simple question is, what am I doing? What am I saying? What am I feeling?

[Speaker 2] (1:23:57 - 1:50:38)

So let's begin with what I like to call bamboo tree. In yoga, it's called Mountain Pose, Tadasana. In traditional Chinese, Qigong, it's called Tree Pose, but I like to add the bamboo tree because the bamboo tree, it's firm yet flexible, but the most important thing is, is that it's hollow on the inside.

And that's what we are. We are actually space, 99% empty space. And it's only with the thoughts and the identification with thinking that we become contracted in the body and therefore, in a way, feeling solid and tense.

So bamboo tree can be used standing, it could be done seated anytime, standing in line at the supermarket. And all you're just doing is you are just standing and emptying yourself. So just you could stand with your feet a bit, hip width apart.

The knees are unlocked, not bent a lot, just unlocked. And the whole body is relaxed. So the shoulders are relaxed, the arms are relaxed, the feet, the legs, everything is relaxed.

And imagine your tailbone being drawn towards the earth, the crown of your head lifted towards the sky. You may wish to close your eyes and just feeling the breath, just allowing yourself to empty. If any thoughts arise, just notice them, let them go.

Return your awareness to the breath. Become the space, become the awareness that you are. So this bamboo tree is a good practice to do after any activity or before any activity.

Even it's before you, when the phone rings, instead of running and rushing to the phone to answer it, just stop, stand there for a few moments and just become alert, present and empty. And then move into your activity, into whatever motion that is called for in the moment. And in practicing this, you'll begin to feel the inner body that Eckhart calls the inner body, the feeling of aliveness within, the chi, the prana, the life force that is always flowing within.

But with the thoughts, the thinking mind, the attachment to the thoughts, the attachment to emotions that arise, do we become rigid and contracted and the chi is not able to flow. So with this, it's just an emptying out of everything. And you can even imagine any emotions or any negativity flowing right down on the body and out the soles of your feet and to the edge of the universe.

Okay, and then just gently begin to shake the right arm. And then you can begin to shake it even more. Just make sure that it's nice and loose, including the wrist, the elbow and the shoulder.

And shake it. So it's not a movement where there's effort. It's just like almost a shaking where you can just allow everything to loosen up.

And now the right foot and the right leg. So the ankle, the knee and the hip. Just allow everything to be loose.

Don't worry if you fall off balance. And now the left arm. Again, it's a constant scanning of the body to make sure everything is relaxed.

So in any Chö Gong, everything is done in the body in a relaxed way because we're wanting to have the chi flow through the body and the chi to move. And then the left leg. Scanning the leg, making sure from hip to the bottom of your feet, relaxed.

And now the whole body. So as we shake, we just allow ourselves to fully be relaxed. And it's a good idea if we can keep our feet on the floor, the heels can come up, the knees are bent.

I wouldn't jump with locked knees, so you want to bend the legs. And you can shake as gently as you like or as hard as you like. And then perhaps eventually you begin to feel the chi moving and the chi actually shaking you, your body, moving you.

So the neck is loose, the jaw is loose, everything is loose. And this shaking Chö Gong, it's actually one of my favorites because what this does, it not only unblocks any of the stagnant, contracted energy in the body, but it helps the chi to flow. So the natural life force to start flowing through the body.

You can make any sound you'd like, just a, oh, even have your tongue loose. Everything is nice and loose. So scan the body from head to toe, making sure that everything is loose.

And shake a little harder. And it's a good idea if you can do this exercise for at least 10 minutes, if you're a beginner, do it for at least 10 minutes. Because if you're not used to feeling what the inner body feels like, what this chi, this life force, this living energy feels like, this is a good exercise because you'll see at the end when we stop.

So shake a little harder. A little bit more. Now, check out what's happening in the mind because if you have this thought of, oh, this is stupid.

This is a really dumb exercise. It's actually one of the natural exercises that kids even do it. Kids jump up and down, they shake.

Animals, they'll shake. You may even notice when you go pet a dog sometimes and as you go pet the dog and when you released your hand from the dog, the dog will just shake. He's releasing that energy that has been passed.

So through from the human hand onto the animal. And you know, it just sometimes will shake it off. And the human emotions that arise, if we're identified or we resist the emotion, then it gets lodged because it's energy.

All thought, all emotions is an energy. It can get just lodged with it somewhere in the body. So just continue to shake a little harder.

Allow the, yes, just the neck to be loose, the shoulders. Forehead, everything's loose. And still focusing on the breath, keeping your attention in the body.

So you can feel, just really get into this shaking. Be in present, be in the moment. Not lost in thought, but just fully feel the body.

A little more, a little harder. And as a one Chagong teacher, I went to Chagong class. We used to start this every class, shaking, usually for about 10 minutes.

But then one day we were in a class, 15 minutes went by, it's an hour long class. 20 minutes went by, 30, 40, then 50 minutes went by. And finally we stopped the shaking.

So we only had 10 minutes to do other things. And then somebody after class said, why did we shake for so long? And he said, because I was waiting for the last one to surrender.

So fully get into this. And you'll notice after doing this, it could be done daily. Actually, I used to do this daily and it's a good practice to do daily because it gets the chi flowing.

But I forget what I was gonna say. Oh well, it's gone. Ah, remembered.

Okay, so it's nice to start with this practice for this exercise for 10 minutes. But as you get to just do it, you can even just do it for, if you're fully present while doing it, surrender as you do this. You can just do it even for one minute and it would be amazing to feel the chi flow.

So let's shake a little harder. Everyone shake us just a bit more. You can even shake with your arms up.

And if the chi starts flowing and you start feeling it and you find that the chi will want to move you, so you might want to shake in any way that you like, any way that the chi wants to move. Keep feeling the body. Everything is relaxed.

You may notice some blocked energy begin to loosen up and you can sigh it out through the mouth or whatever way that feels like the energy just needs to be released. Imagine the negative chi, the stagnant energy flowing out through the bottom of your feet to the edge of the universe. So one last good shake.

And then when you're ready, just stop and feel. Perhaps you feel the tingling, a warmth, or a numbness. This is the inner body, the chi, the prana, the life force, the feeling of aliveness within, the energy, which is your bridge, your access to stillness.

And if you'd like, you could just, if you'd like to feel what that energy feels like outside the body, because even though the chi flows in, chi extends beyond the body. Hold your hands up in front of you, palms facing in. And you just go in slowly and gently in and out with your hands.

Your hands not touching, but feel what's between the hands. Perhaps you can feel this energy, something there. And this is life, the life force, the energy that's within you, within me, within the trees and the animals, the one life that connects us all.

And then when you're ready, let's just store that energy right into the belly, into the dantian, which is about three, four finger widths below the navel and in towards the back spine. Let's just say it's in the belly. And then when you're ready, just return to bamboo tree, emptying yourself of the last moment because the last moment's gone.

And only this moment exists. So just allowing the energy of the last moment to pass through, dissolve until as always there are new forms that arise to the next moment. You're rising, which can only happen now.

So let's begin to just clear the energy field of any leftover stagnant chi that may be blocked in the body. And what I do is a clearing. So you gather the chi into your arms and just comb out your energy field.

Your fingers are pointing towards your body. And you're feeling what's between your fingertips and your body. And you're combing out the energy.

You're not touching the body, but you're just combing your energy field. And in your mind's eye, focusing it out down, the energy right out through your feet. And inhale, gathering the chi, exhale, combing.

Just staying present in the moment, in this move. You don't want to go into the future and that means even thinking about getting to the bottom of your feet, but just staying conscious, alert, aware of this. So we did the front body three times.

We'll do the side body three times. And then the back body three times. So if there's any of the two exercises, these two, the shaking and the clearing, are probably the two major ones to just sort of clear the energy field, to clear the energy of any blockages.

And then the back body, and when you're finished, return to Bamboo Tree. And just notice how you feel. The most important thing, the primary importance, is stillness.

The form, the movement, is secondary. And as we begin to feel the inner body more, we also begin to sense stillness more. Be able to sense the stillness of all this energy that's all around, that's within, and being connected and rooted to stillness, you begin to witness that this energy that is here, within, moves through you.

It's a creative life energy, life force, that wants to create and move through you, that wants to express its consciousness, expressing itself through you. And this energy is the purest life force, purest life energy. That just is.

And with this clear energy then, being connected to stillness, you'll find, whether it comes, moves up, and uses the mind through words, or through just a touch, and this energy is love. It's filled with peace. It's filled with stillness.

And this stillness is the true healer. So we can do these exercises, and there's many Qigong exercises that's used for healing, but you can still be in your mind and thinking a lot, and you may or may not get better, but really the true healer is stillness. And when you're connected to consciousness, to your God essence, we begin to realize that the form is not so important as the mind makes it out to be.

So healing happens, not only can it happen on the physical level, but most important, it happens on the spiritual level. And when we're healed spiritually, it's like it won't matter even if we're healed physically, because we realize that the physical body is not who we really are. It's the gift, the expression of consciousness, and that our consciousness is who we really are, the consciousness that was never born and never dies.

And being rooted in this consciousness, we allow the expression of consciousness to take its form in birth and in death, stillness is who we are, our true nature. And then the form of this moment, the form of this body is beautiful. It too is who we are, but not in the fullest sense.

So the practice of the bamboo tree, being hollow, so that the form of the moment, whatever is in expression, and as all forms are impermanent, will dissolve. So it too, then, you can allow by being a bamboo tree, to allow it to dissolve. Hi there, I have a friend who very suddenly recently lost his mother, and I'm watching him try to process this.

And I'm wondering if you have any words of comfort based on your insights on death and dying.

[Speaker 1] (1:50:39 - 2:06:11)

Thank you. Now dealing with death and dying, which is of course everywhere around us, although it's to a large extent hidden in our society, because society is not yet comfortable with acknowledging the pervasiveness of death and dying, without taking refuge into some kind of belief structure. I'm not saying that every belief structure, that every belief that you may have about death is wrong, but I'd like to approach death without telling you this or that, without even telling you, they are waiting for you on the other side, you're going to meet again.

I don't want to go there, but to something more, I'm not saying this won't happen, and I'm not saying it will happen, but to leave it at a more vital level that does not require some kind of story making, even if the story is true, some kind of conceptualization in your head. So to be with a fact of death, somebody close to you, or in your case, it's indirectly. So your job is to be with someone who has suffered loss.

And so you are dealing with it indirectly with this, your friend's grief. And so in your case, of course, rather than, I would recommend, rather than tell your friend some story that they are going to survive, or you will meet again, or they have moved, just be, accept what your friend feels fully, the grief that your friend feels, and your friend's job is to accept the fact of death. Now, if you are able to accept not only the fact of death, which is all around you continuously, but also the fact that whatever you feel at this moment, the sadness or the grief, say yes to both the dead body that you might see and the grief that you feel.

Bring an acceptance to that rather than thinking it shouldn't be, it should be otherwise. Many people are shocked when they encounter death in our civilization because nobody has told them, not really, that everybody around them is going to die. They know it as some abstract fact at the back of their heads.

They know that, yes, they're going to die. And it's another abstract fact in the back of your mind is that I'm going to die too, but you don't really believe it until perhaps somebody very close to you dies, and then it begins to dawn on you that I'm going to die too. And then their mind will push that out of the way again.

As you may know, in some Buddhist countries, the monks regularly visit the morgue where they keep the dead bodies on display, and they sit there for a few hours at a time and meditate on death. They meditate on the fact of impermanence of the physical form, which the Western world has hardly heard of. Impermanence of the physical form can't be.

Death is a travesty, it shouldn't be happening. So they contemplate the impermanence, or if you go to India where soon after death, they take the dead body and they burn it. And everybody watches.

To a Westerner, that is, oh, this is dreadful. Well, that's what it is. That's what happens to the physical form.

If one had lived with the, as in ancient older cultures, they lived in closer proximity to the fact of death, and therefore had greater acceptance of the naturalness of death, for us, it's more difficult. But we need to learn that to realize that the physical form is impermanent. And if you can accept a great loss, and death is one of the greatest losses of death of somebody close to you, if a great loss comes into your life, and if you can be in a state of non-resistance when this dear person that has been in your life for so many years suddenly disappears and leaves behind this emptiness, you can be in a state of non-resistance to that, and even non-resistance to whatever you feel.

If you feel grief, allow yourself to feel the grief. You can be the awareness or the space for that. Then you go beyond unhappiness.

You may still feel grief, but you go into a state of deep inner peace, particularly in the face of death. Whenever something, great loss comes into your life, it leaves behind a space, an emptiness. Let's imagine it could happen to anybody.

Maybe this body or that body suddenly goes plop, and suddenly there's an empty chair where before there was a body. It's really, this is how it is. If you could see how all pervasive death is, if you imagine, I like to use the analogy of a soap bubble.

If you imagine every body here is a soap bubble, and any of the soap bubbles could go pop at any moment, and you know what happens to a soap bubble when it goes pop, there's nothing left, just a little drop. That's strange, because a minute ago there was something there, and a minute later, there's nothing there. Now, if you are totally attached to the form of the soap bubble, then it's dreadful, because that was, but the essence of the soap bubble wasn't the form of the soap bubble, because that was insignificant.

The essence of the soap bubble was the space in the soap bubble. And so, nothing is really lost. And in fact, I sometimes like to use the expression, a hole appears in the fabric of your existence when great loss suddenly happens.

So there's a fabric, everything is in place. You have a house, and you have your relationships, and you have your job, and you have this and that. It's all in place, but it won't be in place for long, because sooner or later, a little thing is going to, and a big hole, I'm now using a different analogy, a big hole happens in the, or a small hole.

My investments, small hole, small loss. Somebody close to me dies, huge loss. Some kind of loss, loss means there was, where there was something, there's now nothing.

Where there was somebody, there's now nobody. And that's where the pain comes from, is the emptiness. I experienced it acutely, many years ago, I was visiting my mother when my stepfather died, and he was always sitting in the same chair, many years.

And so I arrived at my mother's place, and I had the strangest experience when I saw the empty chair. He had always been in it, and suddenly, he was gone. It was just an empty space.

There was nobody sitting in the chair. Just an empty space. And that was actually a deep realization of the formless.

The formless dimension comes into your life when a form in your life disappears. And if you can not, if you can be with it, not resist it internally, it becomes transformed into a spiritual deepening, and you get to a very deep place within yourself. And in that very deep place within yourself, that is the formless essence of all life, and that's the grace that's hiding behind every loss and every death, that it leaves behind formlessness.

The form disappears, and for a moment, you're aware of the formless. And that is the spiritual, when you cannot, if you don't resist it, but allow it, that great deepening happens. And suddenly, you go so deep that you realize that death is not ultimately real.

Without formulating any more theories, it's a deep unknowing that the essence of life is formless. The essence of who you are is formless. It was, what was it, Leonard Cohen, Singer?

There's a song, I believe, that goes, there is a crack, a crack in everything. That's how the light gets through. And of course, there's very deep truth.

There's a crack in everything, which really means every situation, eventually you'll find there's a crack in it, which where the form begins to collapse. Any structure, any situation, and that's where the light comes through. And that's what you learn, and that's what the Buddhist monks learn when they go to the morgue.

They become at home with that fact. So there is even behind, death is not the most dreadful thing. There's actually beauty hiding behind it.

So great opportunity, wait for the next crack to appear in your life, it may be small, or it may be large, and then see that there's grace hiding there, and the light, which is the formlessness, the formless, shines through. And this is why some people have gone, even people who have had never any spiritual training or any spiritual teaching, may not have read any spiritual book, it has happened occasionally that some people who experienced deep loss in their lives became transformed and suddenly became awake through their loss. And this is, I believe, how the first spiritual teachers, thousands of years ago, it happened to them, they must have had deep loss in their life, and through the deep loss and acceptance, because they couldn't resist any longer, it was too painful, they accepted, and suddenly through the opening, the formless, they lost everything.

The light comes through, the formless essence of all life, and you are in touch with that suddenly, you are that. And from there you know that death is not ultimately real, just as the physical form is not ultimately real, it's a little bit, every physical form is a little bit dreamlike, a dreamlike temporary appearance. But there's something there that is real, but that has no form and it cannot really be named.

That's why the Buddha calls it emptiness, so that you can't form some image around it. It's, of course, very clever, because no matter how hard you try, emptiness is the one word that you can't form an image around it or believe in it. Any other word that you use, well, I use sometimes formlessness, that's pretty hard too, but emptiness is even better, perhaps.

And of course, the Western people, Western scholars say Buddhism is life-denying, because they don't understand in what sense, in what deep sense the word emptiness is used in Buddhism. So they say it's life-denying. And then if you ask them, then why is the Buddha smiling?

They say, oh, I don't know. If Buddhism is life-denying, what is there to smile about? But the Buddha is quite blissful, but he's denying life.

There must be something wrong here. It's not, it's actually supremely life-affirming, but it's not equating life with the forms of life. It's going to the essence of life, the unmanifested, timeless essence that lives through each form, appears as each form, and then disappears again as that form.

The one consciousness, the one life, and death is an opportunity to experience that, to be that, to go into that.

[Speaker 4] (2:06:17 - 2:06:46)

The hardest word that I'm having trouble with right now is responsibility. And I have a hunch that most of the things that I consider responsibility are just my ego telling me things I have to do. But I also, when I think about the future of the earth and human evolution and stuff like that, sometimes I have big emotions of responsibility.

So I'm just curious. Thank you. About the right relationship to the word responsibility.

Okay, thank you.

[Speaker 1] (2:06:54 - 2:14:30)

Yeah, it's a strange word. It has been pointed out that if you look at the word, it seems to be talking about the ability to respond. So to take responsibility for, what is it that you can take responsibility for primarily?

It's taking responsibility for your state of consciousness, which determines what kind of world you create. Because you are humanity. Humanity is an abstract concept, doesn't exist.

Humanity is the human being. You are humanity. So for humanity to take responsibility, you need to take primarily responsibility for your state of consciousness, because only a diseased or dysfunctional state of consciousness produces a diseased and dysfunctional world out there.

By world, I mean the human-made world that has been imposed on what's already there, the planet, which is potentially, of course, a paradise. The planet, pristine, unbelievable jewel. The being of great intelligence.

We are not separate from it, but the being is going through a transitional process. And every transitional process is critical. It may or may not work, in which case the being will go some other way.

But your state of consciousness determines what kind of world you create, what kind of action you take, and what consequences your actions have. So here, this is why my main work is to address the cause of dysfunction, which lies in the human mind. The dysfunction of the human mind, or as it is sometimes called in Zen, the sickness of the human mind.

So, as I see it, and I don't think anybody who reads history can doubt it, there is a deep-seated dysfunction in humans, has been there for thousands of years. And if there's no shift in that, then the dysfunction will destroy us. It probably won't destroy the planet because the planet has enormous resources, but it will take a while, would take a while for the planet to recover.

All you have to do then is primarily take responsibility for your state of consciousness now. Now. And this is what the entire teaching really is about.

What is my state of consciousness at this moment? Am I generating disturbance? Am I generating negativity?

Am I generating conflict and suffering for myself and others? Am I generating inner pollution? Am I polluting my beautiful, the beautiful being that I am with continuous absurd movements of thought producing negative emotions, producing an entire entity that is illusory that I call the me.

So to take responsibility, it needs to be just, of course, an awakening where you can say, okay, I will take responsibility now. Some people don't know that there is even the possibility of taking responsibility. That's why you are so important.

Anybody who realizes it, you are the beginning of the transformed world. I don't know who first coined the famous phrase. You hear it quite often these days.

You need to be the change, that the change that you want to see out there, you need to embody that. And that's not primarily what you do. There's something more primary than what you do.

It's who you are. Who you are is your state of consciousness. Whatever you do flows out of that.

So that's the primary is that. So the change is the transformed state of consciousness. Now, that is your responsibility.

Anybody, once you've seen that, that's your responsibility. Now you know it. People who are not yet at that level, don't realize it, and that's fine.

You can't expect the whole world already to be at that stage. It's enough for you to take responsibility, knowing there's still a few millions others who don't know that they can take responsibility because they live in such unconsciousness that they see the entire evil in others. What they see as evil, it's all in them.

And they make half the world into their enemy. It's all out there. That's fine.

Only those are required to take responsibility who are up to it. But even those who are totally unconscious still, on the one hand, they don't know what they're doing. Obviously, as Jesus said on the cross, they know not what they do.

In other words, they are in the grip of unconscious forces, or unconscious mental, emotional streams. They don't know what they do. They cannot be held responsible.

And people say, well, they should be held responsible. No, they can't, but they don't know what they do. However, the fact that they are not responsible because they can't be responsible does not mean that they do not suffer the consequences of their unconsciousness.

So they generate suffering. And eventually, suffering is the fire in which the ego gets burned up, the collective ego and the personal ego. That's the long way, the slow way, the painful way.

And then there is a shortcut, which is any spiritual teaching, it cuts through that, the painful way, the long way of waking up, more and more suffering. The planet might not endure such a long learning process for humanity. So if the learning process of humanity does not become shortened, it is doubtful that the planet can allow humanity to learn through further suffering for another 500 years, or even 200 years, or even 100 years.

So that's, you're responsible for all that.

[Speaker 3] (2:14:38 - 2:15:28)

I don't know how you'd label this question. Is this on? Okay.

I've met some people, or had conversations with people who are going through what might be called a crisis of awakening. And it seems like they have, their identification with self is mostly fallen away. And they're in a kind of terror.

And they feel like they're going insane. And I kind of, I mean, I'm not there myself, but I've had those times when it's like giving up all control over everything feels kind of scary. And I just wondered if you could speak to that.

[Speaker 1] (2:15:29 - 2:35:37)

Okay, thank you. Yes, I've also encountered people like that. The mind feels suddenly scared.

The image really is the ego is still there to some extent, and it becomes a little panicky. I'm not in control anymore. But there is a place, so one can lose oneself in that, but I would advise a person like that to look for a place that is not confused inside, a place that is not scared.

Many people say they're confused or scared, but really the way out of it is really always the fuller acknowledgement of the present moment. Because the rest of it, all that confusion and feeling scared is you're not in the present moment, you're in your mind again. And your mind is saying, oh, my life is falling apart.

I have to start worrying again, because otherwise it's all going to fall apart. So once you realize that you've moved out, the realization needs to be there of that, okay, I'm lost in the mind again. Okay, you're not lost, because you know that you're lost.

The moment you realize it's happening, for a while you may not realize it's happening, you're so identified with your panicky thoughts that you're completely in them, you don't even know what is happening to you. And then time may pass while you're completely in your thoughts, and you're just, oh, I think I'm going mad. I just don't know, I can't figure things out anymore.

I don't, they're not, I can't work things out. Don't know about, the mind says you should have an opinion about everybody, and I don't anymore. You shouldn't have an opinion about every situation you're in in your life.

I don't know what to think about my life anymore. That's dreadful, that's the mind. And of course, the opposite is true.

If you don't know what to think about your life anymore, then you're beginning to wake up and realize there's no such thing as your life. There's only life. Your life is a mental construct.

It's a story, the story of me. So, it's always the moment you realize it's happening, or if you're trying to help somebody, bring your attention to the present moment. This is the exit point out of confusion.

You can't be confused when your attention moves into the present moment, because the present moment is always simple. There's always a simplicity about it. The complexity is in the mind structures, the unobserved mind of the ego.

So simply take your attention into the present moment, and then confusion suddenly dissolves, dissolves, because the mind says, I need to work something out, I need to understand something. No, you don't. All you need to do is respond to this moment.

Either this moment may require action or it may not require action. Just be there for this moment. And then it becomes simple.

You cannot do more than one thing at a time, for example, in this moment. No matter how much you have to do, you can only do one thing. Well, you can do two things, but it gets hard.

Basically, you have to do one thing at a time and give it your attention, or do nothing and bring attention to sense perceptions. Look around and get a sense of what this moment feels, what it is, what does it mean, this moment? First of all, it means what you see and perceive, because that's this moment.

And that's already a revelation because you might have been so trapped in your mind that you were completely unaware of your surroundings. And you didn't realize there was a beautiful tree there and there were clouds there. You didn't realize that there's a sound of the wind outside.

You didn't realize that you are breathing in the air. You didn't realize that all those things around you are vitally alive. You didn't realize it because you were stuck in your head, thinking about your problems.

And so the beginning of the present moment is that, oh, and then you can go a little deeper. Then you can experience the present moment as the energy field in your body, as the aliveness in your body. Oh, and then you can go even deeper and experience the present moment as the awareness of all this, rather than the present moment isn't the flower as such.

The flower appears in the present moment, but essentially what the present moment is, it's the consciousness in which you see the flower. Otherwise there would be no flower. Remove the consciousness, I don't know what's left.

No flower. You all know the famous saying, the tree in the forest, if a tree falls in the forest and there's nobody there to hear it, does it make a noise? And of course it doesn't, because noise implies not only a sensory organ, it also applies a consciousness that's perceiving through the sensory organ that brings about what we call noise.

And without that, there's no noise. And you can even follow that up and ask other similar questions. But what I'm pointing to is the present moment in essence is not the things, the things appear in the space of the present moment.

It's always present moment. You can't get out of that. Your life is always one with now.

Your life and now are one. If you doubt that, then let me know one day when you can say, my life is not now. Or maybe you remember when it wasn't now, not possible.

Life and now is synonymous. Life is now, now is life. But the mind says, yeah, but what does that mean?

Isn't that just words? No, it's more than words. The words are pointing to a realization.

And that is whatever appears has to appear in the present moment, but in itself is not the present moment. It is a form that appears in the space of now. Everybody in this room or wherever the body is, is a form that appears in the space of now.

Whatever happens, whatever thought comes, whatever emotion is felt is a form that appears in the space of now. And that now is consciousness, timeless, ever present. You are that, I am that.

So that's really what the present moment is. So ultimately it's yourself, it's consciousness and you are consciousness. So bringing attention to the now takes people out of confusion.

The now begins with sense perceptions. So encourage people or do it to yourself. If you find you become lost in your mind, come into your senses first, touch something, whatever, any surface, feel it, then look.

Already confusion subsides because your attention gets away from thinking into the sense, the act of perception. Then listen, even less and less confusion. What is there to confused about right here?

Nothing. Nothing. Then breathing.

And breathing takes attention into the inner body. Alive, it's alive. Where's the confusion?

It's gone. You stopped giving attention to your thoughts, the confusion is gone. And then you go even deeper into just the spaciousness of stillness.

No confusion in there. And then it's fine. Every time that happens, use that process of reorientation of focus of your consciousness into now.

So this is the advice you can give and you do it with people when they come to you in a state of confusion, or to say, okay, sit there, okay. Okay, look around, look, touch something, look at this. Listen to the rain, listen to the wind, listen to the birds, listen to the car.

Be there as the presence for it. Confusion can end very quickly that way. Present moment is the exit point.

Out of confusion is the point of exit out of your mind. It's always there. You just have to acknowledge it.

So, and when it happens again, same process. No more confusion. It's a shift for people.

You get drawn back into the old consciousness and step out again. That's why we call the awakening process. For most people, it is a, we are transitional.

Most of the people who are going through this, we are transitional beings from, it's a very significant and incredible thing, from one way of being, one state of consciousness that's been there for thousands and thousands of years to a different state of consciousness. And so we live, many people live in two worlds and two states, still shifting. And gradually, awareness takes over from continuous thinking.

And then it's all different. It's like, I sometimes call it as you, as I say, at the end of the new earth, a new species is emerging on the planet. One could almost say that we used to look the same, but your inner state is so different from the normal insane state that it's like a completely new species.

And yet it's already, it's already arising in you. It's not something that you need to arrive at some future point. And I want to become a new species.

It's already arising. From an anonymous questioner. I have read that as long as we are in a body, we have a shadow.

Is this true for you? What is your shadow? Oh.

Let me think. What is your shadow? Do you have a shadow?

Okay. The answer is, part one of the answer is yes. Part two of the answer is, if you ask anybody if they have a shadow and they say no, then you know that they have a shadow.

And if they say yes, they don't. Because shadow, which is just a way, it's a Jungian term, which I don't normally use, but what it means is an area of unconsciousness that you're not aware of, because if you're aware of it, it's no longer unconscious, and it's not really a shadow. So if it's an area of unconsciousness in your life, and if it's truly a shadow or an area of unconsciousness, then, of course, you won't know it.

You might know there's a certain behavior pattern, but you will not recognize it as an area of unconsciousness. You might say, of course I get furious every time somebody mentions this or that, because, and you'll have some justification, it's not recognized as an unconscious reactive pattern. Or you might be totally unconscious of it and say, I'm never angry.

Why do you accuse me of always being angry? So it's right there, but you don't know it, you deny it. So the shadow then, anybody who says no, they probably have one.

If they say yes, then they have seen that there are still certain areas where there's certain behavior patterns still operating. Of course they are, because as long as somebody has a body, certain patterns operate, certain behavior patterns. You might, well, idiosyncrasies, ways of doing things.

So if you're aware that that's there, then that's all that it is. It's not a totally conscious thing. It's not a shadow as such.

We can talk also in terms of ego. You have, if you're aware of certain patterns in you that originated from ego, and they still operate to some extent, although you live mostly in awareness, sometimes there's a momentum behind certain behavior patterns, like they're not being energized anymore, but it's still there. And so if you're aware of it, it's not really the ego anymore.

Ego implies unobserved mind. Ego implies you don't know it's the ego. There's no awareness, there's just the conditioned mind doing its thing, acting out.

The moment you bring awareness to it, there's a light on it. So if the light shines, it's shining on the shadow, it's not a shadow. Shadow means there's an absence of light, and light means consciousness.

So ego is no longer ego when you know there's ego. It's only truly speaking ego when you don't know it, and there's unconsciousness. Short question here.

Do you experience the earth as Gaia, an entity with her own consciousness? Yes, of course, just as the one consciousness animates this physical form, the one consciousness animates also the earth as a living, intelligent being. Not only the earth, the sun also.

The sun, there's far more both to the earth and to the sun than we realize. The sun is the life-giving principle in the manifested. It's almost in the manifested, sense-perceived world, the sun is the closest we can get to what we could call the divine, because it's a continuous outpouring of energy, continuous giving, millions and millions of years, a vast outpouring of energy, and we think it's just a physical process, like in our narrow interpretations, we say that it's a huge atomic reactor or whatever, but there's far more to the sun than that.

It's a living being of great intelligence, and so is the earth. So let's see what the earth is going to do with the little microbes that are crawling around its surface. What would you do if, what does the body do if viruses or bacteria invade it to get rid of them?

It raises the temperature, it gets a fever. The earth could do any number of things. The earth has barely noticed that humans are here because its time, constant time is very different.

Humans have been here for a very short time. The earth is just beginning to notice that the humans have arrived here and are not doing much good now. So, and then the intelligence that governs earth life, which is no more than, it's the one consciousness moving through that form of earth, can do many things.

It could get rid of most humans without any violence. For example, the simple thing, for example, of reducing fertility in humans so that neither men nor, either in men or women or both, and then within 100 years, humanity would shrink to very little. If the earth wanted to do it, it can do many things to get rid of humans if it needed to get rid of humans.

But we haven't reached that stage yet. We would, if there's no change in consciousness, eventually we will reach a stage where the earth will say, okay, we'll have to get rid of this life form. And there's no problem, it can do that easily.

But we have not yet reached that stage. There's still the possibility of something very different happening, which will not end in the elimination of humans, but will be a flowering of consciousness, the consciousness of the earth through the humans.

[Speaker 4] (2:35:43 - 2:37:10)

For the past several years, I've been making a concerted effort to live a, especially sort of conscious, present, spiritual path, and doing yoga and meditation and retreats and that sort of thing. And now when I hear people talk about spiritual stuff, I kind of cringe. It's like, I feel like there's this spiritual thing that's like separate, separate from this, this special dimension.

At first it was really great, because I was meditating like 10 hours in a weekend and I could tell everybody how cool it was and how special and unique I felt, practicing this special spiritual life. And now I just, I listen to what you say and other people say, and I just want to hear about like how I'm no one. And I mean that sincerely in being in this, but just not having to, even though I am conscious, all these words that just seem to get in the way a lot of the time.

I mean, they're concepts and everything. But I just, I hear the, I feel the sweetness of not, just really not having to be this special, unique, spiritual person on top of being a regular person. It's like this double-decker sandwich that I got to carry around and I'm, and it's getting stale.

And I don't know. I don't know if there's a question in there, but maybe you could speak to that.

[Speaker 1] (2:37:10 - 2:38:12)

Thank you. Yes. Okay, thanks.

Well, you overdid it a little bit with your spiritual practice. And hence the reaction now, because you have to get back to some normality after all that specialness over that, both your spiritual practice, where you thought of yourself as special and your practice as special. You went quite far to an extreme and you're now experiencing the reaction to that extreme.

And that's good. In other words, you don't want to hear about anything spiritual anymore. I've had it, right?

So you overdid it. Now there's a reaction. Don't mention to me anything spiritual anymore, you say.

But of course, you know, the famous expression, what is it? The baby in the bath water. Don't throw out your baby with the bath water.

It's all spiritual.

[Speaker 4] (2:38:12 - 2:38:13)

It's all spiritual.

[Speaker 1] (2:38:13 - 3:00:14)

It's so separate. So first you went to that extreme. Now you go to an extreme of reaction and eventually you end up in the middle where every moment is spiritual as it is.

There's nothing special. Spirit is not separate from daily existence. So that's, when we say spiritual, we are not referring to some realm out there that is to be achieved at some point where you become more special than you are now.

It's not going to happen. It's here and now. We're going deeper into the here and now.

That's spiritual. Now you are a little bit tired of these words because you went too far to that extreme. So you have to realize, if you're a little bit perhaps like a Christian who was once very religious and suddenly got fed up and then occasionally I have people in talks who are ex-Christians.

And the moment I say, occasionally I say Jesus said, they go, oh, don't talk to me about anything. It's remotely Christian. I don't want to hear that.

I've had all that. So they don't realize because of course they had a somewhat distorted view of what the whole thing was about. So they didn't, but they can't stand the terms anymore.

And that's fine. It's a phase. You will come through that.

Maybe it's happening already. It's the ordinariness. Spiritual means the more spiritual you are, the more ordinary you are, the more non-special you are.

And again, for the ego, that means, okay, I have to become more non-special. How do I become ordinary? Okay, I need somebody to teach me to be ordinary.

So I understand your dilemma and perhaps you understand it also. And so this, nothing special, chopping wood, carrying water, as Zen defines spirituality ultimately, what is the spiritual life? Chopping wood, carrying water, which is the kind of thing you do in Zen monasteries.

It's daily doing, in my case, it's buying some food in the store, going to have a cup of coffee, taking the dog for a walk in the forest, listening to the BBC World News, having a glass of wine occasionally with a meal, watching a movie, nothing extraordinary. And so quite an ordinary existence. And so it's hiding in there, the spirituality is in there, it's not away from there, just this.

And so I'm sorry about these words that we use, but language is limited, so we have to use certain words. And perhaps the emotion around these words then eventually is going to go and they become neutral again and you can use them for what they are, which is simply useful pointers no more. Thank you.

Sometimes when I hear you talk about presence, it seems like you're describing a state in which there's no mental or emotional content and yet I experience emotions in presence, perhaps sadness when something happens that is difficult for another person or at the news of the death of someone I love and I experience that emotion happening in present time. Isn't it possible for emotional experiences to arise in presence? Yes, you can have presence while the emotions are happening or even while thoughts are happening.

It means you're not totally lost in, totally identified with, totally drawn into the emotion or the thought. There is in the background a space of awareness that in the foreground there may be anger, sadness, and you're not totally lost in it. There's a space for it that you still sense and you are essentially not the emotion.

You're the awareness behind the emotion. You know that this emotion is there. The same thing can happen when the mind is active.

You can talk and the mind can completely take over and you become lost in your mind in a stream, either a stream of thinking or a stream of speaking. You can observe it. If you can't yet observe the mind stream in yourself, you can occasionally just quietly observe people talking to each other and especially people who are having a discussion because when you're having a usually discussion or disagreeing about something, there is not only the mind, there's also an emotion that goes with the mind stream.

That's the disagreement. Why is there an emotion when people are having a discussion and they disagree? Why is there an emotion that goes with their mental positions?

Well, because they're identified with a mental position. That identify means their sense of self has become one with the thought. The consciousness, the I, has identified with the form rather than realizing that it is formless in essence.

It has lost that knowledge. So consciousness is in a dreamlike state, I could say. Consciousness identifies with I, with the form, and so there is a self-identification with a mental position or thought which means anybody who questions or doubts or contradicts this mental position or thought is unconsciously regarded by the self-identified thought structure which you have become.

The ego is part of ego. Anybody who disagrees, contradicts, doubts, is unconsciously, not in so many words, but unconsciously regarded as an enemy because you are threatening, it's a delusion, but there's an unconscious belief that the other person is threatening my very being because the person is threatening my mental position with which I have identified. So you can, it's a very deeply unconscious process and it requires quite an alertness to see it in the moment that it happens in yourself.

But perhaps next time somebody comes to you and you're having a kind of disagreement about something and suddenly you can feel an influx as you defend your position or contradict the other person or justify something, feel the emotion that flows into what you say. It will be some kind of either aggressive or defensive emotion that goes with it, either some fear or some aggression. If you can be aware of that at that moment and realize what is happening that you have identified with something in your mind believing that that is you, believing your very existence is threatened by somebody contradicting you, it's unconscious.

That's why people get aggressive and negative energy flows the moment somebody contradicts you. It just means somebody has a different opinion, but the ego can't allow a different opinion because the ego feels its existence is threatened by a different opinion because ego's identification with thought and a mental position. This is on a personal level, this can become an entire war between nations, the similar pattern.

So you can, at first you can see it, let's say you're observing two people having a discussion and of course, let's say you are not involved, then it's easier for you to see that process at work and realize that usually both of them become drawn into a very negative confrontation simply because they hold different opinions, but for them, it's more than an opinion, it's their very self that's threatened.

It's an illusion, but that's how it is perceived. So it's very fundamental and very basic to the huge amount of conflict that arises in human interactions. And it's basically so simple that it's just quite incomprehensible that people haven't realized by now that this is how it works.

And so, but the pattern is so deep seated that even people who are engaged in spiritual work for years still get drawn into that when their mental position is threatened. No matter how much spirituality, whoom, there they are, defending their very existence. Because the pattern is very deep.

So alertness is required. If you don't want to carry on in that way for the rest of your life and be part of that, madness ultimately, dysfunction ultimately because it creates continuous conflict and negative feelings and so on and interferes with the true relationship with another human being. Be aware in yourself of this process when and as it happens.

And for that, you have to wait until the moment comes when somebody contradicts you or says, no, you're not right, or I don't agree or whatever they say. And then you have to be alert. What is it that comes up and wants to defeat the other or protect itself?

So that is a very vital thing, but presence is required. The pattern is deep, very deep seated. Without the presence, each time, every time it will take you over and you'll be lost.

So alertness. I can't remember what the question was, but this is vital. Ah, yes.

Sometimes when I hear you talk about presence, it seems like you're describing a state in which there's no mental or emotional content and yet I experience emotions in presence. So we've been talking now just about experiencing the absence of presence and there's a mental, emotional stream that comes up. You can do it to yourself also.

You can have a discussion with yourself. You can doubt yourself. You can have an argument with yourself.

You can have one part of your mind accusing another part of your mind of being lazy, for example, or of being not good enough. And then you have to have a similar argument with one part of you. The mind splits itself in two and says, you should know better by now.

You should do better. Why did you do this? Well, I just couldn't help it.

No presence. So yes, there can be presence when there are thoughts and emotions. And it is vital that there should be presence in the background, which means just you're aware that certain emotions are coming through you and you're not the emotion, but you're the awareness.

You're aware that certain thoughts are there. You're aware that you have an opinion. You're aware that you're voicing your opinion.

That's fine, but you are not in the opinion. Your sense of self isn't in the opinion. Your sense of self is the awareness.

And then you can express an opinion and you can say, the universe is in essence consciousness. And then the other person says, that's a load of rubbish or whatever they say, mumbo jumbo. You are talking mumbo jumbo.

Where's the, show me the consciousness or whatever the flat footed materialist is saying to you. And then observe, see whether you actually know that you, the universe, which means you ultimately comes down to you as this is where you experience the universe as yourself. Do you know that the universe is consciousness or do you just believe that the universe at that moment are you the consciousness or are you the belief that you are conscious?

If you are the belief and you are the thought and then you'll be defending yourself. So you'll be shouting back at the other person that they are narrow minded bigots. Or there is an awareness in the background and then you say the universe is consciousness and the other person says, that's a load of rubbish.

Then you say, well, I'm sure in your perception that the universe is not consciousness and that's fine. Why should you believe that if that's not within your reality, fine, you're entitled to believing that the universe is a soup of chemicals. That's fine, that's your reality.

It's perfectly, I'm perfectly comfortable to allow you your reality of living in a soup of chemicals or whatever atoms floating around, whatever it is or the gray matter of the brain producing the illusion of consciousness or whatever, it's fine. No defensiveness anymore and no negative feelings. This is why I liked the, when Obama said you don't need to be disagreeable to disagree, you don't need to become disagreeable when you disagree.

The deeper implication is you're not identified with your mental position. And he couldn't say that because nobody would understand what he's talking about. So, well, only some people would understand.

There's awareness in the background. So presence or awareness is there while things happen in the foreground. The foreground can be your thoughts.

The foreground can be your emotions. The foreground can be whatever is happening around you. And so the perceptions of whatever is happening outside, there's also, you're not perceiving this through the screen of concepts or thoughts.

You're perceiving through the, you are the awareness, not the thoughts. And even if a thought comes and says, that person looks weird, then you just have, you realize it's just a thought in your head. And when you're finally communicating with that person, you can still be the awareness and communicate as awareness rather than communicate as if the thought, this person is weird, were the reality.

You realize it's just a thought that came into the head and you don't impose the thought on the person and then relate to that person as if it were true. And you say, and then suddenly you're talking to this weird person. What are you going to, everything, it'll distort everything.

Or you want something, but the thought says, this person could be helpful to me or whatever the ego says. That's a thought, be there as the spacious presence. Now the question is, yes, of course there can be presence while thoughts happen or emotions happen, including sadness or anger.

But the questioner asks, it seems like you're describing a state in which there's no mental or emotional content. There's also the possibility of presence becoming so intensified at times that all thoughts and emotions become obliterated. This is very different from suppressing emotions or thoughts.

It's simply that the presence that arises becomes so intense that they're just thoughts or emotions don't arise. And usually it could happen in a limit situation as existentialist philosophers call it, when you're in a life or death situation, it could happen that presence sometimes can become so intense or it can become, for no reason at all, it can happen. And you're simply sitting in your room and suddenly there's no thought whatsoever.

There's no emotion, there's just an intense aliveness. It's not you haven't deadened yourself because that is sometimes people believe if you have no emotion, you're dead. You haven't deadened yourself, there's an intense aliveness, a different kind of aliveness than the emotion, a vibrantly alive field of intense consciousness.

So that can arise sometimes and it's beautiful. I sometimes spend periods of time without thought and without emotion and it's beautiful. Nature, walking around nature or with nothing particular to think about, why think?

Or sitting in a cafe, drinking a cup of coffee, why think? Be, just be the alert presence. So you have the presence can be there without thought and emotion at times that will happen or presence can be there as a background to whatever emotions or thoughts are there.

So, and presence can be lost completely in which case all you have is thoughts and emotions and you will believe that you are the thought and the emotion, that's the unconscious state. So for us, it's important to be there as the emotions happen and I suggest you work particularly with people, talking to people, exchange of opinions and viewpoints, observing aggression, observing defensiveness, observing negativity flowing into just because somebody has not the same opinion that you have. And then don't condemn yourself and say, oh, I shouldn't have, I shouldn't be feeling this.

No, just again, observe that, observe that. Suddenly you've become angry with this person and instead of saying, oh dear, that's, I failed miserably in my spiritual practice. No, just say, okay, I just, just noticing that.

You're no longer in it, you're already out of it when you notice it. So be compassionate with yourself. It's just, but the important thing is you're aware.

So we all know the famous joke about the person when you tell the person, why are you so angry? The person says, I am not angry. And that's of course a typical example of somebody who doesn't know, has absolutely no awareness.

In the middle of anger denies that there's anger.

[Speaker 2] (3:00:16 - 3:04:45)

You can have a moment of silence, which is, I recommend that you bring space for that into your life, is to have that silence, just to sit silently, to return home within yourself. And love is space, find that space and let the love flow through. If you're full of thoughts and ideas and expectations and imagination of what your relationship should be like, there's no space, not only externally between the other and yourself, but there's no space internally.

I like to use this analogy and I've often used it of a bamboo flute. And if you can imagine, use the image of the flute. And yes, so there's the form, just as we have a form.

But the most important aspect of the flute is the whole, is the whole in the flute, in which then life's breath, when life wants to create music, it blows into this beautiful form. And without that whole, it couldn't create the music, so it creates beautiful music. But if we, so here we have the form, ourselves, our minds.

Every thought that we have, every idea, expectation, opinion, judgment, that we identify with. And we say that every thought and idea, et cetera, is a being and we begin to fill with every thought, every identification that we have as this being into the flute hole.

And then life, which wants to create this beautiful music through us, we blow into the flute and we go, and there's absolutely no sound that come out, no music that can be created through this, because the hole is filled with beings.

Oh, this is where I say that most of us human beings are full of beings. And our spiritual journey is our spiritual awakening. The process is to empty out the beings.

All our identifications, so empty out the hole that you are, the emptiness that you are, because you're a nothingness, even physicists have proved we're 99% empty space. And it's only the idea that we hold so solidly and believe in, and then we defend, which creates conflict, not only internally, but a conflict with others in our relationships, between different so-called cultures, because we're full of beings. So our job is to be empty, be the hole in the flute, in which life's breath breathes through.

That's from, is it Rumi? No, not Rumi, which? Hafiz, of course.

Yeah, thank you.

[Speaker 1] (3:04:59 - 4:25:59)

So as we sit here, I'd like to put a little question mark into your mind. And I'd like you to ask yourself whether at this moment you're thinking. So you will know the answer.

And try it again. I'll stop speaking for a few seconds. And just be alert inside yourself to find out whether you're thinking, because usually you don't even know that you're thinking.

You're just, you are the thinking. So there's no outside thing that knows that you are thinking. You are just the thinking, you become the thinking, the thinker, and the thinker is the person.

And to step out of the person, you have to experience that there is a dimension in you where the person is not, but something deeper is there. That's what we want to explore. So again, a moment of stillness.

In the power of now, I talk about a mouse, sorry, a cat watching a mouse hole. Now, if you've ever watched a cat watching a mouse hole, then you will have noticed that the cat could spend a long time there, being extremely alert and just watching in the same way that my dog watches a treat when I put it down and say, not yet. And then the dog goes.

And so the cat watches the mouse hole, is in a state of complete attention. So one spiritual master, I believe it was a Sufi master, said his teacher had been a cat. When he was asked who had been his spiritual teacher, he said, a cat, how is that?

And he said, I watched a cat watching a mouse hole. And by watching a cat watching a mouse hole, I realized, I awakened. Because by watching a cat, he entered a state of alert attention in which there's no thinking, like now.

Just that. There's no, so just a short moment, but it's not matter how long. It's a wonderful thing to realize that you can not think.

It's a wonderful thing to realize that you are still there when you're not thinking. As Oprah said, when we started for the first time with a moment of silence, and we started to talk again, she said, okay, I'm still here. I just checked in.

I'm still alive. I'm still here. I haven't disappeared.

One more time. Be alert. You need to be alert to know whether you're thinking or not.

So there's an alertness, like a cat, and there may be thinking or there may not be thinking. There may just be the alertness. I also mentioned in The Power of Now that another question you can ask yourself is, what's my next thought going to be?

I'm going to just watch out, see what the next thought is that's going to come into my mind. If you're very alert, it'll be quite a while before the next thought comes, but the moment the degree of alertness decreases, thoughts come flooding back in. Interesting experiments you can do with yourself and your mind.

Now, from the point of view of the usual thinking mind, the realization that there is a dimension in you where thinking either does not happen at all or becomes unimportant. To the thinking mind, that is either a threat or completely uninteresting because what could be less interesting than not thinking? So from the point of view of the thinking mind, the state of consciousness in which there is no thinking is either a threat, oh, I don't want to go there, I'm going to disappear.

But of course, Oprah didn't disappear after the stillness. I'm still there, I'm still alive. And then when she said that, I said, perhaps you're even more alive now.

And that is pointing to something. There is an intensification of aliveness when you begin to enter that, let's call it, dimension in yourself. The dimension in which compulsive thinking doesn't operate anymore.

But you have to be careful because you could easily, because it's, okay, what we're doing here is we rise above thinking. We become so alert that thinking either doesn't happen or is seen as unimportant. From there, you can easily suddenly drop, ooh, through thinking to below thought.

In other words, you go to hot sleep. So when you stop thinking, there's the alertness. Here's the thinking level.

That's the normal level for most human beings while they are awake and even when they dream, they're still going on. Here's the thinking level. Underneath the thinking level, there's consciousness.

Above the thinking level, there's consciousness. And even within thinking, there's consciousness. Thinking is an expression of consciousness, but there are infinite varieties of manifestations or expressions of consciousness.

This flower is an expression of consciousness taking on the form, this beautiful form, incredible beauty. Consciousness being born into forms. And consciousness, not all consciousness is form.

There is a dimension of consciousness that is formless out of which all forms come, the ground of all being. And that's what we are exploring here. Thinking, you rise above thinking or you fall below thinking.

My dog is below thinking. Now, that doesn't mean that the dog is stupid. The dog has its own intelligence.

And in some ways, the dog is superior to humans, in some ways. For example, it's more joyful than most humans, has more fun than most humans, lives more intensely in the present moment where life is than most humans, doesn't worry like most humans do, and is loving towards all beings. Some dogs are loving only towards certain beings, but our dog is loving towards all beings.

But the dog doesn't think. The dog is conscious, but there's no conceptual thinking. I'm sure the dog doesn't have thoughts.

The other day, the dog was in the bedroom in her little house. Quite late, it was already night. The dog was already sleeping.

And I was still doing things near the door, the entrance door to the apartment. I was opening the sliding door and looking for something in my coat. And when the dog heard the sliding door near the exit, she came out, she must have woken up and heard a noise, came out running to see what I was doing, whether I was getting my coat to go out.

So she came running. And then for 10 seconds, the dog stood there looking at me and realized I was just taking something out of a pocket and I wasn't going out. So after five seconds, the dog must have realized I wasn't going out and went straight back into her house and back to sleep.

Now, did the dog begin to think in her house, oh, I can hear some, he's opening the sliding door to the wardrobe, I wonder if he's getting the coat out to go out and then I need to have a look because he may leave me alone here. Okay, I'm going to have a look to see what's happening. And then the dog would go and look, oh, what's he doing there?

Oh, I think he's just taking something out of his pocket, he's not going out after all, why did I bother to come out? I might as well go back to sleep. Now, I'm sure that's not how it happened, but that's what would have happened for a human doing that.

Now, the strange thing, how would that happen for a dog? All the whole thing must have happened without conceptualization. There was the listening to the noise and there was a sudden knowing that that could be, that noise of the door could mean that I'm going out.

And then there was just getting up, running out without, I'm sure, although you can't really get into the dog's mind, I've tried, I'm sure it was without any decision-making process or mental commentary. There was just an immediately response to a situation and then there was a recognition of what was going on in that situation and immediately not a decision to go back to bed, but just going back to bed. So there was consciousness there at work, but not through conceptualization.

And for humans, of course, it would be usually different. There would be, as you're doing that, there would be the running commentary that I just mentioned if the dog had a human mind. There are some anthropologists who have looked at the history of the human race and they wondered where or how did thinking start?

When did humans begin to think? And it seems likely that at first there was no conceptual thinking. There was only thinking in images.

So when they closed their eyes, they could suddenly see certain images of things that had happened or things that they imagined. So the moment they closed their eyes, certain images would be there and when they opened their eyes, they still lived very much like the dog, just an immediate response without the interference of conceptualization. And then thinking started.

And there's one anthropologist who has put forward the theory. He has some evidence for it. I forgot what the evidence is, but his theory is very controversial.

I believe, however, that he may be right. He believed that at first, when thinking began to happen in humans and thinking in the sense of words in your mind, those humans at first thought that some entity, a god or a spirit, was talking to them. And so the voice of the god or spirit that suddenly appeared in their head said, oh, you better go to the lake and make sure that you catch another fish.

And they would go, oh, why is there no fish today? Somebody's talking. Why don't you go there?

There might be a better catch there. Okay, thank you. I got a message.

I should be going there. It was their own thoughts, but for a long time, because it was something new, they didn't realize that these were their thoughts. They believed some spirit helper, something was telling them to do something.

And then, of course, sometimes it might also be the same kind of voice that is telling these days the terrorists to go and shoot people. You must shoot these evil people and go do it. Oh, okay, I'll do it.

No idea that they are obeying something that is in their own mind. And so that's how it all started. And then thousands of years passed, and now we have human beings who are completely identified with mind.

And their whole sense of self is derived from mind, from mind activity. And the awakening of consciousness is the realization that beyond your mind, there is a great depth to who you are and great freedom and a far greater intelligence than is in your thinking mind. Then the thinking mind can be used by that greater intelligence.

But for the thinking mind to be used by the greater intelligence, it means you have to find within yourself that greater intelligence, which we could call unconditioned consciousness. You have to find that in yourself. If we don't find it, we are going to kill ourselves because this evolutionary level where we are identified with thinking is no longer functioning well.

It has become destructive. It has reached the end of its lifespan or usefulness. And so if humans don't achieve the transition, they will either regress to an earlier stage of development and then have another go, which could take a few hundred thousand years, but the universe is patient.

Or the species becomes extinct and then consciousness simply decides to move through other channels to express itself. It could be another life form very easily. Consciousness does not mind through which channel it comes into this world, but it wants to come into this world.

I don't know why, but I know that consciousness wants to be born fully into this world from another realm, from the untimeless, unmanifested, where consciousness does not evolve. It's already full and complete because it's timeless. But from the timeless realm, for consciousness, you can use other words if you want.

The Tao, God, transcendental reality, it doesn't matter, it just works. That which we cannot name, it wants to come through the forms into this world and somehow do something here. Perhaps it wants to dissolve this world, to outshine this world, to transform it, to spiritualize matter, transformation of the entire universe.

But I know what our task is to wake up here out of being trapped in your own little mind, the little mind, it's not yours, it's just the human mind. And that's why I started today by asking you to see if you can have a little space inside yourself where you're actually not thinking, but still awake and alert. That's the opening into the greater intelligence.

At first, it seems there's nothing happening. No, don't expect anything to happen, that will come. It's the beginning, you open the door.

You're opening the door to another dimension. Now, the thinking mind knows nothing of it and you cannot use it to enter that dimension. The moment you use it and try to figure something out, what's in there, you're out again, you're not in that dimension anymore.

We are opening the door to another dimension of consciousness within ourselves. And then see if the door can stay open while we go about our daily business, or if it can be open occasionally as we go about our daily business. And from the point of view of the mind, it's not interesting because there's nothing, to the mind, it's nothing.

And that's fine, to the mind, it's not interesting. And of course it isn't, because when you're not thinking for a moment, nobody could possibly call that interesting. It's deeper than interesting.

But at first it might appear, well, there's nothing there, there's nothing happening. But you have to persist and see, wait a little, and see if you can enter that dimension more fully. Just you open the door and first of all, you experience not so much a positive thing, but an increasing absence of negative things, all the negative things that are continuously produced by the thinking mind, by unnecessary thinking.

So as you bring that dimension into your life, you experience an increasing absence of the negativity that is normal when you're totally trapped in your mind, all the negative thoughts that go through your head and that emotions then respond to. So our destiny is to shift from thought into the realm of no thought, and then being able to use thought from there. In fact, who or what is it that then uses thought?

The intelligence that is the realm of no thought then uses your mind. And then you become productive in this world. You contribute something truly new to this world in whatever form, whether you're an artist or a writer, or you work with people, or you are engaged in some organization.

You then make a very different contribution because it's no longer ego-based. Ego is the unobserved mind, the mind without awareness that you mistake for who you are, me, the person. And it's a dreadful thing to live your entire life never going beyond the personal dimension, never seeing the transcendent dimension in yourself and in the world.

So it's essential then to no longer be trapped continuously in thought. And don't expect results from the dimension of no thought. It could be a while before there's any tangible result on an external level.

In other words, that you suddenly write a masterpiece or you suddenly become a great performer, or suddenly you help thousands of people with this or that and become a beneficial influence in this world. It could take a while, and we don't know what form it'll take. It may not happen immediately that as you begin to enter that dimension occasionally, and then the mind says, you see, nothing is happening.

I've been practicing being free of thinking for a few months now, and my life hasn't changed at all. It's still the same. In fact, it's become less interesting because I worry less.

Of course, worry makes your life very interesting, and it gives you the impression that your life is so important. My life is so important that I'm worrying all the time, and these are very important things I need to worry about. And so then from the point of view of the mind, your life has become less important.

So, okay, I've been doing it for several months. That's enough. I'm going back to my old ways.

And sometimes people write to me and say, okay, I've been practicing awareness, presence for a year now, and where do I go from here? There were years when I lived mainly in the state of awareness without any, many tangible results. Occasionally I would help people.

That was very nice. I enjoyed that. Help would, not I would help, but help would come through that opening.

But beyond that, there wasn't much happening. That went on for years, and occasionally I thought, well, there is more that could happen, but it's not happening yet, but that's fine. And in the meantime, there was a, I realized retrospectively, there was a, whatever words we use are not quite right, but let's just put it like this.

There was a buildup gradually of energy, of presence power, one could say. There was an intensification of that in the background of my life that had no visible manifestation really in the external, not very much. And so that presence was there, and one day, in fact, I gave a little, it came to me to say, please, I can do more.

I said to myself, accelerate, please, accelerate, acceleration. I was talking to myself, because you're always just talking to yourself. And then a little bit later, it happened, and then the energy stream came, that became a book, and so on, and an intensification of what I was doing already on a very small scale, but suddenly there was a whoosh coming into this world.

But for years, there was just empty space mostly inside, walking around and just very pleasant, enjoying the beauty of every moment, of the trees and of the animals. And something was there in the background, and then finally it came whoosh into this world.

And perhaps when it's, it may well be that after a while, the energy stream that goes out may subside again, and I just go back into just the space.

In some way, I do that continuously, because after a talk, you go back into whoosh. So there's the coming out of the consciousness stream, going into words and into energy that flows out, whoosh, and then return into just stillness, space. No need to think very much, unless there's something to think about.

Where am I going for dinner? Where do I have enough? But even there, you can, it's amazing how many things you can do without unnecessary thinking, and just experiment.

I recommend that you experiment in your daily life. This is the most beautiful spiritual practice. Experiment whether you can do many little things without the interference of thinking, with just presence or awareness there.

Because what I mean by that is you are conscious that you're doing something, but you're not thinking about it. And whether you can actually even register things without formulating words in your mind. If you have little things, little experiments, it's all very fascinating.

You can have a little clock. If you have a watch or a clock that doesn't have, especially if it doesn't have digitals on it, you can experiment with yourself and see whether you can look at a clock or a watch and know what time it is without in your mind telling yourself what time it is. And that's quite a strange thing.

There is a knowing without conceptualization then. If you know that it is a certain time, whatever it is, without saying to yourself that time it is. You don't do it with a digital clock because when you read the numbers, it's almost impossible not to say the numbers in your mind.

Just one little experiment. And then many other things when you're doing a certain task, every master, the moment you become a master, you don't think anymore. Intuition takes over.

Otherwise you can't be a master. Now, sometimes you have to learn first gradually through the mind to do something. There may be certain steps that you need to learn, whether you're building something or whatever it is that you do, learning to play the piano or whatever it is.

At first, it's driving a car, whatever. At first, it takes effort to learn, to become an artist, a painter. You learn the techniques and so on.

And then a moment comes when all that is not helpful anymore. If you never go beyond the techniques, you won't be a great artist. The great artist knows the techniques and then steps beyond it and then something else takes over.

And that's where your life becomes empowered. But you need to open the door to the empowerment. And it's not, you cannot get there through thinking.

And even something that seems to be an intellectual thing, like writing a book, if there's any inspiration or power in the book, whether it's fiction or nonfiction, it has to come from the place, the empty space inside you that you go into where for a moment you close your eyes and then you look again and nothing comes. You go back and you look again until something comes through spontaneously. But it won't come spontaneously.

You have to have learned, you need to learn to write first before you, I mean, before you can write a book, you need to be able to write. Or if you want to become a great tennis player, you cannot go into the state of no thought very deeply and suddenly step on the tennis court and take a rack and become, be immediately a great tennis player. There's a, you have to go through many steps first before the intuition can take over.

But that's where the dividing line is between somebody who has learned to do something well, and many people do that, and somebody who brings in something new or goes beyond doing something technically well where inspiration comes in, where empowerment comes in. So it's vital to find that dimension in yourself. So go around your daily life, see how much you can actually do without the interference of conceptualization.

It's amazing, and observe yourself. Is it possible for you to be, for a moment, free of thinking at any given time? For example, now, no thought, just presence.

You haven't disappeared, but what can you, what is there to add to this moment by thinking about something? Nothing. Why do you, you don't need to add anything.

And what is there then when you're not thinking? What's there left of you, what you had called you? There is definitely something there.

No past, let's say, because to have a past, you need to think about your past. To have a future, you need to think about your future. Now, if you're not thinking about your past and your future, you don't have a past and a future.

There's only nowness. There's only this moment. So you have, let's say, you have no past, you have no future, there's only this moment now, and there's nothing to think about.

There's still something there, and that's the essence of who you are, consciousness itself. It cannot be defined. It's neither big nor small, nor fat nor thin, nor old nor young, timeless essence, has no form.

There's nothing much you can say about it, but there's definitely a strong sense of beingness or aliveness that's left when you take that, the rest away. And that's what you take thought away. You haven't disappeared.

In fact, thought wasn't at all who you are. You thought so, but it wasn't. If you take thought away, you can actually, you touch the essence.

You know the essence. And when I say you know the essence, that's not absolutely correct because the moment we use words, we create duality. You know yourself as the essence.

You don't know it like a subject and object knowing. I know this, in this world, that's through thought. There's always the knowing subject and that which is known.

But here, the knower and the known are one. You know yourself to be consciousness. It's not separate.

There isn't a me that says, I am consciousness. There's consciousness. You know yourself as consciousness.

I am that. No separation, no division anymore. And when I put it into words, it sounds almost complicated because we cannot really verbalize because it's too simple.

It's not a differentiated state. Everything out here is differentiated. This is undifferentiated state of pure intelligence or pure consciousness.

It's always there to be easy to just touch it in you. It's always underneath the mental noise in everyone. It's there for you, waiting for you, almost one could say.

It's waiting and it wants to come through you. Just open, open, and it comes through. It doesn't matter if you are a saint or a sinner.

You open, there's a space between two thoughts and it comes through. What you did in the past is irrelevant, whether you accumulated many spiritual credits by spending 20 years in a monastery or whether you are stuck in a prison and the opening happens, spirit doesn't ask, well, are you qualified for me to come through? It will come through wherever there is an opening.

So your personal past doesn't have that much to do with it. The only thing is it got you here to this moment where you realize the possibility of living in a different state of consciousness. Your past got you here.

Well, that's good enough. Whether your past was a successful past or failure past, whether you built up great things already in your life or whether you messed your life up completely becomes irrelevant. So you become free from the past through this because another dimension comes in.

This is why it has happened to some people who were criminals. And at some point, suddenly all that subsided. And a space opened up inside them.

The unhappy self suddenly wasn't operating anymore. Now, to some people, it comes as a spiritual experience, which means it comes and then after a while, they say, oh God, it's gone, I lost it. Okay, that's the normal thing.

Sometimes it comes once and stays forever. You never lose the connection again with the open space. But for many people, first it comes and then it leaves them.

And they don't realize that they can actually welcome it and encourage it. You don't have to wait for it to come again at some point. Why don't you ask for it to come back?

I'm not saying you ask like, please come back. No, you ask for it to come back by simply walking across the room without thought. Just see if I can walk across the room without needing to be already where I want to get to the door, just be present in every step.

Can you be present in each step as you walk across the room? Chup, chup, chup. Oh, you're not thinking, you're just present with that.

Can I be present while I look out of the window to check the weather? And can I know what the weather is like without saying something to myself or having some kind of relationship or attitude towards the weather? Can I open the curtains in the morning and say nothing, just look and know?

There's either sunshine or there's rain or whatever it is. You open the window and there is an awareness that's looking through your eyes. And do you have to say something to yourself then?

Do you have to say, oh, it's another dreary day. I can't take any more of this. Do you have to say that or is it just an old habit that you've slipped into?

Do you have to say, oh, I hope it stays like that today or I hope it doesn't or whatever, it's going to be too hot or whatever comment you have, do you need to comment or can you look out of the window and just know and be the knowing without conceptualization and without like or dislike, just allow it to be and know. In the same way you would, I suggested you can look at your watch and know what time it is without saying to yourself what time it is. So you look out of the window and for a moment there is a space, you are the space through which the perception happens.

You are not a person. Don't worry, the person is still there on some level. So you're not going to be spaced out for the rest of your life and then walk around.

I don't know where I am anymore. That doesn't happen. But it's a wonderful thing if you realize that you can actually be there as the conscious space for whatever you are looking at, even at this moment.

You're looking at this person and this person is looking at you. Can you be the conscious space for the perception, for the looking, rather than be a person that always has some kind of thing to say like, what's he talking about? It's a thought.

I don't understand. It's a thought. Can you explain more?

I don't get it. Don't believe that thought. The thought says I don't get it and of course on the level of thought you don't get it, but on another level you get it.

You get it by being it. And so can you be in your car at the traffic light and just be there as the space for the perception of the red light? It's peaceful.

Suddenly the traffic light becomes peaceful. You are there as you're just seeing. There's the seeing and there is the space.

Why comment on the red light or think about something that's going to happen or might happen or happened in the past or something. Just be, perceive and be the space. And then the strange thing is that which you perceive is more alive and even the traffic light, the red light has a beauty to it.

It sounds very strange and normally it's only sometimes people who take acid talk about weird things like when I saw the traffic light, I went, wow. Now you don't need to take acid for that and it may not be a wow, but it may be wow, that has its own beauty and aliveness, that color. And you're not saying it, you just know it.

And so if you can see the traffic light like that, even more so, that will be the case even more so if you look at the tree that's right next to the traffic light, it has a presence, it has a beauty, it has an aliveness beyond the concept of tree or the birds that just landed on a branch, an aliveness, a beingness that you then recognize from your own beingness and aliveness that before was obscured by mental noise. So unless you become like little children because this is something to do with how little children perceive the world before they conceptualize. Unless you become like little children, you cannot enter the kingdom of heaven.

Oh, so that's what it is. But it's even deeper state than the child state because the child still has to go through the thinking stage and then come out of it. The child has certain things still in common with a dog, not quite, but still no conceptualization, just wonder.

And so that's a gradual practice of choosing to step out of the conceptualizing mind whenever it is unnecessary, which is about, depending on your life activity, 80% of the time, you don't need to think a lot. You could think thoughts may come and go, but you don't, there's no need to continuously think. It's become familiar with spaciousness and then think when it's necessary.

And you be empowered then in your thinking becomes actually empowered. You can actually, if you wanted to create something in this world, this is what some popular books talk about, manifesting your external reality. Of course you can through applying focused thinking, you can manifest, but if you're in touch with the spaciousness, the unconditioned consciousness inside, then that comes through and will manifest through you.

And then it comes as a sudden knowing that this is what I want to do, but the I that wants to do it, it's not the ego I, it is the deeper I. So you become aligned with what the universe wants. It's not just the little me wants.

That's the beauty of that. So you can then, you as the greater consciousness can manifest if you want to. Don't fall into the trap of believing that something that you manifest is going to bring you fulfillment.

It's only on the external level, the fulfillment needs to be there already now. Fulfillment is being in touch with that dimension in yourself before anything happens. That's where fulfillment lies.

The rest is the divine play of form, but the divine wants to play out there. It wants the manifestation. It wants two things.

There are two movements in the universe. One is the movement into differentiation and into form and into birth, into bodies, into thinking. The universe started from a point of nothingness.

That nothingness became one, let's just, it's all not quite right because we can't really talk about it. Out of the nothingness came the ball, whatever, before the big bang happened. There was just one point of potentiality for the entire universe.

Then at some point, the explosion, if we could call it that, out of that was the beginning of the process of differentiation into increasing number of different forms. And we are still part of that explosion into greater and greater differentiation. But at the same time, there is, this is a pull, the outward pull.

Then there's the inward pull back to the source, to the timeless source out of which it all came. And so we as human beings are at a transitional stage where we are becoming strongly aware of the pull back to the source. So there are two movements in the universe.

One is out into more and more form and more and more thinking. It's still there, that movement. There's still many people who believe that the problems of this world can be solved if we just think harder about them, have more committee meetings about the problems of the world and discuss them.

And eventually they can be solved. They don't realize that the problems of the world are there because we have lost touch with the source out of which everything came. So by going into further differentiation, we cannot solve the problems.

We'll actually increase them. So we need to balance now, return to the source and going out into the world. It doesn't mean we don't do anything anymore.

We can still create and do, but not lose ourselves in creating and doing and thinking. Lose ourselves in the mind. Connected with the timeless, formless source of all life within, a space of no thought, connected with that.

Then we can create, not we as persons, but we as a universal movement of consciousness. Consciousness wants us to be co-creators of the universe, of form. So we can be that, but only if we are connected.

We need conscious connection with the source. So that's the destiny. That's your life purpose.

That's why we are here. And if it sounds complicated to your mind, it's only to the mind. It's not complicated at all.

It's actually very, very simple. It's so simple that you can't even think about it. What is self?

Now I noticed that it's spelled with a capital S. I don't know whether it's a mistake or on purpose. Probably on purpose.

There's one self, that's the illusion, that is the identification with the mind and the ego, which is the unobserved mind. And there's a self that arises there that is a dreadful burden to live with. You carry around, most people for their whole life, they carry the burden of a mentally defined sense of who they are, me.

What about me? That's the little self, the illusory self. And that's the self that most people refer to when they say I.

But I potentially has a deeper meaning and is the deepest word perhaps we could say in the language. In its truest sense, I refers to who you are beyond the form, beyond the thoughts and the emotions. You as the consciousness is the self.

Now the self has no form. You cannot grasp it. You cannot see it.

You cannot really define it. You can never say, ah, there it is. Because who is saying that?

You are the consciousness, the perceiving. You are it. You can never see it as an object external to yourself.

It's the essence. You are not what is seen. You are the seeing.

You are the consciousness behind the seeing. You are not what you hear. You are the consciousness behind what you hear.

So it's never, this is what Jesus said when he used the term the kingdom of heaven or the kingdom of God. He said in one of the gospels, the kingdom of heaven does not come with signs to be observed. You cannot say, ah, here it is, or ah, it's over there.

It's a free translation more or less. That's what he said. And of course, what do Christians do?

They're waiting for the kingdom of heaven to arrive when they've been told you won't be able to see it. You can't say, ah, there it is. It does not come with signs to be observed.

Literally, he said that. And I'm sure that's one of the, there's a lot of things that people later put into his mouth, but that is one of the things, words that were uttered by somebody who knew the reality. It doesn't come with signs to be observed.

You can never see it or grasp it or know it as an object for your knowledge because you essentially are it as the consciousness that perceives, the consciousness behind your thinking, behind your emotions, behind your perceptions, behind your experiences, the very light of the world. Another thing he said, he not only said, Jesus, I am the light of the world. He said also, you are the light of the world.

So he's pointing, what is the light? It's the light of consciousness which illuminates the world. You are that.

That is the self. It has no form. Therefore, it seems that Buddhism and Buddhists and Hindus are in disagreement, but only those who haven't realized the reality behind their teachings.

Those Buddhists and Hindus who have not really realized the reality behind their teachings, they are in disagreement and they have arguments whether there's self or no self. Atman, anatman, the Hindus believe in atman, that the existence of self, the fundamental underlying reality. And the Buddhists say, no, anatman, no self.

And then whenever you see a Hindu and a Buddhist discussing, perhaps even with negative emotions, whether one or the other is true, then you'll know that they haven't experienced, they haven't known the reality behind the teaching because the reality behind the teaching is exactly the same. It's just a different perspective on the same. The Buddhists like to deny, they don't want to call it something as if the moment you call it, you say the self, the danger is that you make it into a mental object and start believing in it.

The Buddhists don't like that, so they say there is no self, which in a way is true also. There's nothing that you could say, there it is. It is an empty space almost, you could say, but it's potential fullness also.

It's full and empty at the same time. It's all the same, the self. That's why the Dalai Lama I saw giving a talk a while ago to Hindus and he said, you believe in Atman and we believe in Anathman, what does it matter?

And he laughed, ah, ah, ah, makes no difference. Ah, ah, ah, ah, ah, ah, ah, ah. That's a good answer.

From Lian, Lian, most spiritual teachers talk about the process of enlightenment or awakening, explaining things as if we are moving towards a goal somewhere in the future. How do you bridge learning the process of living in the now without continuing to feed the idea of it being a goal somewhere in the future? So we talk about learning to live in the now, which implies time, which is not the now.

That's what the question is about. The process of awakening, and does this not lead to the idea that we are moving towards a goal in the future and thereby, of course, missing the now? That could be the case if it's misunderstood.

If the process of awakening or living in the now is misunderstood, then the mind will create an imagined future self that is fully at home in the now. So one day, the mind says, I will achieve the state of being fully in the now, and then I'll be awake. And of course, thereby ensuring that you will never reach it.

And this is a dilemma of many spiritual seekers who have been seeking for many, many years, nobody present, of course, here. They've been seeking for many, many years and not realizing that their mind has created a state to be achieved in the future, and I am aspiring towards that state, and that state is a perfected, more enlightened or awake form of me. And so, of course, you will never reach it because continuously, you have the idea in your mind that there is a state to be reached.

And so you miss continuously the only place where the state can be reached, which is now. So that's the realization then that we need to let go of this idea that awakening is a future state to be achieved, but awakening can only happen in the present moment, and there's no self that you're going to reach that is a perfected version of your present self. But whenever we talk about the timeless dimension of consciousness, of presence, with reference to this dimension, we are going to encounter some kind of paradox.

It is true, of course, that it does take time to learn to live in the now. What that means is that continuously, you're not in the now, and you lose the now, which is access to the timeless dimension of consciousness. You lose access to it, and you're back in your life situation, back in your mind, back in time, where past and future completely obliterate the present moment, a normal state, in other words, and you become a normal human being again, somewhat mad, which is normal.

So the learning to live in the now, yes, there's a little bit of a paradox here because it takes time to be at home in the now and to live it continuously so that you don't lose the now anymore and go into the dream world of not now. So you bring in the timeless dimension into the dimension of time, and when the two come together, you will encounter, when you put it into words, you'll encounter some form of paradox. That's fine, that's fine.

The important thing is realizing that awakening is not about achieving some future state. The intensity needs to be directed not towards wanting to reach a future because many spiritual seekers have great intensity. They work very hard.

They might meditate four hours a day, and they're really determined to get there, and they never do because their intensity flows into future, into their mind. But the same intensity can be directed into the present moment. So that is bringing together two seemingly conflicting approaches to awakening.

One says there's nothing you can do. Any effort will just take you away from it. And the other approach says you need to want awakening as a drowning man wants air.

Otherwise, you won't get there. So you have the two. Some teachers will tell you there's nothing you can do.

It comes when it comes. Just be here now, enjoy yourself. The other says, oh no, you have to work really hard like the drowning man.

And so you get these conflicting viewpoints. But you can put the two together. But the intensity of the drowning man who wants air, or woman, the intensity of the drowning person who wants air can be directed into the now rather than into some idea of future.

So you become intensely present now. That means you don't need the future anymore. The intensity moves into the vertical dimension rather than losing itself in the horizontal dimension.

So for spiritual seekers, for most spiritual seekers who haven't arrived yet, they may have intensity or others have no intensity at all and they fall asleep in front of the TV waiting for enlightenment to happen. So that doesn't work either. Some intensity is necessary, but not the intensity that moves into the future, but the intensity of presence.

And when a challenge comes into your life, two things can happen. Either the challenge pulls you into old, unconscious, reactive patterns. And you start complaining and resisting and fighting and dreadful things happening.

Or a challenge can awaken you. So for example, let's say your stockbroker sends a statement or your mutual fund sends a statement, you open it and you see your investments have become reduced in value by 65%. You can become unhappy and make up stories in your mind about how difficult your life has now become and how difficult your life is going to be the next few years and how futile it has been to work so hard and to try and save all that money as a security for the future and it's all evaporating into nothingness and how dreadful it all is and think about it and talk to others about it and feel the corresponding emotions arising in your body.

In other words, the challenge has pulled you into unconsciousness, completely lost the now, completely lost the aliveness of now. Or the challenge can awaken you and you see, oh, you see the figure on the page, oh, that's what it is. And you accept this moment as it is without building stories around it and become intensely present.

So the intensity of, you need to have intensity when a challenge comes or a challenging person, a very unconscious person trying to drag you into some kind of conflict. Very easy to succumb to that. It happens in politics all the time.

One unconscious terrorist pulls the whole administration into unconsciousness. We may talk about that. So use a challenge to wake you up into that alertness that is so different from the normal state of reactive thinking, absolutely alert in the now.

Whenever the mind comes in and creates some form of unhappiness for yourself, because that's how unhappiness is created. Unhappiness is not created from the situation. It's created from what your mind is telling you about the situation.

So if you can observe that process in yourself, it's not the situation, situation is neutral. The mental commentary about your situation, life situation, whatever situation you encounter, the mental commentary is what produces the feeling of unhappiness. The mind judges the situation as not good, not good enough or is threatened by it or imagines a future that's not going to be satisfactory and so on.

So it's not the situation, but the mental commentary that creates that unhappiness that is so normal for most people and they don't realize it because they confuse what their mind is saying about a situation with the actual situation. It starts with the simplest thing like saying it's a dreadful day today because there are drops of water coming from the sky and it's gray. The sky is gray and it's a dreadful day.

You've already confused the simplicity of what is with your judgment of what is. So you call the day dreadful. And that's a tiny thing to do, but and then of course it flows into almost everything.

And so you cannot see that everything's, the simple isness of the present moment always the moment is as it is. The rest you add to it. And to see that the moment always is as it is, there's great power in that, that you don't need to have some kind of reactive relationship with what is.

That's superfluous, it's dysfunctional. And that's so, this is what every master, every Zen master teaches that simplicity of being with what is. People try to study Zen and they go to monasteries and can't figure it out even after 20 years.

Why? Because it's too simple. What is now is, that's Zen.

Be completely with what is and you're immediately a Zen master. If you want to be a Zen master, it's a good profession, then just decide that I'll just be with what is every moment. You got it.

You're there, you don't need time anymore. No time is needed to be with what is. So here we have the paradox.

Now, of course, in this dimension of time, it's very rare that somebody enters that state and never leaves it again. So you might decide as you sit here, okay, I'm going to be a Zen master. From now on, I'm going to be with what is totally.

And I'm not going to add superfluous mind stuff to what is. I'll be with what is and I'll respond to what is out of presence, out of that alert presence and it'll be wonderful. No more problems for the rest of my life.

Of course, it's true. And so you walk out of here or wherever you are and then probably before you reach home, a minor challenge will present itself if only in the form of, it's still raining. It's been raining for days.

Why am I living in this climate? But, ooh, you're beginning to lose it. The master is no longer a master.

Because once you start with that little thought, another one comes about my life. Maybe this thing about the present isn't really working. And so you go, oh, I lost it.

I thought I was going to be a Zen master. I have to think of something else. And so you need time.

You need time because you lost it and then you need time to learn to live in such a way because you continuously lose it. Old patterns, mind patterns come up and take you over again. Habitual mind patterns come up and pull you wherever they want to go.

Now, if you had absolute intensity of presence, and it's possible, it is possible that someone who listens to this, perhaps you or you or you, you're okay, are going to remain present. So with such intensity that the old patterns just cannot take you over anymore. Then all you can feel is the old patterns wanting to come in and saying, hi, here, come here, worry about this.

You have to worry about this. And you say, no, I'll just be present with what is. There's no problem now.

I'm not going to worry. If I have to think about something practical, then I'll think in a focused way, but I'm not going to be taken over by my mind. Okay, returning to presence.

And then there will be another attempt, a little challenge happens in the traffic or wherever. It is, this driver is like a gust of wind. Why personalize a driver that does something to you?

Well, you wouldn't personalize a gust of wind and complain about the gust of wind that pushes your car this way or that way. It just is a natural phenomenon. And so simply you are with what is.

If there's an unconscious driver, it's just, that's what is. There's no inner self that is complaining about it. You remain present, you remain the master.

That's the, if you had that intensity, then the mind would never take you over again. And you would have your new career as a spiritual master. Or just be free of unhappiness, and that's enough.

But you cannot not be a master and affect everybody around you if you live in that state. Whether you want to or not, you may not be a formal spiritual teacher. You will, you always teach your state of consciousness.

If you're unconscious, you teach unconsciousness. And you will pull others into unconsciousness. It happens continuously.

So I sometimes use this paradox. You need time to awaken or to be enlightened or to be free. You need time until you realize that you don't need time.

As long as you believe you need time, you need time. And then the moment comes when you realize I don't really need time to be who I am. I am who I am already.

I am who I am. The formless essence of who I am cannot change. So time is not needed.

The full realization of that might take you time. Ha ha! How do you experience God?

What do you see when you see someone? Do you see more than their physicality? How I experience God, I've been talking about, this is really the only thing I talk about now in different words.

What do you see when you see someone? Do you see more than their physicality? No, I don't see more than their physicality.

I see exactly what everybody else sees, but I feel or sense something that is deeper than the physicality, and that is hard to put into words. There's a sensing of there's more to you than what I see, not as a thought, but as a knowing. And because I know there's more to this form than I can see or you can see here.

So the consciousness beyond the form looks through the form and senses, we don't have a word for it, I can say I sense or I feel, it's not quite right, maybe sense it is the closest, I would have to create a new word for it. I sense who you are or what you are beyond what I see, or beyond what you are telling me, or beyond what your mind is saying or your emotions are doing. So there's a connection with presence, the presence that is in you, the presence that you are.

And I have that more strongly than what I see, so that kind of almost obliterates what I see. What I see is the same as anybody sees, but that strong sense of consciousness, the alive presence that you are, is almost stronger than what I see. So there's more of my attention is in that than in my perception of what I see.

It's hard to put into words something that is so far beyond words. But this is not something special to me, this is something whenever you look at a human being and for a moment be free of definitions or interpretations, then you neither of yourself nor the other, nor definitions, be there as just a spacious awareness, then you begin to sense an aliveness within you and the same aliveness in the other. And then whatever the human beings do isn't that important anymore, you don't react to.

They may be saying something silly or intelligent or whatever, it doesn't matter that much, there's something deeper there. They may be deluded, they might want something from you, it doesn't matter anymore. It's very beautiful because it's only from that place that you can really relate, it's not the personality or the mind level.

That's the way to go for humans, to recognize each other as essentially sharing the same life, the same consciousness, recognizing oneness on a sense level, not on an intellectual level, feeling oneness. And that's love in a deeper sense, not the ego love, but the true love. The love comes from there.

You recognize that there is ultimately no other. The more you think in terms of others, the more you're in ego. He's like that, she's like that, she does that, he does that.

Remember I wrote in a book the famous Jean-Paul Sartre philosopher said, hell is other people. In the French original if you translate literally he says hell is the others. That's the ego's perception of other people.

A strong ego would see other people like that. And of course it can become so strong that you end up with things like paranoia because every strong ego has already an element of paranoia in it. Even before it's recognized as pathological, when it's still normal, it has an element of paranoia in it.

And so any strong ego goes around the world in that way of what does he want, what does she want, what do you want from me? Oh, I know what he's thinking. Evil intentions and so on.

Very critical of others, they want something that's all very normal but already part of the insanity.

[Speaker 2] (4:26:08 - 4:35:40)

I couldn't explain it and I don't think Eckhart could have explained it, but it was almost it felt like for me this magnetic pull just to come together. So I followed that pull without thinking about it and having to take it day by day. And I saw, as I mentioned when I started seeing the expectations I had, how the mind can want to try to pull away from that somehow, let's call it an energetic pull.

A pull that's beyond thought. You know, because he didn't fit in with my image. But yet I couldn't deny this pull.

So every time I sat and still, there are many times in our relationship where I thought, I want out. This is just, it's not right for me. You know, these are the thoughts that was going on, you know, like, it's just, you know, because I had these expectations that he wasn't fulfilling.

But yet every time I sat in meditation and I said, do I want out now? And the answer was always no. What is it that I want now?

And that pull is still there. It hasn't gone away, it hasn't subsided. Will it go away?

I don't know. Will I be pulled somewhere else? I don't know.

But it doesn't matter because I'm not even going there. I just stay in this moment with this, the only word I can come up with is pull. This pull just to stay here, be here.

So it may not have that big romantic story behind it. But to me, that was. The romance is with this stillness and the form that came and arise that's here that I had the pull towards is beautiful, is love.

And all the stuff on the human level, well, yeah, that needs to be worked out. And it does, it works itself out. And it's amazing how much it works itself out.

The more that you're rooted in stillness, it's like, oh, OK, because things begin to fall away. You know, the expectations fall away and other perhaps, you know, the ideas about what a relationship should be like fall away. And here you are, you're just here.

So that's how we came together. I followed, you can call a pull, an impulse, the energy. Sometimes people ask me, how do I know that I'm in the right relationship?

I mean, sometimes I want to leave the relationship or he's that way, she's that way. He does this, she does that. And it just doesn't seem to fit with how I am.

And I guess I would say to that is that, who, who is asking all those questions? I guess it's, it's coming from the mind because it's not fitting in with your ideas about what you think a relationship is like. I had one person during an individual session say, my, my wife, my partner, I don't understand it and it really just really gets to me.

It ticks me off. But she walks out of the house without saying goodbye or she gets up in the morning, she doesn't even say good morning to me. I went, wow, this is really interesting.

Because he had the idea that she ought to be doing this, saying goodbye, saying good morning. And yeah, it might be nice, it's pleasant. But I also understood the same thing is because in my family, we never said that either.

We never said goodbye. We never said good morning. We would walk out of the house without saying anything.

We just walk out, we'd get up, not say anything. And I thought, wow. Because his idea was that, oh, she doesn't love me because I had said I want her to say goodbye to me.

I wanted to say good morning and yet she won't do it, you know. And, and so he didn't know actually, because he didn't know whether she loved him and whether he could love somebody who didn't say, I mean, I'm sure there was more to it than this, but this is what, this was the example he was giving. He, he didn't know.

And it's like, and I did share with him about my family thing. And I thought, you know, maybe it has nothing to do with you. It could be just that this is how she is in terms of how she's been brought up or whatever.

Can you let go? What is it in you that you are demanding her to be different? What is it in you that you just can't be the space in which allows this to happen?

Oh, she's leaving. You notice her. Bye.

I mean, Eckhart still does that to me. He'll go, you know, I'm about to do something or leave. Actually, now I say goodbye.

But you know, before it's like, all of a sudden he'll say goodbye or he'll say, good morning. And I'm like, oh yeah, yeah, good morning. But it's not because I don't love him.

And it's not because I want to just, you know, I'm rude or, you know, whatever idea you think of or judgment that you have on it. It's because that was part of my conditioning. Our family never did that.

So it is the investigation. And what better opportunity for spiritual awakening, but in daily life. And it's in daily life, and especially in relationships, that you begin to see what is actually being reflected back.

Because what's being reflected back is really what's going on internally, inside the mind. So for those who are on the verge of wanting to walk out, just stop. And you can even ask yourself, as I did many times, what do I want right now?

Do I want to leave right now? No. Because only the mind I saw wanted to leave, wanted to get out, for whatever reason, you know, the thought that it wasn't good enough, it wasn't what I wanted, or he didn't do what I wanted.

When you come back into stillness, right action always follows. So from a place of stillness, you will know without a doubt, that you'll find yourself walking out. You'll just leave.

And it may be, you know, you don't know, you might leave that day, or you might sit down and just sort of talk and say, I want to, I want to come out, and who knows what will happen. But it's really beginning to also communicate that truth, what it is that you feel, what's going on inside you, from a place that is non-threatening, to be able to communicate it, what's going on. And just to be in that stillness, and you'll know.

[Speaker 1] (4:35:45 - 5:58:38)

The moment of stillness, before we start, not waiting for anything to happen, but just being in the moment now. Make sure you're comfortable in your own skin, as you sit there. If you're not comfortable, then just notice that you're not comfortable, and allow yourself to not be comfortable, and then you become comfortable.

I have a little treat in store, we will talk about, not only talk about, but go into the essence of the book that has been with me, accompanied me for the past 30 years. A book that I've gone to, back to, periodically, I still go back to, periodically, pick it up, read a page or two or three, and meditate on it. It's one of the great treasures of spiritual literature, and it is a book that was written in China 2,500 years ago, the Tao Te Ching.

Now that's a huge, seemingly a huge gulf that separates us from that time period, and yet the book is still vitally alive. And if a book that was written so long ago is still vitally alive, it means it must have been written from a very deep place, and point to something that is timeless. If it were not written from a deep, timeless place within the author, and did not point to something that is beyond time, a book written 2,500 years ago would be irrelevant, meaningless, incomprehensible.

Many books that were written 20 years ago are out of date, or if you read yesterday's newspaper, it's out of date. So for something to still be alive now, and to be deeply meaningful to many people, there must be something there that is timeless, and that is the essence of the book, and that's what I would like to go into with you. So we are not going into a book.

We are not just going to study a book. We are just using the text to go deeply within, to discover something within ourselves. So all that the book is, is a device that helps us discover ourselves and our connection with the greater whole, the universe, whatever you want to call it.

So just very briefly, the historical context, it might be helpful to know a little bit about that. This book was written about 2,500-2,600 years ago in China, that in other words, 500-600 BC. Now that was a very exciting and meaningful time period.

Something incredible was happening during those, let's say, one and a half to two centuries. For the first time in the history of humanity, as far as we can see, there was a universal wave of spiritual awakening coming over the planet at that time. So the author of the Tao Te Ching, Lao Tse, is a contemporary more or less of the Buddha in India.

So the Buddha and his teaching arose at the same time, approximately as the teaching of Lao Tse, the author of the Tao Te Ching. So there was the Buddha arising in India, beginning to teach, and another significant teacher in India whose teaching did not go very much beyond India even to this day, but has remained very meaningful and profound in India, Mahavira, taught at approximately the same time as the Buddha, and it developed into Jainism, the religion, a very beautiful religion still practiced widely in India based on ahimsa, non-violence, and respect for all living beings. All those things were revelations when they first came into being at the time, the teachings. So we have the Buddha in India, we have Mahavira in India, all arising at the same time.

In Persia we have Zoroaster, sometimes called Zarathustra, not to be confused with Nietzsche's Zarathustra, which is a completely different character, Zarathustra the prophet in Persia. We have at the same time in ancient Greece, and that was a time before the famous Greek philosophers started to teach, Plato, Aristotle, Socrates, it was earlier than that, those were philosophers that arose for the first time there, they are called pre-Socratic philosophers because they predate Socrates. We only have fragments of their philosophy, but those fragments are enough to show us that their teachings were in some ways, this is how I feel, more profound than the later more differentiated teachings of Socrates, Plato, and Aristotle.

My favourite pre-Socratic philosophers are Heraclitus and Parmenides, and we only have small fragments, but the fragments show us that those teachings were still in touch with the source of being, the source of life, the oneness that underlies all phenomena. And later as the philosophy became more differentiated, that was becoming lost. The philosophies became very interesting and much more differentiated, but the connection with the root of all life, the unmanifested oneness, the transcendental dimension, gradually became lost.

So those philosophers 500 and 600 BC still had that connection, and they showed people, they also realised that humanity had lost it, so it was part of the wave of awakening that was coming over the planet, the teaching of those philosophers. This is not philosophy as we understand it these days. It's about inner transformation, not speculation.

Those were not speculative philosophers, in the same way that Buddha wasn't speculative, Mahavira wasn't speculative. So it is a transformational teaching. It's about inner transformation, not about figuring something out with your mind.

So we have that arising, the awakening arising in Persia, the awakening arising in India, the awakening arising in ancient Greece, and now we come to China, we have Lao Tse, his teaching at the same time was arising in China. All part of this wave of awakening that we are now experiencing again, even on a much larger scale now. So we are at a similar time period, except that the wave of awakening that is coming into this world, of spiritual awakening, is on a much larger and more powerful and all-pervasive scale.

So we are in the middle of that. A hundred, two hundred years ago, nobody in the West was discussing the Tao Te Ching, and this is why we can go back to it and understand it, because we are awakening. Lao Tse, we know very little about his life.

He was, they say, in charge of the archives of a kingdom called Shu, and reached, we don't know how old he was when he was becoming bored with the life of the court and the intrigues and the conflicts around him, and so he decided to leave his job and to leave his homeland and just go out into solitude. And the story goes, nobody knows whether it is true, that he left and he got to the border of the kingdom, there was a front, a little border crossing and a gate, and the gatekeeper said, I'm not going to let you pass unless you write down your wisdom. So he must already have had a certain reputation as a wise man, but he had never written anything.

And so, all he could do, he said, okay then, I'll write it down. We don't know how long it took, he wrote it down, and the gatekeeper let him go, and that is the Tao Te Ching. That is the teaching, and that is the book.

And then, according to one story, the last we ever know of him, he was sitting on a water buffalo, riding off into nowhere, and that's the last that anybody ever heard of him, nobody ever saw him again. That's one version of the story. Another version of the story is that he continued to teach and reached the age of 160 years.

The Tao Te Ching is the title of the book, which is not usually translated. People have tried to translate it, but unsuccessfully. Usually they give you subtitles.

So it says, Tao Te Ching, one of the traditional subtitles is The Way and Its Virtue, and that's already somewhat of a mistranslation. Although Tao can be translated as The Way, you just can't translate Tao, even if you translate it as Way, it's pretty meaningless. And if you're a Chinese person, you're not at a great advantage, you still won't know what Tao is.

So you're not at a great advantage. The Tao is something that cannot be named. We'll come to that in a minute.

So the subtitle, The Way and Its Virtue, Virtue is a mistranslation of the Te in the Tao Te Ching. Virtue has become a dead word in our language. When did you last say Virtue?

When did you last use that word? Probably many years ago, if ever. So the word Virtue is not alive.

What it really refers to is the power. So to translate, it's the power of the spirit. Of spirit, of the transcendental dimension.

The Way and Its Power is a better subtitle for the Tao Te Ching. The Way, how to live. The way to living, living in alignment with the one power that underlies the universe.

The one thing that you cannot name, that is not a thing. Living in alignment with the ultimate, which sometimes is called God, but the moment you call it God, it's not it. You've made it into something.

It is not something. It is something that flows through the entire universe, animates the entire universe, and at the same time is beyond it. That is the Tao.

And that is something that you can discover within yourself. You can live in a way that connects you with the inner source of all life, of all being. So the Way and Its Power.

He is teaching us how to live so that we are in alignment with the power that underlies all life, which, as Lao Tzu says, for the lack of a better word, I'll call it the Tao. And the Tao, that's a good thing, because you can't do much with a word that you cannot exactly see what it means. The same way that Buddha used the word emptiness.

You cannot worship emptiness. It's a negative term. It negates form.

So it's always been the tendency for humans to worship emptiness. Worship concepts. The concept of God arises in your mind, and then you start talking about God.

The concept of God becomes an idol, because it's no more than a thought. So you can't do that with the Tao, because you can't picture it. You can't form an image of it, in the same way that you can't form a picture, an image of emptiness.

So that is the transcendental reality that the book points to, and it shows us the way to it. So there's great power there. And the book came to me for the first time in my 20s, maybe mid-20s.

Somebody said, have a look at this. This is interesting. And I looked at it, and something drew me into it, but then I couldn't quite...

It was so obscure that I couldn't... I knew there was something hiding there in the book. There was some truth hiding, but I couldn't get it.

It was there, and then I put it aside and, OK, I have other things to do now. And then years passed, and then in my early 30s, I rediscovered the book in a different translation. There are many translations available.

And not only was the translation better, something had by then taken place within me, an awakening, a shift in consciousness. And through that new consciousness, I looked at the book, and I said, wow, that's... he's talking...

I know what he's talking about. I realized the depth and the profundity of what those words were saying. And since then, the book in different versions, not the actual physical book, but the Tao Te Ching has never left me.

It's always been with me in one way, one form or another. So that's the story behind the Tao Te Ching. And now let's see if we can go a little deeper into it.

We are going to use... There are two translations that at the moment are my favorites. We will use Stephen Mitchell's translation, fairly recent, Tao Te Ching.

Another translation that I've had for a number of years that I'm very fond of is by Jia-Fu Feng and Jane English. They together translated the Tao Te Ching. And that's another beautiful translation.

I will be using mainly for today Stephen Mitchell's translation or version of it. And the first two lines of the Tao Te Ching are very famous. I've quoted it quite a few times.

But even there, sometimes translations differ. The first two lines are, the Tao that can be told is not the eternal Tao. What he is saying is, you cannot really speak about the ultimate reality.

Whatever you say about it is not it. However, he then continues to talk about it. So how is that?

Well, he's telling you not to attach yourself to the words, not to begin to believe in the words or in concepts, not to make it into some new belief. The truth is not in the words. That's what he's saying.

The truth, the words only point to the truth. And the truth is only to be found within you, beyond the realm of mind or of thinking or of concepts. So that's just a little, very important, those first two lines.

The Tao that can be told is not the eternal Tao. Okay, and now let me tell you about it. Because the Tao is in you.

And the only place where you can discover it is in you. And so the book shows the way to discover who you are beyond who you thought you are, beyond whatever your mind is telling you, who you are. And now, the closest he comes to defining the Tao, which cannot be defined, I'm just saying the closest he comes to defining it is in these little lines, which I'll read to you now.

And again, you need to listen to that, not just with your head, but you need to listen to that with your belly or your entire being, those words, because you cannot understand them just through the mind. If they are meaningful, or if you can sense the power that is in the words, then you are sensing your own power beyond thought activity. There was something formless and perfect before the universe was born.

It is serene, empty, solitary, unchanging, infinite, eternally present. It is the mother of the universe. For lack of a better name, I call it the Tao.

Note that he begins by saying there was something formless and perfect before the universe was born, before the arising of form, before the Big Bang, you could say. He uses the past tense. In the next line, he says, it is serene, empty, solitary.

It is not only that which was there before the world came into being, it is that which continues to be there timelessly at the core of your being. That which was there before the Big Bang is still present in you, the unmanifested, one life, one consciousness, without which you are nothing. It is the essence of who you are.

And of course, if you say that to a normal, materialist scientist, whatever, I'm saying a normal scientist, not a great scientist, then he'll say, what is this nonsense? Or if you tell it to somebody who is totally close to you, they'll say, this is mumbo-jumbo. There was something before the universe was born and there's something, what are you talking about?

And now, listen, he very wisely, Stephen Mitchell, put in a little quote by one of the great scientists, Albert Einstein, what he had to say about it. Somebody who did a lot of thinking, but whose thinking was rooted in the stillness, which, as we shall see, is an essential part of the teaching of the Tao. His thinking was rooted in the Tao, in the stillness beyond the noisy mind.

That's where Einstein's realizations came from. And so, he was not just trapped in his noisy mind, like most scientists, and then deny the reality of the transcendental, but he was connected with it. And he said, I'm not used to quoting from books and talks, here's Einstein talking, the scientist's religious feeling takes the form of a rapturous amazement at the harmony of natural law, which reveals an intelligence of such superiority that, in comparison with it, all systematic thinking of human beings is an utterly insignificant reflection.

This feeling is the guiding principle of my life and work, the recognition of a vast intelligence that underlies all of creation. Instead of saying, what, somebody, something more intelligent than me, that can't be, that's mumbo-jumbo. But something that I can't understand, I can't categorize, what mumbo-jumbo is that?

This is what the dowdy jingle is standing on tiptoe, and you're not stable. It's in the flower. It creates that.

It's in you. It pervades the very space around us. It comes through the human brain, becomes, the brain is like a, gives it some form.

And when the brain goes, it no longer goes through that form. It's the very consciousness that you are. So this shows that Einstein was in touch with that dimension.

That's why his thinking was inspired. That's why he had sudden revelations. Now, now we come to the first, slightly longer, just a few lines, never more than a few lines at a time.

How to live, to be in touch with that. Can, I'll read the whole, this little section first, and then we'll look at the lines and go into it. Not just, not with the intellectual mind, but sensing our way into it.

Can you coax your mind from its wandering and keep to the original oneness? Can you let your body become supple as a newborn child's? Can you cleanse your inner vision until you see nothing but the light?

Can you love people and lead them without imposing your will? Can you with the most vital matters by letting events take their course? Can you step back from your own mind and thus understand all things, giving birth and nourishing, having without possessing, acting with no expectation, leading and not trying to control?

This is the supreme virtue. For virtue, substitute power. The power moves through you.

If you live in that way, you become it. You realize your oneness with it. Back to the beginning.

Can you coax your mind from its wandering? It wanders about. If you look at your own mind, that's what it does.

It goes, one thing to another, one thought leads to another thought, and it goes on and on. Sometimes I call it the voice in the head. Can you coax your mind from its wandering and keep to the original oneness?

In other words, is it possible for you to sit still for a moment and don't give attention to every thought that says, follow me, I'll show you the way. That's what every thought is. I'm important.

Think about this, think about this. Okay, and once you follow up one thought, it becomes another one, and another. That's how most people live.

Continuously immersed in just chatter, mental chatter, streams of thinking. It's even become literature in the 20th century. It's called the stream of consciousness, James Joyce.

You get 30 pages without any punctuation marks, just he wrote down how he observed his own mind and he wrote down how it works. It goes on and on. No period, no comma, nothing.

Normal. So once you know that, and most of these people don't even know that. They are so identified with it.

It's just, that's who I am. I just, I think. But it's not even that they say, I think, because they are the thoughts.

And they miss the vast dimension within, at least underneath thoughts. That's why I say, okay, just don't give all that importance to your thoughts. Just come to a point of rest.

This is where the present moment becomes so important because it's the present moment that can take you out of the stream of thinking. Just becoming alert to this moment. There's nothing much to think about as you sit here.

What can you add to this moment that's better than what's already here? Or when you look at a flower, why add thought to it? Or when you look at another human being, why add thought to the beautiful perception of that?

And you keep to the original oneness. The moment you're no longer dominated by thinking and you realize there's a realm beyond thinking inside me, you're connected to the oneness because it's only through thinking that the illusion of separation arises when you start calling things this and that and judging and naming. Doesn't mean you can't do it anymore, but you're not trapped in it anymore.

Can you let your body become supple as a newborn child? When you are immersed in thinking, your body becomes rigid because it reflects what's going on in here, a lot of which is problematic. I need to think about this.

And the more problematic your thinking is and all thinking is problematic, the more lifeless your body becomes and the flow of energy through the body diminishes. You get rigid, you get tense, you're holding in. Can you let your body become supple as a newborn child?

This is a free translation. If you go back to the more literal translation, he's actually saying, can you concentrate your chi or your vital energy until your body becomes supple as a little child? This is really, he's teaching body awareness.

Can you go within, take attention into the body and to feel that you are alive inside? Can you feel the aliveness in your hands? Can you feel the aliveness in your feet?

Can you feel the aliveness that pervades the entire body, takes you out of your mind? Even as you sit here, can you feel that? There's a very ancient Taoist practice, thousands of years old, almost as old as the Tao Te Ching, which tells you you should breathe from your heels upward.

It says, can you breathe from your heels upward? Of course you can't because you can't suck in air with your feet. But what it's saying is it is directing attention to your feet and you imagine that you're breathing from down there, you're breathing through your heels.

What that does is you suddenly become aware it starts from the bottom of your entire energy field. As I'm breathing in, just simply imagine you're breathing in from your feet, energy starts to move in from down there. Imagine that you're actually breathing in from your feet and then the energy of the breath flows into the body, very ancient practice.

At particular, I only discovered two days ago that somebody, that thousands of years ago they recommended that already. And I said, oh, that's the inner body, that's what I was talking about, I always talk about. Can you cleanse your inner vision until you see nothing but the light?

That is perhaps somewhat obscure, although there's light in it, to the mind it's a little obscure. What do you mean cleanse your inner vision until you see nothing but the light? The light is the light of consciousness.

Cleansing your inner vision is to still the mind until you become aware of awareness, until you become aware that you are conscious. And then that remains always there. This entire little chapter is really how to be in the world, but at the same time connected with the source.

At this moment, it might be easier if you forget, don't think of yourself as somebody having a past, don't think of yourself somebody having a future. What's left of you right now without that? Consciousness, just a presence, not an opinion or memory.

That's the light of consciousness and that's the Tao really. You cannot grasp it. You cannot make it your object of knowledge and say, oh, there it is, there's the light of consciousness, I can see the light of consciousness.

No, you are the light of consciousness through which everything is seen. You can't see it, you can't grasp it, it underlies everything. It's so there, it's who you are.

It's your presence. When I say your presence, it's not quite right because it's not yours, it's you, it's oneness. If I say your presence, then there's you and presence, but language works in that way.

It creates duality and that's what the Tao Te Ching is about, is realizing that that's an illusion. Can you love people and lead them without imposing your will? This is imposing your will in another translation, it's always helpful to look at different translations.

It says, can you be without cleverness in this world? I talk about cleverness in one of the books, that the ego is clever because it tries to work out some advantage for myself or for us. It has its little schemes.

It tries to use people. That's cleverness. Politicians are clever, most of them.

Very few are intelligent. PhD doesn't mean you're intelligent. Well, whether they have PhDs or not, it has nothing to do with that.

Intelligence is to see the larger whole of all and then not just act to enhance one little fragment and then be in opposition to the rest of the world of life, but see the totality. Can you be without cleverness? Can you deal with the most vital matters by letting events take their course?

That's a very fundamental teaching of the Tao, is not to interfere in the way things are moving. So there's no violence whatsoever and that's of course beautifully practiced in all martial arts. In martial arts, the opposing energy that is coming towards you is not resisted.

This is deeply influenced by the Tao Te Ching, non-resistance going with the movement of life. The Western approach is somebody comes towards you and you hit back. It comes towards you and you go and the Eastern is it comes, the force is coming towards you and you go with it and then suddenly your opponent falls.

The very energy of that attack movement is used to defeat the opponent. You have not opposed it, you go with it. There's almost, we can say, no violence in it and yet extremely powerful and that can be applied in many things.

It can be applied in daily life, in not getting involved in useless discussions, not identifying with mental positions of rightness. I'm right and you are wrong and then you start, this energy totally takes you out of yourself. Not engaging in useless discussions, being able to listen in a state of openness to another, not identifying with your opinions and then opposing somebody else's opinion.

Can you step back? Oh, before that, can you deal with the most vital matters by letting events take their course? Now, I looked at another translation that's a little closer to the original which says, instead of by letting events take your course, it says, by becoming the female.

Can you deal with the most vital matters by becoming the female? The female principle, female is often used as synonymous with the Tao. So one could almost say that the feminine principle is the principle of allowing, which is like this, whereas the male principle is this.

If you want to see it and express this, the male goes like that, the female goes like that. And according to this teaching, the female is, one could almost say, expresses the Tao more clearly than the male. It's somewhat easier to express the Tao through the female form than the male form.

If you're male, then you have to discover the female in yourself to be one with the Tao also. You have to discover that. For example, when I say, allow this moment to be as it is, that's a female.

You're not fighting what is. You're allowing what is. There's an embracing.

You see it sometimes with Kuan Yin statues, the holding hands like that, or Virgin Mary statues, which are all expressions of the female, all embracing, all embracing. Can you be the female in any situation? And that's, in a discussion, some women would say, I don't like this idea.

I want to be powerful. They don't realize that the power of the female is enormous. The power of allowing is far greater than the power of interfering.

Can you be the female? Let's see what else we have before we go to another longer one. How you receive this depends on your degree of openness to this message.

So, this sounds very familiar to me. That's why I'm just reading it to you, just a few lines. Some say that my teaching is nonsense.

Others call it lofty but impractical. But to those who have looked inside themselves, this nonsense makes perfect sense. And to those who put it into practice, this loftiness has roots that go deep.

So, there are some people in whom the openness is not there, and then whatever, what we are talking about here is totally nonsensical. So, there needs to be something in you that recognizes the truth of this beyond words and concepts. Empty your mind of all thoughts.

Let your heart be at peace. I'm going to read the same again in a different translation. Just gives you a slightly different sense, feel.

Empty yourself of everything. Let the mind become still. Empty yourself of everything.

Let the mind become still. Watch the turmoil of beings, but contemplate their return. Watch the turmoil of this world, of all the activity of this world, of all beings involved in running around.

Watch it, which means be the awareness, and contemplate their return. They all return to the formless, sooner or later. All the forms.

Imagine you're seeing a movie. I always, I love to see old movies, like movies made in the 30s or so, or 40s. And I love seeing, for example, you see street scenes, actual street scenes, big city, London, New York, whatever, people, hundreds of people running around to go about their business.

But this is what the turmoil of beings, as it's called here, you have to see it. And I see that in amazement, I watch that. This refers to watch, but contemplate their return.

And when I watch that, I realize all these people, the actual street scenes, all these people are no longer there. They're all dead now. It was so important, what they were doing.

It looked so important, running around, cars going. And if you had seen a speeded-up version of the movie, if you see a speeded-up version of anything, if you saw a speeded-up version of this room, like you sometimes see how a flower, it's a wonderful image, if you see, they do it on film, how a plant comes suddenly out of the soil. And so they, over a period of a few hours or a few days, it's filmed.

So you see that period, within a few seconds, contracted. So you see actually how the plant comes out of the soil, then leaves come out of the plant, and the flower comes out. And suddenly, you see, the flower is wilting.

The leaves are wilting and falling off. And then the entire plant goes, gone. This is what it's talking about.

You have to actually see. It's an amazing thing when the touch can, we'll touch to see that, when you truly watch that, something inside you goes, you can't put it into words, it goes, wow. Because you realize that applies to everything in this world.

It's that way. It comes into being. Every body, I'm really, I'm looking at my own body when I see it.

It's just a slightly different version of that. It lasts a few years longer than the plant. But if you saw even the baby growing into an adult, you would, maturity, vitally alive, physically active, and then gradually, winding down.

And then beginning to look like a wrinkled apple or a pear. And then, suddenly, the life force leaves. And then, soon later, all the molecules and atoms say goodbye.

We're going our own way now. And there's nothing left. Just an emptiness.

If you saw this room, and the people in this room, and let's see if we didn't move from this room, and we had a camera here, you would see gradually the bodies dissolving or evaporating, whatever, it would go very quickly. I sometimes compare them to soap bubbles popping. So if you saw this, we had this camera here over a period of, let's see, how long do you want to live?

Another 50 years? Then the soap bubbles would pop one after another. Nothing left.

And then for a little while longer, the physical forms would stay. And then you would see, gradually, even the physical forms crumbling. It could take 2,000 years or whatever, depending on atmospheric conditions.

And even then, the chairs could become dust. So everything is dissolving, birth, dissolution, everything, every form. It's impermanent.

And to watch, it's extremely powerful to watch that. This is why he's telling you, watch the turmoil of beings, but contemplate their return, means be aware of the impermanence of all forms, not as a negative thing, but simply as you see it for what it is. And if you are aware of the impermanence of all forms, that all forms are short-lived, how can you be aware of it?

There must be something in you that is beyond that. It's only from, as I sometimes say, if the entire universe were blue, the colour blue would not exist for you, because there would be nothing to differentiate it from. If we said, everything is blue, you say, what are you talking about?

There's blue? What's blue? There's no other colour.

If everything were impermanent, you wouldn't even know it. But there is something in you that is beyond that. It's only from there.

And that is why the contemplation of impermanence can put you in touch with that, because that in you, which is the consciousness, the timeless presence, the light of consciousness, is not touched by that. And then the question the mind asks is, well, but what about when I die, I lose consciousness? Or if a brick falls on my head, I lose consciousness.

What about that? All it means is that consciousness can no longer flow through your brain into this world. It then has to withdraw and seek another channel.

Consciousness is not affected. You cannot lose consciousness. Isn't that amazing?

Why not? Because you are consciousness. It's the essence of who you are.

So you can't lose yourself. Consciousness, you can also say life. You can call it life.

You can call it Tao. It's the unmanifested, underlying, the timeless essence of all life, that which animates all life forms for brief periods, each form of brief period, you are that. You can't think about that.

If you think about it, it doesn't make sense. You have to sense that in yourself. Now, sense that.

You can't know it as an object of knowledge. You can only know it as yourself, because it's the subject of all knowledge. Each separate being in the universe returns to the common source.

Returning to the source is serenity. Another word for serenity is stillness. All things return to the source out of which they have come, the life, the unmanifested one life.

Returning to the source is stillness. Now, the wonderful thing is, we don't have to wait until we die to return to the source. To live a life that is filled with power and wisdom, we can return to the source before the body dies, and live in a state of connectedness with the source of life.

And that's why it says returning to the source is stillness. When you find the stillness within yourself, you're returning to the source of all life. What is stillness?

Just a moment when you're not thinking, but still conscious. Just an inner space, like now. Okay, ready for this?

Here are all your thoughts, and now we go. Then thoughts come creeping back, and then we go, and suddenly there's a, can you sense that there is a space inside you that's just conscious? Where you don't call yourself anything or call me anything?

You're returning to the source, to the formless, the timeless in you. If you don't realize the source, you stumble in confusion and sorrow. If you don't realize the source in yourself, you stumble in confusion and sorrow.

That's how most people live, unfortunately. Stumbling about, unconnected with who they are, disconnected from who they are, not realizing the source of their being. There is immediately, there's confusion, which is mental confusion, the mind creating all kinds of pseudo problems.

You yourself, you become a problem to yourself. You become a problem to others. You become a problem to the planet.

You become a problem, or you contribute to the problem-making of the world, and that's the normal way to be. You stumble in confusion and, so that's confusion, and sorrow is the suffering that comes when you are not connected with that dimension in yourself, in your daily life. You suffer.

That's a destiny, that's what the Buddha said. Life is suffering, unless you go beyond suffering, which is the teaching. It shows you the way, as the Tao Te Ching does.

Confusion and sorrow, you can't get rid of it, no matter how you try to rearrange your outer life, or think, if I achieve that or that, I'll be fine. You won't. So you stumble in confusion and sorrow.

You need to find the source, and it's not even hidden, it's just there underneath the mental noise. So when you realize the source, realize, of course, doesn't mean you have some kind of intellectual idea about it. Realize is when you have no idea, when the ideas, the importance of ideas diminishes, and there's just a space of awareness.

Ideas are secondary. In fact, you will have some interesting ideas coming out of that, creative ideas, new ideas, new insights, but they are secondary. When you where you come from, you naturally become tolerant, disinterested, amused, kind-hearted as a grandmother, dignified as a king, immersed in the wonder of the Tao, you can deal with whatever life brings you, and when death comes, you're ready.

Beautiful images explains who or what you become when you live in connectedness with that, no longer as a little entity that thinks itself to be separate from the universe and from other human beings and from everything. You become tolerant, disinterested, it's not uninterested, disinterested, amused. There's a little bit of amusement and all the things that people in this world feel is so serious and so important and all their fears and ambitions and all the things they run after.

You then become a little bit amused at all this, what is called the turmoil of beings running around like little rabbits. All this and so on. I have so many problems to think about.

Oh my god, what's happening? Oh no, god. You become amused a little, there's a slight smile.

Sometimes you might even laugh, but there's a slight, a little bit of a smile, because you know it's not ultimately real what they believe to be so important is ultimately not that real. It's a temporary thing. It's relatively real, not ultimately real.

In other words, everything is a little bit like a dream. For example, what happened to you yesterday? Where is it now?

A little bit like a dream, whatever was important then. Even breakfast this morning. Okay, did I have breakfast or was it a dream?

Not that much difference. Or you come to the end of your life and suddenly you think back all those years. That was a long dream.

Was it a nightmare? And you become kind-hearted as a grandmother. Nice image.

The grandmother was already been through everything. It's a little bit like the big-bellied Buddha that you see that is influenced, the Taoist-influenced Buddha, the Chinese big-bellied Buddha. He sits there.

Sometimes people who think they have lots of problems in their lives, I recommend that they should get a big-bellied Buddha and look at it quite often when they think they have problems. Because the Buddha, he's actually laughing. He's at a huge belly and he always goes, oh, it's not serious.

It implies that he is connected with something deeper. He doesn't take the world that seriously. And so his influence is beneficial.

It's only people who take the world not that seriously they can actually be of benefit to the world and improve the world. But if you think that the world is absolutely serious, you're not going to improve it. You can just contribute to the madness.

You will be fighting one or somebody or some organization or some group of people. It's serious, serious. That little bit of detachment, you become the Buddha, the big-bellied Buddha or the grandmother and dignified as a king with a certain dignity or integrity to who you are.

The same dignity and integrity that each animal has, that many humans have lost. One with itself. I feel always when I look at a dog or a cat or bird, whatever it is, it is one with itself, with who it is.

It has enormous dignity. And then sometimes you can see the contrast if you look at a particularly silly human being. And sometimes silly human beings have a dog that's very dignified.

And the only times when they get out of their silliness is when they pet their dog. For a moment they can truly be themselves for a moment. With all other people they're playing some kind of silly roles, not knowing that they're playing roles.

And then they come in, for a moment their dog gives them the ability to relax for a moment and be who they are without pretending. And that's why they don't know it. That's why they love their dog or their cat so much.

Because they can be themselves. They find themselves through that. That's the integrity of the animal, the dignity of the animal.

But it's in you also. This is a nice one about people who are in control of something, of an organisation or a country or whatever. How to rule a country or an organisation.

When the master governs, the people are hardly aware that he exists. Next best is a leader who is loved. Next, one who is feared.

The worst is one who is despised. If you don't trust the people, you make them untrustworthy. The master doesn't talk, he acts.

When his work is done, the people say, amazing, we did it all by ourselves. So the greatest ruler is not even aware that he or she is there. Hardly aware that he or she is there, does not interfere, never says, look at me, I did that, identifying with their actions and taking credit for what they did.

I did that. Or arguing with somebody, you didn't do it, I did that. That same thing can exist.

This talks about having gone beyond ego and beyond mind and identification with action. You also find this phenomenon in some very simple people who haven't developed an ego yet. They sometimes do wonderful things, but there's no entity that says, look, I did that, or how it feels, I did that.

Beautifully expressed in the film Forrest Gump, where the hero or the anti-hero does not have an ego, he is below ego. He helps many people and many good things come into his life, but he has no sense of a separate self. He lives in the right way, not what this describes, because this describes of going beyond ego, but he hasn't arrived at ego yet, so he still lives in the sense of oneness.

And if you live in the sense of oneness, the universe to a large extent becomes helpful. Helpful things come into your life, because you are no longer separating yourself from life. That begins with being in a state of oneness with the present moment, accepting the moment as it is.

That's really all you need to do. Then you're in a state of oneness with life, not imposing anything on the present moment, judgments, reactions, and if they are there, accept that they are there. So you can always accept what is, whatever level, either accept what is externally or accept what is internally.

And now here's a very wonderful thing about how your state of consciousness affects the world, that there's a correlation between the collective consciousness of humanity and the state of the planet. And there is a correlation between your state of consciousness and whatever happens to you, not always apparent immediately, but there is a correlation between what's within you and what happens to you or what you attract into your life. And furthermore, it's not so much that what happens to you is your fate or your destiny.

Your destiny is determined not by what happens to you, that's what people think, that what happens to me determines my life. Your life is determined, your destiny is determined by how you respond to what happens. And what happens next is determined by how you react or respond to what happens now.

So something seemingly bad happens, something goes wrong. If your reaction is negative, you attract the next negative thing. If your reaction is a response that says, well, this is how it is, now let's deal with that.

The next thing will reflect that state of consciousness. Many people are trapped their whole lives in a stream of same kind of unpleasant things happening continuously to them because they don't realize at any given moment there's a freedom for them to change their lives by reacting differently to what happens. Your present reaction determines the future, not what happens.

Your reaction to what happens determines the next moment. That's how you can change your life rather than being trapped in bad karma for a very long time. Very easy, but it requires awareness.

And here we talk, the Tao Te Ching talks about how the collective consciousness affects the planet. In harmony with the Tao, the sky is clear and spacious. The earth is solid and full.

All creatures flourish together, content with the way they are, endlessly repeating themselves, endlessly renewed. When man interferes with the Tao, the sky becomes filthy. The earth becomes depleted.

The equilibrium crumbles. Creatures become extinct. The master views the parts with compassion because he understands the whole.

His constant practice is humility. He doesn't glitter like a jewel, but lets himself be shaped by the Tao, as rugged and common as a stone. Beautiful images.

When humans collectively live out of touch with the greater consciousness, the Tao, the transcendent, the reality, whatever they manifest externally reflects that state of disconnectedness. And then the planet around them suffers. It's simply a reflection of a state of consciousness.

And so, this eternal principle, he already saw 2,500 years ago. And that also implies that the solution to what is happening to the planet cannot be found exclusively on the external level. Yes, of course, we need to change things that we do on the external level.

But unless the consciousness, the state of consciousness that is our habitual state, changes, even if we remove one evil from somewhere out there, it will be replaced by some other thing that has the same harmful influence on nature and the planet. So, the fundamental is the shift in consciousness in humans, in humanity, but not waiting for others to change. Humanity is you.

Humanity is I. You are humanity. The shift in consciousness needs to happen in you, and then the planet will be saved.

So, that is vital. Here we have the two beautiful lines. The master always means the enlightened being, the being in touch with the Tao.

Here he happens to use the he pronoun, but he changes continuously in this translation. Chinese doesn't differentiate, apparently, with the pronoun. Traditionally, it's always he in the old translation of the Tao Te Ching, but in this Stephen Mitchell translation, he shifts continuously from he to she.

It happens to be he here, but it doesn't matter. The master views the parts with compassion because he understands the whole. He understands the whole.

He is connected with the whole. Then you can look upon the parts, the individual human beings and the many different life forms with compassion, because you recognize them as expressions of, manifestations of the one life that you also are. Manifestations or expressions of the one consciousness that is the essence also of who you are.

When you don't impose thoughts on, continuously impose thoughts on reality, but allow things to be, allow a flower to be, with that spaciousness, spacious perception. Another human being. Compassion comes out of that state.

Compassion has a deeper level to it, and that is the recognition of oneness. Out of that comes true compassion. The recognition that, in essence, you and I share a common source and consciousness.

Not a source in the distant past, a source we share, a common source now. And that's not an intellectual thing. The realization comes the less you impose thoughts on other people, judgments, definitions, and on yourself.

You start thinking about my life. What about my life? And then you define your life as either good or bad, fulfilling or unfulfilling, satisfying or unsatisfying.

And you have all kinds of opinions, all kinds of opinions about me and my life. And you have a whole, a whole structure in your mind develops that you call my life. And for many people that mental consists of thoughts all clinging together.

This is all part of the edifice of my life. And it's here. And they all cling together, and people think that's who they are.

It's just thoughts about its definitions, about them. They're just thoughts. And when you don't know that, that cuts you off from who you, the power that is there underneath all that, the power of consciousness itself, the Tao.

You're cut off, and you live as if that thing were real, and you try to somehow make it better on that, on the level of the thought structure of my life, or try to convince yourself that, oh, my life isn't that bad after all. And then you get a little bit of, okay, I'm feeling a little bit better today because I just hadn't thought that my life isn't so bad after all. Or, or you see somebody who is in suffering say, oh, I'm better off than that person.

And you have a little bit of happiness. My life isn't so bad. Many people's lives are far worse than my life.

Okay, I should feel good. Okay. A little bit of feeling a little bit good for a few moments.

But the structure of my life is not a satisfying one for almost anybody. If you don't go beyond that structure, you might think the people you read about in People magazine or wherever are better off, they're just as unhappy as everybody else. Because they, unless they've gone deeper, some may have.

My life, it's a figment of the imagination. There's no such thing as my life. I don't have a life.

How can I have, what does that mean I have a life? I am life. I am an expression of the one life.

The one consciousness, the Tao, the expressing itself briefly through this form. And the very power of all life is here. Why have some mental structure that gives me a sense of identity that tells me who I am with definitions and judgments and not good enough or better than all kinds.

Unnecessary, unnecessary, sometimes called in the Tao Te Ching, unnecessary baggage. Walking around with unnecessary baggage. My life is so heavy and it's hard.

I have a hard life. Where's your hard life at this moment? Can't see it.

It's only when I start to think about it, it's back, oh yeah. But where is it ever now? It's an imaginary entity, the me that is up there, consisting of all kinds of thoughts and opinions, is an imaginary entity, unreal.

It's wonderful to see that in this moment you don't have that baggage of my life. You are life right now. I don't need to define myself mentally as either good or bad or better than or success or failure.

All that cuts you off from the power that's actually there of the Tao. This is why it says, as we read earlier, empty yourself of everything it said, which means empty yourself of these ideas that otherwise dominate you, the ideas of who you are. Jesus said the same thing, almost literally to me, it means exactly the same.

Blessed are the poor in spirit. Poor in spirit, that means inside you do not carry baggage, the baggage of your thoughts, of who you are. So the same thing, blessed are the poor in spirit, means you are internally unencumbered by heavy thinking and identification and creating an image of who you think you are that becomes my life.

And then you even believe that you could lose your life. I'm going to lose, he lost his life. That must be, there must be, he must have been separate from life.

Who was he if not life? Without life, he isn't. He couldn't have been.

You cannot be, you are life. You can't separate yourself from life and say, I have a life. Who are you then?

Separate from life? What is it other than life? Well, I, that's life.

But you don't have it, you are it. Only the mind tells you that you have it.

[Speaker 6] (5:58:47 - 5:58:48)

Insane.

[Speaker 1] (5:58:48 - 6:09:15)

But normal, normal and insane. One more, he who stands on tiptoe doesn't stand firm. He who rushes ahead doesn't go far.

He who tries to shine dims his own light. He who defines himself can't know who he really is. He who has power over others can't empower himself.

He who clings to his work will create nothing that endures. If you want to accord with a Tao, just do your job, then let go. He who stands on tiptoe doesn't stand firm.

Look at me, me, my life, unhappy or look how miserable I am. Look how great I am. He who rushes ahead doesn't go far, always looking to the next thing.

What do you have to do now? Always grasping for the next, or the next, what's the next thought that I need to worry about? And the next thing, rushing, entire civilization stressed, stressed out, all disconnected from the Tao.

They're all rushing ahead. No time for anything else. No time, no time.

He who rushes ahead doesn't go far. You won't, don't really reach anywhere. He who tries to shine dims his own light.

By trying to play roles or identifying with yourself as special, look at me, you cut yourself off from the power of the Tao. It's by not, by not directing attention to yourself, the power comes through you. Not identifying with anything, anything that you do, because you don't do it if it's, it's a pity in a way that I wish sometimes, it's a little joke, I wish I had written The Power of Now when I still had a big ego, because now the ego would feel so great, me, me.

But then of course, The Power of Now couldn't have come through the ego. And here, important, he who defines himself can't know who he really is. This is what we were talking about, this constant definitions of who you are in your mind.

Why not just be the consciousness, be the presence right now? That's where the power is. What a wonderful teaching.

Timeless. It helps, of course, to have a translation that makes it more accessible by somebody who was, is deeply in tune with that state of consciousness. Traditionally, the Tao has been always translated by academics, who had a wonderful knowledge and command of ancient Chinese, but absolutely no idea of the spiritual dimension.

The Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the end, stillness. We started with it, we end with it, a moment of stillness. From Vince, in The Power of Now and in the New Earth, the way you describe the ego makes it sound like it has a personality of its own.

It seems to be a collection of habits, desires, etc. that run counter to some deeper or more authentic dimension of reality. What are the benefits and potential downsides to describing ego as a personalised entity, rather than, say, as a more impersonal pattern?

The question then, I'll just repeat it or paraphrase it, what is the advantage or the downside of talking about the ego in terms of an entity as if it were a personalised entity, or talking about the ego as simply a collection of impersonal patterns, mental, emotional patterns? And the questioner mentions that I often talk about the ego as if it were an entity in itself. So what are the benefits and potential downsides to talking about it as if it were an entity?

Because these two are just two ways of looking at it. If you look at it in one way, it is like a person, like a being that wants to survive. So this conglomeration of patterns working together, it wants to survive, it has certain needs, so it has certain characteristics of an entity.

And that's why the downside of looking at it as an entity is that it might scare you. You may get scared, you might get scared of your own ego and think there's some demon inside me that wants to take over my life. So that's the downside then, is it creates some kind of emotion around it, and you feel threatened by it.

If you call it, it's a collection of patterns, then you don't have that. But the downside of that is that you may underestimate the force behind it, and the persistence behind the patterns, and the fact that the patterns have a certain organisation to them, they kind of go together, they reinforce each other. So there the downside is that you underestimate the egos.

And you say, well, there's still some unconscious patterns in me, or that's, you probably won't even say that. But anyway, that's, you have the two ways of looking, neither one is the one right way. Another, I can add a third way of looking at the ego, which is to say, it's an illusion.

That's the Eastern approach, in many cases, to say, if the ego is an illusion, or you can even have a saying, the ego doesn't exist, it's just an illusion. And again, everything is a somewhat limited perspective. And every perspective will have, it's helpful, in some ways, maybe helpful, and in other ways, as the questioner says, a downside to it.

So not one perspective really can encapsulate the ego. So you can really have, there's no need to embrace just one perspective, realise that the ego is, it is a personalised entity, it is consisting of a conglomeration of mental emotional patterns, and it is ultimately a dreamlike entity, an illusory form. It's all that together, you could say.

And so that's, then there's also no disagreement between one person saying there is no ego, because it's an illusion, and the other one says, oh, yes, there is, there's just two viewpoints, perspectives. Ego is, of course, the unobserved mind, plus its emotions. Thank you.

[Speaker 4] (6:09:17 - 6:09:39)

A friend of mine got shot and died a couple days ago, so it's been on my mind. What happens at the time of death, and where does the life force go, what is the transformation? Thank you.

[Speaker 1] (6:09:42 - 6:18:22)

Thank you. Well, I haven't gone through physical death yet. As the Zen master who was asked about life after death said, I don't know.

And they said, why don't you know? You're the master. And he said, yeah, but I'm not a dead master.

But I've gone very deeply to what one could call death to identification with form. So in a way, I have gone into that realm, from where I can say and know that ultimately, what we see as death is the dissolution of form, that the eternal in us, which I know that firsthand, cannot be touched by that. So what exactly happens, I would say, depends on whatever state of consciousness you were in, that must be a predominant state of consciousness in this lifetime.

If in this lifetime, you were continuously identified with form, your body, or the psychological form of me, that means consciousness, this expression of consciousness was still in a somewhat dreamlike state, which is identification with form. And you can easily extrapolate from that if the tendency of consciousness to identify with form was still there, which in other ways, the awakening had not happened. This tendency will continue, there will be further identification with form.

And the process will continue as the consciousness that is not yet fully awake, will continue to identify with form again. And then gradually come to a place where awakening happens. Or, if there has already been a disidentification from form in this lifetime, then you can extrapolate from there that the compulsive urge to identify with form and to seek another form or another cycle of form identification, this compulsion to seek further experiences through identifying with form, then would either be much weaker, or be completely absent, in which case, the consciousness that you are, is no longer bound to this realm, and will not seek to re-experience the realm of form. But in either case, you really, I know, I can tell you that all is well, does not really matter whether this person now needs further experiences of identification, in which case this will happen, or whether he's already free of this urge, in which case, he will move on and live in a realm that we can't even conceive of from where we are here.

I get a sense deep within, in the form of what that is. But we don't need to talk about it here. All we know is nothing, this is the beginning of A Course in Miracles, which is the entire Course in Miracles summarized in two lines.

Nothing real can be threatened. Nothing unreal exists. Herein lies the peace of God.

That which is real in him is beyond form. Anybody can know that when you see a dead body, you realize that this is no longer whom you knew, this is not the being that you knew, this is only a shell. So nothing real can be threatened.

Nothing unreal ultimately exists. This is why sages from all traditions speak of this realm of form as ultimately illusory. It ultimately, it depends what level you look at.

The important thing is all is well. Beyond the appearance on the level of form, which is the only level where death exists, it is the transition from one form into another form or from one form into formlessness. That is what death is.

No more than that. Nothing real dies. Nothing real dies.

Which is to say, ultimately, there is no such thing as death. There only seems to be. It's a transmutation of form.

Either form dissolves, or seeks some other form, some other identification with form.

That for you, of course, to go into stillness in the face of death, to go into stillness is important, to become still within yourself, especially when you are sitting with somebody who is going through the death process, or you are confronted with somebody who has just died next to you. To be with that, immediately close your eyes, go into the deep stillness where you realize who you are.

And once you realize who you are, which is formless consciousness, then you realize also that nothing real died. Nothing real died, which is to say, ultimately, there is no death. It does not mean that you can't feel sad.

You can allow yourself to feel tears and to feel sad, and at the same time, realize that nothing real died. That happened to me when my parents died two years ago within the space of six months, both of them. So to be confronted with the death of a loved one in a short period of time.

Yes, there were tears, and there was sadness. And at the same time, there was the realization that ultimately, there is no death, and who they were in their essence has not been destroyed. Just as I know that I, in my essence, cannot be destroyed.

And so that comes from that. It comes from self-realization or self-knowledge, the realization that the other also is beyond death. So you can have the coexistence of yes, on this level, there is a place for sadness and mourning and tears.

If it happens, it comes in waves, you may have noticed, usually if somebody close to you dies, the sadness comes in waves at you, then you cry, and then it leaves you. And then comes another wave. And even when the wave comes, there can be an undercurrent of peace.

So you're not totally in that emotion, you're not totally consumed by it, it exists there in your own spaciousness. And the spaciousness underneath the emotion is the peace. And it's only from that inner peace that you can realize the truth behind death.

[Speaker 3] (6:18:36 - 6:20:47)

I kind of want to speak about earlier in the week, I was away for a period of time in the fall, and then I came back about a month ago. And I was in Asia in the bright sunshine and, you know, kind of open culture, a lot of sharing of just basic open heartedness. And I mean, I think others have had that experience.

And coming back to Vancouver is kind of rainy and closed down and cold. And, you know, also coming back to North America in the middle of the crisis and the chaos, and also the hope of Obama, like the change, the kind of transition, Bush Obama, but in the middle of all the economy breaking down and stuff. So what I was experiencing in my direct work environment was a lot of, it seemed to me what I was observing was a lot of criticism and fear, you know, anger at different things, entitled behavior, that kind of thing that we do in North America, very well, I think.

But, you know, so I found myself initially, I was kind of observing it, and then I was like, not wanting to get involved in it. And then, of course, I gradually started getting really involved in it. And it kind of hit me by the beginning of the week is like, I was in a state of protest against the environment, and also against the feelings that were coming up in me, related to the environment.

So I was in, you know, a fair degree of emotional discomfort and stuff. And when I sat with it, and also played what I call Eckhart tapes, like from other retreats and stuff, which I find settled me down. You know, what I saw was this field of alienation, both in myself, and in the environment around me.

So, you know, when I identified, I was feeling, I was identifying the feeling of being alienated, and I was feeling very alienated. And it was somewhat liberating to kind of feel that. And then I could kind of see it.

And then I was more at peace with it, because I had a name for it or something like that. But I wonder if you could generally kind of talk about that. It's like a low level sense of discomfort, of non acceptance of what's going on around.

And it does really feel like one really feels kind of alienated from everything, including one's deeper sense of connection and stuff like that.

[Speaker 1] (6:20:47 - 6:30:48)

Yes, thank you. Yes. Well, what you're describing is most people's normal state of consciousness.

That state of alienation, for most people is so normal, they don't even know it, because they have nothing else to compare it with. But you had just returned, you perhaps were in a more liberated state while you were away in the in Asia. At that time, you felt able to be more present there, perhaps.

So you came back here and then you linked into the collective state of consciousness in the Western Hemisphere. So the state of discontent, latent discontent in the background, and sometimes more acute unhappiness and dissatisfaction in the foreground, is quite normal for almost everybody who is still unawakened. And also still happens to people, even people who are going through the awakening process, often periodically fall back into that state for a while.

So what to do? Well, acceptance is perhaps the key for you. Acceptance of first a reorientation of your conscious attention to this moment, because that's what is.

And then acceptance of whatever is here at this moment in your life, whatever situation you encounter here. If you want to become free, don't listen to too many media things for a while, so that you become more deeply rooted within first. If you're not deeply rooted in beingness, in the unconditioned consciousness, in the inner stillness, if you're not rooted in there, then even just listening to the news on TV or radio will put you in an unbalanced state, immediately upset about this, and hundreds of things seem to be going wrong in the world.

And then you react to people around you. All that because you're not at home in yourself. So to feel at home in yourself, in the present moment in yourself, to be at ease with yourself requires you to take your attention away from the thinking mind as a conscious choice.

You choose to take your attention away from that, because it's not really the external things that are pulling you out. It's your mind's reaction to the external things. Take attention away.

Breathe. Feel the inner body. Look around.

Accept the form that this moment takes, wherever you are. You might be on a bus. It's raining outside.

It looks gray. The mind would say it looks gray and miserable. But miserable is something supplied by the mind.

It's just gray. It's not gray and miserable. It's just gray.

And the miserable is the mind's interpretation of the weather. But the moment you believe in the thought that the weather is miserable and people around you are looking miserable, you experience certain emotions. This is the body's response to the mental judgments that you totally believe in, and then you feel miserable suddenly, because the weather is miserable, the people around you are miserable, and life is miserable.

And you get trapped in... you hypnotize yourself into that thought pattern, and you experience the corresponding emotions. And once you are trapped in that, whatever situation you go into, and this is how it works, reflects back to you, your state of consciousness.

You find more miserable people. It's not easy, not difficult. And you get into a more miserable situation, and the next day it's miserable again, the weather.

These are the minds. So life is becoming complicated for you because your mind is creating a complexity and judgment, a level of judgments and interpretations that is pulling you out of yourself, and then believing in it, and then believing that you live in a world that is unpleasant. But it's not really that.

It's the mind's activity that's unpleasant, and you believe in it. And then you have the emotions that go with that. So taking your attention away from that, breathe, feel, be, look around, and then next time you're on the bus or in the car, wherever you are, and of course it's the same kind of weather again, around Northwest Pacific for quite a few months, it'll probably be the same, and you suddenly it's no longer miserable.

It's just rain, moisture, the sky is gray, but light is filtering through, no need to judge it. And the person next to you, they might not be smiling, but that's fine. And perhaps when you get off the bus, you smile at them.

There's no judgment. It's fine. You bring a different energy into this world.

Rather than be the victim of this world, which ultimately is really your mind, rather than be the victim, something new comes into this world through you. And so you are the bringer of something new, and rather than reacting to all that, it really is being stuck in your mind. The simplicity of this moment.

And then you gradually feel more rooted in being. Just this. Life is not complicated.

Why? Because the present moment is never complicated. Well, I don't find any complication for yet now.

And the present moment, of course, life is always the present moment. Only that. Only just this moment.

All I need to do is be, allow this moment to be, whatever a person comes into this moment, that's what is. The is-ness or the such-ness of this moment. Become one with that.

No need to judge or to say anything about it. Just it is. Simple.

Very simple. Then you feel you're arriving at yourself. One with yourself.

That's your practice. It's maybe challenging a little bit more challenging here. Some people find it easier in India to be present, or to be spiritual.

Sorry, spiritual. Other people actually can't do it in India. In fact, they're longing to get back and say it's easier at home.

It just depends on your... But India can teach you surrender. That's good.

More than the West, because in the West you expect things to be how they should be. In India you quickly learn that they are not how you demand they should be. The train is not there, or whatever.

And things, you can't plan too much ahead because it's not going to be the way you plan it. Everybody who goes to India learns that, and people who are then able to surrender suddenly feel much better in India than they feel at home, even though the trains are not arriving on time and so on. But people who can't surrender, for them it's miserable to be there because they have no control anymore over their surroundings.

This shouldn't be happening. That shouldn't be happening. There should be hot water.

I paid for it. Look, no hot water. And then somebody comes, oh, just wait one hour and the hot water will be back.

And then five hours later you're only going, it's still not here. You haven't surrendered yet. And so it doesn't matter where you learn surrender.

You can learn surrender in India, or you can learn surrender on the bus in Vancouver or in Seattle, or you can learn surrender in Detroit or in New York, or Piccadilly Circus in London, wherever you are. There's no reason why you can't be with what is in the now, just that. Thanks.

[Speaker 2] (6:30:53 - 6:50:56)

I learned through my relationship with Eckhart that any and all my ideas I had about what a relationship should be, what my relationship should look like, and how I wanted my relationship to be. It took a lot of looking and some years where I finally realized that I wasn't having a real relationship. I was just having a relationship with an idea in my head.

I wasn't meeting the other and seeing the other, as we can say, as myself or the essence of the other, the essence of Eckhart. But I just had all my expectations and ideas, my imagination, and that's how my relationship, that's how I was relating. And you could only see that in the daily activities, in your daily life.

You can know this, and I knew it on some level, that consciousness, that stillness was not about thought, was not about your ideas. And you can know this, and in a relationship it's not about the idea of a relationship. But that's when the awareness, the inner work needs to be done.

You have to take it beyond the intellectual and then actually then to discover it. So it's the discovery becomes this inner deep knowing that, okay, what I see, what I'm doing, is that I'm not relating with another human being as consciousness, as stillness, but as ego. So when I saw that, and it took many times seeing it, for example, we come from different cultures.

Eckhart is from Germany, even though I'm born in Canada, I'm Chinese, so I had the cultural conditioning of Chinese. We bring to it our own conditioning, and plus being a woman, him a man, the idea, and all that sort of stuff. The era in which Eckhart was born, the generation in which I was born.

So I have certain expectations that I brought to the relationship. The first one I remember is very close to when Eckhart and I first got together in relationship. And I thought I had to do sort of all the cooking, you know, all the cleaning up and that was my conditioning.

And he didn't have to do anything. And I didn't realize that his conditioning also is that, because he was brought up in Europe, Germany and in Spain, where he had his mother, his stepmother, who did everything. So it was easy for him just to, that was it, you just allow the woman to do it.

At least this was my perception, because he was not doing too much, right? So here I was, and then I was starting to get resentful, like, you know, here I am chopping the vegetables or whatever, or cleaning up, and I'm like, why doesn't he do anything? You know, he's got to do something, you know, like, why do I have to ask?

I shouldn't have to ask. And then suddenly I realized, oh my God, these are all my thoughts in my head, my expectations, instead of just telling him, you know, I don't want to do all the cooking, you know? So I told him that, and he goes, oh, okay, well, you don't have to cook, we'll go out.

I went, oh, okay, so we'll go out. All right. I don't think at that time I didn't really say to him, well, just help me, you know, I just said, okay, okay, we'll go out, because I didn't really like cooking anyways, at least so I thought at that time.

So we went out, and we went out a lot, and then plus we traveled, and we ate out again, so I was feeling more and more unhealthy. And anyways, when we bought a house together over in the island and had this wonderful big kitchen, I found myself cooking, and able to, I liked cooking, I enjoyed it. And I wanted to, we wanted to be at home.

So we came back to the same scenario again, right? We weren't going out to a restaurant, and here I was cooking. But this time I was able to express, to say, you know, I would like some help.

And he would go, okay. But then, you know, several weeks and months would pass, and I'd have to still keep on asking, well, I need some help now. And then I can see it here, just this thought arise in the background, like, oh my god, why is it that I always have to ask him?

It's just like a little kid where I have to, you know, always have to ask a little kid what to do. Why can't he just offer and help? I went, wow, this is what I expect.

I expect him to just help when his nature, his conditioning is that he just doesn't, unless he's asked. So I had to resign and just say, okay, I just have to ask. And it was me that was stirring up all the angst, all the anxiety, in this thought that I wanted him different than what he is.

So I don't mind now. I just say, okay, time to help. And he'll go, okay.

And he just, he'll help. So, I mean, those are just the superficial things in the relationship, the daily things. Because many people ask me about what my relationship with Eckhart is like, and how wonderful it must be.

And yes, on the level of silence, of stillness, it's absolutely wonderful. I feel like I'm right at home in stillness. We don't have to say a word and can just sense the stillness.

But we have the daily life. And this is where most of us can get caught up in, because you can meet somebody, and you have that wonderful spiritual connection, and you go, ah, this is wonderful. This is great.

And some people are conscious of that spiritual connections and other things that this is just, they don't know about the spiritual end of things, but they just sense something. They just love this person. They want to be with this person, etc.

until you live with them. And it is a working out. It is a giving space to allow them to have their conditioning, because that's, we all have it.

But it's our own job to be aware of what our conditioning is, what our expectations are, and to hear the other, to, okay, what's their conditioning? It took several years before Eckhart would never really ask me for anything. For example, I learned this when we were in Germany one time, and Eckhart wasn't there.

He decided not to come for dinner, and we went with a group of people to dinner. And one woman said, is your water no good? And I said, yes, it's fine.

And then my friend who sat next to me, who is also German, said, she's really asking you for a sip of water. And I went, she asked me if my water was good, but she didn't ask me for a sip. No, that's how, that's how we ask.

We don't ask directly. And I went, oh my gosh, Eckhart's been doing this to me for years. I thought, you mean he was really asking for a sip of my water, and I never knew it?

So, and I went, okay, I understand. So it is learning each other's own conditioning, and, and seeing how we apply our own conditioning, our own idea of how our relationship or how communication should be when the other has, you know, some other conditioning going on, some other way of being in this world and relating how we relate. And this happens all around the world.

And this is where miscommunication comes in, conflict comes in, because we have all these different ideas. But it's to see and to learn what those ideas, what the expectations, what that conditioning, what that culture is, is to, is to learn it and not demand that they change and be like yourself. So when I went back to the hotel, and I told Eckhart that, and he went, yeah, yeah, that's right.

And then when I, it's interesting, because when I finally knew and understood what he wanted, he was then be able to, because I was able to communicate, maybe we just didn't know what was going on. I don't know what he thought. Maybe he thought he was totally selfish all this for many years or something.

I don't know. But he was then able to now say, can I have a sip of your water? So it's giving each other that space just to be and watching, learning, listening to hear just exactly what it is that's being communicated.

So it's beautiful that we have these two cultures, German and Chinese, which are very two strong different cultures, and just finding out about it, exploring. However, the basis of our relationship, I think, would not have last. I probably would have walked out a long time ago, because I would have thought he was lazy.

If I didn't have this understanding, and this primary importance of having God, consciousness, stillness, whatever you want to call it, in my life first, and having that be the holder, the container of what the form, in this case, my form in relationship with Eckhart, is, that's the holder. And to realize that whatever form, and it's taken many years to realize that whatever form is going on is not as important as the background, the stillness in which the form is. Emerges, arises, and that's the beauty.

And then when that stillness is there, then the things, the everyday life, yeah, there'll be ups and downs. It's not always great, and it's not always bad. It's, you know, sometimes we got to do things, but it's coming back, always, just to the present moment, to go beyond the conditioning, knowing that it's there, maybe even having the awareness that, yes, you have expectations, but then allowing the expectations to go.

Just let it go, and just see them as that, expectations, and just to live in that stillness, and move, and breathe, and communicate from that place, and just allowing the nature of the other person just to be. I get a kick out of every time when we, because we live on Salt Spring, and we have this recycling thing going on, and we go to the recycling, and we have these containers of, you know, paper, plastic, etc., bottles. And so we have about six, seven containers.

We load up in the truck, and we go. And Eckhart by nature is very, you know, just kind of slow. He just sort of casually just sort of moves and does it, and I'm a little quicker.

So we can go to the recycling, and here we're doing our jobs, and I realize, wow, I've done like five containers, and he's done two. And, you know, it's like, okay, this is, it's okay, it's fine, this is how he is. He just moves a little slower.

I could create a story in my head about it, but I've accepted that, okay, he just, he's with me, and he's doing it, and it's enough. And if I want him to do more in me less than, if I want him to do it in half, I could easily just hop in the car and wait and let him do his half, I suppose. But it's just easier just to, for me, just to do it.

It's there. It's okay. So every relationship goes through just that working out of how everyday life is going to emerge.

We have a unique circumstance, and I think we both really love it, and that is we have, we're fortunate enough to have three places. In Vancouver, we each have our own apartment that is right across from each other, so we have our own space, and then we live part-time together on the island. And some people will think, wow, that's just so weird, and other people think, that's neat.

I think for both of us, at least for me, I love it. I love having my own space. So you find a way to live together.

Now, not everybody is going to have, to be able to afford to have that amount of space, physical space, but it's the working out, it's finding the way, and we need to find that way, respect each other, be able to give that other person the space. I know, just on this awakening process, it requires a lot of space, at least it did for me, a lot of alone time, to search, to look, to be, well, you can say, even in meditation, although I wasn't quite always sitting there in formal meditation, but just being aware, being able to see the mind working and operating in harmony. And how the thoughts just arise, and what kind of those thoughts are, and not, as what Eckhart says, taking your thoughts so seriously, to be able to just, ah, okay, it's not so important.

All my ideas, opinions, expectations, it's not important. And in order to have what we can call a successful relationship, we need to each come to that place to realize, not intellectually, but really internally, inner knowing that yes, the form of this moment is secondary, the primary importance is the space. In which all communication, in which all love, presence, activity flows.

And it's not so much a commitment to the other, but a commitment to your relationship with God, with stillness, and that's the true relationship, is stillness, is God-consciousness. And when you're truly committed to that, then life flows, and shit happens, and it will always happen. And true life is now, it's not what happens, it's the space in which it happens, and that's love.

Just one comment, for the benefit of everybody, is that in the Indian custom, today is the day of the full moon, and on that day, consciousness is enlivened the most, and a lot of knowledge, and energy, and bliss comes from the guru. So you're our guru today, so we want to thank you for sharing that enlivened consciousness with us. So that's one comment, and I had one question, and that is that in order to maintain the unity and the diversity all the time, would it be advisable to cut down activity and make your life a lot more simple with less belongings?

Because according to Nisargadatta, one of the things he comments is that you should give up pretty much everything in life and maintain as little as possible, and your sole purpose in life should be just enlivenment of your own self and consciousness.

[Speaker 1] (6:52:06 - 8:15:10)

Thank you, thank you. Of course it's true that many people have many superfluous things, they're not only concerned with innumerable things that are ultimately superfluous, they also try to accumulate more and more things that are ultimately superfluous. But the liberation does not lie in whether or not you have things, but it's more important what is your inner relationship to what you have, talking for a moment about things that you possess or acquire.

Another aspect of your question, of course, is things that you do, activities that you are engaged in. We have the two aspects as far as activities are concerned. Many people in our civilization are hyperactive, they are continuously active, they are stressed almost continuously, they are pursuing one thing after another, and they never arrive, there's always the next thing to do, and the next thing, and they're in a hurry with everything.

That's the stress disease of our civilization, and that's a form of madness. That has to be relinquished because it's an insane way to live. Now, people might say, well, I'm going to lose my job if I'm not stressed, or if I don't do what I'm supposed to do, and I cannot do what I'm supposed to do without stress, because there's always deadlines, one deadline after another.

Another aspect of living in our civilization is that you get continuous deadlines for obscure reasons. Publishers say the book has to be out by such and such a date. Why does it have to be out by such and such a date?

Can't you wait until the book is mature and complete? No, no, we have all the things, I don't know what the justifications are, but they always say it has to be out and you need to hurry. It's insane.

And so, many things that our civilization produces are rushed, rushed jobs, one could say. They're not fully matured. Decisions are taken before they even know fully whether, all the facts that involve the decision.

On TV executives, they put on a show and then they look at the, what are the audience numbers, and if it's not high enough, no, take it off, take it off. If they'd given it a chance, it might have developed into something great. Or employees, companies not doing well say, OK, we have to sack a thousand people, do it now.

But there's no spaciousness at all, there's only rushed decision making, all insane. So, to bring, not to be part of that is essential. Your state of consciousness, you need to, it's not easy living in this world, to say, I'm not going to live in this way.

I will do what is required of me, but I won't be part of the madness. I'll do what I can, I'll do it as well as I can, but I'm not going to live the rest of my life in a state of stress. You just give attention to whatever it is you're doing now and see if you can do it well.

Not looking to the fruit of the action, do it now. Reducing unnecessary activities, but more important than that is reducing the unnecessary mind activity. Because really that's where the whole thing originates.

Because the mind is becoming more and more active, what is being projected is external activity. So, a hyperactive mind produces a hyperactive life. What's the next thought?

What's the next thing really? What's the next thought about what I have to do? And the next thought, so you're rushing after one thought after another, trying to capture this and this and this.

So it goes back to the mind. So it needs to be tackled on the inner level primarily rather than the outer. If you do not come to grips with or bring awareness to your hyperactive mind, there isn't that much you can do on the outer level because you will continuously be driven by the hyperactive mind into all kinds of activities, many of them quite useless.

Even useless, even people who have jobs, they're still doing many things that are quite unnecessary, superfluous, just hyperactive, can't stop doing, have to stop doing, inability to just be. So, reducing the hyperactive mind, slowing that down is of the essence, that's the most important part of it. And then, that will then manifest in your active life so that the hyperactivity will not be there.

You will be actually more effective in what you do, but you'll do fewer things, but you'll do them better than countless things half done because there's not enough time to really do it well. Of course, that's all mind. And that's the dilemma.

Our whole civilization is in that dysfunctional state. So to take yourself out of the dysfunctional state, so to speak, not physically, but internally, is not easy. It's a challenge because you're surrounded by a certain state of consciousness, the collective consciousness that you move in.

So it's your job to be awake enough so that you don't get drawn into that state of consciousness, which really should be called state of unconsciousness, the collective, so that some sanity comes into this world through you. And so, that's the reduction of activity begins with the reduction of thought in your hyperactive mind. And then, automatically, then that will flow into reduction of activity.

Now we come to the second part. That's to do with things or acquiring things. As some people recommend, you should get rid of as many things as possible in your life.

Now I'm speaking as somebody who has relatively few things, although I have more things now than I ever had before in my life. And that's strange because usually it goes the other way. As you get older, you gradually let go.

But life has been so strange that now I have more material possessions, although not vast amounts, but more than before. I don't feel particularly attached to any one thing. In other words, if it disappeared, it would be okay.

That's fine. So it's not, and I believe not everybody, it's not for everybody to let go of things on the physical level. It's not even necessary.

You need to examine what your inner relationship to the things that surround you is, whether there is an identification with possessions or whether you simply appreciate something beautiful that is in your life without the attachment to it. Or it giving you an enhanced sense of self, as it often is the case. And you need to see whether there is some kind of acquisitive tendency in you that propels you to buy or acquire more and more and more.

Or whether you are simply just happy with what is already there and simply appreciate what's there. Or do you compulsively go to the shopping malls every weekend and look for something to buy to fill up this emptiness you feel inside? And just the action of buying something confirms that you are somebody to the ego.

There's nothing wrong with buying. You can buy something beautiful, but not as an addictive thing, as a compulsive thing. So it's finding a right relationship with the external world, not an addictive relationship, but a free relationship.

The appreciation of nice things is not something that is non-spiritual. It's actually spiritual to appreciate nice things. Whether you call the nice things mine or whether it's not yours, for me sometimes it's enough.

Well, not anymore. When I lived in London, I would sometimes walk around the streets and look in shop windows and love Regent Street or Bond Street and look at the nice things in the window and say, wow, that's beautiful. I neither had the money nor the desire to buy these things.

But I loved it. Now, if I had had the money, I might have bought an occasional thing. It would be nice to have that at home and look at it and feel its presence.

Perhaps it was made with attention and care. Why not appreciate beautiful things? The attachment is what keeps you unconscious.

So I happen to know your home and I know that you are surrounded by beautiful things. And I also believe that although you are surrounded by beautiful things, you don't have an enormous attachment to those things. I can sense that there's a certain spaciousness there between you and that.

There's a simple appreciation of it. And that is fine. Now, if the time comes in your life where you feel from within, the urge comes to leave even that behind.

Although you may not be attached, but at some point in your life it is possible that you may feel, now I want to live in totally simple surroundings. I just want to not have things anymore at all. If it comes, that's fine.

And then you will take action. You might remove yourself or you might give away all the beautiful things that fill up your house and just be in the empty, relatively empty space. Who knows?

If that comes to you at some point, that's fine too. But primarily really is what your inner relationship is to the outer. Welcome to our private seminar.

I'm talking about spiritual awakening in daily life. And some people may not be quite sure what the term spiritual awakening even means. Or they may have strange ideas in their head of what spiritual is, what is spiritual and what is awakening.

And instead of defining right now, I'm just going to talk about spiritual awakening in daily life. And as I talk, what spiritual means and what awakening means will hopefully emerge while we talk. So instead of defining beforehand what these things are, because although this is not a talk on philosophy, so we're not here to define terms, it's an experiential thing.

It's not information-based. We're here to experience something and then to bring that into daily life, live it in our daily existence. Everybody has done some traveling and sightseeing, visited unfamiliar places, European cathedrals perhaps, or the pyramids in Egypt, or Machu Picchu, Stonehenge in England, whatever it may be.

And it's often an interesting experience for me to go into a place and walk around doing some sightseeing. Let's say it's a cathedral, an ancient cathedral in Europe. And you walk in there and usually you have little groups of people with a guide.

They walk around. The guide has now come this way in different languages. The guide explains what this means, when it was built, or who is, this is a tomb, or this king, or whoever lies there, and all kinds of interesting information.

Occasionally when I walk into a place like that, an ancient cathedral, I kind of approach the little group and just listen in and stand at the side and just see what he's saying. Sometimes quite interesting, but I never feel drawn to actually sticking around for very long because I prefer to explore the place by myself without the interference of a voice explaining to me what things are. Now, it may well be that I may have read a guidebook beforehand, or I may not.

In most cases, probably, I have not looked at a guidebook beforehand. So I'm actually going into this, let's say it's a medieval cathedral. I'm walking into this medieval cathedral not knowing very much about it, except it was built a thousand years ago, whatever, and it took two or three hundred years to build.

But I prefer that experience of entering a space and not being burdened by information about it, rather than entering a space and immediately being bombarded with facts about it. There are two very different kinds of experiencing that place. One kind of experiencing that place is based on bits and pieces of information, on knowledge, on mental knowledge, on mind.

And this is why most people travel for that reason, because they want to learn new things. So as soon as they enter the cathedral, they say, OK, I'm going to join this guided tour. Or, these days, I have invented something to substitute the human guide.

You can rent a little device recording with earphones, and you can choose your language, and you put it on your ears, and then you choose your language, and then it tells you where to go. Now turn right here, stop here, and then it starts explaining it. You look, and you're continuously learning a lot.

And then, OK, walk on now ten steps, and now look up to the left, and you will see more information, information coming in. Very interesting, learning so much about history. It's true, you are.

You're learning a lot. And so you walk around this cathedral with the voice in your head, teaching you about it. What's wrong with that?

Nothing. It's fine. Why don't I do that?

Because there is another way of experiencing, of perceiving that place. And that's not something that people even know about. Some people do it intuitively.

And that way is going into that place, and not perceive whatever is around you through the veil of facts, information, knowledge, thoughts. Ultimately, it all comes down through thoughts, one thought after another. There is another way of perceiving that place that is not based on mind activity.

And I love that other way more than the way of learning about. There's nothing wrong with that. Sometimes I read a guidebook afterwards, after I've been to a place like that.

I read, oh, that's what I saw, and have a little bit of information about it. But at first, I love entering that place and perceiving, first of all, the totality of this, the vast, let's say it's a cathedral, it could be other places, but there's always, there's a spaciousness there, there's a vastness, there's a silence, interrupted, of course, sometimes by the voice of the guides here and there, and the clicking of cameras, but there is still a vastness, a silence, there's a, the whole place has a presence.

There's an energy field there. And the first thing that I love to take in is to enter and to take in the totality of that energy field that is this ancient cathedral, to sense it, to feel it directly. And there's a, it has its own presence, it's an energy field.

I like to get in touch with this ancient energy field, ancient and new, because it's still alive. And then look around at this architecture, and so on, and again, just see the shapes, the forms, the colors. So you see, be aware also of the space itself, because anybody who goes into a place like that and is struck by something, they go, wow.

Even people who later seek out the guide, there may be a few seconds when they take in this and go, they sense something, a sacred presence, you could almost say, they sense it, they don't need to know anything about it. In fact, you cannot sense the presence of that place if your mind is full of thoughts, full of knowledge. And if you enter a cathedral and you are, let's say, you are already very knowledgeable, you're a historian or whatever, and you know much, you would have to let go for a moment of all that you know, if you truly wanted to experience that place.

And I always feel a little bit sorry for most tourists, because they don't seem to be aware that there is another way of experiencing life, there is another way of perceiving, other than the mind, through the mind only. There's nothing wrong with the mind, it has its place, and it's needed for quite a few things in your daily life. But for many other things, for realising the depths of life and becoming a deep person, it's a strange expression, it's sometimes used, you say, this person has a depth, or we speak of a depth of perception.

What does that mean for a person? You would say there's a shallow person, and there's a deep person. What does that mean?

I would say it means what we might call a shallow person is a person who is totally trapped only in the mind activity, the knowledge accumulated by the mind, and perceives everything through thoughts. In other words, you walk around your life like the tourist who rents this little device and tells him comments about what they are perceiving continuously, that's fine, sometimes it may be necessary, but imagine going through life not being able to get rid of that device. You can't take it off anymore, it keeps commenting, so wherever you go in the street, it says, look at that person, and the thing even tells you whether you like it or not.

I like that, or I don't like that, I wish I had an answer on whatever, and of course, this is how most people live, because they are so identified with the involuntary mind activity, the little voice in the head, they don't even know it, they think they are the voice. And to live through the voice then makes your life quite shallow, because whatever you experience lacks depth, you experience it through a concept, every thought is conceptual. So when, let's say, you are in the street, a man or woman comes towards you, and your mind immediately has to say something about whether you like or don't like, or would like to do something with this person, whatever it may be, or have some kind of reference point, or commenting on the way they look, weird or strange, or nice, or I'd love to, whatever.

Is there another way of perceiving this human being? Yes. To perceive the human being in the same way, if that's what I said about the cathedral, if that resonates with you, if you have had a glimpse of that experience, or perhaps more than a glimpse, then you know the difference between stepping into a place and going, no comment, well, perhaps the mind says, oh, this is so beautiful, and then there's this stillness again.

So there is a still space through which you perceive instead of concepts through which you perceive. And suddenly, there is a depth, not only you feel another dimension is suddenly present, not only outside of you, another dimension that the tourist, who is totally dependent on either the mechanical guide or the human guide, is not aware of that. The tourist, who only listens to the commentary, misses the true aliveness, the sacredness, and the depth of that place.

And so, also within, you are trapped in the head, there's no depth then to you as a human being. There's something that responds to life, something deeper than the commentary in your head. And so many people these days are trapped then with this guide, the tourist guide they can't get rid of, and it's called your mind.

And so, not that the mind is not a useful tool, and even in the cathedral, it sometimes, it adds a little bit to it, if you know something about it, and I would say that's the second stage, to come back just for a moment to this cathedral analogy, one could almost say. You come back to that, of course, ideally, and I do that occasionally, but sometimes we don't have enough time when we travel. First, I love to experience the place without knowing anything, and truly experience it, the depth of it.

And then, perhaps, go back to the hotel room, and then look at a guidebook, and then learn a few facts about it. Could be quite helpful. And then go back the next day, look at it again, and then you have a balance between knowing things about it, and still being able to experience it.

So, in other words, you have then some information in your head, it's, oh, this is, I read about that, it was built by such and such, and then whatever, and then again you have the spaciousness that you perceive. And then you look at something else, and you, oh, this is a statue of the saint so and so, and some knowledge about it that you might have overlooked, a little detail, you can actually see a tear coming out of his eye or whatever. Oh yeah, there's a tear, he seems to be crying, don't know why, but it seems to be.

And then again, you can take it in without the commentary. So that's a little, you can experiment with that. And so, I'm using that almost as just an analogy for the whole of your life.

Most people are stuck with the tourist guide in their head. It comments continuously of what's going on in your life, and evaluates and interprets and defines in words everything that you perceive. And so, in whatever way it is defined or interpreted depends on your particular conditioning, on the way you were brought up, what you were taught by the surrounding culture and so on.

So the kind of tourist guide you have depends on your past. And so it's really your past talking to you continuously, certain forms of conditioning from your culture, your education, your family background, what you have read. Your fears and ambitions are also expressed there as thought structures.

They just become thoughts, what you would like, want, what you fear. What if that happens? Oh my God, this could go wrong.

What if? Of course, so it becomes very problematic because the voice doesn't stop talking. Except occasional moments when you suddenly feel a heightened sense of aliveness.

Perhaps you're out in nature and you're looking at a tree or a forest. And for a moment you say, wow. And then after a few seconds the mind says, that's beautiful.

But for about 10 seconds or 20 seconds the mind wasn't saying anything. And that's the reason that you can know that it's beautiful. Beautiful is not, the mind cannot really, the mind is concepts.

There's no beauty really in that. If something from within you responds to beauty in nature, for a moment there must have been a space where the tourist guide in the head stopped talking. And in that space there is a deeper experiencing of whatever is there.

There's a depth to your experience. What does that mean? It means, yes, what you see is the same.

But the state of consciousness through which you see it has deepened. A space has opened up inside you through which the perception happens. And that's the depth.

So you could say, when you look at something and for a moment you're not interpreting what you see. There's just the seeing. And you may be aware of the background to what you see.

Which cannot be defined. But there's a stillness inside while you perceive. This is what I meant when I talked about entering a cathedral without the knowledge in your head.

So suddenly the mind has become still and the perception happens. So you have two dimensions. You have a stillness in the background and whatever is going on outside is there.

The stillness is the depth that changes your perceptions. Then you see that the tree also has a depth to it and an aliveness and a sacredness that you didn't know before. When you were conceptualizing the tree and said, oh, that's such and such a tree and whatever knowledge you have.

Or this tree is in my grandmother's garden too. Or I'd like to chop this tree up and use it as my Christmas tree. Or I wonder how much it would be worth the timber if I cut it.

How much the timber would be worth. The tree is a surface phenomenon when you're in that state of consciousness. A utilitarian surface phenomenon.

You cannot sense the depth, the aliveness, the sacredness of the tree. And I'm only using tree as one of many possible examples. Life really.

The tree stands for life. It could be a human being. You cannot sense the aliveness of that if you are totally trapped in conceptualization in your head.

So there needs to be a depth to you in order to recognize that there is also a depth in life. Otherwise you walk around for the rest of your life skimming the surface of life. Just every human being is a surface phenomenon because you just have judgments about them.

Whatever you see is just no depth. And then you can go into nature and even there you will not know that nature has a sacredness to it. Because you can't sense it.

Because the space isn't there inside you to sense that when you go into a forest, an ancient forest, you've been there for thousands of years, and you cannot sense that that is a sacred space. Because otherwise you would go, wow. And then you would...

And if you don't know it's sacred and our civilization doesn't know, it looks at the forest as a utilitarian thing. How much would it be worth? So the people who cut down the ancient forests, they don't know what they are doing because they cannot sense that there is more there than what appears to be there on the surface of things.

But since they themselves are trapped in the surface of their own mind only, they have no idea what they are doing when they log an ancient forest. To them it's just a utilitarian thing. You talk to them and say, what are you talking about?

We are going to plant trees again. Yeah, but it will take a thousand years to reach that sacredness. No idea what you say sacredness, what do you mean?

It's a tree. We are harvesting the trees. And this is one example of what happens when you cannot get out of the conceptualizing mind.

Life has no depth anymore. And getting out of the conceptualizing mind is what I call spiritual awakening. So spiritual awakening has nothing to do with some kind of, suddenly you have new spiritual thoughts in your head and you start talking about angels or even God.

You suddenly start talking about God all the time and then people say, oh he has become spiritual. No he hasn't, he has become religious. Religious without spiritual is an ideology.

You could be a communist and then talk in those terms, whatever, it's an ideology. Sometimes religious and spiritual can go together, but in many cases religious only is just more thoughts in your head, but different kinds of thoughts. Then God of course becomes my God and your God is not the right one.

And then you become my enemy and I will conceptualize you as the non-believer, for example. And the non-believers are evil, another concept. The non-believers must be killed because we know the truth.

And the truth is our God, concepts in the mind. You can no longer sense, and then when you do kill somebody, you are not killing a human being because you cannot sense that there is a being there, another human being. You are killing, there is a mental concept there.

You have conceptualized, you have deadened, just as you have deadened the forest to yourself, you have deadened the other human being. You put some label on, non-believer, American. And so it's not a human being, it's American.

This is how the madness grows. So, and of course they don't know what's happened to them. They don't realize what's happening.

They are unconscious, and not unconscious in the conventional sense of the word because unconscious in the conventional sense of the word means they're lying there. No, not that unconscious. They seem to be very conscious, seem to be very alert with their guns or whatever they're doing.

But they are unconscious because they are totally trapped in the conceptualizing mind. They no longer sense the aliveness of life. They have deadened themselves.

They don't know who they are beyond the conceptualizing mind where they are completely identified with their belief structures that gives them, the belief structures give them their identity, their sense of who they are. I am a, whatever label they have. We are, we, we are, the only true, etc, etc.

And then it's the others, it's the others, them, they're not alive. They're just, they're concepts. So it's easy to, when you no longer sense what you're doing, to kill another human becomes easy because you no longer know that the human, the depths of the human being has disappeared.

And that's perhaps why Jesus on the cross said, they know not, forgive them for they know not what they do. In other words, they are unconscious. They have not awakened.

And so we are coming here from the tourists, going into a cathedral, and we've arrived at terrorists. Just an extension of really what is considered a normal state of consciousness. And what it does to you to be trapped in that your whole life is a dreadful fate.

And the reason why we are on this planet, why we have arrived at such a point of extreme crisis is that this state of consciousness that we have been trapped in for thousands of years has created and is creating increasing havoc and destruction. It destroys nature. It destroys human beings, destroying each other.

What we do externally is always a reflection of the predominant collective state of consciousness. And if you read the 20th century history, you see what human beings have done to each other. The only conclusion you can reach is they are mad.

It's quite mad. And 20th century is just the most extreme form of that madness where human beings kill each other by the millions. Often they don't even know what for.

In the end you don't even know anymore what the whole thing is for. The First World War. What was that whole thing about?

And then the First World War led to the Second World War and so on. And innumerable other wars. So the spiritual awakening then is for the planet or humanity to survive is an absolute necessity.

So having realized then that what is needed is to awaken out of complete identification with the continuous stream of thinking in your mind. Okay, well, how do we do that? Simple first step.

Is to realize that there is a continuous stream of thoughts in your mind. This is the first step of awakening. It's not saying I shouldn't be thinking.

No, the first step is to realize that there is a voice that talks most of the time inside you. And perhaps that until now you had been so identified with the voice that that was you.

You were talking to yourself.

Sometimes people talk to themselves as I. Sometimes people talk to themselves as you. You have a little voice that says you should have done that.

Why didn't you do that? The voice is talking to some other voice. And then perhaps there is an answer.

Well, I couldn't help it. Yeah, but you should have. So sometimes the voice splits itself into different voices talking to each other.

Becomes even more mad. And sometimes the voice also can have certain streams that one stream of the voice only comes up in certain circumstances. What some psychologists, they have discovered that this is the case.

Some psychologists call it sub-personalities. So in certain circumstances, perhaps a whining little girl suddenly comes up. But you're 30 years old.

Why are you still? It's a sub-personality. And suddenly you have a whining voice in your head that talks about how unfair life is treating me.

It's a sub-personality talking. And then when that subsides, something else happens. And another voice suddenly comes in and becomes extremely aggressive.

Another stream, another aspect of that has arisen. And so sometimes different voices take over. But really, it all belongs ultimately to the one thing, the one voice in your head.

So the first step to awakening, the beginning of awakening, is to realize there's a voice in my head. And it's especially useful to realize in the moment of it saying, for example, voices have most of the mind activities, old thoughts, old patterns, repetitive thoughts. For example, when I was younger, I had a frequent thought that said, whenever something that wasn't good happened to me, or that my mind interpreted as not good, the voice in my head would say, you see, bad things always happen to you.

And then I was just waiting for the next bad thing to confirm that I was right. And it would never have to wait for very long, and something else would go wrong in my life, and I would say, you see, it's happening again. Always bad things to you.

I don't know why it's always to you. And then of course you experience the emotion that goes with that kind of thought. And I completely believed in that thought.

I was so identified with that thought, I didn't realize this is just a thought in my head. It's not the reality. It's a conditioned way of interpreting the phenomenal world, the world outside you.

And so the liberation then comes with beginning to realize, oh, the voice is saying the same thing again, and again, and again, and it's not me. It's the voice. Who realizes that?

You. So there is a deeper dimension is suddenly there, and you become aware that all the stuff that your mind is saying to you and to others, is not ultimately who you are. But the awareness that at this moment your mind is reproducing the same old thoughts, there you're beginning to touch the depth that is within yourself, that we could call the awareness, the aware presence.

Because knowing that there is thought in my head is not a thought, it's just a looking, an internal aware, why do bad things always happen to me? And then you look at the thought, and you realize the thought. So you begin to, one could almost say you listen to your thoughts, you become aware of the kinds of thoughts you think, and when, this is for many people the first awakening.

And what people realize when they first awaken, not everybody, because some people's thoughts are not too bad, they can live with it quite well, they saw their thought activity is not predominantly negative, but many people actually find that when they become aware of their thoughts, they realize how many thoughts are actually negative. The majority of people become aware that the larger part of your mind activity is negative thoughts. There are far more negative thoughts than positive thoughts.

Not in everybody, some people have quite a few positive thoughts. One could almost say it's easier for people who are trapped in a lot of negative thinking to step out of their thinking than people who have relatively nice thoughts. Their inner urge to awaken is not as strong.

If you live in a self-made nightmare, as I did, the impulse to awaken is much stronger. Then you really, I can't stand my mind anymore. I don't want to live with this mind anymore.

Oh, that's good. It doesn't mean you have to kill yourself. It just means you have to realize that your mind is not who you are.

You are the awareness behind your mind. You are the space because the awareness is space. It's not a thought.

It's consciousness. So there's a depth of consciousness to you of which the thought activity is only like little ripples. You could say there's a vast ocean or lake very deep on the surface and the waves and ripples on the surface are the thoughts in your head.

And so most people are trapped on that level. They don't realize that there is a depth underneath that that is vast and that if they ever wanted to become creative human beings or bring anything new into this world it would have to come from the depth. It can't come from just the surface activity of your mind.

It's repetitive continuously the same kind of thing. Nothing creative can ever happen on that level alone. One day I'm going to compose a great piece of music.

One day I'm going to write a great book. Well, not if you don't get out of that. Of course the mind is needed to write a book, yes.

But you cannot have a deep or inspired thought if you don't make room a moment for the depth inside you so that you touch something deeper. You need to become still for a moment when you sit in front of your computer or piece or notepad and want to write something new and creative, bring something new into this world. Well, where does that come from?

From the repetitive noise in your head? No, it comes if for a moment the repetitive noise in your head subsides. It's the moment of stepping out.

And then you wait. So there is a... Open yourself to the stillness inside.

It's there. You don't have to make yourself still. Underneath, even in the most mad, the maddest person, underneath that there is the realm of stillness.

They just can't touch it. It's there. So it's very easy to actually embrace that you don't need to think all the time.

You need to have spaces of no thought and it's not that difficult unless you're totally mad. But not that many people are totally mad. Most people are partially mad.

And the madness comes up occasionally in a more acute form. It's there. So can you walk into the cathedral and be there rather than a mind burdened with knowledge?

Can you walk along the street and look at another human being without commenting? Just look and sense. When there's no commenting you can sense there's an aliveness in the other human being.

There's an essence there that is even deeper than your mind and deeper than their mind. And if you then communicate while you, for example, while you listen to them can you be still inside while you listen? You might be talking about the weather.

It doesn't matter. But be still and just be there as the space for that human being as you are there at the space as the space for the tree and realise what an incredible phenomenon this tree is. You can capture it through the mind.

What you know may be useful for certain things but there's a depth to that thing that we call tree that you cannot capture through that but you can sense something and the more you sense it outside the deeper you go within and there is an even greater depth in another human being. And the more you sense the depth of aliveness in another human being the more you sense it in yourself. Relationships become problematic if both parties are totally trapped in their noise-making mind.

Then very quickly conflict arises in relationships and that's why relationships are full of conflict because people can't get out of that. They are trapped in here so every discussion when they disagree becomes conflict. You have an opinion this is how it is I'm right.

You identify with your mental position your partner has a different mental position no, you're not I'm right. You identify with your opinion. Identify means your sense of self is in the thought that you have in your mental position of this is how it is today it's cold.

Your partner says no, it's not cold it's just mild. No, it's cold. I'm just giving an oversimplified example.

Even that could lead to an argument because are you accusing me of being a liar? Or moving in concepts. Well, you did lie last week didn't you?

I wasn't lying I was just and it goes on and on and it's all happening the entire relationship is mind mind against mind so you identify with mind and that becomes the ego the me that needs to be right always because if the ego is wrong it's death thinks I'm dead I'll die can't be wrong need to defend my position dreadful fate but it's normal so we're now slowly getting to what spiritual awakening is because we've looked at what spiritual sleep is we've seen what it means to be asleep or unconscious normal in other words normal existence the entire world not the entire world there's some awakening here and there more and more people in fact are awakening going through the awakening process we now know what that is because it means you're no longer identified with the mind who are you if you're not your mind?

you are the consciousness out of which every thought comes and then it plops back it's like a wave or ripple you are the consciousness that is far greater than any single thought or even greater than the totality of thought and that consciousness is experienced touch it as inner stillness stillness doesn't mean you go to sleep it means where the mind was before there's a space and out of that space comes all creativity every great realisation or insight that any human being has ever had the creative impulse comes out of the vast intelligence that is there and then it flows into the mind and there's an instrument for that and that's how the mind can be a beautiful thing when it's not just self-serving but it is serving something greater than itself the mind as a master is mad the mind as a servant is a great thing so that's the shift in consciousness that is happening and needs to happen on this planet the mind finds its place as the servant of consciousness or awareness so it's up to you then to invite the consciousness that you are beyond the mind into your daily life and how do you do that? you do that by inviting space, inner space or inner stillness into your life make a cup of tea or coffee why not try to practice being still with every movement just be aware bring awareness into that every movement pour the water no commentary look at a flower look at a tree look at the sky and for just a few seconds just look listen to whatever sound you can hear and just listen bring the attention to sense perceptions attention to sense perceptions that means the mind is quiet while you listen the mind is quiet while you look and that's a little practice that you can do many times during the day and it will deepen your life and in daily existence it goes from one thing that you have to do to another thing you have to do and another thing you have to think about now then there's no gaps so the gaps are vital in daily life inviting gaps into your daily existence looking for the gaps in daily existence in everyday situations a helpful thing as many of you already know is that that your body is actually alive inside normally people are not aware of that because their whole attention is on thought activity but if you can feel that your body is alive so the attention is some attention can be in the energy field of your hands and you feel yes I feel alive there is an aliveness in your body your body is full of life but most people can't feel that so if you can feel the inner body that you are alive inside the entire body at this very moment is a vibrating alive energy field and it actually feels good to have some of your attention there even while you're looking around the room you can just for people people who are new to this can just start by doing it with their hands feel the aliveness that's in your hands you can feel it perhaps even more with your eyes closed and then you can still feel it even when your eyes are open simultaneous thing you are present inside your body and you are present outside in your sense perceptions what does that do?

it means your mind becomes quite still because you can't be thinking because you are already present in the body and you are present outside you become awake really awake to this moment then and your mind there is not enough attention left then for thinking part of your attention is in the inner body and part of your attention is on your perceptions and what you perceive then is more alive than it was before it's more surprising there is more depth to it every human being is more interesting then more really there new you no longer feel that you are experiencing the same old thing again and again life then is always new every day is a new day it's not a repetition as people grow older they reach 30 years 40 years, 50 years life becomes more and more boring because it's so repetitive and they no longer look anywhere they go every day they go to work the same place they don't look at anything anymore there is nothing to look at I looked at it yesterday and last year and 5 years ago what's there to look at? and even people they live with for a few years after a few years you don't look at your wife you don't look at your paintings anymore on the wall because they have been there for too long you can't look it's their old and really nothing new and then you become that kind of person who says I've seen it all don't tell me about it I know it all I've had enough you're not there and you're not and so that's the that's the fate of many people as they grow old in our civilization and only a few perhaps an increasing number now because more and more people are awakening spiritually they remain alive perhaps even become more alive as they grow older and slowly and then the person doesn't actually even if they are 70, 80 years old you don't get the impression that they are old people because there is a light shining through their eyes there is an aliveness to them and occasionally you meet people like that they may be old in terms of calendar years but they are not old inside because they are being used but they are no longer being used by their mind which says I already know all this and so every day is new and fresh and every moment is still alive because you're not putting your past you're not obscuring it with past the accumulated past in your head putting it onto the aliveness of the present moment stifling the aliveness and then spiritual awakening is then essentially intrinsically connected with the aliveness of the present moment the only place where life is and so you are more and more open to the now rather than live continuously in past and future which is normal for most people it's future there's not much future left and then they live mostly in the past that's why old people many old people continuously talk about the past and the younger people continuously think about their future where they're going to finally make it someday and find fulfillment in some future when they have done or achieved this whatever it may be it could be a big house for recognition or for spiritually inclined people it could be enlightenment but it's put into the future I'm going to reach that place and then I'll be finally fully myself fulfilled, happy alive I will become alive one day fully alive but without ten million dollars in the bank I don't think I can feel alive because I really need to have that sense of security I need the sense of security without which I'll just be in fear the way I've always been and you'll be surprised if ten million dollars happen to come to you for a few weeks you will feel alive and one night you'll wake up and you'll be in the same fear as before because the stock market is about to collapse so spiritual awakening is becoming awake to the aliveness of this moment and becoming awake to the aliveness of this moment the all there ever is nothing else is ever going to come you can wait for millions of years if you lived that long nothing is ever going to come that's not this moment your life will always be this moment and that sounds well we know that no you don't if you don't live it you don't know it life is always this moment you don't know this if you don't live it it's only through living it that you know it otherwise it's just a concept in your head yeah of course life is always this moment and then what's next where's the next moment so you might as well become friendly with this moment if there's nothing else be open to that don't stifle it with an excessive amount of judgments and interpretations and definitions but be open to the aliveness of this moment open means there's spaciousness here so the shift is from a thought based entity which is the normal old way for humans been for thousands of years to a deeper entity that is based in awareness or presence consciousness so because when you're not commenting on things obsessively who are you when you're not continuously thinking about me and my problems at this very moment let's say pretend that you don't remember your past at this moment in fact you don't because at this moment unless you start a thought process at this moment now but pretend for a moment actually there's there is no past and there's no future what's left of you if I removed your past and your future from you now what's left I remember nothing what's left I don't remember my name who are you I don't know yes there is something there but I can't say what it is that's who you are consciousness itself when you remove the content from consciousness for a while then you realize that you are consciousness when the content content is thoughts and emotions and thoughts and thoughts when the content comes back it obscures the reality that you are consciousness and you identify with content and you have been able to awaken spiritually because life took away their content they lost everything suddenly they lost their reputation in other words their name it happens sometimes that life does these things to people they lost their money their possessions they lost even their family they suddenly were killed in an accident a big earthquake came everything lost and they sit there and they suddenly had a deep spiritual awakening why?

because life took away all the things they had identified with as themselves as the me and what was left was what we just did now here when I asked you to pretend that there is no past and future we took away for a moment content from your life and when you remove content it's not permanent whatever content you have is impermanent in your life things come and go or as the Buddha says it's impermanence is the word transient everything is transient and that refers to content so as long as you are identified with all the content in your life that can go very quickly even your body can go very quickly but if you just beyond content is consciousness itself rather than what consciousness has identified with and you are that I am that you and I on that level are the same we are in essence nothing else is added temporarily it's a disguise consciousness disguising itself as this and that and that person appearing in this particular form that's the play lila, the divine play of life as it's called in India and that's fine the play is not to be rejected but you can only enjoy the play of life if you know what is beyond phenomenal existence so it's only if you know who you are beyond all the things in your life you can actually truly enjoy the things in your life while they last and you don't need to cling because you know nothing is going to last relationships whatever it's only very young people when you realize so many things have evaporated that I thought were permanent and more things are going to evaporate and a few more things are going to come and then evaporate so not to live your life is no longer content based but essence based I'm giving you here in one little talk the essence of what spirituality really is all about and that's really that's what it is there's not much else that you need to know beyond that in the sense of knowledge accumulated knowledge it is now a question of living that and if you don't want to live it that's fine it means you have to suffer a bit more to make this shift until the shift begins to happen a human being needs to reach the point of readiness where they say ok, I've done enough madness I've suffered enough I'm ready for the shift I'm ready to say ok this moment is all there ever is I might as well become friendly with it acknowledge it give it attention in whatever form it comes because the form is not the moment it's the form that this moment takes the now it's not what happens the now is not what happens it's the space in which it happens and essentially that space is consciousness everything happens in the light of consciousness you can say as some philosophers have done they question everything some philosophers have said is there anything I can be absolutely sure of because everything can be doubted I can doubt that you exist you can doubt that I exist it could be a dream who says we are not dreaming right now who says that us sitting here is not a dream you cannot know for sure but even if it is a dream there must be something real there because the dream must appear to something or someone there must be a light in which the dream appears a space in which the dream happens so even if it is a dream the one thing you cannot question is the fact of being itself being is the being may be a dream or it may not be a dream but one thing you can be certain of I am is something that cannot be doubted if I am dreaming that I am it is still the essence of I am is still there in the dream then and that is an amazing thing to realise there is one thing that is beyond doubt and that is I am it is not as the philosopher Descartes said I think therefore I am he confused consciousness with thinking perhaps because he was always thinking so he couldn't stop thinking and then he said if I can't stop thinking then the essence of who I am must be thinking I think therefore I know that I am he stopped too soon he should have taken one more step and realised that beyond thinking there is consciousness and then realised because I am conscious I am because there is consciousness I am I am that consciousness and that consciousness that people believe in our civilisation that the consciousness is a by-product of chemical reactions in the brain and many psychologists or scientists actually doubt that there is such a thing as consciousness they say no there is no consciousness it is just a chemical soup but they do recognise that the brain is the most complex thing on the planet and they understand a tiny fraction of it only so who built that incredibly complex thing through which consciousness comes if not consciousness so consciousness is prior to whatever appears here and what is the relationship between the brain and consciousness and some scientists are beginning to say they recognise the possibility that consciousness may be all pervasive throughout the universe and the brain is like a lens through which consciousness enters this dimension so it is like a receiver it reduces and receives consciousness so when you eliminate the brain you eliminate the receiver like a TV you can smash the TV and suddenly the image disappears but the TV didn't produce the image so that is our meditation I am consciousness not something to believe in but we are using those words only as a pointer to the essence of who you are thank you

there was a quote where you were discussing people's food choices and how that is connected maybe to their spirituality and I am wondering if you can elaborate on how that is connected especially concerning Ahimsa

[Speaker 1] (8:15:33 - 8:19:29)

thank you I would say I have never as I never do to tell people you should do this and then the right food choice will happen for you rather than giving an abstract guideline it needs to come from within rather than as something from without so if you are vegetarian that is wonderful it doesn't mean it immediately makes you into a person who is spiritual you could be egoically identified with being vegetarian in which case so I shocked a vegetarian once when I said did you know that Hitler was a vegetarian that person was very strongly identified with the mental image of me as a spiritually evolved vegetarian and so yes he was a vegetarian I don't know why he was a vegetarian perhaps I don't know I haven't read about it but I know that whenever people around Hitler were eating chicken soup so he said condescendingly so you are eating dead bird soup so it really is it comes from within you and you have to do what feels right what corresponds to your state of consciousness at any time when you go into when you even look at food or even think of food it is helpful to sometimes when I buy some food I go into a supermarket and I look at the shelf I imagine that this is going into my body and that opens up to it or closes down and so if you are in touch with the body then that is quite helpful it makes it easier the mind often doesn't really know what the body really wants the mind remembers some past pleasure and wants to repeat it and that is where overeating also occurs because it is just overeating is on the physical level the need to fill a sense of insufficiency that is ultimately there on the psychological, spiritual level the sense of not enough is ego the ego lives from that sense of insufficiency of not enough and of needing more and for some people that comes into the physical realm in which case you eat more than the body really needs or wants and again it is a spiritual dilemma and can only be ultimately transcended if you realize that you are not that needy entity that says I need more so body awareness helps a lot in food choice that is what it is that you feel and you will know you will not be in a dilemma you will know what is right for you and so this is all important answers need to come from within you

[Speaker 4] (8:19:40 - 8:20:11)

I understand how you can be in the moment and when it is a calm peaceful moment it is much easier for prolonged psychic or physical pain what is the process by which they learn to find some kind of stillness within that when it is so all consuming what they desire is for it to pass more than anything else

[Speaker 1] (8:20:11 - 8:28:44)

yes thank you sometimes people just know they haven't heard of the possibility of acceptance of what is they are still the largest part of the population of our planet is not even aware that such a possibility exists that you can accept a situation that usually would be called unacceptable and so a person really either it happens spontaneously there is a letting go of inner resistance because you cannot stand the pain anymore and very often the large part of the pain is the resistance to whatever is the case a large part of the pain is the psychological pain that says this is dreadful the last few years of my mother for example she was occasionally I was able to bring her into stillness but very quickly she was drawn out again by her mind and 90% of her suffering which was intense the last 2 or 3 years of her life 90% of her suffering was psychological yes her body was no longer working normally she found it increasingly difficult to walk then she had to walk with the help of this device a walker and then her eyesight was beginning to fail so those but she she did not have physical pain but she had physical discomfort and it became increasingly difficult to move from here to there by herself that in itself would have been yes not pleasant perhaps it would have been uncomfortable the eyesight failing yes you can't see very clearly anymore but that you can live with what you cannot live with is the enormous amount of psychological suffering that then she generated unconsciously for herself which said what if I go blind completely and she spent hours and hours in terror at this thought of going blind completely what if I won't even be able to walk anymore and so she spent many more hours thinking what if I'm going to spend my last few years in bed and I can't go to the bathroom by myself anymore what if that happens to me because that seems to be the way I'm going enormous amount of suffering and again I tried again and again to say if this is not what is now is just this what you're experiencing now is just this for brief moments she got it and she was free of the what if extrapolation of what if this continues a further area of suffering was since she had always been identified with her external appearance what are people going to think of me now they see me walking with this walker she must be dreadful for somebody to whom other people's opinion had always been very important so there was an enormous amount of psychological suffering there also so she was every day was consumed in intense psychological suffering so very often a large part of the suffering is psychic psychological emotional suffering generated unconsciously by the mind and then there is the actual physical suffering at times that is there in the form of pain or in the form of extreme discomfort or in the form of weakness the message is there is a way of going beyond unnecessary suffering which really is to say of going beyond all suffering because suffering is the way we use the term here suffering is the superstructure on top of what is the mind created baggage there is a way of being free of that so but not everybody is ready to hear this or those who hear this message which is in essence a spiritual message but not everybody is yet open to this spiritual message there are some people who don't even need this spiritual message to whom the realization of letting go comes spontaneously that happened to me so it came because the suffering the psychological suffering became so intense there had to be a letting go otherwise I would have had to kill myself there had to be a letting go and some the intelligence the greater intelligence within on some level must have realized that well it did that night it realized that I was doing it unconsciously I can't live with myself and who is the self that I can't live with it's the unhappy superstructure that has been created so to some people it happens by itself so it you sometimes see people in poor countries people who certainly wouldn't have never attended a workshop who would never have bought a spiritual book and perhaps never come into contact with any spiritual teaching perhaps beyond the the traditional religion of their country which in most cases is just a formal thing and yet sometimes you see people and they they may even occasionally a beggar you see who has gone through no suffering anymore you can see a light shining through their eyes the body may be unwell but they have gone into that inner acceptance of the isness of this moment and then something else has come through not everybody is ready whoever is ready for it it will happen for them they will whether it comes spontaneously or with the help of some so called spiritual teaching doesn't really matter if you are ready for it either it will happen to you spontaneously or will happen to you with the help of a spiritual teaching and you will suddenly hear it and suddenly see the possibility of what the Buddha called the end of suffering that's the whole teaching of the Buddha is has that purpose to bring about the end of suffering but neither at that time nor now is everybody ready to hear that so there are millions of people still on the planet who have never heard anything of the end of suffering or anything and if they heard it they still wouldn't hear it it still wouldn't it wouldn't sink in it's so sometimes people pick up a spiritual book whatever it may be Power of Now or any other spiritual book somebody has sent it to them says you must you really need this book sometimes people tell me they send it to they send it to a friend they send it to a relative an uncle their aging parent or the other way the aging parent sends it to their young daughter you must read this book you need it and so the recipient gets the book opens it says what does that mean it means nothing and then they well at best they put it on the shelf and it gathers dust or they may they even get angry they can even get they get angry some people whose ego is so strongly entrenched who don't want to let go of the suffering that's associated with ego they get angry when they see this in in the office Eckhart teachings one day apparently I don't I didn't see it but the a new earth arrived in a package in it somebody had put it through a shredder

[Speaker 6] (8:28:45 - 8:28:46)

and

and returned it to the office so this person was not ready you cannot force it on people and you cannot like if the apple isn't ripe then there isn't it just won't happen so there needs to be some degree of readiness and then either it happens spontaneously or it happens with the help of a teaching and then she it happens so all the spiritual teaching does it saves time which is not real but it's on this level you have to see levels beautifully expressed in the course in miracles where it says delay does not matter in eternity but it is tragic in time different levels so it just it saves time and suffering that's what spiritual teaching does because in the absence of a spiritual teaching you still have your suffering that's the teaching and the teacher everybody has that that's the main teaching and the main teacher even if you never come into contact with any spiritual teaching then your spiritual teacher is your suffering and that eventually it will wake you up eventually it could take time of course the awakening itself does not take time you can only wake up now one more quote from a course in miracles I haven't quoted that in a long time it has taken time to misguide you so completely but it takes no time at all to be who you are

2009 Eckhart Tolle on Ralph Waldo Emerson

[Speaker 1] (0:07 - 2:39)

What we commonly call man, or woman, the eating, drinking, planting, and counting man, eating, drinking, planting, counting, doing all kinds of things, what we commonly call man, the eating, drinking, planting, counting man, does not, as we know him, represent himself, but misrepresents himself. Him we do not respect, but the soul, whose organ he is, would he let it appear through his action, would make our knees bend. When it breathes through his intellect, it is genius.

When it breathes through his will, it is virtue. When it flows through his affection, it is love. And the blindness of the intellect begins when it would be something of itself.

The weakness of the will begins when the individual would be something of himself. So the blindness of the intellect begins with the belief that you are something of yourself, that's the mind, the self-serving mind. The weakness of the will begins when the individual would be something of himself, that's the ego, believing that you are an independent, autonomous, self-sufficient entity that has been put into this world from somewhere, not realizing you have come out of it, and you are an intrinsic part of the totality.

And so there comes the sense of separateness, of alienation, with that comes the continuous neediness of the ego, and with that comes the continuous underlying fear. It's always there when you're not connected, there's fear no matter what you may have achieved in the world of form, the fear will not leave you until the sense of separateness. It leaves you, you reconnect.

2009 How do we integrate spirituality into ordinary existence

[Speaker 2] (0:04 - 1:33)

For the past several years I've been making a concerted effort to live a especially sort of, you know, conscious, present, spiritual path and doing yoga and meditation and retreats and that sort of thing. And now when I hear people talk about, you know, spiritual stuff, I kind of cringe. It's like, I feel like there's this spiritual thing that's like separate, you know, separate from this, you know, this special dimension.

At first it was really great, you know, because I was meditating like, you know, ten hours in a weekend and I could tell everybody how cool it was and, you know, how special and unique I felt, you know, practicing this special spiritual life. And now I just, I listen to what you say and other people say and I just want to hear about like how I'm no one. And I mean that sincerely in being in this, but just not having to, even though, you know, I am conscious, all these words that just seem to get in the way a lot of the time.

I mean, you know, they're concepts and everything. But I just, I just, I hear the, I feel the sweetness of not, just really not having to be this special, unique, you know, spiritual person on top of being a regular person. It's like this, you know, double-decker sandwich that I got to carry around and I'm, and it's, and it's getting stale and I, I don't know.

I don't know if there's a question in there, but maybe you could speak, speak to that. Thank you. Yes.

Okay. Thanks.

[Speaker 1] (1:36 - 2:32)

Well, you overdid it a little bit with your spiritual practice, and hence the reaction now, because you have to get back to some normality after all that specialness over that, both your spiritual practice, where you thought of yourself as special and your practice as special, you went quite far to an extreme. And you're now experiencing the reaction to that extreme. And that's good.

In other words, you don't want to hear about anything spiritual anymore. I've had it, right? So you overdid it.

Now there's a reaction. Don't mention to me anything spiritual anymore, you say. But of course, you know, the famous expression, what is it, the baby and the bathwater?

Don't throw out your baby with the bathwater.

[Speaker 2] (2:32 - 2:33)

It's all spiritual.

[Speaker 1] (2:34 - 2:34)

It's all spiritual.

[Speaker 2] (2:35 - 2:36)

And it's so separate.

[Speaker 1] (2:36 - 6:21)

So now first you went to that extreme. Now you go to an extreme of reaction and eventually you end up in the middle where every moment is spiritual as it is. There's nothing special.

Spiritual is not separate from daily existence. So that's when we say spiritual, we're not referring to some realm out there that is to be achieved at some point where you become more special than you are now. It's not going to happen.

It's here and now. We're going deeper into the here and now that's spiritual. Now you are a little bit tired of these words because you went too far to that extreme.

So you have to realize if you're a little bit perhaps like a Christian who was once very religious and suddenly got fed up. And then occasionally I have people in talks who are ex-Christians. And the moment I say occasionally I say Jesus said they go oh don't talk to me about or anything it's remotely Christian.

I don't want to hear that. I've had all that. So they don't realize because of that.

Of course they had a somewhat distorted view of what the whole thing was about. So they didn't but they can't stand the terms anymore. And that's fine.

It's a phase. You will come through that. Maybe it's happening already.

It's the ordinariness. Spiritual means the more spiritual you are the more ordinary you are. The more non-special you are.

And again for the ego that means okay I have to become more non-special. How do I become ordinary? Okay that's...

I need somebody to teach me to be ordinary. So I understand your dilemma and perhaps you understand it also. And so this nothing special, chopping wood, carrying water.

Zen defines spirituality ultimately. What is the spiritual life? Chopping wood, carrying water which is the kind of thing you do in Zen monasteries.

Daily doing in my case it's buying some food in the store, going to have a cup of coffee, taking the dog for a walk in the forest, listening to the BBC World News, having a glass of wine occasionally with a meal, watching a movie. Nothing extraordinary and so quite an ordinary existence. And so it's hiding in there.

The spirituality is in there. It's not away from there. To just this.

And so I'm sorry about these words that we use. But language is limited. So we have to use certain words.

And perhaps the emotion around these words then eventually is going to go and they become neutral again. And you can use them for what they are, which is simply useful pointers no more. Thank you.

2009 What is my responsibility

[Speaker 2] (0:01 - 0:28)

The hardest word that I'm having trouble with right now is responsibility. And I have a hunch that most of the things that I consider responsibility are just my ego telling me things I have to do. But I also, when I think about the future of the earth and human evolution and stuff like that, sometimes I have big emotions of responsibility.

So, I'm just curious. Thank you. About the right relationship to the word responsibility.

[Speaker 1] (0:28 - 8:14)

Okay, thank you. It's a strange word. It has been pointed out that if you look at the word, it seems to be talking about the ability to respond.

So, to take responsibility for, what is it that you can take responsibility for primarily? It's taking responsibility for your state of consciousness which determines what kind of world you create. Because you are humanity.

Humanity is an abstract concept, it doesn't exist. Humanity is the human being. You are humanity.

So, for humanity to take responsibility, you need to take primarily responsibility for your state of consciousness because only a diseased or dysfunctional state of consciousness produces a diseased and dysfunctional world out there. By world, I mean the human-made world that has been imposed on what's already there, the planet, which is potentially, of course, a paradise. The planet, pristine, unbelievable jewel.

The being of great intelligence. We are not separate from it, but the being is going through a transitional process and every transitional process is critical. It may or may not work, in which case the being will go some other way.

But your state of consciousness determines what kind of world you create, what kind of action you take and what consequences your actions have. So here, this is why my main work is to address the cause of dysfunction, which lies in the human mind. The dysfunction of the human mind, or as it is sometimes called in Zen, the sickness of the human mind.

So, as I see it, and I don't think anybody who reads history can doubt it, there is a deep-seated dysfunction in humans, has been there for thousands of years. And if there's no shift in that, then the dysfunction will destroy us. It probably won't destroy the planet because the planet has enormous resources, but it would take a while for the planet to recover.

All you have to do then is primarily take responsibility for your state of consciousness now. Now. And this is what the entire teaching really is about.

What is my state of consciousness at this moment? Am I generating disturbance? Am I generating negativity?

Am I generating conflict and suffering for myself and others? Am I generating inner pollution? Am I polluting the beautiful being that I am with continuous, absurd movements of thought, producing negative emotions, producing an entire entity that is illusory, that I call the me.

So, to take responsibility, there needs to be, of course, an awakening where you can say, OK, I will take responsibility now. Some people don't know that there is even the possibility of taking responsibility, that's why you are so important. Anybody who realizes it, you are the beginning of the transformed world.

I don't know who first coined the famous phrase, you hear it quite often these days. You need to be the change. The change that you want to see out there, you need to embody that.

And that's not primarily what you do. There is something more primary than what you do. It's who you are.

Who you are is your state of consciousness. Whatever you do flows out of that. So, the primary is that.

So, the change is the transformed state of consciousness. Now, that is your responsibility. Once you have seen that, that's your responsibility.

Now you know it. People who are not yet at that level don't realize it, and that's fine. You can't expect the whole world already to be at that stage.

It's enough for you to take responsibility, knowing there are still a few millions others who don't know that they can take responsibility because they live in such unconsciousness that they see the entire evil in others. What they see as evil. It's all in them.

And they make half the world into their enemy. It's all out there. That's fine.

Only those are required to take responsibility who are up to it. But even those who are totally unconscious still, on the one hand, they don't know what they're doing. Obviously, as Jesus said on the cross, they know not what they do.

In other words, they are in the grip of unconscious forces. Unconscious mental-emotional streams. They don't know what they do.

They cannot be held responsible. And people say, well, they should be held responsible. No, they can't be.

They don't know what they do. However, the fact that they are not responsible because they can't be responsible does not mean that they do not suffer the consequences of their unconsciousness. So they generate suffering.

And eventually, suffering is the fire in which the ego gets burned up. The collective ego and the personal ego. That's the long way, the slow way, the painful way.

And then there is a shortcut, which is any spiritual teaching, it cuts through that. The painful way, the long way of waking up. More and more suffering.

The planet might not endure such a long learning process. So if the learning process of humanity does not become shortened, it is doubtful that the planet can allow humanity to learn through further suffering for another 500 years, or even 200 years, or even 100 years. So you are responsible for all that.

[Speaker 2] (8:14 - 8:20)

Thank you.

2009 Why do you often talk about the ego as a "personalized entity"

[Speaker 1] (0:01 - 4:43)

From Vince, in The Power of Now and in A New Earth, the way you describe the ego makes it sound like it has a personality of its own. It seems to be a collection of habits, desires, etc. that run counter to some deeper or more authentic dimension of reality.

What are the benefits and potential downsides to describing ego as a personalized entity rather than, say, as a more impersonal pattern? The question then, I'll just repeat it or paraphrase it, what is the advantage or the downside of talking about the ego in terms of an entity as if it were a personalized entity, or talking about the ego as simply a collection of impersonal patterns, mental, emotional patterns? The questioner mentions that I often talk about the ego as if it were an entity in itself.

So what are the benefits and potential downsides to talking about it as if it were an entity? Because these two are just two ways of looking at it. If you look at it in one way, it is like a person, like a being that wants to survive.

So this conglomeration of patterns working together, it wants to survive, it has certain needs, so it has certain characteristics of an entity. And that's why the the the downside of looking at it as an entity is that it might scare you. You may get scared, you might get scared of your own ego and think there's some demon inside me that wants to take over my life.

So that's the downside, then, is it creates some kind of emotion around it and you feel threatened by it. If you call it it's a collection of patterns, then you don't have that. But the downside of that is that you may underestimate the force behind it and the, it's the persistence behind the patterns and the fact that they are, the patterns are they have a certain organization to them, a certain, they kind of go together, they reinforce each other.

So there the downside is that you underestimate the egos. And you say, well, there's still some unconscious patterns in me. That's you probably won't even say that, but anyway, that's, you have the two ways of looking.

Neither one is the one right way. Another, I can add a third way of looking at the ego, which is to say it's an illusion. That's the Eastern approach, in many cases, to say the ego is an illusion.

Or you can even have a saying, the ego doesn't exist, it's just an illusion. And again, everything is a somewhat limited perspective and every perspective will have it's helpful, in some ways maybe helpful, and in other ways has a, as the questioner says, a downside to it. So not one perspective really can encapsulate the ego.

So you can really have, there's no need to embrace just one perspective. Realize that the ego is, it is a personalized entity, it is and consisting of a conglomeration of mental emotional patterns, and it is ultimately a dream-like entity, an illusory form. It's all that together, you could say.

And so that's then there's also no disagreement between one person saying there is no ego because it's an illusion, and the other one says, oh yes, there is. There's just two viewpoints, perspectives. Ego is of course the unobserved mind, plus its emotions.

2009-07 How can I work with the fear I project

[Speaker 2] (0:05 - 0:53)

Hello. I have a question about children. I did a lot of spiritual work on myself before I had children.

And now I realize that I've transferred all of my fear of death and need for security onto my children. And I don't know what to do about it. I don't know what the best course of action is because I realize that it's part of taking care of them is to protect them.

But on the other hand, it goes against being present and being in presence and definitely brings on anxiety and wanting to control situations and their lives.

[Speaker 1] (0:53 - 0:59)

Do you overprotect or how does it manifest in actual daily life?

[Speaker 2] (1:01 - 1:45)

Well, my children are unusual in that they both have special health problems. So they involved both my husband and I a great deal in caring for their health at a time when it was really important. But now we give them the same amount of attention even though for the most part they're okay.

So it's kind of like we got into that pattern of putting all of our energy into them. And it's continuing, but I'm not sure where to let go and where to hold on.

[Speaker 1] (1:45 - 15:37)

Yes. Thank you. Certain behaviors, once they are in place, have a certain momentum and they kind of take you over almost, especially then if it happens between two people or an even larger group.

Behavior pattern can become an energy stream that takes you over. You can have it, for example, when there are riots or whatever, sometimes they go on for days because the people who participate in the riots, nothing to do with you, of course, just a similar, same phenomenon on a larger scale, the phenomenon of people being in the grip of a certain behavior pattern which is an energy stream. And so they are not doing it, they are in the grip of it.

Nobody is doing it. So that can even happen here, a certain kind of behavior becomes initiated and then refuses to go away. Similar phenomenon would be when you are in a certain state, you don't want to get out of that state.

Children, for example, many children, it's a very simple example, and even adults, even when they're tired, they don't want to go to bed because somehow there's always something else, because the state of being awake wants to continue despite the tiredness. But once you're in bed and asleep, you don't want to get out of bed in the morning because then that momentum wants to continue. Or the child doesn't want to go into the bath or the shower because it doesn't want to change its state from dryness to wetness.

Once you're in the bath, you don't want to get out because it's so nice. So there are certain energies that want to sustain themselves and behavior patterns can be like that. So the essential thing then for you is to have spaces of awareness during the day from where you can be aware of whatever behavior you're manifesting at that moment so that you're not totally controlled by the old pattern.

And this is why it's so essential to have your daily life, your day, totally interspersed with what I call spaces. This is just another way of saying step out of your life situation, which is in time, past and future, and mind, and step into the present moment. So a little space opens up inside.

That's the space of awareness. From the awareness you can see the energy behind an old pattern of behavior and this pattern either makes you think a certain thought or it immediately goes into action. It makes you do something.

And so you can sometimes then feel the arising behavior before it manifests as an action. You can feel the impulse to go there and do this protective thing to the child when it's quite unnecessary. It's no longer needed.

So you can feel the impulse arising and recognizing it as an old impulse, but only from the space of awareness. And then you don't need to act on it. You can say, oh, there's the old impulse.

And so the impulse is there, arises, and then subsides. Or if thought comes in, some compulsive thought about your child, that also, from that space of awareness, that inner space of aware presence, the stillness, another word for it, from the stillness, you observe the thought that wants to push itself, is pushing itself into your mind. You have to think this now and say, okay, there it is.

And you allow it. You don't fight it because whatever you fight you make stronger. So you are not in the grip of it anymore.

So more aware spaces. Vital with all children to bring spatial consciousness, as I sometimes call it, or space consciousness, nothing to do with science fiction, to bring space consciousness into the relationship with your child. For example, it's essential not to always relate to your child from the point of view of doing.

Do this, don't do that. Now we need to do that. Now let's do that.

Don't do that. Don't go there. Go there.

But to relate to your child, that has its place, of course. But if that's all there is, then it's a very one-dimensional relationship because what is missing is being. What is missing is to bring in the spaciousness into the relationship where you can just be with the child and look at the child and listen to the child and be there as the aware presence for the child.

And so you don't want the child to do this or that. You're just there with the child and observing, watching, listening, being, giving attention. That's a beautiful thing.

And that's beyond any pattern. That's not an inherited pattern. It's presence.

Presence is not an old pattern. It's eternally new. It's timeless.

So most parents don't know that yet. They cannot bring the timeless dimension into the relationship with their child. And so the relationship becomes full of conflict eventually.

You have the best of intentions. And yet, then the child grows and then suddenly the child is reactive and you don't know why. And there's conflict.

The reason is that the most vital dimension is missing. You've done all you could but doing wasn't enough. Doing is necessary but it's not enough.

Being was neglected. So being means to bring the aware spaces into the relationship where doing doesn't matter so much when doing can still happen within it. But that's vital.

And of course not only into the relationship with your child but also bring it into every relationship. No relationship can thrive if there is no spaciousness in it. And the spaciousness is there when you look at the other person and there's no thought in your head while you look because you're simply there as an aware presence.

Then there's a true relationship beyond the forms, the psychological form and the physical form. You can look at another person and just be there as the aware presence with no thought, just an alert presence. That's what I call, that is space.

If you can't do it with another human being, start by doing it with a flower. But I know you can. If you can't do it with another human being, do it with a dog.

It might be a little bit easier to be the aware space with a dog because the dog is already free of thought. So the dog does not stimulate thought in you as a human being would do with the other person probably thinking. So that transmits itself.

It's contagious. Every state transmits itself. So you might be dragged into thinking also.

So to have that no thought in any relationship is vital. It's vital for your children so that old patterns cease to operate and the new can come in. Then from that state of consciousness you can respond to the need of the child but it's no longer responding from a pattern that is no longer useful.

From the aware space you also know what is right for any given moment, whether you need to allow the child to explore, for example, or whether you need to say, come away from there because there's a 50-meter drop you might fall. So there's always a balance between allowing the child to find out for him or herself and to protect the child and say, no, come here. It's a very subtle balance but it's much easier from awareness to know where the balance is and to do the right thing from there.

So your entire life then, it's not just that. So the question has wider implications. It's not just to do with your children but the spaciousness needs to be there inside yourself.

Wherever you go, if you go into nature, without spaciousness you're hardly there because you're thinking. While you're surrounded by beauty and aliveness, you're thinking. Now, you're either thinking about you and yourself and your problems and you're only aware of the forest or the seaside or the mountains or the clouds or the wind and the breeze and the beautiful noises of nature on the periphery of your awareness because you're thinking about your failed investments or, a little bit better, you might be thinking about what you're looking at.

Oh, I wonder what that's called. What's that? I can't remember what that's called.

I'll have to look it up. You're not fully present either. You're maybe a little bit more present than the person who's totally away but not much more because you're still trapped in concepts in your mind.

Can you be there simply as spacious awareness? Like a little child but deeper, more intense. Can you be anywhere as spacious awareness rather than a person?

That's a new state of consciousness that's arising. Can I be here as spacious awareness with anybody? Of course, as I said, probably a little easier with a dog or a cat because you can meet the dog or the cat in the state of no thought.

The dog has no thought because it hasn't arrived at thought yet. It's intelligent but it has no conceptual thinking. The dog hasn't arrived at conceptual thinking.

It's below conceptual thinking and you have gone beyond conceptual thinking into the spaciousness. And there you meet in no mind. That's why it's so beautiful to relate to an animal and why so many people feel drawn to animals these days because it's the only time they can be free of their conceptual mind when they look at the pet, the dog or the cat.

Nothing to think about. And you know the dog or cat is not thinking about you. They're looking at you.

No thought. No thought. It doesn't mean that you have regressed.

It means for you, you've gone beyond thinking, stepped above thinking. And then you can meet the entire dimension that is below thinking in a wonderful state of oneness, the oneness that you sense with all nature that's around you. If you're in conceptual thinking, you're separated.

You meet everything because when you're not thinking about the tree and the bird and the breeze and the insect, there is no me and them. There's a single phenomenon, the forms arising in consciousness. And so you're like God that says, and God saw what he, she, it had made and recognized it as good.

The consciousness out of which the whole universe came, you represent that when you're in the state of no thought. You represent the ground of being, of all being. And you walk around nature and you say, if you had a thought, it would say, oh, I did a good thing there.

And you see that even in the tension between opposites, even that there's a deeper good beyond that. Yes, occasionally one thing eats up another, but there is a greater harmony that envelops the whole. You cannot sense that harmony when you're trapped in conceptual thinking.

So next time you can tell me how it's going with your children. It's a spiritual practice like everything else. It becomes a spiritual practice.

2009-07 Must a culture lose its innocence to evolve

[Speaker 2] (0:03 - 0:50)

Eckhart, I've heard you make reference to a number of situations which I think convey the same idea. You've talked about certain cultures that go through a stage where this thought process becomes more developed, which I interpret in some ways as being almost a loss of innocence. Is it necessary for a culture or a stage of civilization to go through this process of losing innocence, of getting trapped in the thought and emotional process, in order then to regain the development of awareness to reach a stage of enlightenment?

Thank you.

[Speaker 1] (0:59 - 10:51)

That seems to be the process when we look at it. There are still remnants of ancient cultures, very few these days, who have not gone through that process of loss of innocence or loss of connectedness with being, we could call it, the natural connectedness with being. And a few humans may still have it, very simple people, perhaps who live close to the land, never left.

Very simple people sometimes still have it in some cultures, a natural connectedness with the root of life, with being. They feel they are rooted in themselves, there's a stillness there. That is the natural.

What is happening when you lose it, whether it's an individual or whether it's a whole culture, a whole civilization, when you lose it, then you get lost in problem making, get lost in mind, the loss of original innocence, you could say, which of course is replaced by what is called in Christianity, original sin, which simply means the dysfunction that we all inherit that is there in the collective. So the original innocence is replaced by the original sin. Original innocence, however, is much deeper than original sin.

Original innocence is always still there, even when original sin comes in, it only covers up the original innocence. It does not destroy the original innocence. So the original innocence remains, and then a human being, either an individual or a whole nation, culture, tribe, moves through the phase of being identified with mind, ego, thinking, problem making, conflict, burden, suffering, life, inflicting suffering on other humans around you, continuous violence, and so on.

All that is part of the loss of connectedness with being. That's why so many ancient cultures, and the innocent state, we once were in that. Many ancient myths exist in different cultures throughout the world that speak of the golden age, something, a time when everything was beautiful.

We have it in Indian mythology, at the beginning, humans, they say, lived in connectedness. I'm paraphrasing, but they were one with life, one with the divine. They didn't inflict suffering on others.

There was no violence. Many cultures have that myth still. It survived as a myth.

It's also expressed, of course, in the Bible, at the beginning of the Bible, like a paradise, the loss of paradise. And paradise, of course, is not a place, it's a state. So the loss, is it necessary?

Well, it's happening, it has happened and is happening, so it seems to be an evolutionary process. When innocence is regained, connectedness with being is regained, it is not the same as the state, as that state that was lost. And that, perhaps, is why it is necessary to go through the state of being lost.

When it is regained, it is regained at a deeper level. There's a great deepening. Innocence is there, but from natural innocence, you now go to conscious innocence.

You're fully conscious of your state, rather than living in natural. For example, this is reflected in your relationship with nature, as your consciousness changes. First, let's say, in the innocent state, there's a oneness with nature and a respect for nature, as the old civilizations had, as the Native Americans had, a respect for nature.

They recognized nature as alive with spirit force. They recognized that the tree is not just a dead object that I can use for making money, or for my benefit, or to build a house, or whatever. They recognized the tree is alive with something more than what you see, and they respected that life.

Every animal, even if they had to kill an animal, they respected the life that is in the spirit presence in the animal. So everything, they inhabited a universe that was alive with presence. Now, then, we lost that, and more and more, we began to inhabit a universe that we kept.

We deadened ourselves to the aliveness of the universe. We can't see it anymore. So that we ended up looking at the whole of nature as a utilitarian thing to be used, but no longer recognized the essential aliveness that is in everything in nature.

Why couldn't we recognize it anymore, that it is essentially sacred and essentially one with the life that we are, because we had lost that within ourselves. We had cut ourselves off from the root of being. We were completely trapped in mind, and then nature became dead, and we could then exploit it, do anything, because we didn't know that there was a sacred presence there.

We've lost the sacred presence within ourselves. Well, it was covered up. Then we regain it.

Then again, nature is alive, but this time, there is the added dimension of conscious awareness. When you've always lived in oneness with nature, you don't even know that you live in oneness with nature. It's totally natural.

But when you do it with full consciousness, there is an added dimension to it. And so this is what's happening, and this, it seems to be why the process is that we have to move through the stage of being lost and then regaining. Perhaps the truth of that is expressed in the parable of the prodigal son, which predates, actually, it's used in various cultures, it predates even when Jesus used it.

It exists in different forms. The son of a rich father says to the father, Father, give me my inheritance. I want to go out and make a life for myself.

And so the father says, OK, you go out into the world, and the son goes out into the world, squanders his wealth, becomes a destitute and becomes a beggar, and even forgets where he comes from. And then eventually the father sends messengers to the son to remind him who he is. Don't you remember that you are?

And the beggar says, No, me? The son of the king? No.

And gradually the memory comes back to him, and then he comes back to his father's house, and the father now loves him more than before. That's the story. So there's a deepening, what that parable means, there's a deepening after you've been lost.

When you regain that which has been lost, it is regained at a deeper level because you're now fully conscious of it. There's a conscious dimension, the awareness that is there. That's why that seems to be our destiny.

But perhaps there is no... I just know that this is how it is. There may be exceptions.

There may be certain people on the planet or small groups of people who don't go through it. Who knows? We'll have to see.

I can only see the general trend, the general movement seems to be, Yes, we have to go through that. There may well be exceptions to that. There may well be certain people who remain in the state of innocence, and that is wonderful too.

I don't know. So that's the paradise regained. That is the cycle.

And so I know that I had to go through it. You had to go through it, or are still going through it. And so the state of innocence is lost in childhood.

Every child is still born with it. But then very quickly, these days, it is lost. Well, it's never lost.

It's obscured. That's the journey.

2009-09 Do you believe that there is a consciousness to the universe

[Speaker 1] (0:00 - 5:37)

How do you experience God? What do you see when you see someone? Do you see more than their physicality?

How I experience God, I've been talking about, this is really the only thing I talk about. Now, in different words, what do you see when you see someone? Do you see more than their physicality?

No, I don't see more than their physicality. I see exactly what everybody else sees. But I feel or sense something that is deeper than the physicality, and that is hard to put into words.

There's a sensing of, there's more to you than what I see, not as a thought, but as a knowing. And I, because I know there's more to this form than I can see or you can see here. So the, the consciousness beyond the form, looks through the form, and senses of, we don't have a word for it.

I can say we, I sense or I feel, it's not quite right. Maybe sense it is the closest, can't, I would have to create a new word for it. I sense the, who you are or what you are, beyond what I see, or beyond what you are telling me, or beyond what your mind is saying, or your emotions are doing.

So there is a, there's a connection with presence, the presence that is in you, the presence that you are. And that I have, I have that more strongly than what I see. So that kind of almost obliterates what I see.

What I see is the same as everybody, anybody sees. But that, that strong sense of consciousness, the alive presence that you are, is almost stronger than what I see. So there's, there's more of my attention is in that than in, in my perception of what I see.

It's hard to put into words something that is so far beyond words. And, but this is not something special to me. This is something whenever you look at a human being, and for a moment be free of definitions or interpretations, then you neither of yourself nor the other, nor definitions, be there as just a spacious awareness.

Then you begin to sense an aliveness within you, and the same aliveness in the other. And then whatever the human beings do isn't that important anymore. You don't react to.

They may be saying something silly, or intelligent, or whatever. It doesn't matter that much. There's something deeper there.

They may be deluded. They might want something from you. It doesn't matter anymore.

It's very, it's very beautiful, because it's only from that place that you can really relate. Not the, it's not the personality, the mind level. That's, that's the way to go for humans, to recognize each other as essentially sharing the same life, the same consciousness, recognizing oneness, on a sense level, not, not an intellectual level, feeling oneness.

And that's love in a deeper sense, not the ego love, but the true love. You can, the love comes from there. It's, you'd recognize that there is ultimately no other.

The more you think in terms of others, the more you're in ego. He's like that. She's like that.

She does that. He does that. Oh.

Remember I wrote in the book, the famous Jean-Paul Sartre philosopher said, that hell is other people. In the, in the French original, if you translate literally, he says, hell is the others. That's the ego's perception of other people.

A strong ego would see other people like that. And of course it can become so strong that you end up with things like paranoia, because every strong ego has already an element of paranoia in it, even before it's recognized as pathological, when it's still normal, it has an element of paranoia in it. And so the, any strong ego goes around the world in that way of what does he want?

What does she want? What do you want from me? Oh, I don't, I know what he's thinking.

Evil intentions, and so on. Very critical of others. They want something that's all very normal, but already part of the insanity.

2011 Eckhart Tolle Creating A New Earth Audiobook

[Speaker 1] (0:15 - 12:02)

We need to understand a few basic things about this, and I'd like to remind you of something that's already been written in The Power of Now, and that is that your life consists of, what you call your life, is usually your life situation. Your life consists of your life situation, which is your job, your financial situation, your relationships, your living situation, your health situation, whether you're young or old, or whatever is happening in your life, all that makes up your life situation. And for most people, that's all there is.

They don't know anything else. Their whole life consists, what they call my life, when they refer to my life, they're talking about their life situation. And in The Power of Now, I differentiate between your life situation, which is one level, and a more fundamental level that I call your life.

We are going to talk about these two levels today, at a time when, for many people, their life situation is becoming challenging. They're encountering new limitations suddenly coming into their life situation. The only difference between our present situation in the world, and what normally happens, is that many people experience similar things at the same time.

So many people at the present time experience some form of challenge or limitation coming into their life, as many of the structures, the external structures in the world, are becoming shaky, and some have collapsed already. As you may remember from A New Earth, I speak about the collapse of Soviet communism, which nobody could have predicted, and I speak of the impending collapse of many of the structures that are ego-based, that are an external reflection of an inner state of consciousness, that is the ego. And those structures, which of course includes financial structures and so on, are now beginning to collapse, and something totally new will arise.

How long this collapse will take, I cannot say. But everybody can clearly see, and even the experts are talking about a systemic, I hear this word on the radio, a systemic crisis, or something like that. In other words, the crisis is not to do with this or that on the surface of things, but concerns the very structure of these organizations, in the same sense that the human mind, the problems of the human mind, have not to do with content of whatever is the content of your mind, but the very structure of the mind, the human mind, that needs to change.

So for many people, limitation in one form or another is coming into their life situation. And that is actually not what the media wants us to believe, that these things are dreadful. The challenge that many people are encountering at this time is actually that which will push them into a new state of consciousness.

That is the possibility, that is the promise. Whenever you encounter a crisis situation, whether it's personal or collective, there is the opening into a new way of being, the possibility. It doesn't mean that everybody will embrace that possibility.

So we need to first of all see, not believe what we are told in the media, that we should be in a state of fear, that the only response, the only natural response to what's happening is a state of fear. That is an unconscious response. We need to see that change is absolutely necessary in this world, and the dissolution of many of the ego-based structures is absolutely necessary for the planet to survive, and for humanity to survive.

So what's happening is not dreadfully bad. What's happening needs to happen. The totality, the intelligence behind phenomena is doing it.

So it is a good thing, and if challenges come into your life, which might mean limitation, financial limitation, you may have to move somewhere else, you may have to downgrade, uncertainty may come into your life. Oh, that shouldn't be happening. I should know what's going to happen for the next 20, 30 years of my life.

Well, you don't know anymore. And that is wonderful that there is suddenly an opening into uncertainty. So is it possible for you to embrace uncertainty, and not demand that you should know what's going to happen to you in your life situation, to embrace not knowing, to embrace uncertainty, and to embrace, yes, there are difficulties, there are challenging situations, but that is part of being here on this planet in this form.

I'd like to remind you of a book called The Road Less Traveled, and I never got to read the whole book. I basically got stuck on the first two sentences of the book, and those first two sentences of the book were so good that you didn't need to read anymore. I don't know whether that's a good thing for an author to write such a good book, that all you need is the first two sentences.

And if you don't get that, you can still read the rest of the book, but if you get that... So the first sentence is, life is difficult. Okay?

And the second sentence, I don't know literally, but it says something like, and if you know that life is difficult, and you accept that life is difficult, it's no longer difficult. It's only, it's difficult when, if you say it shouldn't be. But if you go with, yes, the uncertainty, this is part of being here in this form, there is continuous uncertainty, and the certainty, the rigidity of things is an illusion.

The certainty that all these structures are solid, and you can sometimes see it, that the world trade center looked very solid, and gone. And all the structures, the big banks, they looked so solid, nothing could possibly happen there, forever. And within a few weeks, they're beginning to crumble.

Soviet Communism, nothing looked more solid than Soviet Communism. You say, this is so rigid, it can't possibly, must at least survive for another thousand years. The rigidity of it, and the people who embodied that, it's not going to move.

When you saw the Soviet rule, greeting the military parades, huge, huge tanks and rockets going past, nothing can be more solid than that. And within a year, collapsed. The whole thing collapsed.

Now, one good thing, of course, about traveling to India is that the external reality is a little bit less solid than in the West. So you're less likely to delude yourself that you live in a solid reality that can be controlled, or that you can be in control of. There you see the structures are actually a bit shaky everywhere.

And even if you go into a luxury hotel, you never know what's going to happen. So we are learning to go with the flow of things, as the expression goes. And the flow of things is fluid.

It's not a continuous change, something new is arising. And why demand that you should, there should be certainty in your life. Be open to uncertainty and see how empowering that actually is.

And not say, okay, but what about my pension plan? What's the mutual funds? I had saved all my life and now, look, I got the statements, I lost 50% of it.

Yes, so, but you're still here. That's your life situation. Whatever happens, your life situation.

And you may remember a year ago, you were looking at your mutual funds and said, wow, it's made so much money. It's great. It feels good.

[Speaker 3] (12:02 - 12:04)

And then you look at it again.

[Speaker 1] (12:05 - 25:28)

Okay, now I can relax now. And then you relax and then the next one comes and says, oh my God, life is difficult. Things are dissolving.

And see, if you resist internally what is happening, as the media teaches you to do, then of course, you resist the flow. You resist the arising of the new, the arising of the new state of consciousness primarily in you, and eventually the arising of new external expressions of that state of consciousness, a new world. We don't need to be concerned about that.

That comes of itself. What we need to be concerned about is to be open to this transformation, to be open to not knowing. So there's our life situation.

And it's interesting. There may be interesting changes happening in our life situation. And we say, it's fine.

Whatever change comes, you look at the situation and see, yes, all of a sudden a limitation is coming into my life. I lost my job and my investments are not worth that much anymore. Okay, then how can you overcome these limitations?

Limitations can be overcome always on two levels. There is the external limitations. Limitations can be overcome on an external level.

And other limitations can only be overcome on an inner level. So you need to see whatever situation you encounter in your life, is there anything I can do to overcome these limitations? It might involve moving somewhere else where you don't have a huge mortgage anymore.

It might involve moving to a different location. It might involve finding a different job or thinking outside of the box and doing something totally different you'd never even thought of, of thinking creatively. So whatever limitation you encounter in your life, you look at first of all at the externals of the situation.

Is there anything I can do? And then you become still. And then you start thinking again.

And you look at the situation. What are the possibilities? Then you become still again.

Then you look again. You think or you talk to someone. And then you go back into stillness.

And that process may take a while, not necessarily just a day, of looking what it is, what is it that I can do, and going within where you're not looking for anything, but become comfortable with what is here and now. And when you become comfortable with what is here and now, you're stepping out of your life situation into life. Life is now.

Life has nothing to do with what's going on in your life. It has nothing to do with past and future, or what your relationships are, or what your financial situation is, or your living situation is, or even your health situation is. That's all your life situation.

That is not life. Your life situation exists in time, past and future. Life is now.

So it is vital that you learn to step out of your life situation periodically so that your life situation does not absorb your entire attention continuously, because if it does, it'll drain you and eat you up, because you'll have continuous stuff to think about, one problem after another in my life, my life situation. Do you think, oh now I have to, what about that problem and that? And you're thinking about your, there's a continuous succession of problems that I need to worry about, and if I don't worry about it, it's all going to collapse totally, even worse than it has done so already.

I need to be responsible and worry. You're being eaten up by your life situation. Your mind, it comes down to your mind, because your mind gives power to your life situation.

The continuous involuntary mind activity really is your life situation. If you don't think about your life situation, there is no life situation. What situation?

You come into, you step out of that periodically, vital to learn that, and come into life, and then the mind says, what do you mean by life? Okay, let's see where that is, that life. You step out of time, your attention, you remove your attention from past and future, okay?

How do you do that? Well, a little help would be, what about now? What's wrong with now?

Do I have a problem now? Now? Of course I have a problem now.

Look at my bank statement. Of course I have a problem now. I need to move by the end of the month.

I got no, I'm not talking about the end of the month, or what's going to happen to your mutual funds. I'm talking about, do you have a problem now? No.

I can't see any. I'm trying hard to find a problem in this moment. Well, there's a stain.

No, there isn't. I'm just saying, there's a stain here. Is that a problem?

No, it's a stain. Okay. I have a backache.

I don't. It's just an example. I have a backache.

Is that a problem? Only if you start thinking about it and saying, am I going to have to live with that for the rest of my life? Or, why do I always have a backache?

I wonder what's wrong with me. No, it's not a problem. It's a backache.

It's just that. You stay with what is now. Don't spin some stories about what is now.

Don't judge it, compare it, say it shouldn't be. You come into now. So, the first level of now is whatever is around you.

That's only level one. Level one of now is your sense perceptions. Wow.

And that's already a revelation. When you step out of being totally possessed, eaten up, eaten alive by your life situation, and you step out of that into just, even just becoming aware of sense perceptions, you're entering the now, because you can only perceive now. And you're not perceiving any problem.

You're perceiving what is now. Sense perceptions, this room, the people, the incredible variety of human forms. Amazing to see.

Every human form is different and unique in some way. It's beautiful. You can sit in a public place and be in the now and watch people.

Nothing to do with your life situation. You're there as a presence, watching, perceiving this moment, the incredible fullness of this moment around you in the form of life forms, human life forms, animal life forms, plant life forms, the air, the incredible forms and shapes that are continuously moving, the spectacle of phenomena, unbelievable variety. It's fantastic.

And you have no idea that this is going on around you when you're totally trapped in your life situation, which really is your mind. So we are learning periodically to step out of that level that I call life situation and enter life. Life is now.

This was level one of what is around you. Be alert to that. Because otherwise you miss the whole thing because you're so concerned about your conceptual reality, which really is what a life situation is.

You're so concerned about your conceptual reality that you miss reality. Your conceptual reality eats up your entire attention continuously, and you're worrying about your life, which in reality is your life situation, but you call it your life. It's not life at all.

And so this is a dreadful fate for a person to be consumed by their life situation. And so they miss the life. They're trying to find the life, the fullness of life in their life situation.

And they're hoping that if they can eventually sort out their life situation so that they can find life. But if your life situation is all you have, you're never going to find life because your life situation is a set of thoughts and concepts in your head. So to become empowered, you need to rise.

One could say you rise above your life situation, which doesn't mean you don't deal with things anymore. You still deal with things, but you realize there is a level or a dimension to you that is far more powerful and vital than whatever is happening in your life. So accessing that dimension is vital, and that really is what spirituality is all about, not having some weird ideas about this or that or beliefs.

It's nothing to do with ideas. It's nothing to do with concepts. There's no such thing as spiritual concepts.

Concepts are not spiritual. They're not even spiritual thoughts. There's no such thing as a spiritual thought.

A thought is not spiritual because thought is form. Spiritual is the formless dimension in yourself. Level one, then, whatever surrounds you.

You can say, yeah, but this is still form too. Yes, it's form too, but it's not a mind form. It's not a conceptual form.

It's what is here in the world of physical forms. Be open to that. Level one of the now.

Level two of the now, don't get attached to the numbers. I'm just saying two. Level two of the now is feeling that you're alive.

Level two is, so your attention was on what is around you. The world is multifaceted. There's incredible play of phenomena all around you, and you acknowledge that, and it's beautiful.

It is nothing to do with what your relationships are doing at the moment or what your bank statements are doing at the moment or whether you have a job or you don't have a job or whether your wife has just left you or the husband has done this or whether you're... nothing to do with any of that. You're stepping out into presence.

Level two of presence is to feel that you're alive inside. You've already noticed that the world around you is alive. Well, that's a big step forward.

You have noticed that the world around you is vitally alive. So to notice that, you need to have stepped out of your life situation, your conceptual reality.

[Speaker 4] (25:29 - 25:29)

Wow.

[Speaker 1] (25:31 - 4:14:15)

Okay, that was... It's beautiful, the play of forms. And then you feel that you inside are alive.

Your body is alive. You feel the aliveness in your hands, your arms, your legs, and the totality of aliveness, the global aliveness inside in the background. And you can still look around and see the incredible aliveness around you.

Now, if you feel the body inside, you're already moving to an even more vital dimension than the vitality of life forms. There's your body. It feels good to be embodied, to sense the aliveness even in an everyday situation.

When things are going... Listen to the news and say something dreadful has just happened. There will be negative growth next year in the economy.

Negative growth. What does that mean? We are now officially in a recession.

Oh, my God. We are going to buy less at Christmas this... Oh, no.

We are not going to run around like mad rabbits this Christmas. Oh, that's dreadful. So even when you listen to the news, I'm exaggerating a little, but there's some truth in it.

Even when you listen to the news, you can feel the aliveness within while they're saying, we are now officially in a recession. The entire automobile industry of the United States may collapse and drag everybody else down. And you feel the aliveness inside.

So there you have something more vital than that. And if you are part of the automobile industry of the United States, and if it affects you directly or indirectly, when the situation arises externally, then you will deal with it. You will address it now.

And you accept whatever is and you look at it, okay, what is it that I can do? And then you go into life. And then you go out again and look at your situation.

Find the balance between dealing with your life situation and entering life. So level two said the aliveness in the body while you listen to the news, for example, or while the phone rings and somebody says, oh, dear, we need to do something. Well, if anybody comes to you and says, we need to do something, you step out of the life situation and become present, where there are no problems.

So you can hang on to your inner body. And then an even deeper level of your life situation, which of course, they're all connected, they're ultimately all one. At the deepest level, the one that contains it all is the realization that underneath it all, who you are is not the thoughts that go through your head, or whatever's happening externally.

But you can actually sense within yourself that you are that in which all the phenomena appear. That's the deepest level of life. Life is the consciousness that you are.

The I, the I am. You attach nothing else to I am. I am is the deepest who you are in your innermost identity.

That is consciousness. It is formless. It is the light in which everything appears.

And to feel yourself, even at this moment, to feel that nothing that can be defined is who you are. Nothing that can be thought is who you are. Nothing that happens around you has anything ultimately to do with who you are in your essence.

Success or failure ultimately has nothing to do with who you are. Success cannot give you your reality. Failure, success, is not who you are.

It's all the play of forms. It's all to do with time. It's your life situation.

Stepping out, out of that, into the power and the fullness of the present moment where you know yourself as consciousness itself. Another word you could use as a pointer is to realize the stillness within yourself. Consciousness is still, alive, vibrant, but still.

Underneath all the things that are happening externally and internally in your mind and your emotional field, you remain as that. And that can be in any situation. When you are the Master, the spiritual Master knows him or herself as consciousness in any external situation, you can actually sense a spaciousness inside you, no matter what's happening.

And even while you're thinking, or you're going to think much less, because there's no reason to think totally unnecessary things all the time, to sense always in the background the I am, the stillness. That which is precious, something very precious, indestructible. And sometimes you may need to encounter a life-threatening challenge that suddenly comes in to sense that.

But whenever a form in your life begins to dissolve or collapse, there's a greater chance to discover within yourself that which is beyond form. So let's say the entire stock market collapses, and then you get your statement and it says zero. That moment of looking at your balance, and you say your mutual funds have gone from $500,000 to $5.

So this form that was important to you has dissolved. And you look at that, and instead of resisting, because this is what is, ultimately it's only a figure on a piece of paper. Only when you start thinking does it become a big problem.

But the reality of it is, you're opening this thing, you're taking it out of the envelope, and you're reading, and there is little scribbles, computer printout, which has a little figure on it. And that's all it is in the reality of the present moment. Unless you make a problem out of it and start thinking what's going to happen to me in the future.

How am I going to survive in my old age? I've worked for nothing, 30 years of work for nothing. What does all that mean?

It means it's a story around the simplicity of a figure on a piece of paper. And then once you are trapped in that, you're lost. So to see very clearly, this is the master, you're becoming a master when you just see the simplicity of any moment without going into spinning stories around me, my past, my future.

It was all in vain, I failed, it's all been pointless, I'm never going to make money again. All mind stories, mind created stories. So the solution to your financial or other problems is stepping out as much as you can into the aliveness of the present moment, which is who you are in your essence.

You are the now in which everything happens, the consciousness in which everything unfolds, the timeless space. And then look at the situation. So you're coming from a, you're rooted in a deeper place.

And then you're dealing with the externals. But always be very careful because the externals have a pulling power. And you're living in a world that's totally hypnotized by the externals.

And in a world that continuously tells you how important the external is. And every time you listen to somebody say, this is so important, you should be worried, you should be in fear, you should think about this, let's discuss it. And the world has this pulling power.

So you need to realize everybody's hypnotized into believing that this is all that there is. And this is absolutely serious and important. It is important perhaps, but it is only relatively important.

It is not of absolute importance. Of absolute importance is finding the essence of who you are. And then deal with things from there.

So that a different energy flows into, even into what you do. So the two are not separate. Even your so-called life situation changes is affected by the power of life itself when you are aware of that in yourself.

So a different level of consciousness flows into what you do. A different energy flows into what you do. When you realize that whatever you do is at best only relatively important.

Whatever happens is relative. Only one thing is absolute, and that is finding life, or as Jesus calls it, the fullness of life, which has nothing to do with your life situation. And the strange thing is, the life situation tends to unfold with greater ease when you are connected with something that dimension that is deeper than life situations.

And then even on the external level of your life situation, things happen more lightly, more easily. And that's the beauty of it. And this is the practice then.

And no better opportunity than the present time when you are being challenged rather than being deluded for a few more years that all is well, when it isn't, because eventually things are going to dissolve around you anyway. And if they dissolve, don't dissolve around you, then you dissolve before they do. So it's better to see that fact then wait until you're 92 years old, you may not be that alert anymore, to find the reality of who you are and the reality underneath phenomena.

So here's the mastery of life is to live in two dimensions simultaneously and then see what happens. You're practicing then every moment and whatever situation that arises in your life becomes a practice for staying present within that situation to feel the depths of who you are, the power of now, the power of consciousness as you deal with things. So this is what it means to become empowered.

That's what everybody wants, but they're looking for it where they can't find it. They are looking for some power in their external life situation. The power must come from within.

It does not come from your thoughts or from whatever happens out here. So another way of putting this is look at whatever limitations arise in your life. Let's say you're trapped somewhere in some unpleasant situation or place and you want to get out.

Look at the situation. What is it that I can do? Or perhaps there's nothing you can do for right now.

It's another, it's a beautiful thing to see at this present moment there's nothing I can do. I can't even pick up the phone. It's Sunday today.

I can't call anybody. Nobody's at work. There's nothing I can do except be with what is.

Stay. The next day, action arises. Not losing yourself in the action, another important thing, because it's very easy once you start to speak and to act, you totally lose yourself in that.

You will get stressed. The slightest stress means you've lost yourself in your life situation again. It is possible to deal with things effectively without stress.

Just be more powerful than the situation. For most people, the situation is always more powerful than they, so they feel smaller than the situation. That's normal.

And that's a delusion, because it all arises from consciousness. So you are actually far more powerful. The power of who you are is far greater than anything external, but that's, people don't know that.

So they're always reacting to something, defending themselves against this or that, realizing that the situation actually has very little power. And if your change of, your state of consciousness changes, external reality reflects the change. This does not mean that anything remains absolutely solid in external reality.

It still is subject to continuous fluctuations, so you don't attach yourself to anything. But it's beautiful to see that external reality reflects basically your predominant inner state. If your inner state is empowered, and it can only be empowered when you are not lost in your life situation, then the empowerment is reflected around you.

And it may come in many forms. It may come as financial abundance. It may come as anything, any form that the aliveness can take.

So it's an incredible thing to discover that you are actually more powerful than the world around you. Not in the narrow, egoic sense that you say, I can control everything that happens. No.

So this is a wonderful opportunity now to experiment with consciousness, with your life situation and your life, to find where is the life at this moment? Do you feel the aliveness of this moment? And then the universe uses you because it is going somewhere.

There's an evolutionary impulse at work on this planet and everywhere else, because if it's happening here, it's happening everywhere, as above, so below. Then the consciousness that wants to come into this world can freely flow through you and express itself. How?

In many different ways, according to your particular form. It might be some enlightened business. It may be that you're producing something that affects many people and brings that consciousness to others through some artistic creation or this or that, innumerable possibilities, how you can be an opening for the evolutionary impulse of the universe that wants to come through.

And then wherever you go, people will be affected by this transformed energy. You cannot not affect the world. When you live in the new state of consciousness, whoever you come into contact with is affected by that.

Even if you were a hermit, you would still affect the collective consciousness. If you are a frequency holder, as I call it in a new earth, a frequency holder is somebody who is not very interested in going out into the world and changing the world or building up some huge, great organization to make the world a better place or to create a great work of art or to come up with some new discovery or write a great book. Not that there's anything wrong with these things.

For some people, that is their life purpose. But there are some other people who are not drawn to that, who are content with remaining in a relatively small circle of influence. Contemplatives is the old word for those people, people who don't want to go out there and change the world.

They just want to be present. And that's fine because they hold the frequency of that state of consciousness. Because whatever state of consciousness you are in affects the totality of consciousness, is part of the totality of consciousness.

So I was a frequency holder for a large part of my life, never very interested in going out into the world and achieving the great things. I was kind of happy being withdrawn until something came into my life and I felt there's more that I can do. That was a thought that came.

I was doing little work, workshops with people, 10 people at a time, 15 people for a number of years, giving talks in people's living rooms. And then it was fine. In many ways, I felt happy being a semi-hermit and occasionally going out and doing little things.

Happy not being famous. I never thought I would want to be famous. But then the thought came, I could do so much more in this world, but it doesn't seem to be happening.

And one day I sat under an oak tree. You could call this, a question, later on we'll have some questions. Somebody's asking a question about divine discontent.

The question is, do you ever experience what might be called divine discontent? That is, a discontent that leads to something very positive. And you could say that there was a moment that came at that time when I experienced a mild form of divine discontent, which simply is a sense of, there's more than I can do, that I could do, but it's not happening.

That's a mild form of divine discontent. It's not some unhappiness that says, oh, I have failed, I'm in my forties and what have I achieved? That's not divine discontent.

That's just a form of normal unhappiness. With divine discontent, there is not a lot of mind activity around me and my life. There's just a sense of, my present life situation has these limitations around me, but I could go beyond that.

I could be much vaster. The world needs what I know comes through me. I know that the world needs that.

So why isn't the world, I'm speaking for some of you too, why isn't the world opening up these channels for me? So that was the divine discontent. So I sat under an oak tree in Somerset, where I would sometimes go, magnificent oak tree.

And I said to the universe, which ultimately to myself, please use me. I was talking to myself ultimately, because I am that. Please use me.

I'm here. So I was a frequency holder. And yet after many years of a frequency holder, I had this sense of, okay, now expansion is what is called for in this world, a moment of divine discontent.

Please use me. I didn't hear any answer. And then I said something that some years later, I almost said, maybe I said too much.

I said, I want acceleration. Okay. And then I went home and nothing happened for a few months.

I didn't know that while nothing was happening for a few months, in my little cottage in Somerset, the countdown has already started, like the rocket ship, which goes 10, 9, 8, 7, 6. And then one day I woke up and said, I have to move. I have to move to the West Coast of North America.

And that was the beginning. And so the rocket ship had taken off suddenly. And finally I landed at the desk of Oprah a few years later.

I never wanted that much. It's too much. And then the lesson was to surrender to that.

It wasn't too much. It was what was needed. If I had been stuck to some previous idea that I had about how my life should unfold, then I would be saying, oh, I'm overwhelmed.

It's too much. Well, this is surrender now to what is now, surrender to this enormous energy stream that's coming through. You asked for it.

You said acceleration. And there it is. And continuously, even in this, my life, many people believe my life situation must be wonderful.

In many ways it is. But no life situation is totally satisfying. And there are always things that happen and change.

There's no ultimate certainty in any life situation. You cannot derive long-lasting satisfaction from any life situation, even if you become famous. I can tell you that now.

The life situation has not the power to satisfy you for long. The satisfaction needs to be found in life. And life is now.

And if you find that, then your life situation is fine. It unfolds and becomes empowered, probably. So don't expect that your life situation does not have the power to make you fulfilled.

And it does ultimately not have the power to make you feel unfulfilled. You have to go deeper where you are, bigger than that. Although there was this divine discontent for a little moment, I'm certainly not happier or more fulfilled now than I was when I, as one magazine said, Eckhart Tolle suddenly emerged from complete obscurity.

So when I lived in complete obscurity, I didn't know I was in complete obscurity, but I was not less happy than I am now. The state is the same. So there's no sense it is fulfilling to see that consciousness is evolving through this form, yes.

But there's no increased happiness through that. The happiness was already there, basically. Because I was deeply rooted, as I still am, in life.

Life is always more vital to me than the life situation. I've always going, even now, I'm always a little bit out of balance. Even now, although great things are happening, but I'm not recommending that to anybody, I'm just saying, I'm a little bit out of balance, because I'm always more vitally drawn to the present moment and the aliveness of that than whatever I have to deal with on an external level.

So I'm always going a little bit too much, sometimes it's a little bit chaotic around me, because I don't deal with everything. If I dealt with everything, I would lose, I would become stressed, it's just too much. So many things, just put aside, and then after a few months, they are not a problem anymore, because the situation has changed.

And I don't do anything when I feel I'm not enjoying it anymore. Stop. What's the point?

What is the point in doing something that you cannot enjoy? But don't prematurely say, okay, I definitely can't enjoy this. See if you can connect with the power of now, and then do whatever you do.

So don't immediately say, well, what I'm doing, definitely I could never enjoy. Maybe, maybe not. Just try connecting, stepping out of the situation into the power of now, and then do.

Perhaps you can enjoy it. And if you still can't, then go and do something else. But no compromise, don't live with unhappiness, or with continuous stress, or frustration.

That is a dreadful way to live. The large part of the world lives like that. So what a wonderful challenge here.

And whatever comes, it's a life situation, and the challenges of your life situation, they draw out that which is deeper. So without the challenges, you would be comfortably sitting in your armchair for the next 30 years, or until you retire, and watching your investments grow and grow, and then drop dead. And you would live with complete certainty that you're being looked after because you've got your life insurance, and your investments are growing every year, and nothing can possibly go wrong, and there's nothing.

Okay, everything is great. Watch TV every day for five hours, and that's it. No evolution, no flowering of consciousness, and then there's somebody else who made a total mess of his or her life, and ends up in prison, and sits there for 20 years, and suddenly wakes up in the midst of that, and realizes, I am life.

And the situation is just relatively unimportant. To feel that who I am in my essence is beyond any limitation on the external level. So that's why I often get letters from people in prison that say, I have woken up in prison.

I'm free. I'm no longer unhappy. And I have another 20 years to do, nor I'm not unhappy anymore.

I rarely get letters from people who say, I've woken up because my investments are growing every year. In fact, I've never had a letter. Sometimes I get letters from people who wake up because they encounter some physical illness, and often change happens then.

Any challenge has the opportunity to wake up. If you're not being challenged by life, then wait. It'll come.

Now isn't that wonderful? That means that whatever happens now is no longer some problem that comes into your life. It's a challenge.

It's not a dreadful thing. It's great. It's an opportunity to be more conscious, more present with what is.

So that brings us back to the first two lines of that book. Life is difficult. Of course, it's full of challenges.

But once you know that, and say, that's what it is, then it's no longer difficult. It just is what is. It only remains difficult if you have the idea stuck in your head that it shouldn't be.

It's a paradox. Life is difficult, and once you know that it's difficult, it's no longer difficult. Knowing that it's difficult implies accepting that it's difficult.

But to say it is difficult only when you resist life. So what this implies is, it's when the resistance goes, then it's no longer called difficult. It's challenging.

And every challenge brings increased aliveness. My friend Steve, who is here, can testify to that because he was faced with a challenge recently of being stuck in a hotel room in Bombay with mad terrorists running all around the building for several days. And he went deep inside.

It wasn't difficult for him because he was already immersed in presence for many years. So he was able to step out of the situation, which certainly could be called difficult, and go deep within into the power of the present moment, into consciousness itself. Welcome to our private seminar.

I'm talking about spiritual awakening in daily life. And some people may not be quite sure what the term spiritual awakening even means. Or they may have strange ideas in their head of what spiritual is, what is spiritual, and what is awakening.

And instead of defining right now, I'm just going to talk about spiritual awakening in daily life. And as I talk, what spiritual means and what awakening means, will hopefully emerge while we talk. So instead of defining beforehand, what these things are, because although we're not, this is not a talk on philosophy.

So we're not here to define terms. It's an experiential thing. It's not information based.

We're here to experience something and then to bring that into daily life, live it in our daily existence. Everybody has done some traveling and sightseeing, visited unfamiliar places, European cathedrals perhaps, or the pyramids in Egypt, or Machu Picchu, Stonehenge in England, whatever it may be. And it's often an interesting experience for me to go into a place and walk around doing some sightseeing.

Let's say it's a cathedral, an ancient cathedral in Europe. And you walk in there. And usually you have little groups of people with a guide.

They walk around, the guide has now come this way, in different languages. The guide explains what this means, when it was built, or who is, this is a tomb, or this king, or whoever lies there, and all kinds of interesting information. And just occasionally when I walk into a place like that, an ancient cathedral, I kind of approach the little group and just listen in and stand at the side and just see what he's saying.

Sometimes quite interesting, but I never feel drawn to actually sticking around for very long, because I prefer to explore the place by myself without the interference of a voice explaining to me what things are. Now it may well be that I may have read a guidebook beforehand, or I may not. In most cases probably I have not looked at a guidebook beforehand, so I'm actually going into this, let's say it's a medieval cathedral, I'm walking into this medieval cathedral not knowing very much about it, except it was built a thousand years ago, whatever, and it took two or three hundred years to build.

But I prefer that experience of entering a space and not being burdened by information about it, rather than entering a space and immediately being bombarded with facts about it. There are two very different kinds of experiencing that place. One kind of experiencing that place is based on bits and pieces of information, on knowledge, on mental knowledge, on mind.

And this is how why most people travel for that reason, because they want to learn new things. So as soon as they enter the cathedral, they say, okay, I'm going to join this guided tour. Or these days they have invented something to substitute the human guide.

You can rent a little device recording with earphones, and you can choose your language, and you put it on your ears, and then you choose your language, and then it tells you where to go. Now turn right here, stop here, and then it starts explaining it. You look, and you're continuously learning a lot, and then, okay, walk on now ten steps, and now look up to the left, and you will see more information coming in, very interesting, and learning so much about history.

It's true, you are. You're learning a lot. And so you walk around this cathedral with the voice in your head, teaching you about it.

What's wrong with that? Nothing. It's fine.

Why don't I do that? Because there is another way of experiencing, of perceiving that place. And that's not something that people even know about.

Some people do it intuitively. And that way is going into that place, and not perceive whatever is around you through the veil of facts, information, knowledge, thoughts, ultimately. It all comes down through thoughts, one thought after another.

There is another way of perceiving that place that is not based on mind activity. And I love that other way more than the way of learning about. There's nothing wrong with that.

Sometimes I read a guidebook afterwards, after I've been to a place like that, I read, oh, that's what I saw, and have a little bit of information about it. But at first, I love entering that place and perceiving, first of all, the totality of this, the vast, let's say it's a cathedral, it could be other places, but there's always, there's a spaciousness there, there's a vastness, there's a silence, interrupted, of course, sometimes by the voice of the guides here and there, and the clicking of cameras, but there is still a vastness, a silence, there's a, the whole place has a presence.

There's an energy field there. And the first thing that I love to take in is to enter and to take in the totality of that energy field that is this ancient cathedral, to sense it, to feel it directly. And there's a, it has its own presence, it's an energy field.

I like to get in touch with this ancient energy field, ancient and new, because it's still alive. And then look around at this architecture, and so on, and again, just see the shapes, the forms, the colors. So you see, be aware also of the space itself, because anybody who goes into a place like that and is struck by something, they go, wow.

Even people who later seek out the guide, there may be a few seconds when they take in this and go, they sense something, a sacred presence, you could almost say. They sense it, they don't need to know anything about it. In fact, you cannot sense the presence of that place if your mind is full of thoughts, full of knowledge.

And if you enter a cathedral and you are, let's say, you are already very knowledgeable, you're a historian or whatever, and you know much, you would have to let go for a moment of all that you know, if you truly wanted to experience that place. So I always a little bit feel sorry for most tourists, because they don't seem to be aware that there is another way of experiencing life. There is another way of perceiving other than the mind, through the mind only.

There's nothing wrong with the mind, it has its place, and it's needed for quite a few things. But for many other things, for realising the depths of life and becoming a deep person, that's a strange expression that's sometimes used. You say, this person has a depth, or we speak of a depth of perception.

What does that mean for a person? You would say, there's a shallow person and there's a deep person. What does that mean?

I would say it means what we might call a shallow person, a person who is totally trapped only in the mind activity, the knowledge accumulated by the mind, and perceives everything through thoughts. In other words, you walk around your life like the tourist who rents this little device and comments about what they are perceiving continuously. That's fine, sometimes it may be necessary, but imagine going through life not being able to get rid of that device.

You can't take it off anymore. It keeps commenting. So wherever you go in the street, it says, okay, look at that person there.

And the thing even tells you whether you like it or not. This is great, I like that, or I don't like that. I wish I had an answer on whatever.

And of course, this is how most people live because they are so identified with the involuntary mind activity, the little voice in the head. They don't even know it. They think they are the voice.

And to live through the voice then makes your life quite shallow because whatever you experience lacks depth. You experience it through a concept. Every thought is conceptual.

So when let's say you are in the street, a man or woman comes towards you and your mind immediately has to say something about whether you like or don't like or would like to do something with this person, whatever it may be, or have some kind of reference point or commenting on the way they look, weird or strange or nice, I'd love to, whatever. Is there another way of perceiving this human being? Yes, to perceive the human in the same way, if that's what I said about the cathedral, if that resonates with you, if you have had a glimpse of that experience or perhaps more than a glimpse, then you know the difference between stepping into a place and going, no comment.

Well, perhaps the mind says, oh, this is so beautiful. And then there's stillness again. So there is a still space through which you perceive instead of concepts through which you perceive.

And suddenly, there's a depth, not only you feel another dimension is suddenly present, not only outside of you, another dimension that the tourist who is totally dependent on either the mechanical guide or the human guide is not aware of that, that the tourist who only listens to the commentary misses the true aliveness, the sacredness, and the depths of that place. And so, also within, you are trapped in the head, there's no depth then to you as a human being, where there's something that responds to life, something deeper than the commentary in your head. And so many people these days are trapped then with this guide, the tourist guide they can't get rid of, and it's called your mind.

And so, not that the mind is not a useful tool. And even in the cathedral, it sometimes, it adds a little bit to it, if you know something about it. And I would say that's the second stage, to come back just for a moment to this cathedral analogy, one could almost say, you come back to that, of course, ideally, and what I do that occasionally, but sometimes we don't have enough time, because when we travel, first, I love to experience the place without knowing anything, and truly experience it, the depths of it.

And then perhaps go back to the hotel room, and then look at a guidebook, and then learn a few facts about it, can be quite helpful. Then go back the next day, look at it again. And then you have a balance between knowing things about it, and still being able to experience it.

So in other words, you have then some information in your head is, oh, this is, I read about that. It was built by such and such, then and then, whatever. And then again, you have the spaciousness where you perceive.

And then you look at something else, and you are, this is the statue of the saint, so and so. And some, some knowledge about it, that you have had, might have overlooked a little detail. You can actually see a tear coming out of his eye or whatever.

Oh, yeah, there's a tear, he seems to be crying. Don't know why, but it seems And then again, you can, you can take it in without the commentary. So that's a little, you can experiment with that.

And so I'm using that almost as just an analogy for the whole of your life. Most people are stuck with the tourist guide in the head. It comments continuously of what's going on in your life and evaluates and interprets and defines in words, everything that you perceive.

And so, in whatever way it is defined or interpreted depends on your particular conditioning, on the way you were brought up, what you were taught by the surrounding culture, and so on. So the kind of tourist guide you have depends on your past. And so it's really your past talking to you continuously, certain forms of conditioning from your culture, your education, your family background, what you have read, your fears and ambitions are also expressed there as thought structures, which become thoughts, what you would like, want, what you fear, what if that happens?

Oh my God, this could go wrong. What if, of course, it becomes very problematic, because the voice doesn't stop talking. Except occasional moments, when you suddenly feel a heightened sense of aliveness, perhaps you're out in nature, and you're looking up at a tree or a forest, and for a moment you say, wow.

And then after a few seconds, the mind says, that's beautiful. But for about 10 seconds or 20 seconds, the mind wasn't saying anything. And that's the reason that you can know that it's beautiful.

Beautiful is not, the mind cannot really, the mind is concepts. There's no beauty really in that. If something from within you responds to beauty, for example, in nature, for a moment, there must have been a space of where the tourist guide in the head stopped talking.

And in that space, there is a deeper experiencing of whatever is there. There's a depth to your experience. What does that mean?

It means, yes, what you see is the same. But the state of consciousness through which you see it has deepened. A space has opened up inside you through which the perception happens.

And that's the depths. So you could say, when you look at something, and for a moment, you're not interpreting what you see. There's just the seeing.

And you may be aware of the background to what you see, which cannot be defined. But there's a stillness inside while you perceive. This is what I meant when I talked about entering a cathedral without the knowledge in your head.

So suddenly the mind has become still. And the perception happens. So you have two dimensions, you have a stillness in the background.

And whatever is going on outside is there. The stillness is the depth that changes your perceptions. Then you see that the tree also has a depth to it and an aliveness and a sacredness that you didn't know before.

When you were conceptualizing the tree and said, oh, that's such and such a tree and whatever knowledge you have, or this tree is in my grandmother's garden too, or this, I'd like to chop this tree up and use it as my Christmas tree, or I wonder how much it would be worth the timber if I cut it, how much the timber would be worth. You're not really, the tree is a surface phenomenon when you're in that state of consciousness, a utilitarian surface phenomenon. You cannot sense the depths, the aliveness, the sacredness of the tree.

And I'm only using tree as one of many possible examples. Life, the tree stands for life. It could be a human being.

You cannot sense the aliveness of that if you are totally trapped in conceptualization in your head. So there needs to be a depth to you in order to recognize that there is also a depth in life. Otherwise you walk around for the rest of your life skimming the surface of life.

Just every human being is a surface phenomenon because you just have judgments about them and whatever, it's just no depth. And then you can go into nature, and even there you will not know that nature has a sacredness to it, because you can't sense it, because you haven't, the space isn't there inside you to sense that when you go into a forest, an ancient forest, you've been there for thousands of years, that, and you cannot sense that that is a sacred space, because otherwise you would go, wow. And then you would, and if you don't know it's sacred and our civilization doesn't know, he looks at the forest as a utilitarian thing, how much would it be worth?

So the people who cut down the ancient forests, they don't know what they are doing because they cannot sense that there's more there than what appears to be there on the surface of things. But since they themselves are trapped in the surface of their own mind only, they have no idea what they are doing when they log an ancient forest. To them it's just a utilitarian thing.

You talk to them and say, what are you talking about? We're going to plant trees again. Yeah, but it'll take a thousand years to reach that sacredness.

No idea what you say, sacredness, what do you mean? It's a tree. We are harvesting the trees.

And so, and this is one example of what happens when you cannot get out of the conceptualizing mind. Life has no depth anymore. And getting out of the conceptualizing mind is what I call spiritual awakening.

So spiritual awakening has nothing to do with some kind of, suddenly you have a new spiritual thoughts in your head and you start talking about angels or even God. You suddenly start talking about God all the time and then people say, oh, he's become spiritual. No, he hasn't.

He's become religious. Religious without spiritual is an ideology. You could be a communist and then talk in those terms, whatever.

It's an ideology. Sometimes religious and spiritual can go together. But in many cases, religious only is just more thoughts in your head, but different kinds of thoughts.

And then God, of course, becomes my God. And your God is not the right one. And then you become my enemy.

And I will conceptualize you as the non-believer, for example. And the non-believers are evil, another concept. And the non-believers must be killed because we know the truth.

And the truth is our God. Concepts, concepts in the mind. You can no longer sense.

And then when you do kill somebody, you're not killing a human being because you cannot sense that there is a being there, another human being. You are killing. There's a mental concept there.

You have conceptualized, you have deadened, just as you've deadened the forest to yourself, you've deadened the other human being and made him into a, you put some label on. Non-believer. American.

And so it's not a human being, it's American. This is, and that's how it, this is how the madness grows. So, and of course, they don't know what, what's happened to them.

They don't realize what's happening. They are unconscious. And not unconscious in the conventional sense of the word, because unconscious in the conventional sense of the word means they're lying there.

No, not that unconscious. They seem to be very conscious, seem to be very alert with their guns or whatever they're doing. But they are unconscious because they are totally trapped in the conceptualizing mind.

They no longer sense the aliveness of life. They have deadened themselves. They don't know who they are beyond the conceptualizing mind, where they are completely identified with their belief structures that gives them, the belief structures give them their identity, their sense of who they are.

I am a, whatever label they have, we are, the we, we are, the only true, etc., etc. And then it's the others, it's the others, them, they're not alive. They're just their concepts.

So it's easy to, when you no longer sense what you're doing, to kill another human becomes easy because you no longer know that the human, the depths of the human being has disappeared. And that's perhaps why Jesus on the cross said, forgive them for they know not what they do. They have, in other words, they are unconscious.

They have not awakened. And so we are coming here from the tourists, going into a cathedral, we've, we've, and we've arrived at terrorists. Just an extension of really what is considered a normal state of consciousness.

And what it does to you to be trapped in that your whole life is a dreadful fate. And the reason why we are on this planet, why we have arrived at such a point of extreme crisis is that this state of consciousness that we have been trapped in for thousands of years is, has created and is creating increasing havoc and destruction. It destroys nature, it destroys human beings, destroying each other.

What we do externally is always a reflection of the predominant collective state of consciousness. And if you read the 20th century history, you see what human beings have done to each other. The only conclusion you can reach is they are mad.

It's quite mad. And 20th century is just the most extreme form of that madness where human beings kill each other by the millions. Often they don't even know what, what for.

In the end, you don't even know anymore what, what the whole thing is for. The First World War, they, what was that whole thing about? And then the First World War led to the Second World War and so on and innumerable other wars.

So we need the spiritual awakening then is for the planet or humanity to survive is an absolute necessity. So there's a depth of consciousness to you of which the thought activity is only like little ripples. You could say there's a vast ocean or lake, very deep, with lots of waves and ripples on the surface.

And the waves and ripples on the surface are the thoughts in your head. And so most people are trapped on that level. They don't realize that there is a depth underneath that, that is vast.

And that if they ever wanted to become creative human beings or bring anything new into this world, they would have, it would have to come from the depths. It can't come from this, just the surface activity of your mind. That's repetitive, continuously, same, same kind of thing.

Nothing creative can ever happen on that level alone. One day I'm going to compose a great piece of music. One day I'm going to write a great book.

Just have to wait. Well, not if you don't get out of that. Of course, the mind is needed to write a book, yes.

But you cannot have a deep or inspired thought if you don't make room, a moment for the depths inside you so that you touch something deeper. You need to become still for a moment when you sit in front of your computer or piece or notepad and want to write something new and creative, bring something new into this world. Well, where does that come from?

From the repetitive noise in your head? No. It comes if for a moment the repetitive noise in your head subsides.

That's the moment of stepping into the cathedral. Ah. And then you wait.

So there's a, open yourself to the stillness inside. It's there. You don't have to make yourself still.

Underneath, even in the most mad, the maddest person, underneath that, there is the realm of stillness. They just can't touch it. It's there.

So it's very easy to actually embrace, say, okay, you don't need to think all the time. You need to have spaces of no thought and it's not that difficult unless you're totally mad. But not that many people are totally mad.

Most people are partially mad. And the madness comes up occasionally in a more acute form. It's there.

So can you walk into the cathedral and be there as an aware presence rather than a mind burdened with knowledge? Can you walk along the street and look at another human being? Without commenting, just look and sense.

When there's no commenting, you can sense there's an aliveness in the other human being. There's an essence there that is deeper than, even deeper than your mind and deeper than their mind. And if you then communicate with that human being, while you, for example, while you listen to them, can you be still inside while you listen?

You might be talking about the weather. It doesn't matter. But be still and just be there as the space for that human being as you are there.

You are there at the space as the space for the tree and realize what an incredible phenomenon this tree is. Beyond anything that you could know about it through the mind, what you know may be useful for certain things, but there's a depth to that thing that we call tree that you cannot capture through that, but you can sense something. And the more you sense it outside, the deeper you go within.

And there is an even greater depth in another human being. And the more you sense the depth of aliveness in another human being, the more you sense it in yourself. It always goes together.

So relationships become problematic if both parties are totally trapped in their noise-making mind, then very quickly conflict arises in relationships. And that's why relationships are full of conflict because people can't get out of that. They have, they are trapped in here.

So every discussion when they disagree becomes conflict. You have an opinion. This is how it is.

I'm right. You identify with your mental position. Your partner has a different mental position.

No, you're not. I'm right. You identify with your opinion.

Identify means your sense of self is in the thought that you have in your mental position of this is how it is. Today, it's cold. Your partner says, no, it's not cold.

It's just mild. No, it's cold. I'm just giving an oversimplified example.

Even that could lead to an argument because are you accusing me of being a liar? Also moving in concepts. Well, you did lie last week.

I wasn't lying. I was just... And it goes on and on and on.

And it's all happening. The entire relationship is mind. Mind against mind.

So you identify with mind and that becomes the ego. The me that needs to be right. Always.

If the ego is wrong, it's death. It thinks, I'm dead. I'll die.

Can't be wrong. I need to defend my position. Dread will fade.

But it's normal. So having realized then that what is needed is to awaken out of complete identification with the continuous stream of thinking in your mind. Okay.

Well, how do we do that? Simple first step is to realize that there is a continuous stream of thoughts in your mind. This is the first step of awakening.

It's not saying I shouldn't be thinking. No, the first step is to realize that there is a voice that talks most of the time inside you. And perhaps that until now you had been so identified with the voice that was you.

You were talking to yourself. Sometimes people talk to themselves as I. Sometimes people talk to themselves as you.

You have a little voice that says you should have done that. Why didn't you do that? You're talking to...

The voice is talking to some other voice. And then perhaps there's an answer. Well, I couldn't help it.

Yeah, but you should have... So sometimes the voice splits itself into different voices. Talking to each other becomes even more mad.

And sometimes the voice also can have certain streams that one stream of the voice only comes up in certain circumstances. What some psychologists, they have discovered that this is the case. Some psychologists call it sub-personalities.

So in certain circumstances, perhaps a whining little girl suddenly comes up. But you're 30 years old. Why are you still...

It's a sub-personality. And suddenly you have a whining voice in your head that complains about how unfair life is treating me. It's a sub-personality talking.

And then when that subsides, something else happens. And another voice suddenly comes in and becomes extremely aggressive. Another stream, another aspect of that has arisen.

And so sometimes different voices take over. But really it all belongs ultimately to the one thing, the one voice in your head. So the first step to awakening, the beginning of awakening is to realize there's a voice in my head.

And it's especially useful to realize in the moment of it saying, for example, voices have all, most of the mind activities, old thoughts, old patterns, repetitive thoughts. For example, I had when I was younger, I had a frequent thought that said, whenever something that wasn't good happened to me, or that my mind interpreted as not good, the voice in my head would say, you see, bad things always happen to you. And then I was just waiting for the next bad thing to confirm that I was right.

And it would never have to wait for very long and something else would go wrong in my life. And I would say, you see, it's happening again. Always bad things to you.

I don't know why it's always you. And then, of course, you experience the emotion that goes with that kind of thought. And I completely believed in that thought.

I was so identified with that thought, I didn't realize this is just a thought in my head. It's not the reality. It's a conditioned way of interpreting the phenomenal world, the world outside you.

And so the liberation then comes with beginning to realize the voice is saying the same thing again and again and again. And it's not me. It's the voice.

Who realizes that? You. So there is a deeper dimension is suddenly there and you become aware that all the stuff that your mind is saying to you and to others when you have is not ultimately who you are.

But the awareness that at this moment, your mind is reproducing the same old thoughts. They are beginning to touch the depths that is within yourself that we could call the awareness, the aware presence, because knowing that there is thought in my head is not a thought. It's just a looking in internal aware.

Why do bad things always happen to me? And then you look at the thought and you realize the thought. So you begin to one could almost say you listen to your thoughts.

You become aware of the kinds of thoughts you think. And when this is for many people, the first awakening and what people realize when they first awaken, not everybody, because some people's thoughts are not too bad. They can live with it quite well.

They saw their thought activity is not predominantly negative, but many people actually find that when they become aware of their thoughts, they realize how many thoughts are actually negative. The majority of people become aware that the larger part of your mind activity is negative thoughts. There are far more negative thoughts than positive thoughts.

Not in everybody. Some people have quite a few positive thoughts. One could almost say it's easier for people who are trapped in a lot of negative thinking to step out of their thinking than people who have relatively nice thoughts.

Their inner urge to awaken is not as strong. If you live in a self-made nightmare as I did, the impulse to awaken is much stronger. Then you really, I can't stand my mind anymore.

I don't want to live with this mind anymore. Oh, that's good. It doesn't mean you have to kill yourself.

It just means you have to realize that your mind is not who you are. You are the awareness behind your mind. You are the space because the awareness is space.

It's not a thought. It's consciousness. So we are now slowly getting to what spiritual awakening is because we have looked at what spiritual sleep is.

We've seen what it means to be asleep or unconscious, normal in other words, normal existence. The entire world, not the entire world, there's some awakening here and there. More and more people, in fact, are awakening, going through the awakening process.

We now know what that is because it means you're no longer identified with the mind. Who are you if you're not your mind? You are the consciousness out of which every thought comes.

And then it pops back. It's like a wave or ripple. You are the consciousness that is far greater than any single thought or even greater than the totality of thought.

And that consciousness is experienced when you first touch it as inner stillness. Stillness doesn't mean you go to sleep. It means the mind is where the mind was before.

There's a space. And out of that space comes all creativity, every great realization or insight that any human being has ever had. The creative impulse comes out of the vast intelligence that is there.

And then the mind, it flows into the mind and the mind becomes an instrument for that. And that's how the mind can be a beautiful thing. When it's not just self-serving, but it is serving something greater than itself.

The mind as a master is mad. The mind as a servant is a great thing. So that's the shift in consciousness that is happening and needs to happen on this planet.

The mind finds its place as the servant of consciousness or awareness. So it's up to you then to invite the consciousness that you are beyond the mind into your daily life. And how do you do that?

You do that by inviting space, inner space or inner stillness into your life. For example, while you make a cup of tea or coffee, why not try to practice being still with every movement, just be aware, bring awareness into that every movement, pour the water, no commentary, look at a flower, look at a tree, look at the sky. And for just a few seconds, just look, listen to the wind, listen to the rain, listen to whatever sound you can hear and just listen.

Bring the attention to sense perceptions, attention to sense perceptions. That means the mind is quiet while you listen. The mind is quiet while you look.

And that's a little practice that you can do many times during the day and it will deepen your life. It will bring spaces into an otherwise, an existence that goes from one thing that you have to do to another thing you have to do and another thing you have to think about now. Then there's no gaps.

So the gaps are vital in daily life, inviting gaps into your daily existence, looking for the gaps in daily existence. In everyday situations, a helpful thing, as many of you already know, is to feel that your body is actually alive inside. Normally people are not aware of that because their whole attention is on thought activity.

But if you can feel that your body is alive, so some attention can be in the energy field of your hands and you feel, yes, they feel alive. There is an aliveness that pervades the entire body. Your body is full of life.

But most people can't feel that. So if you can feel the inner body that you are alive inside, the entire body at this very moment is a vibrating, alive energy field. And it actually feels good to have some of your attention there, even while you're looking around the room.

You can just, for people, people who are new to this can just start by doing it with their hands, feel the aliveness that's in your hands. You can feel it perhaps even more with your eyes closed. And then you can still feel it even when your eyes are open.

Simultaneous thing, you're present inside your body and you're present outside in your sense perceptions. What does that do? It means your mind becomes quite still because you can't be thinking also at the same time because you're already present in the body and you're present outside.

You become awake, really awake to this moment then. And your mind, there's not enough attention left then for thinking. Part of your attention is in the inner body and part of your attention is on your perceptions.

And what you perceive then is more alive than it was before. It's more surprising. It's more, it has more depth to it.

Every human being is more interesting then, more really there, new. Things are, you no longer feel that you're experiencing the same old thing again and again. Life then is always new.

Every day is a new day. It's not a repetition. As people grow older, they reach 30 years, 40 years, 50 years.

And for many people, life becomes more and more boring because it's so repetitive. And they no longer look anywhere. They go every day, they go to work, the same place.

They don't look at anything anymore. There's nothing to look at. I looked at it yesterday and last year and five years ago.

What's there to look at? And even people they live with for a few years, after a few years you don't look at your wife or husband anymore. They're part of the furniture.

And you don't look at your paintings anymore on the wall because they've been there for too long. You can't look. They're old.

And really, nothing new. And then you become that kind of person who said, I've seen it all. Don't tell me about it.

I know it all. I've had, yeah, I know. I know that kind of person.

I know that kind of thing. I've been there, done it. Been there, done it.

Life becomes more and more dull. Been there, done it. You're not there and you're not.

And so that's the, that's the fate of many people as they grow old in our civilization. And only a few, perhaps an increasing number now because more and more people are awakening spiritually. They remain alive, perhaps even become more alive as they grow older.

And then you have a truly, and then the person doesn't actually, you don't get, even if they are 70, 80 years old, you don't get the impression that they are old people. Because there is a light shining through their eyes. There is an aliveness to them.

And occasionally you meet people like that. They may be old in terms of calendar years, but they are not old inside. Because they are not, they are not burdened by their mind anymore.

Their mind is, can be used, but they are no longer being used by their mind, which says, I already know all this. And so every day is new and fresh and every moment is still alive. Because you're not putting your past, you're not obscuring it with past, the accumulated past in your head, putting it onto the aliveness of the present moment, stifling the aliveness of the present moment.

And so then spiritual awakening is then intrinsically connected with the aliveness of the present moment, the only place where life is. And so you are more and more open to the now rather than live continuously in past and future, which is normal. For most people it's future until they reach a certain age where there's not much future left, and then they live mostly in the past.

That's why old people, many old people continuously talk about the past. And the younger people continuously think about their future, where they're going to finally make it someday and find fulfillment in some future. When they have done or achieved this, whatever it may be, it could be a big house or recognition, or for spiritually inclined people it could be enlightenment.

But it's put into the future. I'm going to reach that place and then I'll be finally fully myself, fulfilled, happy, alive. I will become alive one day, fully alive.

But without ten million dollars in the bank, I don't think I can feel alive. Because I really need to have that sense of security, you know. I need the sense of security without which I'll just be in fear the way I've always been.

And you'll be surprised if the ten million dollars happen to come to you for a few weeks, you will feel alive. And one night you'll wake up and you'll be in the same fear as before. Because the stock market is about to collapse.

So spiritual awakening is becoming awake to the aliveness of this moment. And becoming awake to the aliveness of this moment, the all there ever is, nothing else is ever going to come. You can wait for millions of years if you lived that long.

Nothing is ever going to come that's not this moment. Your life will always be this moment. And it sounds, well, we know that.

No, you don't. If you don't live it, you don't know it. Life is always this moment.

You don't know this if you don't live it. It's only through living it that you know it. Otherwise it's just a concept in your head.

Yeah, of course, life is always this moment. And then what's next? Where's the next moment?

So you might as well then become friendly with this moment if there's nothing else. Be open to that. Don't stifle it with an excessive amount of judgments and interpretations and definitions.

But be open to the aliveness of this moment. Open means there's spaciousness here. So the shift is from a thought-based entity, which is the normal old way for humans, been for thousands of years, to a deeper entity that is based in awareness of presence, consciousness.

So because when you're not commenting on things compulsively, who are you? When you're not continuously thinking about me and my problems, at this very moment, let's say, pretend that you don't remember your past at this moment. In fact, you don't because at this moment, unless you start a thought process, at this moment, your past is not here.

You're just sitting here now. But pretend for a moment, actually, there's no past and there's no future. What's left of you?

If I removed from your past and your future from you now, what's left? I remember nothing. What's left?

I don't remember my name. Who are you? I don't know.

But there must be something there. Yes, there is something there. But I can't say what it is.

That's who you are. Consciousness itself. When you remove the content from consciousness for a while, then you realize that you are consciousness.

When the content, content is thoughts and emotions and thoughts and thoughts. When the content comes back, it obscures the reality that you are consciousness and you identify with content. And that's why some people have been able to awaken spiritually because life took away their content.

They lost everything suddenly. They lost their reputation, in other words, their name. It happens sometimes that life does these things to people.

They lost their money, their possessions. They lost even their family. They suddenly were killed in an accident, a big earthquake came, everything lost.

And they sit there, their house is in ruins, everything gone. And suddenly, some of these people suddenly had a deep spiritual awakening. Why?

Because life took away all the things that they had identified with as themselves, as the me. And what was left was what we just did now, here, when I asked you to pretend that there's no past and future, we took away for a moment content from your life. And when you remove content, because content is going to disappear anyway, it's not permanent.

Whatever content you have is impermanent in your life, things come and go. Or as the Buddha says, it's impermanence is the word. Transient.

Everything is transient. And that refers to content. So as long as you are identified with all the content in your life that can go very quickly, even your body can go very quickly.

But if you just, beyond content is consciousness itself, rather than what consciousness has identified with. And you are that. I am that.

You and I, on that level, are the same. We are, you're in essence, the essence of who you are is consciousness. Everything else is added temporarily.

It's a disguise. Consciousness disguising itself as this and that and that person, appearing in this particular form. That's the play.

Lila, the divine play of life, as it's called in India. And that's fine. The play is not to be rejected.

It's what you can only enjoy the play of the phenomenal existence, if you know what is beyond phenomenal existence. So it's only if you know who you are beyond all the things in your life, you can actually truly enjoy the things in your life, while they last. And you don't need to cling, because you know nothing is going to last.

Relationships, whatever, it's only very young people who think there are lasting things. Then you reach a certain age and you realize, oh, it's so many things have evaporated that I thought were permanent. And more things are going to evaporate.

And a few more things are going to come and then evaporate. So not to live and your life is no longer content based, but essence based. I'm giving you here in one little talk, the entire essence of what spirituality really is all about.

And that's that really, that's what it is. There's not much else that you need to know beyond that, in the sense of knowledge, accumulated knowledge. It is now a question of living that.

And if you don't want to live it, that's fine. It means you have to suffer a bit more until you're ready to make this shift until the shift begins to happen. A human being needs to reach the point of readiness where they say, okay, I've done enough madness.

I've suffered enough. I'm ready for the shift. I'm ready to say, okay, this moment is all there ever is.

I might as well become friendly with it, acknowledge it, give it attention in whatever form it comes. Because the form is not the moment. It's the form that this moment takes, the now.

It's not what happens. The now is not what happens. It's the space in which it happens.

And essentially, it is that space is consciousness. Everything happens in the light of consciousness. You can say, as some philosophers have done, they question everything.

Some philosophers, they said, is there anything I can be absolutely sure of? Because everything can be doubted. I can doubt that you exist.

You can doubt that I exist. It could be a dream. Who says we are not dreaming right now?

Who says that us sitting here is not a dream? You cannot know for sure. But even if it is a dream, there must be something real there because the dream must appear to something or someone.

There must be a light in which the dream appears, a space in which the dream happens. So even if it is a dream, the one thing you cannot question is the fact of being itself. Being is.

The being may be a dream or it may not be a dream. But one thing you can be certain is that you are. I am is something that cannot be doubted.

If I'm dreaming that I am, the essence of I am is still there in the dream then. And that's an amazing thing. That's to realize there's one thing that is beyond doubt and that's I am.

It's not as the philosopher Descartes said, I think therefore I am. He confused consciousness with thinking, perhaps because he was always thinking. So he was, he couldn't stop thinking.

And then he said, okay, then if I can't, if I can't stop thinking, then the essence of who I am must be thinking. I think, therefore, I know that I am. Well, he, he, he got, he stopped, he stopped too soon.

He should have taken one more step and realized that beyond thinking there's consciousness. And then realized because I'm conscious, I am. Because there is consciousness, I am.

I am that consciousness. And that consciousness that people believe in our civilization, that the consciousness is a byproduct of chemical reactions in the brain. And many psychologists or scientists actually doubt that there is such a thing as consciousness.

They say, no, there is no consciousness. It's just a chemical soup. But they do recognize that the brain is the most complex thing on the planet.

And they'd understand a tiny fraction of it only. So who built that incredibly complex thing through which consciousness comes, if not consciousness? So consciousness is prior to whatever appears here.

And it's a very complex thing. And what is the relationship between the brain and consciousness? Even some scientists are beginning to say that, recognize the possibility that consciousness may be all pervasive throughout the universe.

And the brain is like a lens through which consciousness enters this dimension. So it's like a receiver. It reduces and receives consciousness.

So when you eliminate the brain, it does not mean you eliminate consciousness. You eliminate the receiver. Like a TV, you can smash the TV and suddenly the image disappears.

But the TV didn't produce the image. So that is our meditation. I am consciousness.

Not something to believe in. But we're using those words only as a pointer to the essence of who you are. Thank you.

So as we sit here, I'd like to put a little question mark into your mind. And I'd like you to ask yourself whether at this moment you're thinking. So you will know the answer.

And try it again. I'll stop speaking for a few seconds. And just be alert inside yourself to find out whether you're thinking because usually you don't even know that you're thinking you're just you are the thinking.

So there's no outside thing that knows that you are thinking. You are just thinking. You become the thinking, the thinker.

And the thinker is the person. And to step out of the person, you have to experience that there is a dimension in you where the person is not. But something deeper is there.

That's what we want to explore. So again, a moment of stillness. In the power of now, I talk about a cat watching a mouse hole.

Now, if you've ever watched a cat watching a mouse hole, then you will have noticed that a cat could spend a long time there being extremely alert and just watching in the same way that my dog watches a treat when I put it down and say not yet. And then the dog goes. And so the cat watches the mouse hole is in a state of complete attention.

So one spiritual master, I believe it was a Sufi master, said his teacher had been a cat when he was asked who had been his spiritual teacher. He said a cat. How is that?

And he said, I watched a cat watching a mouse hole. And by watching a cat watching a mouse hole, I realized, I awakened. Because by watching a cat, he entered a state of alert attention, in which there's no thinking.

Like now, just that there's no so that just a short moment, but it's not matter how long is, it's a it's a wonderful thing to realize that you can not think. It's a wonderful thing to realize that you're still there when you're not thinking. As Oprah said, when we started for the first time with a moment of silence, and we then we started to talk again, she said, Okay, I'm still here.

I just checked in. I'm still alive. I'm still here.

I haven't disappeared. One more time. Be alert.

You need to be alert to know whether you're thinking or not. So there's an alertness like a cat. And there may be thinking or they may not be thinking they may just be the alertness.

I also mentioned in the power of now that another question you can ask yourself is, what's my next thought going to be? I'm going to just watch out, see what's the next thought is that's going to come into my mind. If you're very alert, it'll be quite a while before the next thought comes.

But the moment the degree of alertness decreases, thoughts come flooding back in. Interesting experiments you can do with yourself and your mind. Now, from the point of view of the usual thinking mind, the realization that there is a dimension in you where thinking either does not happen at all, or becomes unimportant to the thinking mind that is either a threat or completely uninteresting.

Because what could be less interesting than not thinking? So from the point of view of the thinking mind, the state of consciousness in which there is no thinking is either a threat. Oh, I don't want to go there.

I'm going to disappear. But of course, Oprah didn't disappear after the stillness. I'm still there.

I'm still alive. And then when she said that, I said, perhaps you're even more alive now. And that is pointing to something.

There is an intensification of aliveness when you begin to enter that, let's call it, dimension in yourself. The dimension in which compulsive thinking doesn't operate anymore. But you have to be careful because you could easily, because, that's okay.

What we're doing here is we rise above thinking. We become so alert that thinking either doesn't happen or is seen as unimportant. From there you can easily suddenly drop through thinking to below thought.

In other words, you go towards sleep. So when you stop thinking, there's the alertness. Here's the thinking level.

It's a normal level for most human beings while they are awake. And even when they dream, they're still going on. Here's the thinking level.

Underneath the thinking level, there's consciousness. Above the thinking level, there's consciousness. And even within thinking, there's consciousness.

Thinking is an expression of consciousness. But there are infinite varieties of manifestations or expressions of consciousness. This flower is an expression of consciousness taking on the form, this beautiful form, incredible beauty.

Consciousness being born into forms. And consciousness, not all consciousness is form.

There is a dimension of consciousness that is formless, out of which all forms come, the ground of all being.

And that's what we are exploring here. Thinking, you rise above thinking, or you fall below thinking. My dog is below thinking.

Now that doesn't mean that the dog is stupid. The dog has its own intelligence. And in some ways, the dog is superior to humans in some ways.

For example, it's more joyful than most humans, has more fun than most humans, lives more intensely in the present moment where life is than most humans, doesn't worry, like most humans do, and is loving towards all beings. Some dogs are loving only towards certain beings, but our dog is loving towards all beings. But the dog doesn't think.

The dog is conscious, but there's no conceptual thinking. I'm sure the dog doesn't have thoughts. The other day, the dog was in the bedroom in his little house.

Quite late, it was already night. The dog was already sleeping. And I was still doing things near the door, the entrance door to the apartment.

I was opening the sliding door and looking for something in my coat. And when the dog heard the sliding door near the exit, she came out. She must have woken up and heard a noise, came out running to see what I was doing, whether I was getting my coat to go out.

So she came running. And then for 10 seconds, the dog stood there looking at me and realized I was just taking something out of a pocket, and I wasn't going out. So after five seconds, the dog must have realized I wasn't going out and went straight back into her house and back to sleep.

Now, did the dog begin to think in her house, oh, I can hear something. He's opening the sliding door to the wardrobe. I wonder if he's getting the coat out to go out.

And then I need to have a look because he may leave me alone here. Okay, I'm going to have a look, see what's happening. And then the dog would go and look.

Oh, what's he doing there? Oh, I think he's just taking something out of his pocket. He's not going out after all.

Why did I bother to come out? I might as well go back to sleep. Now, I'm sure that's not how it happened, but that's what would have happened for a human doing that.

Now, the strange thing, how would that happen for a dog? All the whole thing must have happened without conceptualization. There was the listening to the noise, and there was a sudden knowing that that noise of the door could mean that I'm going out.

And then there was just getting up, running out. I'm sure, although you can't really get into the dog's mind, I've tried, I'm sure it was without any decision-making process or mental commentary. There was just an immediate response to a situation, and then there was a recognition of what was going on in that situation, and immediately not a decision to go back to bed, but just a going back to bed.

So there was consciousness there at work, but not through conceptualization. And for humans, of course, it would be usually different. There would be, as you're doing that, there would be the running commentary that I just mentioned, if the dog had a human mind.

There are some anthropologists who have looked at the history of the human race, and they wondered where or how did thinking start? When did humans begin to think? And it seems likely that at first there was no conceptual thinking.

There was only thinking in images. So when they closed their eyes, they should suddenly see certain images of things that had happened or things that they imagined. So the moment they closed their eyes, certain images would be there, and when they opened their eyes, they still lived very much like the dog, just an immediate response without the interference of conceptualization.

And then thinking started. And there's one anthropologist who has put forward the theory. He has some evidence for it.

I forgot what the evidence is, but his theory is very controversial. I believe, however, that he may be right. He believed that at first when thinking began to happen in humans, and thinking in the sense of words in your mind, those humans at first thought that some entity, a god or a spirit, was talking to them.

And so the voice of the god or spirit that suddenly appeared in their head said, oh, you better go to the lake and make sure that you catch another fish. And they would go, oh, why is there no fish today? Somebody is talking.

Why don't you go there? There might be a better catch there. Okay, thank you.

I got a message. I should be going there. It was their own thoughts, but for a long time, because it was something new, they didn't realize that these were their thoughts.

They believed some spirit helper or something was telling them to do something. And then, of course, sometimes it might also be the same kind of voice that is telling these days the terrorists to go and shoot people. You must shoot these evil people.

Go do it. Oh, okay, I'll do it. No idea that they are obeying something that is in their own mind.

And so that's how it all started. And then thousands of years passed. And now we have human beings who are completely identified with mind.

And their whole sense of self is derived from mind, from mind activity. And the awakening of consciousness is the realization that beyond your mind, there is a great depth to who you are, and great freedom, and a far greater intelligence than is in your thinking mind. Then the thinking mind can be used by that greater intelligence.

But for the thinking mind to be used by the greater intelligence, you have to find within yourself that greater intelligence, which we could call unconditioned consciousness. You have to find it in yourself. If we don't find it, we are going to kill ourselves because this evolutionary level where we are identified with thinking is no longer functioning.

It has become destructive. It has reached the end of its lifespan or usefulness. And so if humans don't achieve the transition, they will either regress to an earlier stage of development and then have another go, could take a few hundred thousand years, but the universe is patient, or the species becomes extinct and then consciousness simply decides to move through other channels to express itself.

It could be another life form very easily. Consciousness does not mind through which channel it comes into this world, but it wants to come into this world. I don't know why, but I know that consciousness wants to be born fully into this world from another realm, from the untimeless, unmanifested, where consciousness does not evolve.

It's already full and complete because it's timeless. But from the timeless realm, for consciousness, you can use other words if you want. The Tao, God, transcendental reality, it doesn't matter, just words.

That which we cannot name, it wants to come through, into, through the forms, into this world and somehow do something here. Perhaps it wants to dissolve this world, to outshine this world, to transform it, to spiritualize matter, transformation of the entire universe. But I know what our task is, to wake up here out of being trapped in your own little mind, the little mind.

It's not yours, it's just the human mind. And that's why I started today by asking you to see if you can have a little space inside yourself where you're actually not thinking, but still awake and alert. That's the opening into the greater intelligence.

At first it seems there's nothing happening. No, don't expect anything to happen. That will come.

It's the beginning. You open the door. You're opening the door to another dimension.

Now the thinking mind knows nothing of it and you cannot use it to enter that dimension. The moment you use it and try to figure something out, what's in there, you're out again.

You're not in that dimension anymore.

We are opening the door to another dimension of consciousness within ourselves. And then see if the door can stay open while we go about our daily business, or if it can be open occasionally as we go about our daily business. And from the point of view of the mind, it's not interesting, because to the mind it's nothing.

And that's fine. To the mind it's not interesting. And of course it isn't, because when you're not thinking for a moment, nobody could possibly call that interesting.

It's deeper than interesting. But at first it might appear, well, there's nothing there. There's nothing happening.

But you have to persist and see, wait a little, and see if you can enter that dimension more fully. Just you open the door and first of all you experience not so much a positive thing, but an increasing absence of negative things. All the negative things that are continuously produced by the thinking mind, by unnecessary thinking.

So as you bring that dimension into your life, you experience an increasing absence of the negativity that is normal when you're totally trapped in your mind. All the negative thoughts that go through your head and that emotions then respond to. So our destiny is to shift from thought into the realm of no thought, and then being able to use thought from there.

In fact, who or what is it that then uses thought? The intelligence that is the realm of no thought then uses your mind. And then you become productive in this world.

You contribute something truly new to this world in whatever form, whether you're an artist or a writer, or you work with people, or you are engaged in some organization. You then make a very different contribution because it's no longer ego-based. Ego is the unobserved mind, the mind without awareness, that you mistake for who you are, me, the person.

And it's a dreadful thing to live your entire life never going beyond the personal dimension, never seeing the transcendent dimension in yourself and in the world. So it's essential then to no longer be trapped continuously in thought. And don't expect results from the dimension of no thought.

It could be a while before there's any tangible result on an external level, in other words, that you suddenly write a masterpiece, or you suddenly become a great performer, or suddenly you help thousands of people with this or that, become a beneficial influence in this world. It could take a while, and we don't know what form it'll take. It may not happen immediately, that as you begin to enter that dimension occasionally, and then the mind says, you see, nothing is happening.

I've been practicing being free of thinking for a few months now, and my life hasn't changed at all, still the same. In fact, it's become less interesting because I worry less. Of course, worry makes your life very interesting, and it gives you the impression that your life is so important.

I have, my life is so important that I'm worrying all the time, and these are very important things I need to worry about. And so then from the point of view of the mind, your life has become less important. So, okay, I've been doing it for several months, that's enough.

I'm going back to my old ways. And sometimes people write to me and say, okay, I've been practicing awareness, presence for a year now, and where do I go from here? And there were years when I lived mainly in the state of awareness without any, many tangible results.

Occasionally, I would help people, that was very nice, I enjoyed that, help would, not I would help, but help would come through that opening. But beyond that, there wasn't much happening that went on for years. And occasionally I thought, well, there is more that could happen, but it's not happening yet, but that's fine.

And in the meantime, there was a, I realized retrospectively, there was a, whatever words we use are not quite right, but let's just put it like this, there was a build-up gradually of energy, of presence power, one could say. There was an intensification of that in the background of my life that had no visible manifestation really in the external, not very much. And so that presence was there and one day, in fact, I gave a little, it came to me to say, please, I can do more.

I said to myself, accelerate, please, accelerate, acceleration. I was talking to myself because you're always just talking to yourself. And then a little bit later it happened and and then the energy stream came that became a book and so on.

And an intensification of what I was doing already on a very small scale, but suddenly there was a coming into this world. But for years, there was just empty space mostly inside, walking around and just very pleasant, enjoying the beauty of every moment of the trees and of the animals. And something was there in the background and then finally it came into this world.

And perhaps when it's, it may well be that after a while the energy stream that goes out may subside again and I just go back into just the space. In some way I do that continuously because after a talk you go back into. So there's the coming out of the consciousness stream going into words and into energy that flows out and then return into just stillness, space.

No need to think very much unless there's something to think about. Where am I going for dinner? Where do I have enough?

But even there you can, it's amazing how many things you can do without unnecessary thinking and just experiment. I recommend that you experiment in your daily life. This is the most beautiful spiritual practice.

Experiment whether you can do many little things without the interference of thinking, with just presence or awareness there. Because what I mean by that is you are conscious that you're doing something, but you're not thinking about it. And whether you can actually even register things without formulating words in your mind.

If you have a, if you, little things, little experiments, it's all very fascinating. You can have a little clock, if you have a watch or a clock that doesn't have, especially if it doesn't have digitals on it, you can experiment with yourself and see whether you can look at a clock or a watch and know what time it is without in your mind telling yourself what time it is. And that's quite a strange thing.

There is a knowing without conceptualization then. If you know that it is a certain time, whatever it is, without saying to yourself that time it is. You don't do it with a digital clock because when you read the numbers it's almost impossible not to say the numbers in your mind.

Just one little experiment. And then many other things when you're doing a certain task, every master, when the moment you become a master you don't think anymore. Intuition takes over.

Otherwise you can't be a master. Now sometimes you have to learn first gradually through the mind to do something. There may be certain steps that you need to learn, whether you're building something or whatever it is that you do, learning to play the piano or whatever it is.

At first it's driving a car, whatever. At first it takes effort to learn, to become an artist, a painter. You learn the techniques and so on.

And then a moment comes when all that is not helpful anymore. If you never go beyond the techniques you won't be a great artist. The great artist knows the techniques and then steps beyond it and then something else takes over.

And that's where your life becomes empowered. But you need to open the door to the empowerment. You cannot get there through thinking.

And even something that seems to be an intellectual thing like writing a book, if there's any inspiration or power in the book, whether it's fiction or non-fiction, it has to come from the place, the empty space inside you that you go into where you, for a moment you close your eyes and then you look again and nothing comes. You go back and you look again until something comes through spontaneously. But it won't come spontaneously.

You have to have learned, you need to learn to write first before you, I mean, before you can write a book you need to be able to write. Or if you want to become a great tennis player, you cannot go into the state of no thought very deeply and suddenly step on the tennis court and take a rack and be immediately a great tennis player. You have to go through many steps first before the intuition can take over.

But that's where the dividing line is between somebody who has learned to do something well, and many people do that, and somebody who brings in something new or goes beyond doing something technically well, where inspiration comes in, where empowerment comes in. So it's vital to find that dimension in yourself. So go around your daily life, see how much you can actually do without the interference of conceptualization.

It's amazing, and observe yourself. Is it possible for you to be for a moment free of thinking at any given time? For example, now, no thought, just presence.

You haven't disappeared, but what is there to add to this moment by thinking about something? Nothing. You don't need to add anything.

And what is there then when you're not thinking? What's there left of you, what you had called you? There is definitely something there.

No past, let's say, because to have a past you need to think about your past. To have a future you need to think about your future. Now, if you're not thinking about your past and your future, you don't have a past and a future.

There's only now-ness. There's only this moment. So you have, let's say, you have no past, you have no future, there's only this moment now, and there's nothing to think about.

There's still something there, and that's the essence of who you are, consciousness itself. It cannot be defined. It's neither big, nor small, nor fat, nor thin, nor old, nor young.

Timeless essence has no form. There's nothing much you can say about it, but there's definitely a strong sense of beingness or aliveness that's left when you take that, the rest away. And that's what you take thought away.

You haven't disappeared. In fact, thought wasn't at all who you are. You thought so, but it wasn't.

If you take thought away, you can actually, you touch the essence. You know the essence. And when I say you know the essence, that's not absolutely correct, because the moment we use words, we create duality.

You know yourself as the essence. You don't know it like a subject and object knowing. I know this, in this world, that through thought there's always the knowing subject and that which is known.

But here, the knower and the known are one. You know yourself to be consciousness. It's not separate.

There isn't a me that says, I am consciousness. There's consciousness. You know yourself as consciousness.

I am that. No separation, no division anymore. And when I put it into words, it sounds almost complicated, because we cannot really verbalize, because it's too simple.

It's not a differentiated state. Everything out here is differentiated. This is undifferentiated state of pure intelligence or pure consciousness.

It's always there to be easy to just touch it in you. It's always underneath the mental noise in everyone. It's there for you, waiting for you, almost one could say.

It's waiting, and it wants to come through you. Just open, open, and it comes through. It doesn't matter if you are a saint or a sinner.

You open, there's a space between two thoughts, and it comes through. What you did in the past is irrelevant, whether you accumulated many spiritual credits by spending 20 years in a monastery, or whether you are stuck in a prison and the opening happens. Spirit doesn't ask, well, are you qualified for me to come through?

It will come through wherever there is an opening. So your personal past doesn't have that much to do with it. The only thing is it got you here to this moment where you realize the possibility of living in a different state of consciousness.

Your past got you here. Well, that's good enough. Whether your past was a successful past or a failure past, whether you built up great things already in your life, or whether you messed your life up completely becomes irrelevant.

So you become free from the past through this, because another dimension comes in. This is why it has happened to some people who were criminals, and at some point suddenly all that subsided, and a space opened up inside them, and the unhappy self suddenly wasn't operating anymore. Now, to some people it comes as a spiritual experience, which means it comes and then after a while they say, oh God, it's gone, I lost it.

Okay, that's the normal thing. Sometimes it comes once and stays forever. You never lose the connection again with the open space.

But for many people, first it comes and then it leaves them, and they don't realize that they can actually welcome it and encourage it. You don't have to wait for it to come again at some point. Why don't you ask for it to come back?

I'm not saying you ask like, please come back. No, you ask for it to come back by simply walking across the room without thought. Just see if I can walk across the room without needing to be already where I want to get to, the door.

Just be present in every step. Can you be present in each step as you walk across the room? Oh, you're not thinking, you're just present with that.

Can I be present while I look out of the window to check the weather, and can I know what the weather is like without saying something to myself or having some kind of relationship or attitude towards the weather? Can I open the window and say, nothing, just look and know. There's either sunshine or there's rain or whatever it is.

You open the window and there is an awareness that's looking through your eyes. And do you have to say something to yourself then? Do you have to say, oh, it's another dreary day.

I can't take any more of this. Do you have to say that, or is it just an old habit that you've slipped into? Do you have to say, oh, I hope it stays like that today, or whatever, it's going to be too hot, or whatever comment you have, do you need to comment, or can you look out of the window and just know and be the knowing without conceptualization and without like or dislike.

Just allow it to be and know. In the same way you would, I suggest that you can look at your watch and know what time it is without saying to yourself what time it is. So you look out of the window, and for a moment there is a space.

You are the space through which the perception happens. You are not a person. Don't worry, the person is still there on some level, so you're not going to be spaced out for the rest of your life and then walk around, oh, I don't know where I am anymore.

That doesn't happen. But it's a wonderful thing if you realize that you can actually be there as the conscious space for whatever you are looking at. Even at this moment, you're looking at this person, and this person is looking at you.

Can you be the conscious space for the perception, for the looking, rather than be a person that always has some kind of thing to say, like, what's he talking about? That's a thought. I don't understand.

That's a thought. Can you explain more? I don't get it.

Don't believe that thought. The thought says I don't get it, and of course on the level of thought you don't get it, but on another level you get it. You get it by being it.

And so, can you be in your car at the traffic light and just be there as the space for the perception of the red light? It's peaceful. Suddenly the traffic light becomes peaceful.

You are there as you're just seeing. There's the seeing, and there's the space. Why comment on the red light or think about something that's going to happen or might happen or happened in the past or something?

Just be, perceive, and be the space. And then the strange thing is that which you perceive is more alive, and even the traffic light, the red light, has a beauty to it. It sounds very strange, and normally it's only sometimes people who take acid talk about weird things like, when I saw the traffic light, I went, wow.

Now, you don't need to take acid for that, and it may not be a wow, but it may be, wow, that has its own beauty and aliveness, that color. And you're not saying it, you just know it. And so, if you can see the traffic light like that, even more so, that will be the case even more so if you look at the tree that's right next to the traffic light.

It has a presence, it has a beauty, it has an aliveness beyond the concept of tree or the birds that just landed on a branch. An aliveness, a beingness that you then recognize from your own beingness and aliveness that before was obscured by mental noise. Unless you become like little children, because this is something to do with how little children perceive the world before they conceptualize.

Unless you become like little children, you cannot enter the kingdom of heaven. Oh, so that's what it is. But it's an even deeper state than the child state, because the child still has to go through the thinking stage and then come out of it.

The child still has certain things still in common with the dog, not quite, but still no conceptualization, just wonder. And so, that's a gradual practice of choosing to step out of the conceptualizing mind whenever it is unnecessary, which is about, depending on your life activity, 80% of the time, you don't need to think a lot. Thoughts may come and go, but you don't, there's no need to continuously think.

It's become familiar with spaciousness. And then think when it's necessary. And you be empowered then in your thinking becomes actually empowered.

You can actually, if you wanted to create something in this world, this is what some popular books talk about, manifesting your external reality. Of course, you can, through applying focused thinking, you can manifest, but if you're in touch with the spaciousness, the unconditioned consciousness inside, then that comes through and will manifest through you. And then it comes as a sudden knowing that this is what I want to do, but the I that wants to do it, it's not the ego I, it is the deeper I.

So you become aligned with what the universe wants, it's not just what the little me wants. That's the beauty of that. So you can then, you as the greater consciousness, can manifest if you want to.

Don't fall into the trap of believing that something that you manifest is going to bring you fulfilment. It's only on the external level, the fulfilment needs to be there already now. Fulfilment is being in touch with that dimension in yourself before anything happens.

That's where fulfilment lies. The rest is the divine play of form. But the divine wants to play out there.

It wants the manifestation. It wants two things. There are two movements in the universe.

One is the movement into differentiation and into form and into birth, into bodies, into thinking. The universe started from a point of nothingness. That nothingness became one, let's just, it's all not quite right because we can't really talk about it.

Out of the nothingness came the ball or whatever before the Big Bang happened. There was just one point of potentiality for the entire universe. Then at some point the explosion, if we could call it that, out of that was the beginning of the process of differentiation into increasing number of different forms.

And we are still part of that explosion into greater and greater differentiation. But at the same time there is, this is the pull, the outward pull. Then there's the inward pull back to the source, to the timeless source out of which it all came.

And so we as human beings are at a transitional stage where we are becoming strongly aware of the pull back to the source. So there are two movements in the universe. One is out into more and more form and more and more thinking.

It's still there, that movement. There are still many people who believe that the problems of this world can be solved if we just think harder about them, have more committee meetings about the problems of the world and discuss them. And eventually they can be solved.

They don't realize that the problems of the world are there because we have lost touch with the source out of which everything came. So by going into further differentiation we cannot solve the problems, we'll actually increase them. So we need to balance now, return to the source and going out into the world.

It doesn't mean we don't do anything anymore. We can still create and do, but not lose ourselves in creating and doing and thinking. Lose ourselves in the mind, connected with the timeless, formless source of all life within, the space of no thought, connected with that.

Then we can create, not we as persons, but we as a universal movement of consciousness. Consciousness wants us to be co-creators of the universe, of form. So we can be that, but only if we are connected.

We need conscious connection with the source. So that's the destiny. That's your life purpose.

That's why we are here. And if it sounds complicated to your mind, it's only to the mind. It's not complicated at all.

It's actually very, very simple. It's so simple that you can't think about it. While it's wonderfully still in here, usually in these places you have some background air conditioning sound, but here you just have stillness.

So we can start by noticing that it is still in this room. And of course, the moment you notice that it is still outside, you're still inside. You have to be still for a moment to even notice that there's silence outside.

So it's already a meditation to notice that there is stillness. You can do it in the middle of the night if you wake up. That's usually the most silent time when most people are asleep.

And you simply notice that it is silent in the room or outside, and you cannot notice it by thinking about it. That's the wonderful thing. To notice that it's silent, you have to become silent inside.

So there's already a shift in consciousness. But the simple fact of becoming aware that there's silence around you, you've become silent within, which means for a moment, the stream of thinking has subsided. But you haven't gone to sleep.

You're alert. You're awake. There is a space that has opened up inside you.

And I would say that the silence is part of nature also, because wherever you go in nature, and we'll be talking about that, or there may be sounds. Nature has all kinds of sounds, produces all kinds of sounds, from animals to the wind to the rain to the flowing water and so on. There's always also the deeper dimension of silence.

So if you walk in a forest, for example, you hear all kinds of subtle sounds. But underneath all the subtle sounds in the forest, there is an all-pervasive silence also. Now, if you go into the forest only with your mind, then you will only notice the sounds and what the mind will try to interpret.

Oh, that's such and such a bird. That's that and that's that. It will label.

So that's fine. You might think you're present in the forest, but you're not really. You're simply judging what you hear.

But if you become aware of the silent dimension underneath the sounds and in between the sounds, then you become present, because the moment you become aware of the silence, you also have become silent. The mind has become still. In that moment where you notice, oh, there's silence.

In that moment, not perhaps when you say it, then it's also you're already back in words. But before you say it, so you are able to notice it, that means a space has opened up inside you, a space of awareness, of presence, of no thought, of a shift in consciousness, in fact. It doesn't matter if it only lasted for two seconds.

It was there, a shift. And you can't really remember it. You can't memorize it.

It's not memorable, because in that space of silence, nothing is happening. The silence itself is eventless. All events take place in the silence, but the silence itself or the inner stillness itself is eventless.

And this is why I sometimes say these talks that you listen to are not interesting, because the interesting means mind stuff. What really matters about us being together here is that we enter the deeper dimension together. And that deeper dimension of still presence is not interesting, because it's not differentiated.

You can't say they're not bits and pieces in anything. Oh, look at that. Oh, look at that.

In the same way that the sunset is not interesting or the sunrise. It's too vast. It's too awesome.

You can't say, oh, that's an interesting sunrise. No, you just go, wow. There's nothing.

It's not. It's beyond interesting. It's deeper than interesting.

It's deeper than the mind can analyze. The moment the mind starts analyzing, you have reduced it, and there is a place for that also. But that's not the vastness of being.

There is a place for analysis, but if you're lost in analysis, continuous compulsive judgment and analysis, then, well, life becomes impoverished. You're lost, then, in the mind. So you have to be able to use the power of analysis of the mind, yes, but not be used by it.

And then you can have thoughts. Of course you have thoughts. You're not going to be totally free of thoughts.

But the important thing is you then have a thought. The thought doesn't have you, because it's terrible to be had by a thought. And so that the whole subject matter of our gathering is to connect more deeply with yourself.

And we may be talking about nature, but really we're talking about yourself, to go deeper so that you have a very deep connection with who you are beyond the movement of thought, so that your identity is not derived from the movement of thought any longer. You can still think, but your thoughts are no longer telling you who you are, opinions about who you are, which then translates, of course, also into opinions about other people. And so you can relate more deeply to others when you're present, but first you need to find that depth in yourself.

And we'll see today how nature can help us with that. Once you found the depth within yourself, all your relationships deepen. They have an added dimension.

And you can then see that relationships that do not have the dimension of depth are very surface phenomena. There's no true relationship. It's just two mind-made entities, two minds are bouncing off each other with their opinions and mental positions and so on.

And even if they're talking about something deep, it's unlikely it will be deep, but even if it sounds deep, it won't really be deep because the depth doesn't come from the words. I don't know if each one of you perhaps remember something that I remember. I don't often talk about the past, but I'll just bring it in, just one little memory now because it's relevant to this moment, what we are saying now.

And perhaps you have a similar memory. I have a memory of being 10, 11 and 12 years old and being mostly unhappy as a child because of, I was unhappy at school, didn't like that at all. At home, my parents were usually in conflict, so there was no peace there.

And if there was peace, I knew it was only a brief interval between conflict. So even when there was no conflict for a day or two, I knew it was like walking through a minefield. And so that's the case, of course, with perhaps some of you had a similar experience.

And there's nobody to blame, it's just people act according to their conditioning and level of consciousness. Nobody can act beyond their level of consciousness, so you can't really blame anybody. Of course, they suffer their consequences, yes, but that's another matter.

So, I was basically an unhappy child, but I was given a bicycle at the age of 10, and we lived in a city, but it was only a short bike ride, 15 minutes or so out of the city. And that was my salvation. And I would quite often, occasionally even, I just didn't go to school.

I just said, goodbye, I'm going to school, and then I went off into the country. And then I reached the outskirts of the city, not particularly overpowering landscape of exceptional beauty, just ordinary, some wheat fields, occasionally groups of trees, groves, hedges, but it was nature. And I would slow down on my bike, and very slowly, and start to look.

I looked at, and I listened to the wind, and the leaves, and birds, and I slowed down. And then every time I did that, I was shedding a burden, and a sentence would repeat itself in my mind, and it's a strange thing. I didn't know why, I didn't even question why I thought this particular sentence, and that sentence was, this will always be here.

And this kept repeating itself, this will always be here, this will always be here. Years later, I remember that I realized that sentence must have meant, that I must have realized that there's the man-made dimension, and there is nature. And nature compared to the man-made world is virtually timeless.

There's a, the time spans in nature are virtually infinite compared to the short-lived man-made things. So what I actually experienced at that time was transcendence through nature, transcendence of my personal condition, the narrow suffering condition. So nature enabled me to experience that, the transcendence of a different dimension that is beyond the man-made world.

And perhaps some of you have similar memories when you were a child, how you related to nature, or how nature helped you or gave you a sense of support. And I believe there aren't many children nowadays that are actually deprived of that, unfortunately, because they are so captivated by their electronic gadgets and computer screens and so on that their main attention is in this world of little screens. So it's important for every parent to encourage children to experience nature, vitally important for their well-being, as it is for every human being too, for every adult.

Now, there may be one or two people being with us here, there, who perhaps are stuck somewhere in a room and can't get out because of physical disability, or they may be in prison, and they say, what can I do? What can we do? We can't get out into nature.

Well, you need to remember that your body also is nature, so you can start there. Every time you take a breath, that's nature. Nature is breathing.

The air that you're breathing is nature. The very fact of breathing is a natural process. It's not choice.

It's done for you. It's not so much that you breathe, although we say, I breathe, but you're not the body breathing, so it's a natural thing that happens. You wouldn't say, I'm beating my heart.

You don't do that, but that's the same thing. The body does it. It's a natural process.

For some reason, we say, I'm breathing because breathing is semi-voluntary. You can stop it for a while, but not for that long, because if you stop it for too long, nature takes over. So, you live with nature, with your body.

So, even if you can't get out, you can start by being aware of that level of yourself, the physical level, the natural part of who you are, the body, and not just by saying, okay, I'm looking at my hands or my feet, not just the physics, not the external image of the body, but you can go into the body with your attention, and that's, you're in nature. Even if you're in a present cell, you can do that, and even if there's no opportunity, you might be in an office block in Manhattan, and you look out of the window, and all you have is maybe a little bit of sky. Okay, there's a little bit of nature there.

You can look at that, but you have more nature than that in yourself. So, as you sat in your office, wherever it is, go within first, be conscious that breathing is happening. The body is breathing.

Be conscious also of the preciousness of the air. It's such a precious substance. So, to acknowledge that is actually part of what sometimes is called to live in a state of gratitude.

Now, some people say, what can I be grateful for? There's nothing in my life that I can be grateful for. Well, are you breathing?

Yes. Well, you start there. If you start being grateful for the tiniest things, then gradually that expands, and that shift in consciousness of honoring life, no matter how small it is, the manifestation of life as yourself.

By honoring that, gratitude arises, and a totally different state of consciousness then brings about good things. But you have to start with the good that is already there. There's not enough good in my life, people say.

I need more good. Life hasn't given me what I needed. Start with what you have, and the most obvious thing to start with is, I'm breathing.

And it's something very beautiful to feel that you are absorbing this energy that is air, that then merges with your being. It's an amazing thing to honor the process of breath, to honor the fact that you are breathing. You can start with that.

That is being, becoming, honoring the present moment. If you're looking for the present moment, which is, of course, all there ever is. Some people write it in The Power of Now and were surprised.

And they're still surprised when I say the present moment is all there ever is in your life. There's nothing, there is no past and future in your experience except when you think about it, but not in your actual experience. Oh, well, yes, it's actually true.

The greatest philosopher could come and he could not argue with the fact that you only ever experience the present moment, there is nothing else. The mind asks, well, where is the present moment? Well, start with your breath.

That will always take you into the present moment because you're breathing now. And you're only ever taking one breath, this one. All other breaths you either remember or anticipate mentally.

And it's actually said that the Buddha recommended this as a meditation, maybe even before the Buddha, but the Buddha certainly recommended that people should be aware of their breath as a meditation. He didn't say, as far as I know, that that will take you into the present moment. And he didn't say that will actually stop your mind, too.

He just said, be aware of your breath. And so breath awareness meditation has become a Buddhist meditation that's practiced. But the dangerous thing is with practitioners of meditation is they make it into something to be achieved through it.

They want to become good at it. You can't become good at one breath. This is just one breath.

So there's nature and there's the present moment. Here, now, here. Oh, and I thought there was nothing to be grateful for.

I'm breathing, or breathing is happening. And then as you become aware of that, you're beginning to feel that your body is also alive on the inside, to feel that there's an energy that is pervading the entire body. That's nature, and it's very close.

You can't get to a tree that close as you can to your body or anything else. So really, the closest you can ever get to nature is there in yourself as the physical body. But when you become aware, now, this is something for each one of us to do right now, not to do, but to notice.

There's no doing as such because we don't have to do anything. You can do, sometimes it helps to move about, to get a little bit of sense that your body is alive. It can help.

But you can see there's, the body is alive. Can I feel that? Yes, the breath is happening and there's aliveness in my feet, my hands, my legs.

Very subtle at first, but it's there. And there's nature, and that's already a deeper level than what you see. Out in nature, when you look at a tree, you can't, to get deeper than the image of the tree, you have to have gone deeper within yourself so that you can sense the aliveness of the tree.

You cannot sense the aliveness of the tree unless you can sense the aliveness in yourself. If you don't sense the aliveness in yourself, you're only approaching the tree with your mind and your mind might say, oh, that's a nice tree. But you're missing the depths of it.

You're missing the fact that there's more here than what the mind tells you there's here.

When the mind says there's a tree or a flower or whatever it is, what you're looking at and call a tree and then believe that the word that you have attached to it actually describes its reality, no, it's a label, it's an abstraction that you put onto this thing that you cannot really understand. It's a vitally alive, mysterious being with great depths.

It's as much depth as you because all forms, all life forms are connected and come out of the one source of life. So you're beginning to go to feel that when you feel the aliveness of the inner body. It's not quite the deepest source yet, but you're going towards the non-physical, the life energy that comes from the source.

So connecting with yourself through breath and feeling the inner body is part of connecting with nature. Often people only notice nature when there's something unusual happening, for example, a thunderstorm. You cannot help notice that.

Suddenly there's a flash of lightning or you go to a place where there's a tornado happening. Of course, then you notice nature or you go out into alpine regions, high mountains, overpowering. You're climbing up mountains and suddenly you hear, as I remember a few years ago in Switzerland, I was walking and suddenly you hear a huge, like a cannon being fired.

And there were chunks breaking off the glacier. And of course, that is such an overpowering thing. It stops you and you go, wow, is it coming this way?

But most of the time, nature is more subtle than that. And so to notice the nature in its subtle aspect, which is always there, now that requires you to have a certain degree of alertness, attention, alertness is required. You have to, in other words, if you are totally immersed in the thinking mind, you miss the whole thing.

And even sometimes I walk in the forest quite often. I see people walking, some are wearing noise machines. It's as if the noise machine that they have in their head anyway were not enough.

They put speakers onto their ears so that they don't hear nature, don't hear anything natural, just hear. And even those who don't have these things on their ears, whatever they are these days, technology changes so quickly I no longer know what they're called. I can't catch up.

It's no longer CDs, so at least this is old-fashioned. It's other things now, digital. Even if they don't have that, often I can see two friends walking in the forest and they're talking to each other, animators, nothing wrong with talking to each other, but they don't, 98% of what's around them they don't notice.

Occasionally they say, oh, look at that, and then, okay, let's talk about something more important. And even people walking alone, often they're not really there. They are partly there, but a lot of their attention is still in their thoughts.

And even if they are looking and saying, oh, this is, they're exclusively there as the judgmental mind, the interpreting mind, not yet as presence. But nature offers such a wonderful opportunity to enter the state of presence, which is a state of spacious awareness of just that. There's no conceptualizing thought happening, just spacious, aware presence, the most miraculous state for human beings to be in, the next stage in human evolution.

Nature offers you that opportunity more than anything that is man-made, because everything that is man-made has been made with, to a greater or lesser extent, the mind has come in and transformed nature into something that still is, if you trace it back, everything goes back to nature. Even a piece of plastic cannot be made without something natural to start with, which then the mind transforms. And even a car, everything in the car, if you trace it back where it comes from, of course it comes from nature originally.

But in the intervening time period, the human mind has transformed it into something else, and there's nothing wrong with that, except that the man-made things are not as suitable for going deeper and experiencing the state of presence than things that have not been made through thinking, that came spontaneously out of the one consciousness out of which everything comes, produced by the one life, the one underlying intelligence field.

Everything has come out of that, and there is no thinking that goes into the, when nature manufactures a flower, look at that, it doesn't say, let's have a committee meeting and draw up a blueprint and talk about what shape should it be, let's put into the computer the proportions of it and work it all out, it gets very complicated. And they could never manufacture something like that, the subtleness of it, the incredible delicacy of it. So this, yes, of course this has incredible harmony and beauty, but no conceptual thinking has gone into its making, it's not, an intelligence has created that it must have, but this is not analytical thought, has not created that.

And this is why the flower then is more suitable for entering the state of no thought, of pure presence, than, for example, this clock. Because the moment I look at this clock, the mind says, oh, it's such and such a time, and it's nothing wrong with clocks, I like ticking clocks, but, and once you are firmly rooted in presence, you can look at anything and be free of thinking, and you can see the beauty even in a clock or a car and say, wow, oh, it's just, but to, as a help, nature is much more helpful because nature exists in prior to thought, we could say, evolutionary scale. I could have held this flower up and stopped speaking, and the Buddha's silent sermon 2,600 years ago, people still remember it, he sat there and he was going to speak and then suddenly he saw this flower and he took this flower and looked at it for how long, nobody knows, but it must have gone on for a long time and everybody got restless. It's called the Buddha's silent sermon.

And then after half an hour or one hour, we don't know, because they didn't have clocks then, one of the, because they were all monks at that time, other people didn't have access to anything, to spiritual teachings. I talk about that in the New Earth at the beginning. One of the monks, all the other monks looked puzzled, what's he trying to do, what's he saying?

And one monk suddenly started to smile, and the story goes that he was the only one that understood that sermon of the Buddha, the one who smiled. And this smile was, according to the story or the legend or the scriptures, the smile was passed on from generation to generation of teacher and pupil. So he became a teacher, that monk, and they say he passed on the smile, which really means the realization, to the next and the next and the next, and after six or seven or whatever generations, it became the origin of Zen.

That's how the story goes. So what is it then that he smiled about? Well, let's not conceptualize it.

I think you will realize it for yourself as we progress here. Are we then returning, when we go into nature, are we then returning to the level that trees live at, or flowers, or minerals, or birds, whatever it is? Is it an act of return to a primordial stage of being?

Not quite. We join whatever natural thing it is that we are perceiving, we join it in the state of no thought. But when we go there, we've gone through thought already.

We rise above thought. The flower exists below thought. And then we meet in the dimension of no thought.

But at a very deep level, we do not become the flower or the cabbage. Well, if you had a choice, you'd probably rather be a flower than a cabbage, but cabbage is beautiful too. We are not regressing.

Cabbage is fine for the cabbage, but not for us. The cabbage is totally at ease with itself, one with a source, doesn't inhabit a world of problems, doesn't generate conflict. The cabbage is rooted in being.

So is the tree. So is the flower. And even the dog, well, most of them, and the cat, except those who have lived for too long with neurotic humans, they are rooted in being.

And this is why people love dogs and cats. There's actually a deep reason, a deep meaning to that. Because they can sense that the dog or the cat is more deeply rooted in being, is more at rest within him or herself than the human.

The human has gone out very far from the source into further and further differentiation. Everything originates from the one source of all life, the unmanifested, formless, timeless, one source. Everything then comes out of that source.

And humans are a product, a very differentiated product, gone out a long way from the source, a little bit like the prodigal son in the New Testament who leaves the father's home and squanders his wealth and becomes destitute. He's left the source. He's gone so far out that he becomes destitute.

He doesn't remember his origins anymore. So the dog, and even less so the flower or the tree, they haven't gone out that far, so to speak, from the source. There's still more of a connection with their origin.

And this is also why they are not fearful of death. They don't think about, oh, I'm going to die. And when an animal dies, an animal is very accepting.

It surrenders into that. It doesn't make a problem out of living, and it doesn't make a problem out of dying. It doesn't live on the level of problem-making, which is a level when you lose your sense of connectedness with the source, and this is because you identified with the thinking mind, then a world of problems arises.

You create a world of, that's what you manifest then, and that's what you end up with on this planet, on this beautiful planet which is paradise. You end up with layers and layers of complexity and increasing problems. Oh, my God, it's all getting so complicated.

It's just survival is getting complicated, very complicated. So really now when we talk about nature exists closer to the source, we have gone out very far, and for us it's not a return to the original level where the animal lives or the tree lives. It's a transcendence where you regain awareness of the source of being with full consciousness rather than as a natural state and you don't really know.

The dog doesn't know that the dog is one with being. He just is one with being. The tree doesn't know.

If you tell a tree, are you one with being? If a tree could understand you, of course, which it doesn't, it doesn't have conception. Are you one with being?

I don't know. But if you look at nature, everything exists in its, it's so much, so at rest within itself. It has so much integrity.

Everything natural has such integrity. Integrity, the word originally means being one with yourself, not having split yourself into two or three. For example, when you say, me and my life, the tree doesn't say me and my life, my difficult life.

The tree is life, an expression of life. The human says, I have a hard life. And the hard life that the human says he or she has is a mental construct because it has no real reality except as a movement of thought because the only real life that you have is at this moment, ever, always.

This is your life now. I'm sitting here, breathing, perceiving this aware presence. This is life.

This is your life. The rest is memories or anticipatory thinking. So the dog doesn't have a life.

The dog is an unproblematic expression of life. So is everything in nature. It is life manifesting, the one timeless, sacred, the one, deep down, the one formless life becoming form as millions of life forms coming out from.

They say with the Big Bang it all started. Who knows? Before the Big Bang there was nothing.

Nobody understands that because you can't understand nothing. No thing, no form, no time. Out of that void, which is also the fullness of infinite potential, came the forms.

More and more differentiated over millions and millions of years. And then finally it becomes the human mind, the most differentiated as far as we can see. There may be others even more mad somewhere else in the universe.

Continuously thinking and analyzing and evaluating. And then the entity that has to carry that mind is completely out of touch with the source. Not only you're not cut off from the original source, the original oneness, you just don't know it's there.

And so that's it. That's the state of being lost. Lost in your mind, lost in the world, split yourself in two or three, having a life that you don't like, me and my life, me and my story, my sad story.

And then life is perceived no longer as a joyful expression of the underlying oneness, but becomes a burden. It gets heavier and heavier. And so this has happened to humanity.

Humanity is, this species is at a critical stage now. There's a possibility of a shift into a deeper state, or a higher state if you want to call it that, of transcending conceptual thinking, going beyond. And that's what we're going to talk about in a moment.

You can still think, but no longer trapped in thinking. This is where humanity has to go. And as you transcend conceptual thinking, you regain what was lost eons, eons ago.

You regain your sense of connectedness with being. You feel deep down you're connected with something vast, and it's not different from who you are. It just, when we put it into language, it sounds as if that was something different from who you are.

You're connected with being, with a sense of simple beingness. Being is, comes from the word to be, to be the most primordial thing. And everything in nature is an expression of that underlying beingness, and including the physical body.

This body, this body. All that we perceive in this world is existence. Exists, it exists.

This body exists. This body exists. Underlying existence is being.

Being is the formless, timeless dimension within yourself. It's very much like the black hole at the center of the galaxy. When I was writing The Power of Now, I wrote, I don't know why I wrote that, it just came to me one day.

I wrote, there is a black hole at the center of every galaxy. And the editor saw it and said, you can't say that because you don't, how can you know that? The people are going to argue with that.

So it was taken out. And some years later I read, I read an article by a scientist and said, now scientists believe that there is a black hole at the center of every galaxy. And so, why did I know that?

I knew that because I could feel the black hole inside myself. This spacious, formless, one life. The origin.

And so, and I know that the human being is a microcosm. It's just, you can understand the whole universe by understanding yourself. You are just a microscopic version of that.

So that's the, we are regaining by no longer being lost in the conceptualizing mind. We regain something that was lost a long, long time ago. Very much like the prodigal son in the New Testament.

Your origin. Not your origin in, you can't say, it's not really your origin in time. It's not saying, okay, my origin was six billion years ago.

That's where I started. When the Big Bang happened, that was the beginning of me. That's true, of course.

That was the beginning. But it's not so much that the origin is in the distant past, or not even in the near past. The origin is timeless.

The origin of your being. It is still there. This primordial nothingness, nothingness before the Big Bang is still in you now.

Nature can help you rediscover that. If you approach it, not with the conceptualizing mind, but you approach nature and perceive nature in a state of alert attention, spaciousness. And that's a wonderful, wonderful, first we could call it a practice, but then it's no longer a practice.

It becomes a natural way of being. First in nature, and then even in the man-made world. But we need to first of all be able to, we are going into it now, do it in the forest, or on the beach, or in the field, wherever it is, before you can be in that state in the shopping mall, where everything, it's not so, being, you can't really find being that easily.

You have to be rooted very deeply in yourself to find being in the shopping mall, because everything is surface phenomena. Buy me, do this, do this, eat a hamburger. Look here, look here, and then after 20 minutes in the shopping mall, you're totally exhausted because all the energy is flowing out of your eyes into phenomena.

And music is in the background, not the most profound music. And yet you could be walking in the forest for three hours and not feel exhausted, in fact, feel invigorated. Isn't that strange?

So the shopping mall takes it out of you, and the forest, or whatever, or the beach, or the desert puts it back. There's something there that's very, very different, but not for everybody. There needs to be the openness and the alertness so that all the seemingly insignificant things in nature, you are alert to that.

And that, for example, you're looking at, you're walking a tree, a slight movement of leaves in the breeze, perhaps a sound associated with it. Your senses are alert, not strained, there's no tension, you don't go... No, just alert.

In that alertness, of course, there's no thought anymore, because if you were thinking you would not be alert. Thought is not alert, it's a lower state. Alertness is a higher state than thought, higher consciousness than thought.

But good thoughts, which means creative thoughts, original thoughts, original insights, can only come out of the alertness. You need to have the alertness and then sometimes thought becomes fruitful and original and creative out of that. But if you never touch the alertness, then thought is repetitive.

Old records, CDs, not records anymore, and not CDs anymore, old iPods or whatever. So, nature then, you have to approach nature with that alertness, attentiveness, like a little child, as if you had come there for the first time, into that place. Let's say, maybe you drive somewhere, or it's close to where you live, you get out of the car, out of your door.

For most people, even wherever you live, there will be something natural when you step out of your house somewhere. Even if you live downtown, there may be a little tree somewhere. Not acknowledged by most people, almost everybody walks past it without looking, because they have more important things to think about.

But you, for a moment, you acknowledge that. Not by saying, oh, I should be acknowledging the tree. You just acknowledge, you give it attention.

And in that moment, you notice little things about it that before you didn't notice, how the quivering leaves, how the light shines through the branches or the leaves, how the light interacts with the tree. And you notice all these things without having to call it anything. It's just a noticing.

And this is a practice. You can practice that as a choice, because you choose to relate to nature in a different way. And when you do that, then nature gives you something back.

What it gives you back is some of that energy of connectedness with the source that the tree is still in. This energy comes back to you. The tree gives you that back.

It says, have some of this. I have more than enough. So it helps you to feel that connectedness.

But you are also helping the tree. I'm saying that intuitively. The tree hasn't spoken to me like that.

Maybe some trees speak to some people, but not to me. Well, Prince Charles, years ago, said he talked to the plants. And that's, of course, a wonderful thing.

And I think he not only, he meant he not only talked to the plants, I think he meant he gives them his full attention. And ever since the newspapers have been making fun of him. Because they don't understand.

It's just the mind doesn't want to understand that. So you're giving it attention. It's not just that the tree, and I'm only using tree as an example.

It could be a tree. It could be a flower. It could be an entire forest.

As, because the attention that you give, you can give to either a single natural phenomenon, or being, like a tree, or a flower, or even a blade of grass, or a little plant, whatever it may be. You can also give attention to a more inclusive energy field, like an entire valley. That is, it has its own energy field, its own, its own spirit almost, one could say.

Or a forest as you walk. So there are two modalities, one could say, of being there in, let's say it's a forest. You can notice single things, like trees or plants, and for a moment you give them some, give them attention.

There's a looking in alertness. And then you look at something else. And there's no choice really involved in not saying, okay, what can I look at now?

It happens naturally. Your eyes, you'd look at this, and then suddenly you look at something else. And then you look, you take in the totality of what's there, just a general, without always necessarily focusing on one thing, you take in the totality.

And that is, there's an expression in Zen which is translated as a choiceless awareness, an expression that also I believe Krishnamurti used. Choiceless awareness of, so you take in the totality of what is around you. And then the entire energy field of what's around you then connects with you, and you connect with it.

So it gives you what some of that connectedness with a source that nature never lost almost transmits itself to you. But it's a reciprocal process. What you give nature is the awareness of itself.

Because we need to remember that nature, it's not that you are separate from nature, you haven't been put into nature, you have come out of nature, you are nature also. You are nature that is in the process of becoming conscious of itself. And so what you then give back to the tree or the flower or the forest is awareness of itself.

It recognizes, because this flower, I would say it does not know it is beautiful, it just is. The flower is. Its beauty is there, it comes from the source.

And now when any human perceives this flower as a true act of perception, not conceptualizing it or judging it, but something responds from within. Something is touched within. There's such beauty there, but even to call it beauty, you don't need that.

There's something there, something within responds, almost a recognition. And when you perceive in such a way, you realize that you and it are not separate. The illusion of separation which is created by the thinking mind disappears.

And there's a sense of oneness. When you are not calling it anything, this pure spacious perception, immediately there's not me and the flower. There's a continuum.

The flower arises within the field of consciousness. It comes out of that. And so this is really what love is.

You love the flower because you recognize it as ultimately one with who you also are. You're connected to the source. Through the flower you can connect to the source, but you feel it within yourself.

It's an amazing thing. Allow nature to take you back by choiceless awareness, presence. You can allow nature to take you back to the source, but as it takes you back to the source, you are going to the source with the awareness, full awareness of the beauty, of the sacredness, of whatever you want to call it, full awareness.

And then suddenly you have a love of nature and a deep empathy with nature that even the people who lived before the human mind developed into the monster that it has become now. There were people who lived close to the land, close to nature. That was a natural oneness.

They didn't even know it because there was nothing else. So natural, simple people who lived close to nature, they didn't know the preciousness of nature because you can only know the preciousness when you're beginning to lose it. Then it becomes precious.

When there is nothing else, then it's just what is. In the same way, if the entire world were painted green, the color green would not exist. You wouldn't know it.

So this is having lost, which seems like a tragedy on the one hand, that we lost connectedness. Well, we didn't lose it, but it's forgot our connectedness with being or with the source became obscured. We almost, we could say we lost it.

And it seems a tragedy, but it's not really, because it, I believe it was a necessary cycle in the evolution of humanity, because it's only by losing it that you then regain it at a deeper level and a new level is reached. And that is why we are here. That's the process.

But your practice then needs to be bring your gift to nature. Nature has a lot to give you, but it only can do that if you bring your gift to nature. And that is, that gift is consciousness, awareness.

You are there when you go anywhere in nature or even in the city street, there will be something, whether it's, it can be the clouds, it can be even be aware of the sun, the sunlight, that's nature too. Acknowledge all these things with your awareness, by bringing awareness to it. And that looks like I can only, one can only say that much about awareness.

It needs to be experienced. And what I mean by awareness, you can never understand unless at least for a moment you become aware. I could be speaking for weeks about awareness or presence here and you would not know, conceptually you might know everything about it then.

You could write a PhD about awareness or presence without ever having, knowing what it really is. So, let me just demonstrate very simply what awareness is. It's just senses are alert, visual.

Even if there's nothing to hear, you can still have an alertness, auditory alertness. And you know what happened, I talked about it at the beginning, the mind becomes still. When you have nothing to hear, there's nothing beautiful, there's just what raises awareness.

To become aware of what awareness is in yourself is the key. Nature can help you there and speed up this process. So, but the vital, you don't need anything beyond this moment.

You have nature, I said, and you carry it around with yourself, in yourself as this physical form. Awareness is the key. Sometimes it's called attention in some teachings, doesn't matter.

You remember the Zen teacher who would always say when they asked, please explain the meaning of Zen, he would always go like that. And that was the explanation. Another Zen story, the disciple said to the master, I'm going off somewhere else now, can you just write something down for me so that I remember the essence of the teaching?

Obviously, he didn't have it yet, otherwise he wouldn't have asked. He still thought it was something memorable. So the teacher wrote on a little piece of paper or whatever they had, attention.

And the disciple looks and says, okay, can you just say a little bit more, please? I need a little bit more. And so the master writes something else.

And the disciple looks and reads, attention, attention. Oh, well, he said, I want it just a little bit more. Just, can you just write something else?

And then the master writes, and the disciple reads, attention, attention, attention. So the disciple becomes a little bit frustrated. And well, I know that now, the disciple says, what does attention mean anyway?

And the master says, attention means attention. That's the end of the story. Whether he got it or not, we don't know.

This attention is the vital thing, and there is no tension in attention. It just happens to be a similar word. So if it's, there's no straining, there's no, it's not concentration.

Concentration is just focusing on one thing, and there's always some straining involved with it. It goes, attention, it facially looks like. So that's not it.

There's a little bit of the, the very young child, if you can, that, in true attention, there's a little bit of the openness of a very young child in whom the conceptualizing mind hasn't started up yet. Before the child starts asking the question, what's this called? What's that?

What's that? And before they start asking, why? Why?

Why? Before all that, of course, they have to go through that stage. But before that, there's a moment when there's already consciousness beginning to blossom, but not yet taking form as thought.

So there's a short period where the child is in that state of open attention with light shining through their eyes, and then they go. What we are then really talking about is the cessation of thinking, of having to think. Not forever, thinking still happens, but there's actually the choice not to think when there's nothing to think about, which is a lot of the time.

A lot of the time, nothing is added to this moment by thinking about it. The depths, the fullness of life now, you cannot add really anything to it by thinking. Some situations require thinking, that's fine.

Many situations don't require thinking, that's even better. And if you have to think prior to thinking, enter the state of attention or no thought just for a moment, and you will see the quality of thinking improves, the thinking that you then do or that then happens. But to have spaces of not thinking, that's what nature offers you, otherwise you're not really using the vastness of its wealth, nature, when you are thinking about it.

The vastness of that is only accessible to you when there is the spaciousness of not thinking. It doesn't matter for how long you don't think, don't try to stop your mind as such, because that creates a conflict in yourself, and you would perhaps try to exercise willpower, and you may have limited success if you go out into nature and say, I mustn't think. And you'll probably stop breathing too.

So there's no, there's no, no willpower that can't do that. One way of not thinking naturally is, yes, bringing attention to sense perceptions can be very helpful there. Just bring attention to sense perceptions.

Then there won't be enough attention left for thinking. If you're fully attentive with your senses, there's not attention, not enough consciousness left for producing thoughts. Just you're too alert.

That's a simple thing. Another one that is, you can do in daily life and not just in nature, is work with the present moment, and accepting what is now. Whatever form this moment takes, you say, fine, this is what is.

And then you will think much less. A lot of thinking is there because you're trying to get away from what is. So if you can become friendly with the present moment, you become more relaxed, open to life, and naturally the compulsive thinking mind subsides because there's only ever the simplicity of now, of this moment.

So that's a, you can do it in nature more easily than in the office, of course. You can do it in nature more easily than in the shopping mall. You can perhaps do it more easily when you're alone in nature than when you're with a friend in nature, because two people together, most people think, okay, what can we talk about now?

Let's talk about the stock market.

[Speaker 4] (4:14:16 - 4:14:16)

Okay.

[Speaker 1] (4:14:18 - 5:23:58)

So it's probably easier alone than visiting your family. Visiting people with whom you share a lot of past. To then to remain clear, present, requires more intense presence.

So nature then is a good place to start being present. And then you, a wonderful thing happens then as your, as presence deepens, you can bring your presence anywhere you go. Even visiting your relatives.

Or even the shopping mall, not that you might choose to spend more time than necessary at the shopping mall, because the compulsion to acquire, which is a substitute for a feeling of aliveness, will have left you. So the compulsion, what can I get now? Why this compulsion to buy things you don't really need?

Because for a moment you get a sense of aliveness, and that moment is quite short. It's when you pay for, when you pay for the stuff and then they put it in the shiny bag and then you say, there you are. Oh.

And then you walk home and there is the bag and then you take it out and then the sense of fulfillment quickly leaves you. And then so that this means of course another visit to the shopping mall is required. And so why that?

Because for a moment you feel there's a sense of lack in most humans that comes from disconnectedness from this. They cannot sense the being within them. They cannot sense that the aliveness, the being that they are.

They cannot sense the I am, the primordial sense of beingness. They're disconnected from that. They're up in the head and the head says, I need, and now I need, what else do I need?

I need this and I need that and I need that. Where can I go? Look, maybe that will do it or that.

Oh, I need another meal. I need another chocolate cake. Whatever, on whatever level the neediness manifests, it will be there.

I need another relationship. I knew somebody who had enough money and he bought one car, a very expensive car and there's nothing wrong with that. It's fine if you enjoy a car.

But very quickly he found it didn't have, it didn't fulfill him the way he thought it would. And so I think that was a, what was it, Aston Martin or Bentley or something. And then he bought a Ferrari and then for a while that was, yeah, that's it.

And then that wore off also and then he bought another one. They had three cars standing there and he said, oh, that's a piece of garbage. It's a piece of garbage.

See, it wasn't fulfilling anymore. And so that really is whatever, all these are substitutes. And of course, unfortunately, if the whole economic structure that we, well, it's a little bit shaky now, which is probably a good thing, but the whole economic structure can survive only if enough people still live in that neediness to consume.

If not enough people consume, they say this is very bad, the economy is going downhill fast, people are not consuming anymore. Of course you will. So what I'm talking about is the neediness, the neediness to have substitute fulfillment then goes.

So we create a different, very different society, very different world is then created. Of course, the transition will be a little bit painful for some people. But the more you are surrendered to life, to the present moment, the easier it will be.

So nature then is the, can be for many people, the entry into the state of being, connectedness with being, because nature is really being. Through every form of life, being speaks, not through words, being communicates itself to you through every natural form. And within yourself also through existence is the forms of life, existence, billions, billions of life forms.

Underlying the billions of life forms is the one life. So you are that, I am an expression of the one life, a temporary expression of the one timeless life. Can you sense, that question is, can you sense the one timeless life within yourself as consciousness?

Can you, at this moment, can you feel your own presence, your own awareness? These words are not quite right, it's not yours, nothing is yours. But let's just for a moment put it like that just to get you there.

Can you feel, can you feel your own presence, which don't mean you're thinking, I don't mean your feelings, they may be there, but underneath it, isn't there, isn't there a presence that perceives this moment as in whatever form it arises at this moment? Isn't there an underlying light, isn't there an underlying space in which all this arises? Even if it's all a dream, it might all be a dream, but even then, if it is a dream, there's no point in arguing whether it's a dream or not, isn't there an underlying space in which the dream arises?

Somebody's having this dream, who is that somebody? You. But not you as the person, the person is part of the dream, if it is a dream.

Well, it's dreamlike, that's for sure, because everything passes very quickly, it certainly is dreamlike, our existence is dreamlike, no doubt about that, but who is having this dreamlike thing? To whom is it happening? To me, who are you?

You can't attach a name to it, you are consciousness, the essence. So when I say, can you feel your own presence, another way of putting it is, can you be aware that you are aware at this moment, aware of your own awareness, aware of awareness, self-awareness, self-realization? You don't need to think, there's nothing to understand in it, nothing to understand, just that.

Yeah, that's the transcendent dimension in you, it transcends everything. Transcend means it's beyond. As it says in the Buddhist scripture, something like, what is it, gate, gate, paragate, beyond, beyond, gone to the farthest shore, gone beyond.

And this is not some extraordinary state reserved for one person in a billion, it's a natural state, because we had lost it for so long, it just seems so extraordinary. It's the most wonderful thing if you can go into any situation as that clear space, not as a person. The person is there for a while, you can still bring the person out of the cupboard when you want it.

If people ask me, what do you do, or whatever, usually I say something, I'm a writer, okay, that doesn't create any problems. I don't, I'm not saying, I am formless consciousness and I was never born, and that would lead to problems. So you can pretend that you are a person and then give a clear answer, and that's fine, and still know that that's not the truth at all, not that you're lying, but it's a tiny, tiny temporary aspect, and still be there as a spacious presence in any situation, doesn't matter where anymore, just spacious presence.

And a lot of the time, don't need to think, just be there as a presence, and you are truly, that's true intelligence coming into this world. Real intelligence is not what the IQ test measures in you. I'm incapable of doing IQ tests, I mean, I've never done one, but I just looked, glanced at one, and I know my IQ would be very low.

My mind doesn't work in that way, it doesn't work analytically, and so, that is only a tiny aspect, it's not, this is not true intelligence, and I'm not saying that because my IQ test would be low, it's not, nor should it be an insult to anybody who has a high IQ, and I'm now removing their sense of identity by saying it doesn't matter that much whether your IQ is high or low, it's not that, but there's a true, the true intelligence is the unconditioned consciousness.

The thinking mind is the conditioned consciousness, conditioned by the past, conditioned by innumerable factors, conditioned by the language that you inherit. There's past in every word that you inherit. The moment you start speaking a language, you inherit an entire world view that's associated with that language, an entire energy that comes with the language that you're born into, and then that becomes part of who you think you are, your identity.

It's not, it's a temporary acquisition, it's a form of conditioning, and then people are, I'm English, German, Italian, Greek, whatever, it's nothing to do with who they are, it's a form of conditioning. So, and then there is the unconditioned underneath it, spacious awareness, unconditioned, and everybody, it's in everybody, you just stop thinking for a moment and there it is. And the mind says, oh, that can't be that insignificant because there was nothing happening just now.

And then you don't need to desensitize yourself anymore and all the other substitutes that you may have for a sense of aliveness, whatever drugs people use to feel more alive for a little while, relationships, they need to change relationships quickly because quickly the novelty wears out and then, okay, maybe somebody else will finally make me happy and do it for me. Maybe he's right here, or she. And there's nothing wrong with any of these things, buying something or even enjoying a drink or whatever, but the compulsive nature, then, is no longer there.

You don't need substitute aliveness. Another one, of course, is drama in relation, you need the drama to have, to feel, we are still alive. We haven't been fighting in one month, something must be wrong.

Even with your dog or cat, if you have a dog or cat, approach them as much as possible, not through language, of course, sometimes you speak, but approach them just bringing also awareness, just look, watch your dog or cat, how he runs around or rests or eats or sleeps, and just bring aware presence, look into their eyes, connect with the, because there's so much being coming through them, through their eyes, and that's why people are drawn to dogs or cats, they love them, and even people with big egos, they sometimes, when they see a dog, they go, oh, for a moment the ego subsides, for a moment they look into the eyes of the dog and they feel a little bit more themselves even, more, oh, and again, it's the being that speaks through this little animal, more connected than the master, than the owner, the being of the dog, and this is what people relate to in the animal, this is why they spend so much money on their animals, because it gives them a glimpse of being, of that connectedness, but it's a secondary thing, but if you can be, the dog can help you if you bring, always realize it's in you, you feel that in yourself when you relate to the dog or the cat, it's not in the dog, it's also in the dog or cat, but it is primarily felt here. Thank you.

Thank you. Let's talk about meditation today and whatever else arises out of that, you never know beforehand. Meditation, as you may know, I don't teach meditation as such, not so much as a separate practice.

Presence practice, bringing presence into everyday life, is meditation, but there's also something to be said for having a structured practice every day, and it may not be right or absolutely necessary for everybody, but many people will find structured meditation every day helpful. The thing is, I've come across many meditators who are extremely accomplished, have been practicing meditation, structured meditation for 20 or 30 years, and still they find that no matter what states of consciousness they achieve or enter into in their structured meditation, there's still a huge gap between their everyday life and their state of consciousness while they meditate. In other words, they tend to be almost as unconscious as a non-meditator in everyday life.

So there's a gap that can arise in people who practice structured meditation between, this is my meditation, and then you get on with the rest of your life. Meditation in the morning and the evening, and then they move out of their meditation into the rest of their lives. To exemplify that, there's the example of the meditator, a man who is meditating on metta, a Buddhist meditation called loving-kindness, where you spread loving-kindness out from you, says, goes something like, may I be well and happy, may I be well and happy, may I be well and happy, and as the words are used as pointers so that you emanate peace, you can feel yourself, and then you include the next circle, may everybody in this house be well and happy, may everybody in this city be well and happy, gradually you expand, may everybody in this state be well and happy, in this country, the entire planet.

So it's quite a beautiful meditation. Anyway, this man then was practicing the metta loving-kindness meditation, and then the door opened and his daughter came running in, and so he opened it, I said, can't you see I'm doing my meditation? Get out of here.

Every day you disturb me while I'm doing it. There's a gap between the practice and living. So if you are a meditator, or if you take up meditation, beware of that, and very important, meditation must not be confined to just one time period when you sit down, when you sit in wherever you sit, on the floor, on a chair, on a cushion, and close your eyes.

Meditation needs to seep into everyday life, and this is what we call, of course, this is what we always address here, what the teaching is all about, that's the presence practice. And sometimes I recommend little, what I call mini meditations, and this is really a presence practice that you can do wherever you are, and in any situation. So I recommend, for example, every time you get into your car, when you close the door, not to immediately reach for the ignition, but to sit for at least about 30 seconds.

Don't do too much, not necessary. 30 seconds, and be present during those 30 seconds. You can choose either to have your attention on sense perceptions, visual, auditory, give it your complete attention, or you can have your attention on the fact that you are breathing, or you can have your attention on the feeling of the inner body as you sit there, the aliveness in the body.

30 seconds, unless there's an emergency, you need to get to the hospital, your wife is pregnant, then don't do it, or there's an extreme emergency. Now, many people live their everyday life as if their entire life were an emergency. It's not the case, that's a deep-seated form of conditioning.

In other words, they live in continuous stress, and that's really treating everyday life as a continuous emergency. Can you imagine living like that? And don't imagine it, many people do.

Living is amazing. So what does that mean? A continuous emergency means there's a continuous, enormously powerful pull that pulls you out of yourself and out of the now into some kind of pursuit of future.

That's the emergency, because the emergency means I need to get there. There are some real emergencies, as I said, you may have to get to the hospital, or you may have to, whatever it is. But mostly it's not a real emergency, it's a form of conditioning.

The entire civilization is conditioned and conditions you in that way. It starts at school, it starts the way people live at home, in their family. There's always stress, always something to do.

I don't personally have much experience anymore with visiting families like that, because most people, if I visit people, they're already present, already living in presence. So I don't have that much contact anymore with the normal dysfunctional families. But I know that many of them still exist, the majority.

And I sometimes see it in films, when you see very quite realistic films, where you see a family interacting. God, they're all insane. Let's do this, have you done this?

Come on, let's do that. What's the next thing we have to do? This continuous stream of things arising in your mind, one mind object after another, content, completely absorbed in the content of your mind, that's ultimately what it is.

And so never finding any kind of space in your life. And really that's what meditation is all about, finding that most precious of things, or no things, space. Without space, your life is, as I sometimes called Winston Churchill, when he talked about human history, one damn thing after another.

And that's how many people experience their life. Just one, what's the next damn thing I have to do? And then you have a succession of damn things that you haven't done yet.

They're just waiting. And they're saying, give me attention, give me attention. And so you're torn.

It's a normal way to live these days. And even professions that used to be cushy and comfortable, like being a teacher, have become extremely stressful. And places that potentially could be and certainly should be places of healing, like hospitals, many of them are madhouses.

And sometimes the only grace that is still there is the nurses and a few doctors who are not completely lost, and they bring some presence into that situation. But very often the entire, everybody else is on the verge of a nervous breakdown continuously. There are even TV soap operas about life in a hospital.

It doesn't have to be like that. So this is a deep-seated form of conditioning and the absence, the lack of space. And really that is, another word for space, we could say being, the sense of being, the formless and timeless sense of being or aliveness, spaciousness.

If that's lacking in your life, really nothing much is going to help you, no matter what you achieve, because the most precious thing is not there. The beingness, the connectedness with being, one could put it like that, some sense of inner spaciousness. That's where peace emanates, inner peace, can only emanate from there.

There is no peace to be found in any of the objects of consciousness. Sometimes the object deceives you and says, if I can only obtain this object of my desire, then I will achieve inner peace. Of course, then if you are lucky or unlucky enough to obtain it, then quickly you realize it didn't do its job.

It didn't do it for me. I thought fame would make me happy and complete it, and once fame comes, it comes to a few, to some it comes for a little while, fame is for a day, or you may be famous for a couple of years, or you may be famous for the rest of your life. But I've met a few famous people and unless they have gone beyond identification with that, they are as unhappy or more unhappy than non-famous people.

You very quickly see the downside of fame, big downsides. One of them being that newspapers invent stories about you. That's not true.

I never did that. I never said it. Why are they writing this about me?

Because they want to sell more papers so that you're being used by many people just to... So meditation then really is about, you could say, finding inner space, discovering inner space. I wouldn't say quite creating inner space because, although I might have said it once or twice, words are always never quite right.

You don't have to create inner space because inner space is your essential identity, the spaciousness of consciousness itself. So in that sense, you don't need to create it, produce it, achieve it, and here we come already to the pitfall that many meditators succumb to or fall into, whatever, is that unconsciously they make their meditation into something to be achieved, a means to an end. And then you try to get better in your meditation practice.

That sounds like a good thing to do, get better in my meditation practice. But what is being obscured by trying to get somewhere in your meditation, what's being obscured is the space that can only be accessed in the now. So for many people it happens unconsciously that meditation, which could be a great thing, if it's not done rightly, it's just another way of attempting to get to some future achievement through your meditation.

And of course you can achieve quite a few things. You can achieve a relatively still mind, but it won't be the real thing. There'll be some kind of willpower behind it.

It's not the discovery of inner space. You're holding, maybe you're holding the lid on the kettle. You can sometimes look at a person, if you go to a place where there's group meditations, and you can sometimes see that in some, quite a few people, there's a lot of strain and holding back while they meditate.

Some people, sometimes in Eastern places, in Buddhist monasteries, there are some Westerners and some Eastern people, and sometimes the Eastern monks are very impressed by the Westerners, some of the Westerners, because they can sit still, they have so much willpower, they sit there. And of course they're showing everybody how great are in their meditation. And of course that's not, you can see when there's a lot of wanting there, a lot of force behind it, and that's not it.

There's no discovery of inner space there, but potentially meditation could be used as a way of discovering space, inner space, finding it, connecting with it, and realizing that essentially you are it. Meditation then is usually connected, it's always connected with your attention. Directing attention is the beginning, and the essential part of every meditation is, where is your attention?

Now for most people, their attention is continuously absorbed by thought activity, very habitual. For many people that is so overpowering that they wouldn't even be interested in meditation. They may not even have heard of it, it's not part of their reality.

They are so absorbed in the continuously arising streams of thought, that beyond that nothing exists for them, and they are not looking for anything, because apart from the continuously arising thoughts, they don't know there's anything else. They are so identified with that, that apart from the thoughts there is nobody there. At least they don't know that there is a deeper dimension.

It is obscured, completely obscured. So those people are then, we can say they are trapped in their ego, because the meaning of ego is complete identification with the stream of thinking, whereby the stream of thinking becomes invested with a sense of self. And because you are identified with every thought that arises, and that sense of self is the ego, the false self, normal human condition.

So, and often it is only when the living in that way creates more and more unhappiness, that at some point the unhappiness or the stress either makes you ill, or in itself is enough to create so much tension that something happens, and that is the good side of suffering or unhappiness. At some point there's a slight awakening, and there's a little crack in the egoic density, the shell of the ego. And that's the wonderful thing about the ego is that it has built into itself a self-destruct mechanism.

Sooner or later, the ego, because of the unhappiness it generates, the stress and the suffering, sooner or later something cracks, either directly or something in the body cracks, in the physical, and then that creates an opening. And then perhaps if something cracks, then the person suddenly becomes interested in, ah, there may be more. And then you might want to explore meditation, or you're drawn to a spiritual teaching.

And then you become aware for the first time of where your attention is. And then you become aware for the first time of the kinds of thoughts you think habitually. It's not so much that you think the thoughts, it's the thoughts that inhabit your mind.

You don't think them because they're just there, they arise. You don't think your thoughts, the thoughts in the same way that you don't beat your heart. And so some of your attention then, a little bit of your attention detaches from thinking, and is there, and there's a little bit of a witness there that realizes what's going on in your mind.

That's wonderful. And then the desire may come, oh, okay, that wants to grow. And then you may take up a meditation practice.

And then you learn about your attention. Then you learn how enormously powerful the pull of your mind is, that of continuously wanting more attention for thoughts. And then you take up some meditation, and the first thing you learn in meditation, in any meditation, is to direct your attention to some meditation object.

So you learn to direct attention away from thinking onto some object. The object may be an external object, a flower. It may be a candle flame.

It could be anything. It could be a picture. It could be directing your attention to a word that is repeated in your mind, or a group of words, a so-called mantra.

And then you repeat that in your mind, and instead of going into all kinds of thought activity, thought activity is reduced then to just a few words, or one word. And a mantra is a traditional Eastern thing, and can be helpful for many people. You can create your own mantra, too.

You can say whatever. God is. Even if you don't believe in God, you can say, God is.

You can say, I am. You can ask the question, Who am I? It's a wonderful meditation, very simple, favored by the Indian teacher, Ramana Maharshi.

He recommended it highly. And if you don't want any kind of complicated meditation, I suggest you use that, so your attention, first of all, is directed to the words, Who am I, that you repeat every 20 seconds, 30 seconds, whatever feels comfortable, in your mind, silently. So the focus of your attention is, rather than going into all kinds of thinking, is reduced to those words.

And the wonderful thing about this meditation, in a way, one could say, the more simple a meditation, the better. And this one is very simple. The wonderful thing about this meditation is, you have your attention on the words, attention, but after you've said those words, those words are a question.

Now, usually, a question demands an answer. And your mind might think that at some point, some answer will come into your mind, that will tell you who you are. And it may even happen, after you've done it for 10, 15, 20 minutes, suddenly your mind might say something, but whatever it says, that won't be quite it.

Even if your mind says, well, your mind might say all kinds of things. It might suddenly say, you are a miserable wretch, who has failed at everything you've done. Or your mind might suddenly say, you are the greatest being that has ever come to this planet, you are here to redeem the world, you are very special.

It's happened to some, even to some people who've gone very deep. Suddenly this thought came, oh, and they completely believed in that thought, I am the greatest. And then they announced it to the world, and started to write books.

And then, not only they believed in that thought, some other people started to believe in that too. And then you have a cult. So that may come in, and or you may have something much more subtle, and perhaps closer to who you are, it might say, you are timeless and unlimited consciousness itself.

Well, that's better, you can't really identify with that so much. And yet, that's not quite it either, because it's just another thought, just more concepts to believe in. A little bit better, I would say, than saying, I am the greatest that has ever lived, but still a conceptual structure that then you believe in and identify with.

So you have to be careful with this meditation, who am I? Because no matter what your mind says in answer to the question, will not be quite it. So why then ask the question, who am I?

Because what matters with this meditation is the silent space after the question. And the answer to who you are lies in the silent space after you have asked the question. And the only reason why you should then repeat the same question is to prevent all kinds of other thoughts from arising, because the silent space may only have a limited lifespan from our external viewpoint.

It may be there for a few seconds, and then some thought may come and say, have I answered my emails today? And so to prevent that kind of thought from arising, you just ask the question again. We need to know that, because otherwise the mind, after you've practiced this meditation for a while, will become frustrated and say, well, I've been doing this meditation that Eckhart talked about and that Ramana Maharshi recommended, and I haven't gotten anywhere with it.

I still don't know who I am. I haven't had an answer. That's because you haven't paid attention to the space after the question.

So this is a wonderful meditation once you know what to be aware of and be careful not to fall into some kind of error or belief. Who am I? Beautiful, gentle question that directs your attention to that which cannot be named, that which cannot be understood through concepts, that which has no time to it.

It can very quickly put you in touch with yourself, so to speak. The mind then, mind activity subsides, and there's just a beautiful space of beingness or presence. Who am I?

Who am I? Space. And how often you need to ask the question as the space remains, then there's no need to repeat the question.

Be with the space for perhaps a minute. It's fine. And then just to make sure that perhaps the question you find is arising again.

Who am I? Wonderful meditation. You can also do it, sometimes people do it to each other.

You can sit with your partner and look into his or her eyes and ask, Who are you? Answers are not required, by the way. Who are you?

Who are you? Sometimes there are such things, I've heard about it, I haven't experienced it in meditation. No, enlightenment intensives, I believe.

I don't know if anybody has had that experience of a group. And as far as I know, people often spend hours asking this question. And sometimes after two or three or four or five or six hours of being asked, Who are you?

Apparently some people have a realization. Now whether it's produced in such a way, whether it's a lasting realization, I don't know. Somebody's shaking his head no, so that's the answer.

So that's not needed. Don't overdo anything. That's again a pitfall of meditation, because people think if meditation is good, more of it must be even better.

And more of it must be better still. And then people become obsessed with meditation. And I've seen some people even going, becoming mentally very unbalanced after a while, because they thought, Okay, I'm going to get there.

Where? You're there already. I will get there.

And then suddenly after doing eight, nine, ten hours of meditation every day for several weeks, they had to be taken away. So moderation, no need to overdo it. There's nowhere to get.

You think there's somewhere to get? No, there isn't. That's the very thing of meditation is that it opens up for you the depths of the present moment.

If you are going anywhere in your meditation, where you're going is more deeply into the now. That sounds very strange, because when we talk about now, the timeless dimension, we're using words. All words originate in the world, the dimension of time.

So even to say, although I would say it's a true statement, but it's a paradoxical statement to say we are going more deeply into the now. More implies there's time. So there's always a paradox when you talk about the now using words and using words that originate in this dimension of time.

But that's how it is. So let's become comfortable with a paradox and say that meditation is about the deepening into the vertical dimension, so that you are no longer lost in the horizontal dimension of life, past and future, one thought after another, one thing to do after another. And looking for yourself in the horizontal dimension, where there is no, as the Buddha already said, there is no self there.

The self that you're looking for cannot be found. Anatta, I believe, in Pali. Anatta, no self, Buddha said, enormous insight, 2,600 years ago, no matter where you go and what you do, what condition you enter into or find, it's not self.

And if you are looking for yourself where there is no self, you encounter dukkha, which means suffering. Wonderful. And suffering in whatever form, unhappiness, unsatisfactoriness, discontent, irritation, whatever, all forms of suffering.

So if you don't realize that there is no self in anything that you can identify with in the world of mind objects, whatever it is, possessions, relationships, places, people, situations, achievements, successes, failures, they're all self. There's no self in them. They're just conditions that arise, come and go, come and go.

And that's the third part of the teaching of the Buddha. It's any mind object in any condition that arises is impermanent, impermanent. In the Pali language, anicca, I believe, fleeting.

So if you're looking for yourself in what is fleeting and what is impermanent, where there is no self, then you suffer. So the whole teaching is about, the Buddhist teaching, any spiritual teaching, is about the kingdom of heaven in the vertical dimension of now. So the meditation, if it works, takes you into the vertical dimension of now, and that is what this meditation does when you ask, who am I?

Just what remains is there's no mind object. There's only this. Everything else falls away.

Beautiful meditation. Another meditation object that is a very simple one, again, the meditation object means that to which attention is directed, is your breathing, and that's a very ancient meditation. Breathing is quite a nice meditation object because it does not have a clearly defined form.

It's a very subtle thing, and it's always there. It's always there. Mostly you're not aware of it, but you're always breathing, or breathing is always happening in your body.

And so taking your attention to the fact that you are breathing is another very simple meditation that anybody can practice for 10 minutes, 15 minutes a day, if you want to make it into a structured meditation. Or you can take one conscious breath occasionally, which is already a mini meditation. What does that mean, one conscious breath?

It means you're aware of the air moving into your nose and into your body. Now there, people have developed various ways of being aware of that. The most basic form of this kind of breath awareness, which is designed for people who have an extremely noisy mind, and they just, to ask them to be aware of their breath half a breath is too much to ask.

They can do half a breath, the in-breath, but by the time they breathe out, they're thinking about something else. So there are many people whose mind is so active, and perhaps even half a breath they can't do. And for those people, they have devised, well they, I mean, these are some forms of meditation that are used in Buddhism, although they have nothing to do with Buddhism as such.

Anybody could use them. And there you start by counting your breaths. So if your mind is over, absolutely overactive, then you just go, as you breathe in, you count from one to nine, one, two, three, four, in your mind, one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, a little pause, and as you breathe out you count from nine to one, nine, eight, seven, six, five, four, three, two, one.

Now of course you're not free of thought there. You haven't found inner space yet, but this is for people who are burdened with an extremely noisy mind. And they should be doing that, they say, for perhaps a few months at least.

And gradually you can reduce the number of counts, one to six, then you do one to three, and then if you're lucky you can just do one or two. And that's called the counting. It's part of a practice that is called in Buddhism, I believe, Samatha, calm, to calm your mind.

The next stage then, once you can do the counting, now many of you won't need that, because your mind is not that active, otherwise you wouldn't be here listening to this. You would be off thinking about something else. The next step, and this is perhaps for many of you might be helpful, is to follow, it's called the following, you follow the breast with your attention as it moves into the body.

You can actually feel the air moving into the body, and then you follow it with your attention as it moves out of the body. That's quite a pleasant thing to do. Let's just do it just for a few breaths, with eyes closed or eyes open.

Eyes closed is probably easier. I'll keep my eyes open as I speak, but I'll also do it. In-breath, follow your attention, follow the breath, and out-breath.

In-breath, and out-breath. In-breath, and out-breath. In-breath, out-breath.

Quite pleasant, you have a meditation object that's very close to you. And that leads us even to a more subtle thing, that is to feel the air at the tip of your nose, where the air comes in, a very subtle feeling, it's called the touching. So now you feel the air as it touches your nose on its way into the body.

Now to feel that you need more acute attention. You can practice with that. So you will notice that the attention needs to be more acute so that you can catch that very subtle feeling where the air moves into the nostrils.

And then comes something that they don't even teach in all schools. The most important part in any meditation is to drop the meditation object. So once you can feel the subtleness of the air entering your nostrils, at that point, when you are good at it, drop it, finish, that's the end of the meditation, because what remains is attention itself, bare attention itself, and that's the space, consciousness itself.

So no matter what meditation object you use, one tends to get attached. If meditation, you become peaceful as you meditate, one tends to become attached to the meditation object, but, and then that again is a pitfall in meditation, because eventually every object, every meditation object is to be relinquished so that what remains is the formless consciousness itself. That's the beauty of it, and that's the only reason why you have a meditation object.

The only thing is that many people find it hard to go directly from normal mind-identified consciousness into the realization of consciousness itself, but that can be done. You can, as you sit here, often I invite you to realize that in yourself without necessarily going through the meditation. So the opportunity is there at any moment to realize that in you that underlies all thought, that underlies all mind activity.

So at any moment the possibility is there, there you realize who you are beyond thought, and the, and thought can subside suddenly, it can happen spontaneously, and really the entire spiritual teaching is aimed at this realization of who you are underneath all the mind objects, underneath all the clutter of the mind, plus the emotions that go with the mind activity. So the ultimate, the aim of meditation is to find that clarity, that peace, and that space, but some people find it even without the meditation. Some people find it because life has become unbearably painful, and suddenly they step out of that which created all the pain, identification with form.

And then the closest in this teaching that we get to meditation is inner body, and that's another beautiful thing. You can either, I usually recommend inner body awareness in everyday life, when you listen to somebody, when you're looking at something, especially nature, connect with the aliveness within, and then look at the tree, so that you're not putting abstraction onto the aliveness of that being that we call tree, that beautiful, mysterious, everything is mysterious, and the mind believes that once you have put a label on something, you know it. But you can see that this is, it's a pseudo-knowing, it's fine as a practical thing in everyday life, but to call a tree a tree, or that's an oak tree, or that's such and there are many different kinds of oak trees. So now, no, it's not just an oak tree, that is such and such an oak tree.

Oh, okay, now I know what it is. Finished. I finished with that.

What's the next thing I can label? So you haven't actually connected with a tree, you haven't contacted the essential reality of that thing that the mind calls tree, the depth of it, the mystery of it, because you believe that once you call something by a name, then you know what it is. It's not, it's just an attachment of a concept onto something that is profound, and you do it to yourself.

You attach concepts and labels to who you think you are, and then that becomes, then you miss the profundity of your very being. So then you're trapped, again, that's the horizontal dimension of thought. So we need to break through that, not believing in the thoughts that arise, especially thoughts that concern you or other people.

Who am I? Well, then you refer to your personal history, or the way in which you interpret your life. Nothing to do, essentially, with who you are.

Not believing in labels. And so, feeling the inner body can be done as a structured meditation, or can be practiced in everyday life as a way of anchoring yourself in the now, as a way of keeping the conceptualizing mind out of the way, and relating more deeply to people and things, whatever it is you perceive, the life around you. The inner body, when it's done as a structured meditation, is quite an old meditation, been around for hundreds or perhaps thousands of years.

The practitioners of this meditation believe that that was one of the meditations originally taught by the Buddha, and they have some scriptures to prove it. Of course, nobody knows what the Buddha actually said. Many of the scriptures were written much, much later.

But that doesn't matter. It is a powerful meditation. They call it vipassana, and it's a very structured meditation where you gradually, your attention gradually goes from one part of the body to the other.

You can do it as a, learn it as a practice, if you want. The way I recommend inner body is less structured or hardly structured. I might say feel the aliveness in your hands as you sit here, and then feel the aliveness in your feet at the same time.

Feel the aliveness means direct your attention there, away from thinking. Feel the aliveness throughout the body as you sit here and listen. And then if you want to make it into a structured or more real kind of so-called meditation, then you sit upright in a chair or on a floor, close your eyes and go deeply into that feeling of aliveness.

That's quite beautiful too. So that all your attention is in that intense sense of aliveness that pervades the entire body where it isn't really the body anymore. Well, you don't know what it is.

It's just aliveness. And there's no longer, when you go deeply into that aliveness, you can do it as I speak. If you close your eyes, or even with your eyes open, close your eyes, go into that aliveness, and even the sense of, I am aware of the aliveness disappears because the consciousness and the aliveness become one.

So this is a good meditation because the meditation object, you merge with the meditation object. There isn't you and the object. So when you go deeply into the inner body in your meditation, with your eyes closed, you get a sense that you are that field.

The inner body is the field of consciousness, the spaciousness. You are that. It is aware of itself.

You are aware of yourself. No duality. When you go deeply into the body, there's no duality of the observer and the observed.

The observer and the observed are one. That's a wonderful realization. And then, when you sense that strongly, then you open your eyes and stay connected with that sense, and then look around the room or wherever you are, and then you feel the depth and sense perceptions.

Beautiful. That's the way, absolute balance between the outer world of form and the inner world of being. You're connected with being.

[Speaker 4] (5:24:00 - 5:24:00)

Wow.

[Speaker 1] (5:24:02 - 6:01:21)

So that's just a wonderful meditation practice. If you want to do it in a more formal way, do it once a day or so, twice a day, sit somewhere quiet, erect, not lying in some... Because you would fall below thinking.

If you lie on a sofa or couch, want really relax and do your meditation, you will quickly fall below thinking. That's the only reason why people then attempt to sit erect. And if you want to sit cross-legged on the floor, and if it's...

That can, on the one hand, can be a distraction. It can also be something that's part of your meditation. If your legs start to hurt, these days it's painful for me to sit like that.

My legs start to hurt after a few minutes. But if that happens, that's fine. You can surrender to that, and then there's a space around it that too can become part of your practice.

I think Kim will have more to say about that. That too can become part of your practice. Pain arises while you sit.

Do you need to immediately do something about it, or can you just say, or say nothing, just be with it? Which means, there's a space around it. It's completely accepted for what it is, and so that it just is.

And that brings me to another aspect of meditation, any meditation that you do. Discomfort may arise sometimes during meditation. Discomfort is something that everybody is familiar with.

Some people spend their whole lives in discomfort, psychological discomfort. And so if discomfort arises, or irritation arises, or impatient arises, or any kind of mind condition arises, and you can learn there to simply be with it. Accept the form that this moment takes in the form of pain in the knee.

You accept the form of this moment. And that in itself can become a meditation. And that is why in Zen, Zazen, the school of Zen, they have a meditation that they call sitting.

No structure whatsoever. All they tell you is, sit and be with what is. And you sit for hours and be with what is.

That's the Zen meditation. And they put you in a room, you're facing the wall, and then they open the windows in the winter, and the cold air comes in, and you sit there shivering, and you be with what is. And then you observe your mind, what it comes up with.

What am I doing here? What's the point of all this? This is dreadful.

I could be home in a warm bed. Oh my God, this is so stupid. And then you be with the mind, the thoughts that arise in your mind.

You see that? Be with that. And you don't say to the thoughts, I mustn't have these thoughts.

No. Whatever is, you be with what is. That's the Zen meditation that has no other structure, or no structure, except that sitting.

That's why they don't even call it meditation. They call it sitting. And so they ask you when you go to a monastery, how long have you been sitting?

And you say, I'm not sitting, I'm standing. What they mean is, how long have you been meditating? Oh, I've been sitting for 25 years.

So hopefully, they no longer need the Zen monastery. And that's an interesting thing. That's really where, this is the way to live, to be with what is, because what is already is.

And to fight that is absurd. And so that's what you learn then in your Zen meditation, the most simple form of meditation. And some people would say, the most difficult form of meditation.

Just sitting, just. And again, you can use that. Even without a teacher, you can just sit.

There's nothing much to learn beyond that. Just sitting and being with what is. The only thing you don't have, the helpful thing in some Zen monasteries, somebody to hit you with a stick from behind the moment he sees that you are drifting off somewhere.

Whack! And then you have to say, thank you. So that meditation then, being with what is, has no specific meditation object except the condition that arises at this moment.

That is, whatever condition arises at this moment, externally or internally, is the meditation object. An emotion, a thought, a feeling, a physical sensation, or externally, cold air, warm air, heat, cold, people making funny noises around you, disturbing noises, a lawnmower, drill. Be with what is.

Everything, and again, that's in this meditation, whatever is, is incorporated into the meditation. So you can never say, I can't meditate because this is happening. Well, that's part of the meditation.

So whatever happens is incorporated into the meditation. So there are no excuses left then. I can't meditate because the children are screaming.

Well, that's your meditation object. Be the space for that. And then you learn really that it's a preparation for living in that way.

That's the ultimate. The real meditation is, and that's the awakened state of consciousness. Whatever arises at this moment, whatever condition arises at this moment, is part of the is-ness of life and is therefore accepted fully.

It doesn't mean you become powerless. It means you contact enormous power. You become an expression of enormous power, which is the power and intelligence of life itself, which can then act through you and come into this world.

True intelligence. And that can only come if you no longer obstruct the power of the present moment. It's always there.

Now, the fact that you can obstruct the power of the present moment does not mean that you are more powerful than it. It means it's just somebody who closes, as I sometimes give the example of closing the shutters, the sun can't come in. It doesn't mean the shutters are more powerful than the sun.

So this is the most powerful way to live, that the Zen meditation can just show it to you, you can practice there, and then the vital thing is to live it in daily life. And so a meditation can be very helpful, especially very simple meditations. You don't need the complicated ones.

Well, except, as I said, the counting. If your mind is totally mad, then you have to start with the counting. You can't just be with what is, because you don't even know what is.

When you sit down, your mind will immediately go off into what isn't here. It will go off into thinking about my investments, what's going to happen to them. Be with what is.

No, no, I have to think about the investment. I have to think about the falling property prices. Gosh, what's going to happen if I'm never going to sell my house, my life insurance, my whatever.

Anything except what is, I need to worry about it. If I don't worry about it, it'll all fall apart. I need to be responsible and hold it together by worrying about it, especially in the middle of the night.

And so Zen teaches you then the simplicity of the is-ness. That's really the secret of Zen, is that it's simple to be with what is. And that's why the Zen master said, well, the story goes that some disciples went to their Zen master and said, the other master from that other monastery, we were just told that he can walk across the river.

He walks on water. What can you do, they asked the master. And of course, the famous answer of the Zen master was, what can I do?

When I'm hungry, I eat. When I'm tired, I sleep. That's the answer.

It means he is absolutely, just totally present in whatever arises. That's all that is needed. No stuff around it.

Just the simplicity of this moment. Just facing this moment as it is. When you are completely aligned with this moment, you are in continuous meditation.

You are in meditation now by simply being with what is. That's the successful Zen meditator, is that. And not only that, if you live in that way, for as long as you live in that way, you are the spiritual master.

To be a spiritual master, you don't need to know anything. People sometimes think you need to have a lot of knowledge to be a spiritual teacher. It's not true.

All you need is to be completely aligned with the present moment. And then whatever is needed in the moment will come through you. And you will never go beyond your real life experience.

And you don't need to. So any answer that's needed, either in your own life or for somebody else, if you can just be with what is, become present and still, then that's primordial intelligence operating. And that is the spiritual teacher.

You never become a spiritual teacher. And if you feel that, okay, I'm now ready to be a teacher, no. The best feeling is actually to feel that you are not ready to be a teacher and you don't know anything.

You have nothing to say and nothing to teach. That's the start of every talk I give. What else can I say?

I've been talking for so long. What else is there to say? It's completely empty.

Nothing. And the teaching there doesn't come from the person or the person's accumulated knowledge. It comes through the person.

So the person really is never ready to be a teacher. And if the person is ready, then that's a delusion. You don't have to be ready.

You just have to be spacious enough. Spacious. In other words, get out of the way, as it can put it.

If you get out of the way, it happens through you. And you live in that way. It's not just, I'm just using the example of spiritual teaching.

Anything that you do that is truly powerful, you have to, in the moment of doing at least, or in the moment of creation, you have to get out of the way, and it comes through you. And every creative person, unless the ego has come back and obscured that wonderful flow of aliveness, unless the ego has come back and then claims some kind of merit, and so the creator feels superior to other humans because I did that. No, you didn't.

It happened because you got out of the way. And then the primordial intelligence and the power of life, the power of now, came through you. That's how it happened.

And that's how any true creation happens. It's interesting. I have some questions here, questions that people have been asking, for example, about art and music, relationship between the state of being present and creating art or music.

Of course, is there presence in music, somebody asks. Well, it depends on who is creating the music. Where is it coming from?

And there is a fundamental difference. Anybody can verify it, and anybody deep down knows it. For example, music, where does it truly original music come from?

And I'm not just talking about classical music, even relatively simple music. Some of it comes from a place of originality and power. It is inspired.

It almost comes into this world ready-made, as if it were, it's already there somewhere, and then the person who writes this music or plays this music is just receiving it. And any great act of creation is a receiving, and so this is how, and sometimes to a human being, a stream comes where they are connected with that. And every piece of music they write has this originality and power to it.

And strange enough, humans recognize it when they hear it. That's the music that survives. If you listen to the radio, you will find many kinds of continuous playing music.

Now, most things that you listen to, they may be popular for a few weeks or a few months, sometimes a few days, and then it disappears. But there are some pieces that don't disappear. You hear them again, and if you switch on the radio in ten years, you still hear that piece.

If you switch on the radio in 50 years from now, they're still playing it. And why? There is a qualitative difference between that and ordinary stuff that the mind tries to create without the connectedness with where all creativity comes from.

And so it's contrived. It may even be clever, but it doesn't have that quality. So even simple music like the Beatles songs, they came from somewhere deeper.

Some people would say, well, you can't compare the Beatles to Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. Well, you can. They came from the same place.

It's just Beethoven's Ninth Symphony is obviously more complex, but they both have this spark of originality to them that a human just cannot create it. The human mind alone cannot do that. And it can even happen that a person can spend a whole life making music, and only one night he or she connects with that ground where all creativity arises.

That was the case, for example, I read about it recently. There was a woman in South Africa who went to court because her husband had composed a piece of music. The only thing that he was ever remembered for, he composed a piece of music.

But because he was a black man at that time, her husband had died. At that time in South Africa, black people had no rights, so he sold this piece of music for five dollars. And he had been playing music all his life.

Only one night he wrote this piece that came from a deeper, everything else that he wrote disappeared. This piece survived because it had that essential quality of aliveness and originality to it. And so she finally got several million dollars from this one piece of music that he composed one night, which at first became popular throughout Africa, and then throughout the world.

It's called The Lion Sleeps Tonight. Wonderful, there's something there, you can't make that up. I'd like to sing the whole thing, I can't remember the words.

So no matter what you do in life, whatever you do, that connectedness is vital. And knowing that it's not up to me, ultimately. It's up to me, only to connect with the depth of being within.

And then whatever you do, the power will flow into it. And if it's very limited what you do, then sometimes, let's say you have a job in a factory, and there's just no scope for anything much to happen. If all you do is pick up a box from here, open it and put in three things, close the box and hand it on and pick up another box, then it doesn't, the important thing is not to fall into negativity and say there's nothing.

And connect with the aliveness, and if life sees that there's no outlet in your present circumstances for the power within you, life will put you somewhere else. The first thing that may happen is that you lose your job. And then because you're connected with the power within, you're not going to complain, because you're going to be like the man that I mentioned the other day, who whatever happened, he shouted, God is great.

So if you lose your job, you'd say, God is great, great, it must be the right thing. And so often it might look negative, because life needs to disrupt your present circumstances to make room for something else. So if you connect with the power within, and life, when I say life, I mean primordial, the one intelligence that pervades the universe.

If there is no outlet in your present circumstances for power, the power that is within you, then life will remove your present circumstances and create circumstances where there is an outlet. But if you are already doing something, and if that what you're doing already could become infinitely enhanced, if you connect with that source of creativity within you, then you will find that you stay where you are. It's just an enormous expansion.

If you are playing in the street, the guitar or whatever, for a few pennies, busking, and you suddenly, you connect with that, and you even begin to play original things, then something will happen, and that thing will expand. Life may not take you away from your guitar, it will empower the guitar. And suddenly, somebody walks past you and stops for a second and says, come and see me.

So that's the, wherever you are, trust, your responsibility is to embrace the power of the present moment within you, to not resist the is-ness of whatever condition is now that obstructs the power. So I'm really, we've been talking about meditation, but it always comes back to living, how to live in this moment now. That's what it's all about.

And becoming good at meditation is nothing. The question is, are you good at living? Do you live connected with the power or cut off from it, the power of yourself ultimately, the power of the universe?

So then, what you learn in the Zen meditation is not to complain about anything in your life, but to incorporate everything into your meditation, and now your meditation is your life. That's ultimately what it is. It's not the little meditation period.

That can be a, it can be a practice ground for life, but ultimately what matters is life, and life is now. So if you're practicing, incorporating whatever happens while you sit in meditation, into the meditation, nothing can happen that will obstruct your meditation, and then nothing can happen in your life that will obstruct the power, but not if you complain and resist what is. The power comes when there is inner alignment with what is, the is-ness of now.

No matter what form that takes, that's where power comes into your life, and that's in all the, that's in all the teachings, and so that's all that meditation can teach you, to do. You don't need time. It's a little absurd to say, I need time to become good at accepting the present moment, or to take a three-year course in accepting the present moment.

I'm learning to accept the present moment, but I'm not there yet. So there's nothing that you need to add to your life so that you can finally accept the present moment. There are many delusions that the mind will bring up.

Why, why you, why you can't do it now? I can accept everything except where I live, or accept whatever, that my parents don't understand me, or accept the, remember that acceptance has nothing to do with some kind of story in your mind. That's not acceptance.

This is often a delusion when people misunderstand when I speak of acceptance. So some people say, okay, I need to accept that I have no money in the bank, that I'm poor, that I've ruined my life. I need to accept that I live in a dreadful place.

Oh, if you call it dreadful, what where's the acceptance? You've already judged it as bad. You have already called your life bad.

I need to accept that I'm ruined, that all my investments have collapsed, and I'm completely ruined. All these things are stories in your mind. It would be absurd.

Or I need to accept that I'm, I'm ill. Of course, you may be ill from the point of view of medical viewpoint. That may be the case.

But that is not what you need to accept. Because this feeling I am ill is a mental construct. All you need to accept is the reality of this moment.

And in this moment, there is no illness. But there may be pain, there may be discomfort, there may be disability, there may be weakness in the body. This is, this is how this so-called illness manifests at this moment.

So all you need to accept is whatever manifests in this moment, not some idea around it. Then you get into illusion. So the person who is, who has an illness, you don't accept, I need to accept that I have cancer, that I have AIDS, that I need to accept whatever.

No, that's the story. Acceptance only concerns this moment, whatever it is that you feel or experience at this moment. So you're not denying that you're ill, nor do you subscribe to that belief that you are ill.

You just leave that alone, and you address only the conditions that arise at this moment in your life. And that's what you accept. And with that, often, if it is an illness, then you accept only the symptom as it appears at this moment, because it is already there.

At this moment, there's pain, there's the disability, there's this, there's that. That's what is. That becomes part of your meditation practice, which is your life.

So your life becomes, all you ever need to accept is that. Let's say you're in prison. Let's say your sentence is 25 years.

So you sit in that cell, and I'm talking about that because often I get correspondence from people in prison. So you, if you then say, okay, I need to accept that I'm stuck in here for the next 25 years, and that I've messed my, my whole life up completely. I need to accept that.

No, that's a story. And that's time. All you need to accept is at this moment, you're sitting here, there's a little window.

You're looking out of the window. You're breathing. You feel the aliveness of the inner body.

There's a little metal plate in front of you, and you're eating a piece of bread. And there's a glass of water, and you're drinking that. And there are the walls that you're seeing.

And these are the conditions of this moment, and they are as they are. You add nothing to them. Like, dislike, good.

That's the Zen master. You're the master. You add nothing to it, and the bare conditions of this moment are as they are.

That's what you accept. And with that power comes, and with that, internally you become free of dependency on external conditions. That's where incredible power comes into your life.

And it's often the case that miracles happen when you enter and live in that state of consciousness. So you might have 25 years sentence in prison, and you could find that unexpectedly something happens, and you're free. And I don't necessarily mean an opportunity comes to escape.

It could come in a different way. It probably won't come in that way. And if it doesn't, you're still free in prison.

And I've had correspondents from people in prison said, I found freedom here. And to them, the prison has become like a Zen monastery. Whatever condition arises is part of the meditation.

And so that's I'm saying that so that it's easy to misunderstand the term acceptance. Acceptance is always the simplicity of this moment that is to be accepted, not a story around this moment. And then gradually you learn to live less and less with stories, imposing stories on your life, and traveling through life with the heaviness of stories of who you are in relationship to the world.

Not good enough or better than most. But if you think you're better than most, underneath is the fear that you're not good enough anyway. That's why you have to think you're better than most.

All kinds of stuff that people live with and live through. No, your life is now. Your life is always now.

And that is the focal point of your consciousness. Now and you're aligned with now. And the moment you're aligned with now, you become the space for now.

You were it already, but you didn't know it. Now consciously you become the space for now. And you're free.

And that's where power comes suddenly through you. And only if enough humans begin to live in that way is the world going to truly change. And then you have fulfilled the purpose of your life on earth.

Aligned with the evolutionary purpose of the entire, not just the planet, the evolutionary purpose of the entire universe wants that. It wants the flowering of that new consciousness to happen. And that's why we're here.

It's not going to happen. It's happening. Us being here is because it's happening.

We're not in expectation of utopia or something like that. We're not in expectation that a new world is going to arise. No, we are here because the new world, which is based on the new state of consciousness, is arising.

There's no future expectation. And we don't need the world to change to become free. No, becoming free comes first.

Then the world changes. It's so simple. That's why the mind says, oh, this is hard.

Let's make sure we are at home in the present moment and inhabiting the body. So a little bit of your attention is in the body, the inner energy field of the body. And the rest of your attention is on sense perception.

And in that way, you are anchored in the present moment. The inner energy field provides the anchor for staying present. If you can't feel anything in your body, start with your hands.

Direct your attention into your hands and see if you can feel a little bit of aliveness in there.

[Speaker 4] (6:01:24 - 6:01:24)

Oh, yes.

[Speaker 1] (6:01:25 - 7:31:11)

There it is. And your feet, are they alive? Oh, yes.

You can feel almost a kind of tingling. There's energy there. There's life energy in there.

And so you can connect with the entire body as a global sense of aliveness as you sit here, because wherever you are, you're here and now. And the mind will not be excessively active when your attention is in the inner energy field. You can be alert without unnecessary interference of thinking, without having to wait for the next moment to provide some kind of improvement.

So the realization comes that this moment is actually good enough, more than good enough, because you're beginning to feel the goodness that is underneath the phenomenal appearance of the present moment, the forms. You're getting in touch with the formless. One of the things we are doing as part of our new venture, which is a kind of experiment, using the Internet to reach many thousands of people, occasionally I present a book to you that has been very meaningful to me for many years.

There are a number of books that I've carried around. Well, sometimes I lost copies and then I bought another one, because I moved around so much. And we already, in one of the previous sessions, we had one session on one of the greatest books ever written, the Tao Te Ching.

We had a session on that, and I feel that we are going to have another session on that at some point. Not today, though. For today, I've chosen a book.

Before I continue, I need to tell you, we're not studying something that's external to ourselves. We're not here, it's not a university setting. We're not learning philosophy.

We're only using the subject matter of the book as an alternative pointer to the reality within ourselves. So it's not anything, we're not studying anything outside ourselves that would be useless. So this book, that actually I never lost, it's been with me for 25 or 30 years.

I bought it new, but now the pages are turning yellow, the edges, which means I'm getting old. When books that you bought new turn yellow around the edges, you're getting old, or the quality of the paper is deteriorating. Emerson.

Ralph Waldo Emerson. Essays, which he became famous for. What I'm going to do is just read very brief extracts one or two of the essays, and then we will comment on that.

As some of you may know, Emerson was born in Boston in 1803, died about 80 years later, and most of his life he traveled around giving talks. A very unusual thing, he was kind of a 19th century spiritual teacher, a very unusual thing for the 19th century. And some of these essays have enormous power, so he must have gone very deep within to be able to write these things.

An important thing, just a very brief look at his life. As many people who are destined to go very deep within, he experienced a not very pleasant childhood and early life. At a very early age, and this is the case with many people who are forced, either destined to go deeper within, or if not destined, they are forced by life's circumstances to go deeper within.

And so in his case, at the age of eight, his father died. So becoming acquainted with mortality at a very early age, a very painful thing. Then there were five children.

His mother was relatively poor, so they lived on very little. The mother had to feed five boys. Then later, in his early 20s, he developed tuberculosis, a potentially fatal illness, but recovered from it.

Then he got married, and two years later his wife died. So again, it became very clear to him, it must have become very clear to him, how fragile, how impermanent, fleeting the world of form is, of bodies and forms. So whether he already realized that on a conscious level, there must have been a very deep having to go deeper within.

And then he studied at Harvard to become a theologian, to become a minister. He became a minister, but was not happy with the constraints of the church, and then left the church and started just giving talks, and some of the talks became the essays. So you can see retrospectively how loss is very often a concealed blessing.

You don't know it at the time. At the time, it just seems a dreadful thing to be happening to you. But if you look deeper, and especially if you're able to come to a state of acceptance, then the moment you surrender to what is, the other side of loss reveals itself to you.

There's grace hiding behind every loss. It's good to know next time loss comes to you, as it will of course, because you can't go through life without experiencing loss. People around you are going to leave you, unless you leave them first.

Bodies dissolve, and the older you get, the more clearly you see, wow, all these bodies are dissolving. A very brief, just a few sentences here on being, and the sense of being, finding that within yourself. He says, oh, I must before I read, this is mid-19th century English prose, so at first, it might be for some of you who are not used to reading that kind of thing, Jane Austen or that kind of thing, may find it a little bit unusual at first.

For the sense of being which in calm hours rises, we know not how in the soul, is not diverse from things, from space, from light, from time, from man, but one with them, and proceeds obviously from the same source whence their life and being also proceeds. We first share the life by which things exist, and afterwards see them as appearances in nature, and forget that we have shared their cause. Here is the fountain of action and the fountain of thought.

Here are the lungs of that inspiration which gives man wisdom, of that inspiration of man which cannot be denied without impiety and atheism. We lie in the lap of immense intelligence, which makes us organs of its activity and receivers of its truth. When we discern justice, when we discern truth, we do nothing of ourselves, but allow a passage to its beams, the beams of that great intelligence like the sunlight.

So the sense of being which in calm hours rises, we know not how in the soul, is not diverse from things, from space, from light, from time, from man, but one with them. In calm hours means when you become still inside, when the mind activity subsides, then what arises is something that had been obscured by mental noise, which is the sense of being, and that really is the essence. Sometimes it's called the sense of I am, without any addition to the I am, not I am this or I am that.

The sense of beingness, as you may remember from grammar lessons at school, to be and I am is part of the same verb. It's easy to forget when you say I am is the first person singular of to be. So being and I am is the same, so getting that sense of your innermost identity which has no form to it, no mental concept, no physical appearance, it's deeper than that, a formless sense of being that is there, clearly is revealed when the continuous flux of forms, especially mind forms, subsides.

So that sense of being is always, has always been there underneath the mental noise. And when that is realized as the essence of who you are, in other words, you are formless in essence, timeless, the Buddhists call it empty, and of course Western scholars misinterpret that. They say it's a nihilistic religion, or it's life denying.

They don't realize that what Buddhists call emptiness is the formless essence of all life, and timeless. And that is something to be realized, of course, only in the, it's inextricably one with what we call the present moment. We could say it is the present moment, because it is the space in which everything arises.

All sense perception, all thoughts, all emotion, where do they appear? They appear in that space of being, which you could also call unconditioned consciousness, timeless. And that is the eternal in you.

And once that is known directly, not as an intellectual fact or belief, directly. And again, not known as you know the flower or the table or the tree, not known as a subject knows an object, but knowing yourself as the eternal subject, not making yourself into an object, and that's the ego. That's what happened to the human mind.

We made ourselves into objects, and then you begin to have a relationship with yourself. And then you start liking or disliking yourself. And then you talk about that you have a life, not realizing that you are life.

And perhaps then only the dog or the cat can still remind you that they don't have a life, they are life. They don't have an unhappy or happy story. They are life.

That's why we talked about nature. Nature still lives in that state of connectedness. And once you realize that, you recognize that formless essence that you are wherever you look.

It is the underlying one, the one life, the one timeless life that you are. And then wherever you look, every tree, every animal, every blade of grass, even the sun, the stars, your dog or your cat, you recognize something there, something that any life form is also an expression of that one. So you recognize yourself in others, which is the most beautiful thing, when you recognize the essence of who you are in the flower.

And you recognize it not through any mental concept, but through the absence of mental concepts. It is only mental concepts that create the barrier between yourself and the flower, when you start calling it something. Or another human being, the beauty of being with another human being, without the interference, the screen of conceptualization, just spacious presence.

No matter what the other human being is doing or saying, you are there as spacious presence for whatever arises in this moment. That means you are connected with the one, you are that, and recognize it, there's nothing alien anymore, there is ultimately no other anymore. And this is what he is talking about.

The sense of being which in calm hours rises, when you become still, now, we know not how, it rises within, is not diverse from things, from space, from light, from time, from man, but one with them and proceeds obviously from the same source when their life and being also proceeds. And then that is intelligence itself, not the intelligence that can be measured by IQ tests, but primordial, unconditioned intelligence is there when you discover that dimension in yourself. Here is the fountain of action, spontaneous action arises out of that presence, and the fountain of thought, it can inspire the mind.

Creative thought can only come when you still contact that dimension, realize that is who you are in essence, and then your mind starts to operate and it becomes inspired, it becomes an instrument rather than self-serving mind activity. And then all the repetitive thinking gradually subsides and more creative thinking happens. And in between the creative thinking there are wonderful spaces of not thinking.

The greatest thing that can happen to you, and hopefully is happening to you, is to discover within yourself spaces of not thinking. You have not reverted back to the vegetable realm, you have gone beyond thinking. And from the point of view of the ego that's not a big thing, it says, how does that solve my problems, not thinking?

The conceptual mind does not understand the significance of that. I sometimes say that all I have achieved in life is I don't need to think unless I want to think. That really is where everything comes from, just becoming comfortable with a state of not knowing from the point of view of the mind.

Going to a talk, in my case, sitting down and having the feeling I have absolutely nothing to say and becoming comfortable with not knowing. Not just when you are going to give a talk, in any situation, you don't need to work it out conceptually, what am I going to, how am I going to deal with this person, how am I going to deal with this situation. Be there, bring the presence to it and let that intelligence come through you.

It can then use your mind and you find yourself saying something original, or you find yourself saying just the right thing that is helpful for that moment and that person. Or you find yourself taking spontaneous action, suddenly the right thing, the right action arises. You suddenly realize what it is that you need to do.

You've been thinking about it for years and suddenly you let go of thinking, space opened up and the realization is there. So for a balanced life there needs to be the two dimensions in your life, the dimension of form, I call that human, the human dimension, where you are a person with a history and you think and you have relatives and relationships and you have a life situation which is good or bad or changes from good to bad and bad to good. And you are the being dimension of the human being, most humans don't know that yet, there is the being dimension that is the formless.

So a truly fruitful life is the balance between the formless essence within yourself and the world of form. Most humans on this planet are lost in form, totally identified with form, that's all they know, totally identified with their mind, every thought form that comes into, every thought which is a thought form, it comes into their head, they are completely identified with it, they are in the grip of form and then they are surrounded by countless forms and each form in their life situation demands attention, this matters, this matters, the phone rings, I need to do this now, I need to do that, completely absorbed by form and everything is serious, has a heaviness and a seriousness to it. And the more you go on living like that, the heavier and the more serious your life becomes.

It's a loss of balance, so and then all you end up with, this is the subject matter of many movies that you see, is people who are totally trapped on that dimension only of form, complete absence of transcendence in their life. And sometimes these films are quite nice, you see, what a pity that there's not the slightest glimpse of any transcendence, they're trapped in their little life situations. And so for life to be balanced, there needs to be attention on consciousness, the underlying essence of life is formless consciousness.

Oh, and that means your sense of identity comes from there, the true sense, so you don't need the world of form anymore to give you your sense of self, because as the Buddha said, when you identify with, when you are looking for yourself in things, I'm giving a very free translation of Buddha, when you identify with the world of form and looking for yourself in forms, in your thoughts, in your possessions, in your achievements, in other people's opinion of who you are, whatever form it is, if you're looking for yourself or some kind of completion of your sense of self in form, you're going to suffer. That's the message of the Buddha, because there is no self in these things.

You cannot find yourself. Now Buddhism says, because there is no self. Hinduism will tell you, talks about the self, but they're really talking about the same thing.

It's a formless self. Now whether you say no self or formless self doesn't make any difference. These are just pointers, you may prefer one pointer to the other.

I prefer this finger pointing to the moon, and then another says no, this finger pointing to the moon is much nicer. It doesn't matter, the moon matters. And so we lie in the lap of immense intelligence.

It is within and without. We are pervaded by it. It fills the entire space of the universe.

We lie in the lap of immense intelligence which makes us organs of its activity and receivers of its truth if we are open to it. It's like having a house. If you close the shutters, no matter how bright the sunlight is, it can't come in.

It doesn't mean the shutters are more powerful than the sunlight, it just means shutters are closed. And so if a human being is closed, the vast intelligence cannot operate or can only operate as a trickle. Everybody has a trickle of it, otherwise they wouldn't be alive.

So everybody has a little trickle of that coming into their lives, but the full power of it in most people's lives is missing. So they live not knowing what vast power is available to them or to put it more accurately, what vast power they themselves are. It's not available to you that creates a separation.

It is, in essence, who you are. Now I'd like to read to you a little thing that came to Emerson when he was sitting in his study and outside there were roses growing outside his window. And here again we come to the power of nature that we talked about the other day, the power of nature to reconnect you with being.

And so he looked at the rose and then he saw this or realized this. The context of this is that he's talking about people who are always quoting ancient texts only. They are not open to the power of the divine coming through them.

They are quoting from the Bible and they are quoting from other scriptures, not realizing that the very power that spoke then is in them now also. It's just a question of opening yourself to it. And then he looked at the roses under his window.

The roses under my window make no reference to former roses or to better ones. They are for what they are. They exist with God today.

There is no time to them. They are simply the rose. It is perfect in every moment of its existence.

Before a leaf bud has burst, its whole life acts. In the full-blown flower there's no more. In the leafless root there's no less.

Its nature is satisfied and it satisfies nature in all moments alike. There is no time to it, but man postpones or remembers. He does not live in the present, but with reverted eye laments the past or heedless of the riches that surround him, stands on tiptoe to foresee the future.

He cannot be happy and strong until he too lives with nature in the present above time. There you have the rose teaching Emerson how to live, and then he put it into words. And this shows us that he actually, it was not just a superficial look at a rose as one would normally, oh, what a nice rose.

There was a true, he truly gave attention to the rose and realized how absolutely present the rose is, how absolutely devoid of time it is, carrying no past and no future. And he recognized that, the same as Jesus did when he said, look at the flowers of the field, look at the lilies. When he said that, he didn't just say, have a look at the lilies, he said, really look, give it your full attention, and then you will realize something there, that human beings, there's a connectedness with being.

They haven't gone out as far as humans. They have not left the source of all life. They have not become as differentiated as the humans have, so therefore what they can teach us, show us, is the connectedness with the source of all life.

And that's what he saw when he looked at the rose. And then he realized that we can, when we reconnect with that, we don't just become, go back to the vegetative realm, which is beautiful for everything vegetative there, but not for us. It's not our destiny to go back to become a rose or a tree or a blade of grass.

We transcend the thinking stage. We transcend the differentiation of the thinking stage and we then regain the oneness that was once lost, that ancient mythologies point to as the lost paradise. And when you regain something, as I often point out, you regain it at a deeper level with knowing, consciousness.

And so the last sentence here is important. He saw here, of course, that usually man does not live in the present but with reverted eyes, reverted eyes. He doesn't look at what's right here.

He reverts his eyes and looks, laments the past. Oh dear, regrets about what happened, guilt, regret, memories, things went wrong in my life situation, this happened, that happened. Or heedless of the riches that surround him, stands on tiptoe to foresee the future.

I need to get, I need to get there. Where is it? I need to get to the next moment.

You're heedless of the riches that surround you that are part of the now. So the lesson then is to truly look so that something imparts itself to you from anything natural. So the anything natural can reconnect you with being.

By the way, when he uses, he wrote in the 19th century so there was still a tendency for there to use male pronouns, the same as the Bible and so on. So obviously when he says man he means man and woman and he tends to use the masculine pronoun. So you have to excuse that.

Man is a stream whose source is hidden. Always our being is descending into us from we know not whence. Most humans regard themselves as a surface phenomenon.

You're here, no sense of deeper connectedness with life. You're here like as if somebody had put you here on this planet and there's me and there's the rest of the world, the rest of the universe. The lack of connectedness.

If you go deeper within and you do it by finding the dimension of stillness underneath thinking, then you connect with the source, the depth within yourself. And there's vast depth. Man is a stream whose source is hidden.

And when, once it's open, so all you have to really do, if you can even call it doing, is open the door. And even that is not a doing because really keeping the door closed through continuous thinking is the doing. So it's more like a stop doing and then it opens.

In that sense some of those teachers are right saying you can't do anything because it's the doing that obscures the being. And so once that is open then you gradually learn to do and be at the same time. You can act without losing connect.

At first you find it only in still moments, perhaps in nature, and you go, ah, ah. And then gradually you see if you can stay connected when you're going shopping for food, supermarkets, or traveling from here to there, carrying alertness, alert presence, rather than continuously thinking entity, always about the next moment or the last moment. This is the only, you may have noticed that I only ever talk about one thing.

And this is it. Now he uses in one of his essays the term the over-soul. And by over-soul he means the unity of all things, the unity, the oneness of all things.

All things are ultimately one. Not only that all things are connected to everything else, which physicists now tell us is actually the case. There's no division between this body and this table and this flower and those other bodies.

There's no real division on the subatomic realm. And so not only is everything connected with everything else, a web of interconnectedness, but also everything is connected to a common source. It has come out of the common source.

It returns to the common source, which is formless and timeless, and the common source remains in every form as its innermost essence. And so this common source, this unity he calls the over-soul. And he says, that unity, that over-soul, within which every man's particular being is contained and made one with all other, that common heart of which all sincere conversation is the worship, to which all right action is submission, that overpowering reality which confutes our tricks and talents and constrains everyone to pass for what he is and to speak from his character, which means from his essence, and not from his tongue, and whichever more tends and aims to pass into our thought and hand and become wisdom and virtue and power and beauty. We live in succession, in division, in parts, in particles.

Meantime, within man is the soul of the whole, the wise silence, the universal beauty to which every part and particle is equally related, the eternal one. And this deep power in which we exist and whose beatitude is all accessible to us is not only self-sufficing and perfect in every hour, but the act of seeing and the thing seen, the seer and the spectacle, the subject and the object are one. We see the world piece by piece as the sun, the moon, the animal, the tree.

But the whole of which these are the shining parts is the soul, the oneness, oneness, seeing the oneness behind the multiplicity, seeing the oneness of all forms in every form. And what he calls the soul, we could also use the word, the consciousness, the one unconditioned consciousness that pervades the entire universe, the one reality. So when he says here, the soul, if you want to use consciously a different pointer, that's fine.

All goes to show that the soul in man is not an organ, but animates and exercises all the organs, is not a function like the power of memory, of calculation, of comparison, but uses these as hands and feet, is not a faculty but a light, is not the intellect or the will, but the master of the intellect and the will, is the vast background of our being in which they lie, an immensity not possessed and that cannot be possessed.

From within or from behind, a light shines through us upon things and makes us aware that we are nothing but the light is all. The background, the background space, consciousness, looks through these eyes, speaks through this mouth, becomes form and yet remains untouched as a formless. So can you go through life dealing with a foreground of things that need doing, things that you need occasionally to think about and yet remain aware of the background to your life, the consciousness, the light of consciousness or the space in which everything appears.

Another way of putting it, can you be aware that you are aware at this moment? Can you sense the awareness underneath what you are perceiving with your senses at this moment, without which there would be no perception? Can you sense the awareness underneath any kind of emotional feeling you might be having at this moment?

Can you sense the awareness out of which any thought that might arise in your mind at this moment comes and dissolves back into the presence that you are? That's the formless, that's the timeless and so that is the vast background of your being, an immensity not possessed and that cannot be possessed. A man is the facade of a temple wherein all wisdom and all good abide.

What you see is the facade of the temple, not only what you see as the physical form of this human being but also the psychological form of this human being is also the facade still of the temple. It is not in essence who that being is. What we commonly call man or woman, the eating, drinking, planting and counting man, eating, drinking, planting, counting, doing all kinds of things, what we commonly call man, the eating, drinking, planting, counting man does not, as we know him, represent himself but misrepresents himself.

Him we do not respect but the soul whose organ he is, would he let it appear through his action, would make our knees bend. When it breathes through his intellect, it is genius. When it breathes through his will, it is virtue.

When it flows through his affection, it is love. And the blindness of the intellect begins when it would be something of itself. The weakness of the will begins when the individual would be something of himself.

So the blindness of the intellect begins with the belief that you are something of yourself. That is the mind, the self-serving mind. The weakness of the will begins when the individual would be something of himself.

That is the ego. Believing that you are an independent, autonomous, self-sufficient entity that has been put into this world from somewhere, not realizing you have come out of it, and you are an intrinsic part of the totality. And so there comes the sense of separateness, of alienation.

With that comes the continuous neediness of the ego, and with that comes the continuous underlying fear. It is always there when you are not connected. There is fear no matter what you may have achieved in the world of form.

The fear will not leave you until the sense of separateness leaves you. You reconnect. Well, wonderful to see that all spiritual teachings in essence are one.

This is why I love to go back to some of the ancient books, and they might use very different words, but once you recognize the truth in yourself, you see the truth wherever it comes, in whatever form it comes, and you say, yes, there it is. I recognize it. And so this is sometimes being called the perennial philosophy.

There is a thread that goes back thousands of years, the same truth being expressed in different words and different forms throughout the ages, in the past by very rare individuals here and there, but somehow it survived in whatever form they left behind, writing, or it survived. Somehow there were always enough humans who had at least an inkling that there was something extremely precious and valuable there. So that's the perennial philosophy that, I don't know who first used that word, there is a very wonderful book by Aldous Huxley of the same title, Perennial Philosophy.

So the truth is there, and there's no arguing once you have it in yourself. You don't attach yourself to the form in which it's being expressed, that's what religions traditionally do. You get attached to the form, not realizing the form points to an underlying essence, which is one.

All religions are one, and you don't even need a religion to see the essence. You are enough. If you have a religion, fine, you don't need it.

But if you use it rightly, it can take you deeper. If you use it wrongly, you get more entangled in ego through your religion. There is no bar or wall in the soul where man, the effect ceases, and God, the cause begins.

There is no separation between you and the source. It's a continuous, you could almost think of it, if you think of it visually, you're connected. If you're walking around a globe, and every being on the globe is connected to the center with a thread, it's a visual representation of it.

You're connected. Now, if the surface reality of where you're walking around is all you have, then you see the separation between you and the other human being or other life form. You see the separateness.

When you are aware of the center within, then you see the unity. So, you're walking around this globe, there's one human being, here's another human being, disconnected because they're only aware of the surface. If you're aware of the depths within yourself, then suddenly you see that you are one with the other.

You're connected at the center. That's a visual, of course, somewhat incomplete representation. The sovereignty of this nature whereof we speak is made known by its independency of those limitations which circumscribe us on every hand.

The soul circumscribes all things. As I have said, it contradicts all experience. In like manner, it abolishes time and space.

The influence of the senses has, in most men, overpowered the mind to that degree that the walls of time and space have come to look solid, real, and insurmountable. And to speak with levity of these limits is, in the world, a sign of insanity. Yet time and space are but inverse measures of the force of the soul.

A man is capable of abolishing them both. You could say, now when he uses inverse measures, you could say, I said that somewhere also, the vastness of space that you see when you look out at night into this clear sky, and that was when I was a child even before, no, about the same time when I had mentioned previously, I would often go out into nature to reconnect with being when I was a child. And one other thing I did that helped me when I was a child, and that didn't happen until I went to live in Spain at the age of 13 and a half, where often the sky is clear, especially in the summer.

And so we lived on the top floor with a, I would climb up onto the roof of the building at night and lie in a deck chair and just look at the vastness of the night sky. And I didn't realize at that time that my mind actually became still. I was just in a state of awe, and I didn't realize at the time I didn't even know anything about meditation.

I didn't know I was in a state of meditative stillness. And there was a sense of awe and of feeling speechless. And what made me speechless was not the, well, it was wonderful to all the thousands of points of light that we call stars or suns, but more than that, the vastness of the space itself.

I already knew a little bit. I was interested in astronomy, and I started reading, and I knew a little bit about the vast distances involved there and the vastness of space, of what a light year is. And it was so inconceivable and totally beyond anything the mind could understand.

Even the greatest scientists cannot understand limitless space. So I sometimes ask myself, well, what is beyond space? And if it's limitless, it's inconceivable.

There's a vastness there that is totally ungraspable and inconceivable. And that, I believe, what he's pointing at, Emerson, here, is what you see as the vastness of space is the externalized vastness of your own being, of being itself. You see it spreading, spread out there.

It contains all things. It's the externalized vastness of consciousness itself. And it appears to us as space.

Now space, of course, is nothing, really. It just enables everything to be, but in itself it is no thing. It is nothing.

So, and time equally, the vast stretches of time, inconceivable. And does time have an end? Does time have a beginning?

And here, too, what we perceive as endless vast time is the externalization of the timeless within. And that gets stretched out when we go into the sense-perceived world. It gets stretched out like, it becomes skimmed milk.

The cream is within you, and then the universe is the skimmed milk, diluted. So that also can put you in touch with yourself. Just look into contemplation of space.

It doesn't have, it could be the space of the night sky. It could even be the space of an inner room. If you go into an ancient church or cathedral, it's particularly beautiful to have to be, if you become aware of, but any room will do it, become aware of, okay, what's the essence of this room?

There's the floor, the ceiling, the walls, the chairs, the furniture in it, the people. Okay, but is there more to it? Yes, of course there's more to it.

What really matters about this room is the space. Without the space, there wouldn't be a room. And there's usually, people would not be aware of the space, they would be aware only of what's in the space, the furniture, the walls, the people, whatever it is.

And so if you can become aware not only of what's in the space and what circumscribes the space, but the space itself, the awareness of space creates in you the awareness of the formless within you. Because only the moment you become aware of space around you, and I can't tell you how, you just have to do it, because there's nothing to grasp, there's nothing to be aware of. So the mind asks, how can I be aware of space if there's nothing there to be aware of?

And that's precisely it. What is left when you're aware of something where there's nothing? What's left is awareness itself.

That's why being aware of space is such a powerful thing, because what you really become aware of then is awareness, nothing, no content. And so it's a beautiful meditation, wherever you go, you can do it, there's even a line in the Tao Te Ching which speaks of what, I don't, I can't remember literally, that it says, there's a bowl and the essence of the vessel or the bowl is the emptiness inside the space. And so to make it a bowl, there's the two aspects, and these are the two aspects to every life form, form and formless.

Form and the essence, the formless. And so if you can be aware that that applies to you also, just like the bowl or like the room, in yourself also there is content, there's furniture inside you, thoughts, some people have a lot of furniture inside, room is just crammed full with furniture, one thought after another. And so, but there must be some space there because the furniture somehow has to get in there, so space is there, you just have to know it's there, there is space inside you already, you don't have to produce it or achieve it somehow, just realize it's already there because otherwise nothing could be there in your mind.

The mind itself in essence is space, which is consciousness. So most people are so seduced by the furniture, so seduced by all these fascinating bits of furniture or furniture they complain about, they don't want but it's there, and so that they're never aware of the space around the furniture inside themselves. What a limitation, which means all you're stuck with is your life situation, your limited life situation, which consists of content, content, the content of your life.

And no matter what you do with the content of your life, it's never satisfying. On the level of content alone, you will always come to a point of frustration because you never, no matter how you rearrange the furniture, I'm using of course, as you know, furniture as a metaphor for everything in your mind, no matter how you arrange the furniture or even if you throw some bits out and take other bits in, you always find it's not quite it. You always very quickly come to a point of dissatisfaction because the transcendent dimension is missing from your life.

And what is the transcendent dimension? The formless space. Not realize that that is the essence of who you actually are.

And so people go through life frustrated, complaining that the world isn't doing what it should be doing to make them happy, not realizing the world cannot make you happy. It's not in the, it's not in its power because the world is a world of form. It can challenge you so that you go deeper and finally find the formless.

That's what it's there for really. And of course the world is good at that. It always does that.

And once you know that, then every challenge you can actually welcome. And every loss you can actually, even though you might weep, you can still welcome it because you can see how precious loss also is. Because what is loss in whatever form?

Loss is some form has been removed from your life and has left behind an empty space. And that happens when somebody close to you dies. Suddenly there's an empty space.

And that is, from the point of view of form, is very painful. And of course you will cry, you will weep, because there is the reality of form, but there's also the deeper reality of the formless. And if you can be with both, then in the presence of death, although you may weep, there will be a deep peace that you sense because the formless shines through the space that's left behind.

And that's the sacred, the divine, God, whatever you want to call it. It shines through. Wherever there's loss, there's grace.

The grace is something has opened up. And that's the essence, that is the essence of the form that passed away also. And that is the indestructible.

That is the deathless, as it's in Buddhism, the closest Buddhism ever gets to talking about God is death, the deathless realm, Amaravati, the deathless. That's how wonderful to see. And then balance comes into your life.

The dance between form and formlessness. The dance between the world and spirit, if you want to call it that. I don't use it very often, it's too many associations there.

And then the beautiful thing is the world is no longer a frustrating place. When you realize that the world was actually meant to be frustrating, it's no longer frustrating. Then you recognize whatever challenge comes, you say, oh, okay, either you resist or you go deeper.

That's always a choice. There's a beautiful line in a book, I believe it's called The Road Less Traveled, and it has the best first sentence or first two sentences of any book. That's why I never read the whole book.

It says more or less this, life is difficult, and when you know that and accept that, it's no longer difficult. It's so simple. Once you know you don't expect something that the world cannot give you, happiness, fulfillment, peace, and once you realize you don't need the world to give you that because that is already, that emanates from the formless dimension within yourself, then, ironically, maybe the universe has a sense of humor or irony, then, ironically, the world and the things of the world are actually quite nice.

They're quite satisfying, and you appreciate them. It's not that you deny. I don't believe that those areas of ancient practices that almost aggressively deny the reality of form are that helpful.

I don't think you can get to the, find the formless within by fighting or aggressively denying the world of form. The world of form is also an expression, it's all an expression of the one, and so the world then becomes a much, a place where you can appreciate whatever form is around you arises, no matter whether it's large or small. Mostly it's small because mostly your life consists of small things.

There's a flower, there's the shopping to do, there's go from here to there, get into the car, take one step at a time. It's all small, really, and you can appreciate the preciousness of all the things in your life, and it's suddenly what before was frustrating now is actually quite pleasant. Why has it become pleasant?

You no longer demand from the world, which includes places you go to, which includes people you meet or have relationships with, which includes situations in your life that arise, which includes achievements, successes or failures, whatever. You don't demand that they should give you what they can't, and you can let them be, you can honor them, but you never, you're not again going to a situation or place and say, I demand that you fulfill me, or go into a relationship and say, I demand that you make me happy. Or whatever condition you encounter, some success and expect ultimate fulfillment through it, no, briefly, yes, and then things happen.

So with this comes then the freedom, freedom from, you could call it freedom from the world. It doesn't mean you disengage from the world, but your attachment to things lessens and then goes. There is appreciation, there is honoring the beauty of life, the beauty of even the smallest things, yes, but without the attachment to that, you don't need that anymore, and you can let go when it's time to let go.

This always comes, wherever you go and whatever you do, at some point it's time to let go, and to the, as long as there's attachment, it's a painful thing when life says, okay, let go now, no, no I can't, it's part of who I am, and that's painful, and then life may even tear it out of your hands, it's even more painful, but it could be so simple, you could say, there you go, and then some other form appears, oh, that's nice, and you know full well there's nothing that is yours ultimately.

The whole thing that you can possess something is, of course, an illusion. You only, for a little while, it comes into, you look after it, and then you hand it on, you look after it, pass it on, let's see what freedom, and then you appreciate the beauty of all things, and you see beauty where before you didn't see beauty, also in the smallest things, and you don't have to take acid for that, but of course the truth is everything around you is intensely alive and beautiful. It's only the judgmental mind that creates the screen, a barrier of conceptualization between yourself and the aliveness of the world, but the essential aliveness is within in the formless, so don't look for the aliveness in there, nature can hint at it, can connect you with own aliveness. Yes, the essence of all life is within.

The action of the soul or consciousness is oftener in that which is felt and left unsaid than in that which is said in any conversation. It's not in the words, it's in the spaces. It broods over every society and they unconsciously seek for it in each other.

You unconsciously seek the formless in the other. We know better than we do. We do not yet possess ourselves and we know at the same time that we are much more.

I feel the same truth how often in my trivial conversation with my neighbours that somewhat higher in each of us overlooks this by-play and Jove nods to Jove from behind each of us. God nods to God from behind each of us. You're engaged in superficial conversation, but there's something in the background that far transcends anything in the world of form which includes words and thoughts.

And if you can sense that in yourself, then you can also sense it in the other. And if you sense that in the other, all relationships become holy relationships, as the Course in Miracles would put it. And you recognize the holy in every relationship, even if it's a brief one.

And there is something in you that knows and recognizes the truth. We know truth when we see it. Let skeptic and scoffer say what they choose.

Foolish people ask you when you have spoken what they do not wish to hear. How do you know it is truth and not an error of your own? We know truth when we see it, as opposed to opinion, as we know when we are awake that we are awake.

Do you know that you are awake? Yes, you must be. So this is direct realization.

So if you know that you are awake, that means what is it that you really know? You know that you're awake. You can subtract anything that appears in your consciousness at this moment, any form, and you could then be left with just the state of being awake.

And there's the formless. One more sentence. Under all this running sea of circumstance, whose waters ebb and flow with perfect balance, lies the aboriginal abyss of real being.

Circumstances, situations, world of form, comings, goings. Underneath it all, the timeless, formless. Become familiar with the state of not needing to continuously interpret and judge what is happening to you or around you.

You don't need that. You actually become more intelligent when you don't continuously and compulsively interpret what's happening or what's in front of you, what you're perceiving. That's an old habit going back thousands and thousands of years.

And the habit says, no, I have to interpret. I become stupid if I don't. I won't know what's going on anymore if I can't judge this person that I'm meeting, or I can have some kind of opinion I like or dislike this situation, or this, I want this, I don't want this, should be happening, that shouldn't.

All the stuff that the mind produces continuously that detracts from the simplicity and power of the present moment, that the mind puts out the screen of conceptualization. And so in living without the compulsive screen of conceptualization is the great liberation. And so you invite into your life the spaces, spaces, the one space really, but spaces of not knowing, not needing to know, not just being present with what is, just giving attention to what is at this moment.

Which implies, of course, accepting the is-ness of whatever this moment brings, whatever form arises in this moment. Can you say yes to what arises in whatever form? Because if you, you should say yes because otherwise you suffer.

Because what is already is. So if you argue internally with what is, you really make the universe into an enemy. I don't want this, but there it is right in front of you.

You say, okay, this is what is. You become the space for it. And that's a very quick way of accessing the space consciousness in you.

By simply bringing an acceptance into the present moment in whatever form it comes. Where before there was an irritation, where before there was a complaint, where before there was an angry reaction, there's now saying, oh, okay, that's what is. You open your arms and say yes to now.

Present moment is my friend. I've had the enemy, present moment has been my enemy for long enough. I'm now making friends with the present moment.

Why? Because that's all I have. There's nothing else ever.

Why not make friends with the present moment in whatever form it appears? And the little, the secret then, of course, the miracle is if you make friends with the present moment no matter in what form it appears, then the formless opens up within you because you become who you already were, space for it. You are the space for that.

That's all. So the primordial spiritual practice, or if you want a mantra, can I be the space for this? You can ask yourself the question when situations arise that before you might have complained about, been irritated about, whatever the reaction would have been, can I be the space for this?

And usually, or I would say always, you will find yes, I can be this. You just forgot that you can be the space for it. You forgot that you are the space for whatever arises in your life because you are the now, you are the consciousness in which it arises.

So you become who you already are. Can I be the space for this? With that is the end of all irritation or angry reactions or complaining, inner no, don't want this, want something else, yeah, but this is what you have now.

And it doesn't mean that you get stuck with what is. The amazing thing is you move on much more quickly when you bring a yes to the present moment. Then life moves on.

You've passed the test. If you bring no to the present moment, means you haven't passed. Okay, you get stuck.

It's all expressed beautifully in the film Groundhog Day. You can live in resistance. You can try whatever you will.

As long as you are stuck in your negativity, you have to do it the lesson again. You wake up the same day. This protagonist wakes up in the same day every day until finally an inner shift happens and he begins to say yes to the present moment.

And then suddenly all the unpleasantness of this day that he has to repeat again and again, all the unpleasantness of that day becomes actually quite pleasant. He's beginning to help people because he says yes to situations. So he becomes a helpful, beneficial presence in that day and suddenly everybody loves him in that town.

And finally he becomes so accepting whereas before he hated where he was and he hated his work. Many people live like that, hating everything, complaining continuously, nothing and nobody's ever good enough. And then suddenly the shift happens and finally he's in the same place and he says to his girlfriend, oh let's stay here, it's quite nice.

And then suddenly he's free and he's no longer forced to repeat the same day. Deep spiritual lesson in there and that's how it is. So it's the egoic mind tells you if you accept what is, you'll be stuck.

This is not the case. Acceptance is the beginning for powerful action if action is required. And non-acceptance, the action that you take on the basis of non-acceptance is never powerful.

It always is tainted with negativity and you could say I call it karmic action. It produces more unhappiness, more karma. So a very quick way then of accessing the space consciousness within, the formless, is not resisting the form that the present moment takes in your life internally.

Wow, huge shift. When you can try it in this evening, there may be little things happening on your way home. Wow, non-resistance, greatest power there is.

Marina asks from North Carolina, in my efforts to be in the now, I find I'm able to reach a state of peace and connectedness. I think that I wouldn't call it effort but I know what you mean. It feels complete and fulfilling and yet there's a voice in my mind saying that to be truly connected I should find a way to be in service to others.

Can you help me understand the role that being in service to others plays in the evolutionary impulse of the universe? Thank you for bringing a ray of hope to humanity. It is an interesting synchronicity to me that the day of your program launch is also my birthday.

Happy birthday. The evolutionary impulse of the universe, the arising of presence, you cannot not be of service to others as presence arises, one way or another. The way in which you are of service to others will vary from person to person.

You may not immediately know what your way is. Again, the mind sometimes wants to know too soon, okay, what am I going to do with it now? Be present and gradually the realization of how you are to serve others, whether it's through direct spiritual teaching or whether it's through some activity into which the energy frequency of presence flows, you don't know.

It may come to you, it might take a while. It took years for this teaching to come out of the state of presence, so many years. It may take a while or it may happen very quickly.

There is an acceleration happening on the planet now of the arising of presence, so it's probably happening more quickly to you than to me. How to be of service to others, whether it's through direct spiritual teaching or some activity, they will come to you either through an external circumstance that will tell you what it is that you need to do. It can come from the outside as a synchronistic event, and many people are telling me that they're finding that things that are just right as they live more and more in presence come into their lives.

The right offer, the right meeting, the right person, and suddenly what it is that you need to do arises from the outside. It comes or you wake up one morning and with the realization of this is what I need to do, and then I would wait and see just to make sure that it comes from a deep enough place, and if it's still there the next day and a week later and there's a deep sense of peace with it and power, then it comes from a deep place and then it's good to act on it. This is how I got taken away from living in England.

I loved England, but one morning I knew I have to remove myself without knowing why, and it was so strong that I removed myself. I knew I had to go to the west coast of North America, not knowing why, and it took a while before I got rid of everything, removed myself, landed on the west coast. What now?

I don't know, and so I sat there for a few weeks in presence, and the mind, yes, came in occasionally and said, this is, why did you come here? And the mind even got to, started to look at ads for flying back to England, fares, and then at some point the impulse came to buy a notepad, carried the notepad, not home, I didn't have a home, somebody had put me up, and there in his kitchen the pen came and a very strong impulse came to write, and I wrote, what is enlightenment? Somebody had once asked me that, but I hadn't, I remembered more or less what I said, but that was a new stream that came, and I'd written one page and I knew, this is a book, it's coming, and so there was simply something I couldn't have predicted, obedience to what came out of the present moment, and the trust to go just into the, with a limited amount of money, into complete unknown, but don't do it on an impulse that is a restless kind of impulse that comes out of any kind of negative emotion, and see if it's still with you after a while, then it's right, it's peaceful and it's powerful.

It seemed the book could only be written on the west coast of North America because of the energy field there. I realized that later when I went back to England, the writing stopped, I could only do editing, and so all kinds of things, people will be called upon to serve in all kinds of capacities according to your abilities. It may be that you produce something artistic or music that is inspiring to many people, whatever it is, we don't know.

It may be that you set up a business and everybody who comes there is greeted for who they are, so you recognize everybody as spirit, as consciousness, and everybody who comes away from your business feels lighter and more themselves. Many things can be used as excuses for spiritual transmission and spiritual teaching, and if you already have some business or some activity, it is quite possible that this could continue to be used then as a vehicle for transmission of spiritual energy, and then it will become empowered. Beautiful thing.

There's no predicting how this will change your life, except that it will change your life, and even if some people may not remove themselves, they may stay where they are, and yet it will change. It might not change what you do, but it will fundamentally change how you do what you do. That's always the most important thing.

It's not what you do, it's how you do it. What is the consciousness that flows into it? Is it the egoic consciousness or is it the unconditioned consciousness?

[Speaker 3] (7:31:14 - 7:32:00)

Eckhart, I've heard you make reference to a number of situations which I think convey the same idea. You've talked about certain cultures that go through a stage where this thought process becomes more developed, which I interpret in some ways as being almost a loss of innocence. Is it necessary for a culture or a stage of civilization to go through this process of losing innocence, of getting trapped in the thought and emotional process, in order then to regain the development of awareness to reach a stage of enlightenment?

Thank you, thank you.

[Speaker 1] (7:32:04 - 7:46:05)

That seems to be the process when we look at it. There are still remnants of ancient cultures, very few these days, who have not gone through that process of loss of innocence or loss of connectedness with being, we could call it, the natural connectedness with being. And a few humans may still have it, very simple people, perhaps who live close to the land, never left.

Very simple people sometimes still have it in some cultures, a natural connectedness with the root of life, with being. They feel they are rooted in themselves, there's a stillness there. That is the natural.

What is happening when you lose it, whether it's an individual or whether it's a whole culture, a whole civilization, when you lose it, then you get lost in problem making, get lost in mind, the loss of original innocence, you could say, which of course is replaced by what is called in Christianity, original sin, which simply means the dysfunction that we all inherit, that is there in the collective.

So the original innocence is replaced by the original sin. Original innocence, however, is much deeper than original sin. Original innocence is always still there, even when original sin comes in, it only covers up the original innocence, it does not destroy the original innocence.

So the original innocence remains and then a human being, either an individual or a whole nation, culture, tribe, moves through the phase of being identified with mind, ego, thinking, problem making, conflict-ridden, suffering life. Suffering, inflicting suffering on other humans around you, continuous violence, and so on. All that is part of the loss of connectedness with being.

That's why so many ancient cultures and this, the innocent state, we once were in that. Many ancient myths exist in different cultures throughout the world that speak of the golden age, something, a time when everything was beautiful. We have it in Indian mythology.

At the beginning, humans, they say, lived in connectedness. I'm paraphrasing, but they were one with life, one with the divine. There were no, they didn't inflict suffering on others.

There was no violence. There was, that was, and many cultures have that myth still. It survived as a myth.

It's also expressed, of course, in the Bible, at the beginning of the Bible, like a paradise, the loss of paradise. And paradise, of course, is not a place. It's a state.

So the loss, is it necessary? Well, it's happening. It has happened and is happening.

So it seems to be an evolutionary process. When innocence is regained, connectedness with being is regained, it is not the same as the state, as that state that was lost. And that perhaps is why it is necessary to go through the state of being lost.

When it is regained, it is regained at a deeper level. There's a great deepening. Innocence is you're fully conscious of your state, rather than living in that room.

For example, this is reflected in your relationship with nature. As your consciousness changes, first, let's say, in the innocent state, there's a oneness with nature and a respect for nature, as the old civilizations had, as the Native Americans had, a respect for nature. They recognized nature as alive with spirit force.

They recognized that the tree is not just a dead object that I can use for making money or for my benefit or to build a house or whatever. They recognized the tree is alive with something more than what you see. And they respected that life.

Every animal, even if they had to kill an animal, they respected the life that is in the spirit presence in the animal. So everything, they inhabited a universe that was alive with presence. Now, then we lost that, and more and more, we began to inhabit a universe that we were deadened ourselves to the aliveness of the universe.

We can't see it anymore. So that we ended up looking at the whole of nature as a utilitarian thing to be used, but no longer recognized the essential aliveness that is in everything in nature. Why couldn't we recognize it anymore, that it is essentially sacred and essentially one with the life that we are, because we had lost that within ourselves.

We had cut ourselves off from the root of being. We were completely trapped in mind, and then nature became dead, and we could then exploit it, do anything, because we didn't know that there's a sacred presence there. We've lost the sacred presence within ourselves.

Well, it was covered up. Then we regain it. Then again nature is alive, but this time there is the added dimension of conscious awareness.

When you've always lived in oneness with nature, you don't even know that you live in oneness with nature. It's totally natural. But when you do it with full consciousness, there is an added dimension to it.

And so this is what's happening, and this seems to be why the process is that we have to move through the stage of being lost and then regaining. Perhaps the truth of that is expressed in the parable of the prodigal son, which predates, actually, it's used in various cultures, even when Jesus used it. It exists in different forms.

The son of a rich father says to the father, give me my inheritance. I want to go out and make a life for myself. And so the father says, okay, you go out into the world, and the son goes out in the world, squanders his wealth, becomes a destitute, and becomes a beggar, and even forgets where he comes from.

And then eventually the father sends messengers to the son to remind him who he is. Don't you remember that you are? And the beggar says, no, me, the son of the king?

No, don't. And gradually the memory comes back to him, and then he comes back to his father's house, and the father now loves him more than before. That's the story.

So there's a deepening, what that parable means, there's a deepening after you've been lost. When you regain that which has been lost, it is regained at a deeper level because you're now fully conscious of it. There's a conscious dimension, the awareness that is there.

That's why that seems to be our destiny. But perhaps there is no... I just know that this is how it is.

There may be exceptions. There may be certain people on the planet or small groups of people who don't go through it. Who knows?

We'll have to see. I can only see the general trend, the general movement seems to be, yes, we have to go through that. There may well be exceptions to that.

There may well be certain people who remain in the state of innocence, and that is wonderful too. I don't know. So that's the paradise regained.

That is the cycle. And so I know that I had to go through it. You had to go through it or are still going through it.

And so the state of innocence is lost in childhood. Every child is still born with it, but then very quickly these days it is lost. Well, no, it's never lost.

It's obscured. That's the journey. From an anonymous questioner.

I have read that as long as we are in a body, we have a shadow. Is this true for you? What is your shadow?

Let me think. What is your shadow? Do you have a shadow?

Okay. The answer is, part one of the answer is yes. Part two of the answer is, if you ask anybody if they have a shadow, and they say no, then you know that they have a shadow.

And if they say yes, they don't. Because shadow, which is just a way, it's a Jungian term, which I don't normally use, but what it means is an area of unconsciousness that you're not aware of. Because if you're aware of it, it's no longer unconscious.

It's not really a shadow. So if it's an area of unconsciousness in your life, and if it's truly a shadow or an area of unconsciousness, then, of course, you won't know it. You might know there's a certain behavior pattern, but you will not recognize it as an area of unconsciousness.

You might say, of course I get furious every time somebody mentions this or that because, and you have some justification, it's not recognized as an unconscious reactive pattern. Or you might be totally unconscious of it and say, I'm never angry. Why do you accuse me of always being angry?

So it's right there, but you don't know it. You deny it. So the shadow then, anybody who says no, they probably have one.

If they say yes, then they have seen that there are certain areas where there are certain behavior patterns still operating. Of course they are, because as long as somebody has a body, certain patterns operate, certain behavior patterns. You might have idiosyncrasies, ways of doing things.

So if you're aware that that's there, then that's all that it is. It's not a totally conscious thing. It's not a shadow as such.

We can talk also in terms of ego. If you're aware of certain patterns in you that originated from ego, and they still operate to some extent, although you live mostly in awareness, sometimes there's a momentum behind certain behavior patterns. Like they're not being energized anymore, but it's still there.

And so if you're aware of it, it's not really the ego anymore. Ego implies unobserved mind. Ego implies you don't know it's the ego.

There's no awareness. There's just the conditioned mind doing its thing, acting out. The moment you bring awareness to it, there's a light on it.

So if the light shines, it's shining on the shadow. It's not a shadow. Shadow means there's an absence of light, and light means consciousness.

So ego is no longer ego when you know there's ego. It's only truly speaking ego when you don't know it, and there's unconsciousness.

[Speaker 3] (7:46:08 - 7:46:09)

Thank you.

[Speaker 1] (7:46:11 - 7:46:18)

A friend of mine got shot and died a couple days ago, so it's been on my mind.

[Speaker 3] (7:46:19 - 7:46:28)

What happens at the time of death, and where does the life force go? What is the transformation?

[Speaker 1] (7:46:30 - 7:54:57)

Thank you. Well, I haven't gone through physical death yet. As the Zen master who was asked about life after death said, I don't know.

And they said, why don't you know? You're the master. And he said, yeah, but I'm not a dead master.

But I've gone very deeply to what one could call death to identification with form. So in a way, I have gone into that realm from where I can say and know that ultimately what we see as death is the dissolution of form, that the eternal in us, which I know that firsthand, cannot be touched by that. So what exactly happens, I would say, depends on whatever state of consciousness you were in.

That must be a predominant state of consciousness in this lifetime. If in this lifetime you were continuously identified with form, your body, or the psychological form of me, that means consciousness, this expression of consciousness, was still in a somewhat dreamlike state, which is identification with form. And you can easily extrapolate from that if the tendency of consciousness to identify with form was still there, which in other ways the awakening had not happened, this tendency will continue.

There will be further identification with form, and the process will continue as the consciousness that is not yet fully awake will continue to identify with form again, and then gradually come to a place where awakening happens. Or if there has already been a disidentification from form in this lifetime, then you can extrapolate from there that the compulsive urge to identify with form and to seek another form or another cycle of form identification, this compulsion to seek further experiences through identifying with form, then would either be much weaker or be completely absent, in which case the consciousness that you are is no longer bound to this realm and will not seek to re-experience the realm of form. But in either case, I know, I can tell you that all is well. It does not really matter whether this person now needs further experiences of identification, in which case this will happen, or whether he's already free of this urge, in which case he will move on and live in a realm that we can't even conceive of from where we are here.

I get a sense deep within in the forms of what that is, but we don't need to talk about it here. All we know is nothing, this is the beginning of A Course in Miracles, which is the entire Course in Miracles summarized in two lines, nothing real can be threatened, nothing unreal exists, herein lies the peace of God. That which is real in him is beyond form.

Anybody can know that when you see a dead body, you realize that this is no longer whom you knew, this is not the being that you knew, this is only a shell. So nothing real can be threatened, nothing unreal ultimately exists. This is why sages from all traditions speak of this realm of form as ultimately illusory, ultimately, it depends what level you look at.

The important thing is all is well, beyond the appearance on the level of form, which is the only level where death exists, it is the transition from one form into another form, or from one form into formlessness. That is what death is, no more than that, nothing real dies, nothing real dies, which is to say ultimately there is no such thing as death, there only seems to be. It's a transmutation of form, either form dissolves or seeks some other form, some other identification with form.

That for you, of course, to go into stillness in the face of death, to go into stillness is important, to become still within yourself, especially when you are sitting with somebody who is going through the death process, or you are confronted with somebody who has just died next to you, to be with that, immediately close your eyes, go into the deep stillness where you realize who you are. And once you realize who you are, which is formless consciousness, then you realize also that nothing real died. Nothing real died, which is to say ultimately there is no death.

It does not mean that you can't feel sad. You can allow yourself to feel tears and to feel sad, and at the same time realize that nothing real died. That happened to me when my parents died two years ago, within a space of six months, both of them, so to be confronted with the death of a loved one in a short period of time.

Yes, there were tears, and there was sadness, and at the same time there was the realization that ultimately there is no death, and who they were in their essence has not been destroyed. Just as I know that I, in my essence, cannot be destroyed. And so that comes from that, it comes from self-realization or self-knowledge, the realization that the other also is beyond death.

So you can have the coexistence of, yes, on this level there is a place for sadness and mourning and tears. If it happens, if it comes in waves, you may have noticed usually if somebody close to you dies, the sadness comes in waves at you, and then you cry, and then it leaves you, and then comes another wave. And even when the wave comes, there can be an undercurrent of peace.

So you're not totally in that emotion, you're not totally consumed by it, it exists there in your own spaciousness. And the spaciousness underneath the emotion is the peace. And it's only from that inner peace that you can realize the truth behind death.

[Speaker 2] (7:55:03 - 7:55:42)

I don't know how you'd label this question. I've met some people, or had conversations with people who are going through what might be called a crisis of awakening. And it seems like the identification with self is mostly fallen away.

And they're in a kind of terror. And they feel like they're going insane. And I can kind of, I mean, I'm not there myself, but I can, I've had those times when it's like giving up all control over everything feels kind of scary.

[Speaker 1] (7:55:43 - 8:07:35)

And I just wondered if you could speak to that. Okay, thank you. Yeah.

Yes, I've also encountered people like that. The mind feels suddenly scared, which really is the ego is still there to some extent. And it becomes a little panicky.

I'm not in control anymore. But there is a place, so one can lose oneself in that. But I would advise a person like that to look for a place that is not confused inside, a place that is not scared.

Many people say they're confused or scared. But really, the way out of it is really always the fuller acknowledgement of the present moment. Because the rest of it, all that confusion and feeling scared is you're not in the present moment, you're in your mind again, and your mind is saying, Oh, my life is falling apart.

I have to start worrying again, because otherwise, it's all going to fall apart. So once you realize that you've moved out, that needs to, the realization needs to be there of that. Okay, I'm lost in the mind again.

Okay, you're not lost, because you know that you're lost. The moment you realize it's happening for a while, you may not realize it's happening. You're so identified with your panicky thoughts that you're completely in them, you don't even know what's happening to you.

And then it time may pass while you're completely in your thoughts. Oh, I think I'm going mad. I just don't know.

I can't figure things out anymore. I don't. They're not, I can't work things out.

Don't know. The mind says you should have an opinion about everybody and I don't anymore. You shouldn't have an opinion about every situation you're in and your life.

I don't know what to think about my life anymore. That's dreadful. That's the mind.

And of course the opposite is true. If you don't know what to think about your life anymore, then you're beginning to wake up and realize there's no such thing as your life. There's only life.

Your life is a mental construct. It's a story. The story of me.

So it's always the moment you realize it's happening, or if you're trying to help somebody, bring your attention to the present moment. This is the exit point out of confusion. You can't be confused when your attention moves into the present moment because the present moment is always simple.

There's always a simplicity about it. The complexity is in the mind structures, the unobserved mind of the ego. So simply take your attention into the present moment and then confusion suddenly dissolves because the mind says, I need to work something out.

I need to understand something. No, you don't. All you need to do is respond to this moment.

Either this moment may require action or it may not require action. Just be there for this moment and then it becomes simple. You cannot do more than one thing at a time, for example, in this moment.

No matter how much you have to do, you can only do one thing. Well, you can do two things, but it gets hard. Basically, you do one thing at a time and give it your attention.

Or do nothing and bring attention to sense perceptions. Look around and get a sense of what this moment feels, what it is, what does it mean, this moment. First of all, it means what you see and perceive, because that's this moment.

And that's already a revelation because you might have been so trapped in your mind that you were completely unaware of your surroundings. And you didn't realize there was a beautiful tree there and there are clouds there. You didn't realize that there's a sound of the wind outside.

You didn't realize that you are breathing in the air. You didn't realize that all those things around you are vitally alive. You didn't realize that because you were stuck in your head thinking about your problems.

And so the beginning of the present moment is that. And then you can go a little deeper. Then you can experience the present moment as the energy field in your body, as the aliveness in your body.

And then you can go even deeper and experience the present moment as the awareness of all this, rather than the present moment isn't the flower as such. The flower appears in the present moment, but essentially what the present moment is, it's the consciousness in which you see the flower. Otherwise there would be no flower.

Remove the consciousness. I don't know what's left. No flower.

You all know the famous saying, the tree in the forest, if a tree falls in the forest and there's nobody there to hear it, does it make a noise? And of course it doesn't, because noise implies not only a sensory organ, it also implies a consciousness that's perceiving through the sensory organ that brings about what we call noise. And without that there's no noise.

And you can even follow that up and ask other similar questions. But what I'm pointing to is the present moment in essence is not the things. The things appear in the space of the present moment.

It's always present moment. You can't get out of that. Your life is always one with now.

Your life and now are one. If you doubt that, then let me know one day when you can say, my life is not now. Or maybe you remember when it wasn't now.

Not possible. Life and now is synonymous. Life is now, now is life.

But the mind says, yeah, but what does that mean? Isn't that just words? No, it's more than words.

The words are pointing to a realization. And that is, whatever appears has to appear in the present moment, but in itself is not the present moment. It is a form that appears in the space of now.

Everybody in this room or wherever the body is, is a form that appears in the space of now. Whatever happens, whatever thought comes, whatever emotion is felt, is a form that appears in the space of now. And that now is consciousness, timeless, ever present.

You are that. I am that. So that's really what the present moment is.

So ultimately it's yourself, it's consciousness, and you are consciousness. So bringing attention to the now takes people out of confusion. The now begins with sense perceptions.

To encourage people, or do it to yourself, if you find you become lost in your mind, come into your senses first. Touch something. Whatever, any surface, feel it.

Then look. Already confusion subsides because your attention gets away from thinking into the act of perception. Then listen.

Less and less confusion. What is there to be confused about right here? Nothing.

Then breathing. And breathing takes attention into the inner body. Alive.

It's alive. Where's the confusion? It's gone.

You stopped giving attention to your thoughts, the confusion is gone. And then you go even deeper into just the spaciousness of stillness. No confusion in there.

And then, that's fine. Every time it happens, use that process of reorientation of focus of your consciousness into now. So this is the advice you can give, and you do it with people when they come to you in a state of confusion.

Say, okay, sit there, okay, look around, look, touch something, look at this, listen to the rain, listen to the wind, listen to the birds, listen to the car, be there as the presence for it. Confusion can end very quickly that way. Present moment is the exit point out of confusion, is the point of exit out of your mind.

And it's always there. You just have to acknowledge it. So, and when it happens again, same process, no more confusion.

It's a shift for people. You get drawn back into the old consciousness and step out again. That's why we call the awakening process.

For most people, it is a, we are transitional, most of the people going through this, we are transitional beings from, it's a very significant and incredible thing, from one way of being, one state of consciousness that's been there for thousands and thousands of years, to a different state of consciousness. And so we live, many people live in two worlds, in two states, still shifting, and gradually awareness takes over from continuous thinking. And then it's all different.

It's like, I sometimes call it as you, as I say, at the end of the new earth, a new species is emerging on the planet. One could almost say that, we still look the same, but your inner state is so different from the normal, insane state, that it's like a completely new species. And yet it's already, it's already arising in you.

It's not something that you need to arrive at at some future point. I want to become a new species. It's already arising.

[Speaker 3] (8:07:40 - 8:09:06)

For the past several years, I've been making a concerted effort to live a, especially sort of, you know, conscious, present, spiritual path, and doing yoga and meditation and retreats and that sort of thing. And now when I hear people talk about, you know, spiritual stuff, I kind of cringe. It's like, I feel like there's this spiritual thing that's like separate, you know, separate from this, you know, this special dimension.

At first it was really great, you know, because I was meditating like, you know, 10 hours in a weekend and I could tell everybody how cool it was and, you know, how special and unique I felt, you know, practicing this special spiritual life. And now I just, I listen to what you say and other people say, I just want to hear about, like, how I'm no one. And I mean that sincerely in being in this, but just not having to, even though, you know, I am conscious, all these words that just seem to get in the way a lot of the time.

I mean, you know, they're concepts and everything. But I just, I just, I hear the, I feel the sweetness of not, just really not having to be this special, unique, you know, spiritual person on top of being a regular person. It's like this, you know, double-decker sandwich that I got to carry around and I'm, and it's, and it's getting stale.

And I, I, I don't know. I don't know if there's a question in there, but maybe you could, maybe you could speak, speak to that.

[Speaker 1] (8:09:06 - 8:09:06)

Thank you.

[Speaker 3] (8:09:07 - 8:09:08)

Yes. Okay. Thanks.

[Speaker 1] (8:09:12 - 8:10:07)

Well, you overdid it a little bit with your spiritual practice. And hence the reaction now, because you have to get back to some normality after all that specialness over that, both your spiritual practice, where you thought of yourself as special and your practice as special. You went quite far to an extreme and you're now experiencing the reaction to that extreme.

And that's good. In other words, you don't want to hear about anything spiritual anymore. I've had it, right?

So you overdid it. Now there's a reaction. Don't mention to me anything spiritual anymore, you say, but of course, you know, the famous expression, what is it?

The baby and the bath water. Don't throw out your baby with the bath water.

[Speaker 3] (8:10:07 - 8:10:08)

Well, it's like, it's all spiritual.

[Speaker 1] (8:10:09 - 8:10:10)

It's all spiritual.

[Speaker 3] (8:10:10 - 8:10:11)

That it's so separate.

[Speaker 1] (8:10:11 - 8:17:55)

So now first you went to that extreme. Now you go to an extreme of reaction and eventually end up in the middle where every moment is spiritual as it is. There's not nothing special.

Spirit is not separate from daily existence. So that's when we say spiritual, we're not referring to some realm out there that is to be achieved at some point where you become more special than you are now. It's not going to happen.

It's here and now. We're going deeper into the here and now. That's spiritual.

Now you are a little bit tired of these words because you went too far to that extreme. So you have to realize if you're a little bit perhaps like a Christian who was once very religious and suddenly got fed up, and then occasionally I have people in talks who are ex-Christians, and the moment I say, occasionally I say, Jesus said, they go, oh, don't talk to me about anything that's remotely Christian. I don't want to hear that.

I've had all that. So they don't realize because of that. Of course, they had a somewhat distorted view of what the whole thing was about.

So they didn't, but they can't stand the terms anymore. And that's fine. It's a phase.

You will come through that. Maybe it's happening already. It's the ordinariness.

Spiritual means the more spiritual you are, the more ordinary you are, the more non-special you are. And again, for the ego, that means, okay, I have to become more non-special. How do I become ordinary?

Okay, I need somebody to teach me to be ordinary. So I understand your dilemma, and perhaps you understand it also. And so this nothing special, chopping wood, carrying water, Zen defines spirituality, ultimately, what is the spiritual life, chopping wood, carrying water, which is the kind of thing you do in Zen monasteries.

Daily doing, in my case, it's buying some food in the store, going to have a cup of coffee, taking the dog for a walk in the forest, listening to the BBC World News, having a glass of wine occasionally with a meal, watching a movie, nothing extraordinary, and so quite an ordinary existence. And so it's hiding in there. The spirituality is in there.

It's not away from there, to just this. And so I'm sorry about these words that we use, but language is limited. So we have to use certain words.

And perhaps the emotion around these words, then eventually it's going to go and they become neutral again. And you can use them for what they are, which is simply useful pointers no more. Thank you.

Is proximity, this is Nancy from Florida, is proximity to someone who is in presence important or is listening to an awakened person on CD equally helpful? If the readiness is there, I would say listening on CD can be equally helpful for those who are ready. And even a book can be equally helpful for those who are ready.

For others, the added presence of an actual physical presence of the teacher might sometimes break certain egoic resistances. But that's more the case in a disciple guru relationship. And so I'm not a guru as such, although some people would want me to be one.

A guru works closely together with disciples. And I did that for a little while, for a few years, and that was fine. But life has now called upon me to fulfill a different function.

And there's still a place for spiritual teachers who work with people more closely on a prolonged basis with disciples. Again, I could say a lot about that, the dangers involved and the possibilities involved in that. But I know that from correspondence I receive that many people's lives have changed from watching CDs or reading books.

Because when you recognize presence in another, that means there must be presence in you. So it's always in you when you recognize there's this great spiritual being there. How do you recognize it?

Through the very same consciousness in you. Because if it wasn't in you, you wouldn't recognize this. This person would look totally ordinary to you and say, I don't know what this fuss is all about.

And so there were always many people who never, you could, without that opening, you can live with the Buddha for 10 years, 20 years and say, he's just a completely ordinary person. And in a way he is. I mean, he's more ordinary than ordinary without an ego, that's true.

So when you recognize presence in another, at that moment, there is the presence in you. It's only presence can recognize presence. So it's always in you.

So whether you can recognize it when you see a CD, say, wow, where does that wow come from? The power, the aliveness that your mind is telling me is in that person there. No, it's in you.

So it's better not to project it and make a person special, which the mind tends to do. Well, the person is special, but so are you. You are equally special.

There's nobody closer to God than you are, to use that word, except that they may not know it. They may not know it. So when you recognize this, the wonderful thing is turn your attention within and say, where is the realization that this is a wonderful spiritual being talking right now?

How do I know that? Because you are a wonderful spiritual being, so to speak. You're not a being, you are an expression of being, but the words are limiting.

[Speaker 2] (8:18:22 - 8:37:37)

I learned through my relationship with Eckhart that any and all my ideas I had about what a relationship should be, what my relationship should look like, and how I wanted my relationship to be, it took a lot of looking and some years where I finally realized that I wasn't having a real relationship. I was just having a relationship with an idea in my head. And I wasn't meeting the other and seeing the other as we can say as myself or the essence of the other, the essence of Eckhart.

But I just had all my expectations and ideas, my imagination, and that's how I was relating. And you could only see that in the daily activities, in your daily life. You could know this, and I knew it on some level that consciousness, that stillness was not about thought, it's not about your ideas, and you can know this, and in a relationship it's not about the idea of a relationship.

But that's when the awareness, the inner work, needs to be done. You have to take it beyond the intellectual and then actually then to discover it. So it's discovery becomes this inner deep knowing that okay what I see what I'm doing is that I'm not relating with another human being as consciousness, as stillness, but as ego.

So when I saw that, and it took many times seeing it, for example, we come from different cultures, Eckhart is from Germany, even though I'm born in Canada, I'm Chinese, so I had the cultural conditioning of Chinese. We bring to it our own conditioning, and plus being a woman, him a man, the idea, and all that sort of stuff, the era in which Eckhart was born, the generation in which I was born. So I have certain expectations that I brought to the relationship.

The first one I remember is very close to when Eckhart and I first got together in relationship, and I thought I had to do sort of all the cooking, you know, all the cleaning up afterwards, and that was my conditioning. And he didn't have to do anything, and I didn't realize that his conditioning also is that, because he was brought up in Europe, Germany, and in Spain, where he had his mother, his stepmother, who did everything. So it was easy for him just to, that was it, you just allow the woman to do it, at least this was my perception, because he was not doing too much, right?

So here I was, and then I was starting to get resentful, like, you know, here I am chopping the vegetables or whatever, or cleaning up, and I'm like, why doesn't he do anything? You know, he's got to do something, you know, like, why do I have to ask? I shouldn't have to ask.

And then suddenly I realized, oh my god, these are all my thoughts in my head, my expectations, instead of just telling him, you know, I don't want to do all the cooking, you know? So I told him that, and he goes, oh, okay, well, you don't have to cook, we'll go out. I went, oh, okay, so we'll go out, all right.

I don't think at that time I didn't really say to him, well, just help me, you know, I just said, okay, yeah, okay, we'll go out, because I didn't really like cooking anyways, at least so I thought at that time. So we went out, and we went out a lot, and then plus we traveled, and we ate out again, so I was feeling more and more unhealthy. And anyways, when we bought a house together over in the island and had this wonderful big kitchen, I found myself cooking and able to, I liked cooking, I enjoyed it, and I wanted to, we wanted to be at home.

So we came back to the same scenario again, right? We weren't going out to the restaurants, and here I was cooking, but this time I was able to express, to say, you know, I would like some help, and he would go, okay. But then, you know, several weeks and months would pass, and I'd have to still keep on asking, well, I need some help now, and then I can say, just this thought arises in the background, like, oh my God, why is it that I always have to ask him?

It's just like a little kid, where I have to, you know, always have to ask a little kid what to do. Why can't he just offer and help? I went, wow, this is what I expect.

I expect him to just help, when his nature, his conditioning is that he just doesn't, unless he's asked. So I had to resign and just say, okay, I just have to ask, and it was me that was stirring up all the angst, all the anxiety, in the thought that I wanted him different than what he is. So, I don't mind now.

I just say, okay, time to help, and he'll go, okay, and he just, he'll help. So, I mean, those are just the superficial things in the relationship, the daily things, because many people ask me about what my relationship with Eckhart is like, and how wonderful it must be, and yes, on the level of silence, of stillness, it's absolutely wonderful. I feel like I'm right at home in stillness.

We don't have to say a word and can just sense the stillness, but we have the daily life, and this is where most of us can get caught up in, because you can meet somebody, and you have that wonderful spiritual connection, and you go, ah, this is wonderful, this is great, and some people are conscious of that spiritual connections, and other things that this is just, they don't know about the spiritual end of things, but they just, they just sense something, they just love this person, they want to be with this person, etc., until you live with them, and it is a working out, it is a giving space to allow them to have their conditioning, because that's, we all have it, but it's our own job to be aware of what our conditioning is, what our expectations are, and to hear the other, to, okay, what's their conditioning? It took several years before, Eckhart would never really ask me for anything, for example, I learned this when we were in Germany one time, and Eckhart wasn't there, he decided not to come for dinner, and we went with a group of people to dinner, and one woman said, is your water no good? And I said, yes, it's fine, and then my friend who sat next to me, who is also German, said, she's really asking you for a sip of water, and I went, she asked me if my water was good, but she didn't ask me for a sip, no, that's how, that's how we ask, we don't ask directly, and I went, oh my gosh, Eckhart's been doing this to me for years, I thought, you mean he was really asking for a sip of my water, and I never knew it, so, and I went, okay, I understand, so, it is learning each other's own conditioning, and seeing how we apply our own conditioning, our own idea of how our relationship, or how communication should be, when the other has, you know, some other conditioning going on, some other way of being in this world, and relating how we relate, and this happens all around the world, and this is where miscommunication comes in, conflict comes in, because we have all these different ideas, but it's to see and to learn what those ideas, what the expectations, what that conditioning, what that culture is, is to learn it, and not demand that they change and be like yourself, so when I went back to the hotel, and I told Eckhart that, and he went, yeah, yeah, that's right, and then when I, it's interesting, because when I finally knew and understood what he wanted, he was then be able to, because I was able to communicate, maybe we just didn't know what was going on, I don't know what he thought, maybe he thought it was totally selfish, all this for many years or something, I don't know, but he was then able to now say, can I have a sip of your water? So it's giving each other that space just to be, and watching, learning, listening, to hear just exactly what it is that's being communicated, so it's beautiful that we have these two cultures, German and Chinese, which are very two strong different cultures, and just finding out about it, exploring, however the basis of our relationship, I think, would not have last, I probably would have walked out a long time ago, because I would have thought he was lazy, if I didn't have this understanding, and this primary importance of having God, consciousness, stillness, whatever you want to call it, in my life first, and having that be the holder, the container, of what the form, in this case, my form in relationship with Eckhart, is, that's the holder, and to realize that whatever form, and it's taken many years to realize that whatever form is going on, is not as important as the background, the stillness in which the form emerges, arises, and that's the beauty, and then when that stillness is there, then the things, the everyday life, yeah, there'll be ups and downs, it's not always great, and it's not always bad, it's, you know, sometimes we got to do things, but it's coming back, always, just to the present moment, to go beyond the conditioning, knowing that it's there, maybe even having the awareness that, yes, you have expectations, but then allowing the expectations to go, just let it go, and just see them as that, expectations, and just to live in that, in that stillness, and move, and breathe, and communicate from that place, and just allowing the nature of the other person just to be. I get a kick out of every time when we, because we live on Salt Spring, and we have this recycling thing going on, and we go to the recycling, and we have these containers of, you know, paper, plastic, etc, bottles, and so we have about six, seven containers, we load up in the truck, and we go, and Eckhart, by nature, is very, you know, just kind of slow, he just sort of casually, just sort of moves, and does it, and

I'm a little quicker, so we can go to the recycling, and here we're doing our jobs, and I realize, wow, I've done like five containers, and he's done two, and you know, it's like, okay, this is, it's okay, it's, it's fine, this is how he is, he just moves a little slower. I could create a story in my head about it, but I've accepted that, okay, he just, he's with me, and he's doing it, and it's enough, and if I want him to do more in me, less than, if I want him to do it in half, I could easily just hop in the car, and wait, and let him do his half, I suppose, but it's just easier just to, for me, just to do it, it's there, it's okay. So, every relationship goes through just that working out of how everyday life is going to emerge.

We have a unique circumstance, and I think we both really love it, and that is, we're fortunate enough to have three places. In Vancouver, we each have our own apartment, that is right across from each other, so we have our own space, and then we live part-time together on the island, and some people will think, wow, that's just so weird, and other people think, that's neat. I think for both of us, at least for me, I love it, I love having my own space.

So, you find a way to live together. Now, not everybody is going to be able to afford to have that amount of space, physical space, but it's a working out, it's finding the way, and we need to find that way, respect each other, be able to give that other person the space. I know, just on this awakening process, it requires a lot of space, at least it did for me, a lot of alone time to search, to look, to be where you can say, even in meditation, although I wasn't quite always sitting there in formal meditation, but just being aware, being able to see the mind working and operating, and how the thoughts just arise, and what kind of those thoughts are, and not, as what Eckhart says, taking your thoughts so seriously, to be able to just, ah, okay, it's not so important, all my ideas, opinions, expectations, it's not important, and in order to have what we can call a successful relationship, we need to each come to that place to realize, not intellectually, but really internally, inner knowing that, yes, the form of this moment is secondary, the primary importance is the space in which all communication, in which all love, presence, activity flows, and it's not so much a commitment to the other, but a commitment to your relationship with God, with stillness, and that's the true relationship, is stillness, is God-consciousness, and when you're truly committed to that, then life flows, and shit happens, and it will always happen, true life is now, it's not what happens, it's the space in which it happens, and that's love.

[Speaker 4] (8:37:40 - 8:37:50)

2011-Eckhart-Tolle-Hawaii-Retreat

[Speaker 1] (1:16 - 51:12)

Welcome, welcome. Does it work? No, of course not.

Does? Electronics seem to break down easily these days here. Welcome to everybody here and wherever you are on the planet.

The retreat is short but intensive. We'll have five sessions all together. Tomorrow evening, some of you may not know this yet, we are meeting again at 8 o'clock Hawaiian time for our evening gathering, probably a meditation, but who knows.

So, three sessions tomorrow. In the afternoon, probably questions and answers, or questions without answers, we'll see. So, just one or two practical things, recommendations for you, both those of you who are here and those of you who are elsewhere.

I recommend that for the duration of our retreat, you don't watch television and if possible, don't use alcohol, unless you really need a glass of wine for medicinal purposes. Even one cold beer might not matter that much, but the first cold beer can easily lead to the second cold beer and then before you know it, you have fallen below thinking, believing that you are approaching enlightenment. If some of you wish to remain silent, not speak to anybody during the retreat, of course, you're welcome to do so and if that's what you wish to do, we can agree on a little sign when somebody approaches you, you just do as the Zen master did when he asked the meaning of Zen, then people will know that you are in silence.

Although whether you are present is another question, because the question is whether there is silence in here and of course this is what this is all about, to encounter, to access, to deepen that dimension of stillness, we could call it that. And I have another suggestion for you, this goes a little bit beyond the practical already, and that is just as a, let's call it an experiment while you are here, the thoughts that arise in your mind, and particularly viewpoints on this or that matter or topic, don't give them a great deal of importance. So I recommend that as a continuing practice for you, especially for the duration of this retreat, and then hopefully that will carry on into the rest of your life.

I'll explain for a moment what that means. Most humans are or have been hijacked, so to speak, by their thoughts. I don't know this.

And when humans express viewpoints or opinions, out aloud or even to themselves in the internal dialogue that goes on in most people's minds, these viewpoints can have an enormous amount of force behind it. You can, if you listen to people, you can see how when they express their viewpoints, how much energy there is behind that, and how important they believe their viewpoint is, because they don't know it's a viewpoint, for them it's the reality. And of course somebody else has another viewpoint, which to him or her is their reality.

So this complete identification with opinions and viewpoints, which are thoughts that have an energy behind them, become aware of that, and so that treat your viewpoints as they arise concerning all kinds of matters, the retreat, where you are, other people, the food, the lack of this or that, should, shouldn't, strong viewpoints are attached usually to each should and shouldn't, and they, why don't they, all the viewpoints, which usually dominate people's consciousness and make up a large part of their sense of identity, be aware of them, and realize it's a viewpoint, and just don't give it that much importance. It's, then you, a minute later, you may find another viewpoint coming out of your mouth, and then an awareness arises, oops, there's another strong viewpoint, and there we have, when you bring consciousness to that, you're already beginning to dismantle the egoic state of consciousness, because it thrives on identification with thought, and particularly, thoughts that have an enormous amount of self in it, so you identify with the thought, this is how it is, this is what they should do. Often, often, often viewpoints are connected with fault finding, the ego loves that, where's the next fault I can complain about?

If you can, if you come here, of course you can complain about all the species that are around you that are called tourists. How can I have a retreat with all these tourists? Of course, tourists are just humans like you, but once the mind has conceptualized another human, that human is no longer human completely to you, it's become conceptualized, and it has lost, you cannot sense its aliveness.

And in the collective consciousness or unconsciousness, sometimes collective viewpoints arise, again, in order to conceptualize others, perhaps the ego loves it, because it gets stronger when you can weaken somebody else through your conceptualization. So, observing viewpoints in yourself, and of course you will perhaps be more aware when viewpoints are being expressed in other people as you are here, but beware of saying to them, do you know what you're doing? You're identifying with a mental position again, a viewpoint.

You're in your ego, can't you see it? And then you can experience what the ego does when you are directly confronting it. You can't, you'll never win, your own ego will come up.

So, in other words then, thoughts that come into your head during this retreat, let's just put it like this, not just the strong self-identified opinions and viewpoints, but let's say all thoughts that come, and every thought is some kind of judgment, that's what a thought is, let's say for this duration of this retreat, they're not that important. And you're not losing anything, because if you don't find that satisfying at the end of the retreat, you can give back all the habitual importance to your thoughts again, if you want to, but why not just be open to this and see what happens if no thought that arises in your mind is given a great deal of importance? That's another thought.

So that's a practice when we speak tomorrow afternoon. I hope I will get some feedback about your practice. With thoughts and viewpoints.

It is liberating. At first it seems strange. What no thought that I think is important, you feel kind of diminished.

But as you withdraw, endowing these thoughts with such importance, something else arises in you that's actually more important than any thought. And that is, again it's just a name, the dimension of awareness or presence. So thought begins to lose its hold over you.

You can use it, but it can't use you anymore. So we could say, and also I suggest this as a practice here, to observe. This is just another way of talking about what we've just been talking about.

For the sake of our practice, let's put it like this, although ultimately it's not true, as very little that one says in words is ultimately true. There are two of you here, or at any time, there are two of you, or there are two dimensions. You consist of two dimensions.

This is not the ultimate truth, but it is a very useful approach towards the truth. There are two dimensions in you. There are two of you.

Let's put it like that. There is the form you, I call it in the power of now, your form identity, which of course is, first of all, the physical body. Second, the form identity is the psychological form of you, the who you think you are, consisting of memories and thoughts, emotions, reactive patterns, the psychological form of me, physical form, psychological form.

And the psychological form consists of thoughts and emotions, feelings. Now, for most people, that's all they know about themselves, that they are their form identity, not realizing that the most vital part of who they are, they're completely unaware of. And we could call that, I call it in the power of now, your essence identity, which has no form.

We are here to deepen our awareness of our essence identity. We are not here to improve who you are on the level of form. But there are other workshops you can go to for that.

And that has its place. There may be a certain time in one's life when that is helpful. But what, the most vital thing is the realization of one's essence identity, which is formless, the formless part of who you are.

And really, this is the very core of our teaching here. You, this is what you need to get. If you haven't got it already, it's the entire, our entire retreat, all the teachings, every true spiritual teaching is really about this one thing, which isn't a thing at all, because it has no form.

And which is so hard to grasp, because we think we can capture it, by saying, ah, now I have it. You can never say, now I know this is my form, my essence identity. You can never say that.

It's elusive, and yet all-pervasive. And it is realized in a moment when the stream of thinking ceases, which from the point of view of your form identity looks like nothingness, nothing important happening there at all. If you are not totally miserable or angry or disturbed all the time, some people are, if you are not totally disturbed, miserable, angry, or in some kind of deep negative state, that means you must have some access to your essence identity without knowing it.

There must be some moments in your life when the stream of thinking, for a moment, opens up like heavy clouds. Suddenly they part, and there's some blue sky coming through. And then, of course, if you don't know it, all you know is that at that moment, suddenly you feel, it can manifest in various ways, you feel suddenly intense joy for no particular reason.

Or you feel suddenly very peaceful and alive at the same time. Or suddenly, you have a wonderful idea, not realizing that before this idea came to you, there was a space of just presence. And people don't know that even I didn't know that when my mind stopped running my life, when the self-identification with thinking came to an end suddenly, I didn't know that the self-identification with thinking had come to an end.

I couldn't have said that. What do you mean self-identification with thinking? That understanding came much later.

But I didn't know that my mind had become, slowed down and thought had become reduced by 80%. All I knew was there's so much peace suddenly. And if people ask me, why are you so peaceful?

You've got nothing to be peaceful about. I don't know. It's just a feeling.

It comes up. Only much later, when I talked to a Zen monk, three years later, he said, Zen is about the end of thinking. Oh, that's what it is.

Not that you never think again, but that dimension, the formless essence of who you are comes into your life. And that is, I read an article on Sunday in the New York Times about the Apple founder, Steve Jobs, who passed away. Now, regardless of what importance you attribute to the invention of the iPhone, iPad and iPod, there's no doubt that he was creative.

Something new came into this world through him, regardless of what importance you give it. Look out for your viewpoints. And I read that he's very quite an intuitive person.

The article was written by Walter Isaacson, who just published his biography, who also wrote a biography of Einstein and Benjamin Franklin, all of which had some access to that intuition. They call it the intuition, but it's just a word. What does that really mean?

He says both Benjamin Franklin and Albert Einstein and Steve Jobs, he says they are of varying importance, but that's the viewpoint. They all had access to what he calls intuition. And there were thinkers that had a more highly developed thinking ability, he says quite rightly, than Einstein.

And there are other people who got even more technically better than Steve Jobs. But these people had access to intuition, but he doesn't examine the author, although he writes great biographies, but he doesn't examine what does that mean, intuition? How does intuition arise?

What do we mean when we say intuition? Of course, intuition means a space opens up within you, the stream of normal thinking is interrupted or subsides, and you become alert and still. And then, out of that, an insight arises, a realization, an idea, a fresh thought that wasn't there before.

That's the intuition. So it comes to those who have some access to their formless essence. But we are not here just so that you can develop your intuition and then produce perhaps the next generation of iPads.

Maybe one of you will. It's a byproduct. I regard it as a byproduct of the evolving consciousness, that intuition, and not to even be content with just having an occasional intuition in your life.

There's more to life than that. There is an entire awakening process that is taking place in a growing number of humans such as you. It's not only that you become more intuitive, your entire being becomes awake.

It's an entire shift in consciousness happens. And that's why we are here. So I only have one thing to teach, if you can even call it that.

It's not a teaching. Words are limited. And that is finding your essence identity, or if you already have access to it, deepening it.

And I am here to help you with the ability which is growing in you, the ability to stop thinking when you choose to. Like now. Not by using willpower.

Don't hold your breath. Yes. Because once you start breathing again, an enormous amount of accumulated thought will rush back in.

Just like the boiling pot, you hold the lid down. Again and again, I will come back to that. There are ways, as we will see at some point, tonight or tomorrow, there are ways, there are entry points into that state of spacious awareness where you are aware of that, the inner space of consciousness itself, which is the essence of who you are.

There are ways, there are portals into that. But there is also, for those who are ready for it, there is the simple, the possibility of simply, without using any secondary means, of surrendering the compulsion to think and then be comfortable with the seeming nothingness that remains when you are not thinking. And also become comfortable in that state of pure awareness.

This is really what I teach, nothing else. The pure awareness, not through a technique, but directly. That state of pure awareness arising in you in which you can think, but you don't need to think.

And you can actually choose to enter that state and be your formless self, which the Buddhists call no-self, be your formless self and still operate, to some extent, through the form. A lot of the time in my daily life, there's, I am the formless consciousness because there isn't much thinking. And occasionally, there is the form.

And still, I am aware that I have a name and a body and a function in this world. There is somebody who the people call a spiritual teacher and he has become famous and is recognized in the street and he goes and gives talks and has written books and has a certain life history, which people know about and I know about. I know all that, but I choose not to not to carry that around with me in my head.

And so at any given moment, you also can be the person that you are with your history, that you start thinking, your name, your body, your history. You can go through life as that, especially your thoughts and viewpoints and you're getting your identity from expressing how you feel about things. This is how it is and that is how and arguing with those who have different opinions and you feel I'm really becoming somebody especially the more I argue with the world and the more I complain on the internet sites and then argue with others who have other views and all of that.

You can go through life like that being totally only the form being totally identified with the physical, but even more importantly the psychological form of I or you can realize another dimension and then you can be a hybrid creature. A hybrid creature that is partly form and partly formless. Another way of putting it, the formless shines through the form.

So before you were, let's say you were a fist, the identity that is the form identity without any awareness of your essence is the closed fist. Just waiting for the next thing to be annoyed with or sad about poor me or complain about the evil others or whatever concept you project. The 1% they are the cause of all the evil in this world.

The 1% and then you look out for people when you go through the city. He could be one of the 1%. Let's say that China has become fashionable and it will be fashionable for a while and then will be replaced by something else.

And what do you do? I mean you immediately with a term like that you conceptualize other humans and the ego loves that. You reduce them to mental concepts.

So you become a when you become a hybrid there's no longer the closed fist. There is that your hand opens up and you can even see the space between your fingers. And so you are the form.

You still have your viewpoints. Democrats, Republicans. You have viewpoints on the candidates.

Possible candidates for the next President of the United States. I have viewpoints on that too. But they are not very strong.

I can say of all those who would you choose? I would choose probably that one but who knows. But if there is self-identification with the viewpoints then they become you get trapped in them.

They become a prison but you don't know it. And ultimately you are trapped in ego. So from living like this to living like this you bounce through the gaps in you.

That's what we are here to experience. And how? By becoming comfortable with alert stillness.

Thoughtless stillness. Not in the original sense the conventional sense in which that word is used. Thoughtless is a negative term.

Somebody who is not paying attention. But thoughtless as a positive term filled with presence you could say. So I'm here to transmit presence to you which I could not do if there were not already that dimension arising in you because it can only be transmitted when it is received because ultimately this is not my awareness.

It's not my presence. And it's not yours. It is the presence.

The awareness. There's only one. It's arising through seemingly individual entities temporary forms.

And something is beginning to shine through these temporary forms. And it is a transition in human consciousness. So I want to invite you to experience for yourself the state of pure awareness.

The state of spacious aware presence like now. You may find as that arises in you that you feel your entire being becomes energized. You feel your entire being becomes aware as you sit here in presence.

And if you ask who are you in that awareness? This is where the old question that some Indian teachers particularly used as a meditation the question who am I which you are supposed to ask yourself that is meant to be a pointer to the state of conscious pure consciousness. Who am I?

Don't answer it because every answer is another form identity. Every answer is another concept. If I said I am a famous spiritual teacher no it's a form identity it's a temporary thing.

In a few years this form will be gone and then what? Who am I? If you don't answer that question what remains after the question is a space of alert aware presence.

Who am I? Who am I? Nothing.

No thing. And if you can become comfortable with that then it that deepens. The form identity is afraid of it so it likes to I don't know who I am anymore.

Of course on the level of concept you don't know who you are. But don't worry when you need to remember your name and somebody asks you what's your name you will know it and your history and when somebody asks you would you vote democrat or republican you will still have an answer but you won't be consumed by that answer which is a thought. So allowing awareness to arise so that form and formlessness can coexist as you move through life and I I'm only attempting to show how I live sometimes form asserts itself a little bit more and at other times the formless is much more so you can at any let's give a concrete example here you are walking from your room to the restaurant or the breakfast place you can walk part of that will be through the building and then you will go outside the building where are some palm trees and there's the sea or if you are somewhere else there will be something else people who are elsewhere you can walk if you are walking immersed in thought as you walk from your room to your breakfast table you are totally trapped in your form identity you can also walk partly thinking and partly being in the state of pure awareness in the pure awareness you tend to perceive things that before you had not perceived you might notice that so you perceive you suddenly there's somebody in the elevator and you look at that other human suddenly with no judgment and you can sense their essential aliveness and you acknowledge it you might feel there might be a word that you say or two words but there is suddenly a connection with the other human being because you are in essence and then perhaps you lose yourself in some other thought and then again there comes a space you take five steps and you are spacious and aware as you take these five steps and you suddenly you look at the sky and the palm trees at that moment again you are not a person anymore you look like a person you can resume your personal identity but at that moment for those five steps you are a conscious presence embodied or shining through expressing itself through this temporary form and that's when you notice that it actually deepens some people have it it comes to them occasionally naturally I mentioned before if you are not miserable all the time or angry all the time it means you have a little bit of access to that it occasionally without you inviting it in it occasionally is there in your life for brief moments of ah oh or when you are engaged in some activity that requires your complete attention there is suddenly a spacious awareness while you do it you are not a person at that moment realize you are not always a person when you are a person you are identified with a stream of thinking that creates the person when you are consciousness the person subsides it goes to the form identity subsides and the essence identity comes to the foreground and that shift happens in hybrids like you all the time you can actually observe it in your life your daily life the shift where the person comes out strongly remember your viewpoint for example there is a person for example there are many other instances where the person is strongly there or you can be the impersonal timeless consciousness you are the essence identity shining through the person so the person is hardly there so you observe it in yourself just walking from here to there when I walk in here I don't come in as a person imagine if I came in as a person how stressful it would be because the person will ask all kinds of questions what do they expect am I going to have enough to say to them are they going to be happy with it I hope this will not happen is my going to work what are they going to think of me what are they it's such an important gathering all these people in other parts of the world they're all streaming in oh dear what I've got if I came as a person it would be very stressful I would not be able so the only way I can do this job is not to be a person not to come as a person and I don't come as a person by not thinking a single thought when I walk from here to here a single thought would be stressful and it's beautiful it's it's it's a life and enjoyable not being a person you're intensely more intensely more alive than as a person I mean the person is half dead because the person is a conceptual identity conceptualizing everybody else and they're basically not really alive so the wonderful thing is we are emerging from the the the person to a different being an essence identity coming through the person has been wonderful it's not that you can't take up the person anymore when you need it it's fine you still function and you will also notice at times it will take you over again completely especially when you watch television and there's that candidate that you dislike or you have an argument over the breakfast table something to do with enlightenment and the person and what you believe about it and how it should be and so once you notice that in yourself that at times you are totally a person at other times you are a person but there's essence shining through and there may be times when there's only essence where the body is still there but there's only aware presence and then you can do anything you can if you bring that into whatever you do in your life it transforms whatever you do it becomes beautiful or it might remove you from somewhere all kinds of changes come into your life especially the how which is always more important than what you do is how you do what you do changes as the essence arises so I'm teaching the end of the person the person of the purely personal sense of self which is a dreadful person and if you find yourself getting angry while you are listening to this that's good but look there's the person because only the person would get angry with this course it wants to defend itself what do you mean no person so experiment with how you the shift inside you from form from total form identity to essence identity and then you can be in your room and you can experiment by go sit down touch something and don't name it look at something don't name it and how your mind reassembles the sensory data and then you see the table or you feel the table but it's form it's a thought form it's a perception there's a form arising but when you don't label it you are also the perceiving awareness which is formless so when you perceive things around you feeling here for example the air feel it on the skin the air which is moisture laden and the breeze the warm breeze enveloped continuously like in some velvety blanket feel that but don't name it I'm naming it so simply to point you to the nameless experience of it feel that and so you have the consciousness and the form that arises but then when you don't name it or label it you are not a person perceiving that you are a conscious presence the formless perceiving forms it's an enormous liberation not to carry the burden of a person around with you as you do things and walk through life or even walk through a room you can as I pointed out you can walk through a room with the burden of a personal self or you can walk through a room as a simple presence so every moment of your life can be a practice of bringing together form and formlessness and that really is the purpose of your life the primary purpose of your life is to evolve into that so that you you can live in that the dance between form and formlessness and as you grow older the incredible opportunity for old age is to increasingly it's amazing nobody knows that the most vital things nobody seems to know that as you grow older it's really a natural way of relinquishing more and more your form identity because it's going to go anyway sometime soon relinquishing that more and more and more and more being the essence identity which is consciousness itself and then you grow old and you become more luminous as the body weakens you become more luminous and peaceful and alive more alive some old people whom I have met who live in that way are more alive at the age of 85 than they were at the age of 25 feel more alive so old age is a natural way of bringing that dimension into your life and it's a flowering of your entire life no matter what happened in your personal history it becomes irrelevant it becomes irrelevant it's taking you to this point where the person gives way to the flowering of consciousness which is pure awareness but you don't have to wait to old age at any moment the practice if you're lucky enough to be old it's even better and you will then see the beautiful thing that happens as you bring essence into your life essence of consciousness pure consciousness how the beautiful thing how it transforms every interaction with another human being because when two persons meet without in the absence of essence identity very quickly you get conflict you can't have two persons two form identities both of them having no access to their essential reality and have a harmonious relationship so whenever two persons meet for a while the illusion can be there oh it's all working and then before you know it the conflict is there but the wonderful opportunity of bringing that into and you actually enjoy other humans which the person can't really do the person which really is the egoic self will either look for other humans to see what they can do for you or feel threatened by them no more either how can I use this human unconsciously they don't formulate it in their minds they think they're in love but they're using the other for some gratification either physical or psychological gratification and so as you bring in your essential identity you actually enjoy other humans even the briefest encounters it's there's a loving connection that can only be there when you have gone beyond this exclusive form of identity and that's the the qualitative difference is just incredible in your life from as essence comes in more and more the compulsion to judge others which is what the ordinary person needs to do to uphold its illusory sense of identity goes and you can be a spacious presence with others even others you meet in the elevator and you don't they don't need to you don't need to make them see that you are in spacious presence you just you look like a person that's the wonderful thing you still look like a normal person and everybody thinks you are a normal person and yet they feel good when they see you because they feel acknowledged in their own essence but they don't know that they just think you are a lovely person but don't tell them I'm not a person that doesn't work and it's not necessary so remember this I have to mention it again because it's so easy to forget this no thought just it's a suggestion it's not a command it's just a suggestion no thought that comes into your head during for the duration of this retreat is terribly important because it's just another thought I can hear one mind saying but what you are talking isn't that thoughts yes it is but they are a particular kind of thoughts that point away from themselves to thoughtlessness so they are transitional thoughts they are little things pointing go that way and once you go that's the end so thoughts that arise in your mind that usually are saying I'm so important think a bit more about this just another thought because this is not about thoughts or viewpoints or opinions it's about transcending the realm of thought it's transcendence transcendence of the person transcendence of egoic thinking and you may notice with what how powerfully thoughts come up into their and want to get expressed and if they have to come out let them come out but be there as just watch yourself expressing your terribly important viewpoint well that means there's a presence there that's watching so this is our practice of transcending what is normally called the normal human condition transcending that into what we could call awakened consciousness and once that operates in your life the person is still there in the background but no longer runs your life no longer controls your thinking there's still yes there's a body there's a history my history what other people people think of me all kinds of that's okay and that is the transformation of consciousness it's an enormous evolutionary leap and I've said I was reminded by an old friend the other day that I used to say years ago when I was teaching this already this is so important but it's not going to be on television tonight they're not talking about it on television I said that for years until Oprah came I also recommend inviting stillness into your life especially during this retreat so if you come here with a friend if you are with a friend or relative take some time so that there's some space between you you're not always interacting in the old the usual way or be still together become comfortable with being still together when you're talking to other people become comfortable with not expressing your opinion because it doesn't really make any difference others may be expressing theirs they may have forgotten about what I said become comfortable with not saying what you think because it doesn't make any difference really

of

who

[Speaker 1] (1:07:31 - 1:11:53)

you think should be the next president or whether Obama has failed or he's still doing well viewpoints and so stillness is another word for the absence of thought another word for spaciousness another word for the essence of who you are and that's why I said in stillness speaks you are never more completely yourself than when you are still because it's your essence identity that's left when all thoughts are relinquished the essence remains the essence is consciousness you are that it's timeless I invite you just for a little while now to be in that space of stillness alert presence you don't need to remember who you are to be yourself you don't need to remember who you are to be yourself you can be yourself without any story in your mind whatsoever so yourself isn't the story it's the presence the conscious presence is your essential self and it's an amazing realization that you're actually more fully yourself when you're not remembering the story and that self has no time in it no past or future it's pure presence Jesus called it the light of the world pure presence you are that you are the light of the world that's from the New Testament what an incredible liberation to be liberated from the person

oh

[Speaker 1] (1:11:55 - 1:19:23)

God I'm not my history thank God for that all my viewpoints all the emotions that come and go for tonight I also recommend to go when you're in bed not to read certainly not to watch television certainly not to surf the web or check your emails but as you lie in bed be aware of yourself as consciousness as presence and you may find your entire body becomes part of that field of presence and enjoy that you're then enjoying yourself usually that term means you're doing something that's fun but the deeper meaning is you're enjoying your essential beingness which isn't yours because whenever we say my or your it's never the absolute truth because there is nothing that's my or yours so again as you wake up in the morning or if you should wake up in the night you have a choice you can go into thinking about yourself or somebody else and you some situation your past or your future whatever the person thinks about to keep itself going or you can choose to enjoy the presence of consciousness of being conscious as you lie there and then sleepless moments are actually quite nice and as you wake up in the morning before you get out again feel your essential beingness the presence rather than immediately go into some kind of thought at some point of course you will start to think but you start with the space and then gradually even your thinking becomes interspaced with presence and that's thinking then isn't a problem anymore so essence your essence or as I called it in the power of now essence identity is not something that you can ever know as an object in your consciousness because the essence identity is the eternal subject I so who you are you cannot become an object to yourself because that's the ego again the myth of Narcissus who looked at a reflection of himself in a pool of water and fell in love with himself which really should be translated as became obsessed with himself that's how it all started according to Greek mythology so who you are you cannot know it in your essence you can only be it the I Jesus said the kingdom of heaven cannot be seen you can't say ah it's over here or oh it's over there but truly I tell you the kingdom of heaven is within you so it cannot become an object in your consciousness because it is consciousness it is the formless dimension spiritual dimension so when you walk out of here do you walk out as a person or as a conscious presence and if somebody asks you outside what did you think of the talk the correct answer is nothing

[Speaker 4] (1:19:24 - 1:19:24)

[Speaker 1] (1:19:36 - 1:25:36)

because the talk was really secondary the words were secondary what they point to is primary traditionally bells are called to attention and attention of course is presence and presence is awareness no thought good morning this is the last place on the planet where at this time we say good morning this morning I had an encounter with a gecko little prehistoric mini dinosaurs that are everywhere here it was looking at me it had stopped I approached got closer and closer and closer I was this close I knelt and we looked at each other for two or three minutes this close I looked into its eyes blinking his her its eyes were blinking looking at me it yawned once which doesn't mean it was tired it's probably like dogs when there's some uncertainty sometimes they yawn and we met in that place of not thinking because it wasn't thinking and I wasn't thinking the only difference was well it's quite a difference

the

[Speaker 1] (1:25:38 - 1:26:05)

gecko is two million years prior to thought as an expression of consciousness and I am just thirty years post thought in the evolution of consciousness

[Speaker 4] (1:26:09 - 1:26:11)

there are

certain similarities between the state of pre-thought that nature dwells in animals trees which are all expressions of the one consciousness and the state of no thought when you have been through thought as a species I've been through thousands of years of thought and come out the other end transcend it doesn't mean leave behind totally transcend still includes what you transcend so you transcend another dimension opens up and the old can still operate within the new dimension and so the similarities are a state of non not feeling the separateness between you and the world around you feeling a sense of continuity and oneness which also the natural expressions of consciousness that exist prior to thought they also exist in that state of natural connectedness in which there are no problems yes challenges but not problems because only the mind manufactures problems when it takes up a reactive position towards the challenges of life which then strengthen the false self so no problem no sense of separation and again when you transcend thought you don't make up a world of problems anymore challenges continue to come that's fine life won't leave you alone that's how it's meant to be but you don't make up problems and besides the challenges that people face in the mind identified state large percentage of them are self manufactured by that ultimately dysfunctional state of consciousness in other words you make up a lot of your own drama when you are in that state of mind identification the egoic consciousness unnecessary drama unnecessary conflict through reactivity all that falls away when you transcend thinking that's why we are here and then also you have a much deeper empathy of course with nature and animals and other humans I talked last night about moving in the two dimensions the dimension of form and existing as the physical and psychological form here a person with a personal identity yes for a little while that's the case the physical body yes personal history yes certain patterns inside you that are still operating and may remain and that is else that's actually much more vital that most humans overlook because they are hypnotized by form so they are totally identified and pursuing forms outer forms thought forms rights so you see how the pursuit of forms I hope that's not what is meant in the declaration or whatever it is the pursuit of happiness that is guaranteed in the united states as one of your rights the pursuit of happiness I hope but what is not meant by that is the pursuit of forms. Where is the happiness that I am looking for in this or that or some kind of thoughts or situations or people?

Of course, the happiness is in the formless. True happiness is only there when you access the formless. So at some point, I would, perhaps not in my lifetime, but I would suggest it already for somebody else to take up when this body is gone, an amendment that explains the actual true meaning of the pursuit of happiness so that people don't get misled.

So I hope somebody who is watching this, when this body has dissolved, will take it up. But sometimes things can happen fairly quickly. It would be a miracle if somebody took it up already, but who knows?

Miracles happen. So in the meantime, it's good enough if we here begin to live this truth and then transmit it by living it, transmit it to others, not always necessarily by explaining something, but more vitally by embodying the truth so you don't pursue happiness anymore. By pursuing, which really means running after, forms.

I'm looking for the ultimate, the situation that finally is going to make me happy, says the egoic consciousness. And what it conceives of that, I don't know what it is, perhaps total comfort, total security, absolute certainty, a kind of death, if you really could find it, total comfort, everything is in its place, nothing disturbs me anymore out here, I'm protected, absolutely safe. Or maybe it thinks of continuous pleasure, taking in pleasure through food, sexuality, I need, I must have, I want.

Where's the next satisfaction that won't give me satisfaction? Can you give it to me? Maybe on the physical level, let's try something new.

Or maybe on a psychological level, you can enhance who I think I am. Maybe you can enhance my illusion. Oh no, I mustn't say that because it's so real, isn't it?

It's who I am. Maybe that's the ultimate state. So for some egos, it may be total comfort, for other egos, it may be a continuous pleasure, paradise, or you can project paradise.

If you live in a cold climate, you think of yourself as finally achieving paradise by living in a warm, lovely, warm place like here. But of course, if you lived here, you would soon see there are challenges even here. Or if you live in a hot climate, as in the paradise is a cool place, but it's all projections, all seeking something out there to fulfill me, the pursuit of happiness where happiness cannot be found because you're looking for it in the realm of forms.

Overlooking, because forms are so seductive, and I remember when I talk about forms, it's not just the outer forms that attract your attention and you want something from them, but even more fundamentally, the thought forms that arise, because really, all outer forms become, before you can experience them, become translated into mental forms. Even if your car gives you a sense of identity, just one simple example, it can be many, many other things, but it can add something to your identity. It's not, ultimately, it's not the outer car because you don't know whether there actually is a car out there.

It's just what the sensory data gets transmitted and your mind creates a picture and it calls it my car. So it's ultimately the identification with forms is ultimately to do with forms that arise in consciousness, in your consciousness, as this or that. Thoughts and images in consciousness arising.

Yes, they are hypnotic and seductive until a point, a human being reaches a point when he or she begins to realize, hmm, I can't get no satisfaction. Ha, ha, ha, ha, because there's something not right with this pursuit of happiness through forms. And then there's some suffering, of course, comes with that because you can't get satisfaction and it's so frustrating to live with these forms because no situation you ever go into is really satisfying, relationship included.

And as the more you're identified with your form identity and the less you're in touch with your essence identity, the formless, the less satisfying relationships are also. The less satisfying your entire life experience is, although you get brief moments of satisfaction, but and then again, you come down after the party, the big party, and the next morning you're, and the party can also be used as a metaphor. It can be an actual party, or it can be a party of this great romantic relationship that's just happened.

And the coming down just takes a little bit longer. You have to wait until after the honeymoon. Who is this person?

And that's in every relationship, there comes a moment when you start living together, when you ask yourself, who is this? And the other person may ask him or herself the same question. So the pursuit of happiness is realizing the unsatisfactory nature of seeking satisfaction through forms.

And then there's the beginning of an awakening. Perhaps you hear something, a spiritual message, a teacher teaching, or it just happens by itself where something arises within you that is an aliveness, an alive stillness, an alertness, and you look around and there's an enormous delight suddenly, it begins with the simple things that you suddenly notice around you. You're no longer looking for the big fix to fix your life, and suddenly you notice the miraculous nature of the forms, and there's a little paradox here.

The beginning of the arising of the formless manifests often as an incredibly enhanced appreciation of all the life forms around you. It's but very different from before where you were just selectively seeking out forms to satisfy you, you wanted something from them, but now you allow them to be and appreciate their beauty and aliveness. And you walk around as if you had just been, just come into this world, and you look, everything is alive, and it's miraculous, and you can sense this delight in all the little things.

And you look around, and what's happening is, of course, the personal self has subsided, and you're no longer perceiving the world around you through the mental accumulations, which make up the ego. You are becoming, your essence identity has emerged, and you're looking as consciousness, not as a form identity of consciousness having become a form, but the pure consciousness. And every little thing gives you delight, or rather, the delight is there inside you as you perceive the world, and what's happening on the, it's really a non-personal event when you're beginning to perceive all the miraculous life forms around you.

What does that really mean? It means the universe delights in its own creations, because you are not separate from the universe. You are not in the universe.

That would be an egoic perception. You are the universe expressing itself as this temporary form. The ego thinks, I am in the universe.

This is me, and there's the rest of the world, the universe. But, of course, you are it. You are an expression of it.

So when you delight in a flower, a breeze that touches your skin, the lapping of little waves, the sound of the rain, the gecko, the sky, the incredible cloud formations that you can see here that change every few minutes. Every few minutes, the great artist in the sky paints a new abstract picture in the sky of magnificence with light shining through it, and you can just sit there and delighting in the changing pictures when you look at the sky. And your mind is still then.

You are consciousness delighting in what it has created, the forms that it has taken. But you can only really delight in the forms that consciousness has been born into. They're all temporary, the clouds.

No single cloud is long-lived. It dissolves quickly and becomes something else. The body just lasts a little bit longer.

So the universe delights in itself through this form. The personal has receded. It doesn't mean you cannot deal with your bills anymore.

It's nothing to do with that. You can, when the time comes, you take, you open the envelope, or however you do it, and you pay your bill. Or if you can't pay your bill, then you take some step.

Maybe you have to live without the electricity. Whatever it is, it's not a problem. It just, it is, and you face it.

Let's go back in the little things that you begin to notice that are delightful when the personal self no longer occupies your entire field of consciousness. In other words, when the forms don't fill up your mind, one thought form after another. You don't really appreciate anything when you walk through nature that's here, but really, wherever you are, there will be delightful things even when it's, even if you live in London, Seattle, or Vancouver, and it's raining in gray at the moment there are still delightful things, delightful forms.

And the shift then is the personal can still operate, but it is no longer occupying the main part of your consciousness. So that's the shift I, yesterday, last night, I talked in terms of becoming a hybrid so that you are still the personal, which includes thinking, still operates in you, especially when it's needed, but it does not interfere with your enjoyment of life when it is not needed. And a lot of time it is not needed.

Not only is it not needed, it is, it interferes with the happiness that could be there because it's seeking happiness elsewhere, ignoring the true happiness that is already here. And this is how the person blocks the happiness that is there, it's already here, it can't see it. So when you see a human who is totally identified with the personal self, which are thoughts primarily, they don't see the sky, they don't see the flower.

And if they do, there's a glimpse at best. Oh, that looks nice. And you go back to your thoughts.

Oh, what a lovely flower, I wonder what it's called. My aunt so-and-so has a flower in her garden, I remember that, and then what happened to her? Well, then she got married three times and then she had five children.

Or at best, it says, oh, that sky looks like a, that looks like a Turner painting. Okay, there you go, okay, that's good. But then again, you immediately, you go into art, thinking about art and you don't realize that, yes, the Turner, Turner is a British artist who painted lovely, luminous views of sky and so on.

But so best, again, for a moment, you see it and immediately a naming happens and immediately the naming draws you into further thought forms. So you're very little, you exist in this world, you see little slits through which you see the aliveness of the world around you through little slits in your box, the box is the mind, and then you have little slits or holes in it and occasionally you had to glimpse through the little hole in your box and say, oh, that's lovely, and then you go back in the box. And that's called normal existence.

And the box is full of patterns that keep you trapped of fault finding and complaining and dissatisfaction and worries and anxieties and thinking and thinking and this and that and what about me? What's going to happen to me then? I mean, the burden of my life, my life, what's going to happen to my life?

What has happened to my life? Where's it all gone? What have, it wasn't meant to be like that.

It all went wrong somewhere. Where did I go wrong? Where was that?

I think it all started when I was eight with my parents. Or my first wife, or my first husband, they really messed me up. And then you try to work out some explanation or some conceptual, trying to arrive at some conceptual conclusion about your life, your life.

Well, your life, what is your life when you think about your life? It's a stream of thoughts, but you're so captured by the stream of thoughts that you believe this is absolutely real, this is my life. And then maybe you arrive at some conclusion one day.

Maybe it says, I failed completely. I was treated unfairly by life. Never was given a chance.

Other people get all the lucky breaks. I didn't get any. Nobody gave me a lucky break.

And there are these disgusting 1% people who get all their, all their lucky breaks. I hate them. And then all that spiritual nonsense.

God said all that about it doesn't solve my problems, does it? I have to think about this more carefully now. So you confuse your life with thoughts in your head.

So you have a stream of thoughts in your head and you call that my life. Ha, ha, ha, ha, ha, ha, ha, ha, ha, ha, ha, ha. That's called delusion.

And that's why in the path now I differentiate between what people call my life and my life situation. When you are identified with forms with your mind, you don't even know what your life is. You don't have a life.

You just think you do. It's obscured totally. You have it.

You can't have a life. Actually, you are life, but you don't know that. Ha, ha.

And so that is the state of form identity. When the transcendent dimension, the essence of who you are, the formless, which you could call the spiritual dimension, but I don't want to use words that have lots of misunderstandings around it. When that is not realized in your life, so you're in the box and perceive things from and through the box.

And as the essence arises and it arises, for some people, through the simple act of becoming aware of the present moment. When your attention moves to the present moment, you cannot carry your conceptual life, the baggage of your conceptual life in your head with you because then the present moment doesn't even exist for you. So when you, the present moment for many people opens up through sense perception.

That's the first step. That's the first level of the present moment is this becoming aware of, oh, you consciously, you perceive through a little space. A little bit more is opened up than the slit or the little hole in the box.

The slit is widened. And there's the present moment. And there, at that moment, you feel the breeze, the air on your skin.

And there, at that moment, you are not thinking. There's a moment of pure perception. And there, at that moment, you look at the sky and you see the beauty, but you also sense something.

At that moment, you sense an aliveness in you that wasn't there before. That's life. The aliveness wasn't there before when you were in your stream of thinking.

This is called life. When you delight in something that you see or hear or touch or smell around you, little things. They're all delightful, ordinary things.

So you begin to appreciate all that. And the universe is waking up. The universe is waking up and delights in itself.

And so you can truly say that you created whatever you perceive around you because you are the universe. You are the one consciousness out of which it has all come. So you created it, not the person, of course, and you delight in your own creation.

It's really only then that the beginning of the Bible becomes true. When God says he, God then looks at the creation and sees, oh, it was good.

[Speaker 4] (1:59:18 - 1:59:19)

Oh, that's good.

[Speaker 1] (1:59:20 - 2:45:34)

You sense the goodness of life. Now, so for many humans, it starts with the present moment as a portal. And the present moment starts with, and an essential part of it remains, the sensory world around you.

But that's only the one level of the present moment. It is so delightful, where is that delight? That is at a deeper level than the sense perception, beautiful as it is.

But the delight, the joy that is there when you are present and perceive through presence is the formless. You can't name it. It's there in you.

It's that where the joy or delight arises. It's consciousness itself. It has no form.

So you could then, let's say you are delighting in the play of forms, a breeze, a flower, the clouds, the buzzing of an insect, raindrops falling. And even as you become more familiar with this way of perceiving, even in, you can delight in any form. You can even delight in looking at traffic moving because they are all forms that have arisen.

So there's a flow of traffic. You can delight in a green or red traffic light without acid. It's a life, everything.

You can delight in picking up a toothpaste and for a moment feel its beingness. Anything, not just something that ordinarily we would call beautiful. Yes, that of course it's wonderful, but also things that ordinarily one would not call beautiful or even be aware of.

But it all has its place and its aliveness. And so you have delighting in that, but what is it that underlies that in you? And that is something you cannot name.

You can only sense as an underlying aliveness through which the perception happens. And that underlying aliveness has nothing to do with you, the person, with its history and its name and so on. It is the delight of consciousness itself, or you could call it being.

You can feel the being, the one being, or you could just call it the one that underlies the many. And you realize, I am that. Total transcendence of the temporary form of me.

And that is, when that operates in your life, then the transition has happened and the formless is then shining into your life through the forms. That is awakening to who you are in your essence. That is the answer to the question, who am I?

Which has no conceptual answer, but a realized answer. You are the essential aliveness. You are being.

If we want to use words to point to this, we could say being is the formless, timeless, one life. The uncreated, it's a Buddhist term. Another Buddhist term for this is the unborn or the unmanifested.

These are all pointers pointing to the same. It's life itself before it becomes a life form. When you realize you are that in the depths of your being, then you realize that this is the realization of being and what you perceive around you, you could call existence because it's an apt term because existence etymologically, in other words, the origin of the word from Latin, ex means out, stens comes from to stand out.

So whatever exists is a form that stands out, ex. Ah, a thought too, it comes out of the one, a little bit like the ripples, the ocean produces ripples. And so every ripple says, I, I, me, me.

Of course, it has very short lived. Every ripple in existence is short lived. Even on the planet, on a cosmic scale is short lived, every ripple in existence, but all that is what is existence.

So you have the being, the one, the unborn and the forms. So that is the realization of the one. And then you realize what you are perceiving is all an expression, a temporary manifestation of the one life, which you could call God, a term I avoid because many misperceptions have accumulated around it.

So that is the, the destiny of the universe is of course, inseparable from your destiny. And the destiny is the awakening, the awakening so that the universe can, on the one hand, delight in the forms it has created and continuously pours out, creates the play of forms. It delights in that it's no longer identified totally with each form, this form, but also the universe awakens to its own essence or beingness.

It had to be, it had to lose itself in the forms before it could awaken to that. And this is a kind of explanation of the purpose of the universe, which should be taken as they say in Latin, well, that's the origin of the expression, with a grain of salt, because whatever we can say about the nature of the universe, which is vast, can only be a very distant approximation of what is actually there. So when I explain what the purpose of the universe is, it's even deeper, much deeper than words could say, much deeper.

All we need to know here is not to have some new explanation of the nature. I'm only giving you that as a little added on remark, but the essential thing here is the awakening to your formless identity. And again, then, the portal, the most accessible portal to that state of consciousness, and it's terribly accessible, it's the present moment.

So you don't have to figure out, how can I find my formless identity? And then the mind says, well, first of all, I'm not quite clear what you mean by that. Can you explain a bit more?

No, you don't need that. Your formless identity opens up with a simple acknowledgement of the present moment. That's the moment you acknowledge the present moment, it begins to open.

The moment you acknowledge the present moment, the personal me recedes, the ego, the mind stream, identification with which is the ego recedes, something opens up at the present moment, as I said, begins with an acknowledgement of some form. That's how you get hold of the present moment. Sensory perception can, that can, there you hold, you look at something, you touch something, you see something, you hear something, and your attention is there, and you're not naming it, pure perception.

That in itself, beautiful spiritual practice, that's all you really need. If you could do pure perception as you walk around a lot of your life, and then you notice, I'm going to go through it again because it's so vital. There, there's the form, there's the form, but what you delight in, in the beautiful form, and again, as I mentioned before, the beauty, you see beauty even in insignificant things like the toothpaste or your shoes or whatever, the carpet, not just, it's not the outer form that is, there's an essence behind everything you see, there is an essence in everything you see that is one with your own essence, and that's what you sense, and that opens up through form, giving attention to sense perception. And then I recommend, once this begins in your life, from time to time, when you see something that is delightful, close your eyes and let go of it and sense the delight without the form. You look at the sky and you say, ah, then just as a little practice from time to time, close your eyes if you're not driving, close your eyes and then sense the delight without the form, the aliveness, and there's no thought in it, it's not an emotion, it's deeper than that, no thought, no emotion, just life itself, delighting in itself, and now there's a delight without any form, but the form got you there, and that's the beauty when you look at another human being, also, if you don't react to their silly person, because almost every person is a bit silly without the transcendent dimension, well, very limited, conditioned by their past, full of stuff, if you don't react to this, which only strengthens your own form identity, your own silliness, so you have two silly people fighting each other, you don't react to that, and then you can delight in another human's presence through not naming the other human in any way, but first you contemplate their form, but that's only the surface phenomenon, and immediately you penetrate beyond the form, so to speak, and from within you, you feel the delightfulness of life, and then you recognize that dimension in the other, and that connects you very deeply, in other words, it's the realization of oneness, but not conceptually, you don't say, now I realize oneness, you don't need the words, and that's where there's true, it's only then that true, as in the words of the Dalai Lama, he uses the term kindness, but of course it's deeper than that, kindness arises, language is limited, that's why he has very little choice in words, love, is that a better term?

Well, again, it's like God, which has many misperceptions around it, but yes, it is love, it is a deep empathy, it is a sensing, a delighting in another human, and you don't want anything from them, you don't want anything from the other human, you're delighting in their presence, because there is a shared presence or aliveness, and then if it's a human that you are familiar with, a relationship, family, whatever, there also you can sometimes look at the other, so-called other, and then for a moment, close your eyes and let go of the form, and feel the other in here, as yourself, feel the other's presence in here as yourself, because it's essence identity, it's consciousness itself, it's life itself, which is, that's the thing you love in the other, whether it's an animal or a human or a flower, that is what you love in the other is not the form, but the life within the form, which is consciousness itself, which is your own essence, if you love the form only, it gets frustrating very quickly, because it will not satisfy you, neither the physical form will satisfy you after a little while, nor the psychological form of the other, the person with its conditioning is not going to satisfy you, so there's always this dissatisfaction, but if you can look beyond the form, sense beyond the form, first in yourself, you can't start with the other, you can't say, I want to sense you beyond form, no, you can only do it through your own essence, so there you go first, you start with a flower or whatever it is, and then you close your eyes, and then go within and feel, you can't name what it is that you feel, and you don't, it's even to say you feel it is not quite correct, we are using language and every sentence has a subject and an object, so you say, I feel the life that I am, expressed in language, it sounds as if there was I and life, but that's because we are using language which separates everything into subject and object, this is ultimately not true, you sense life as yourself, you sense yourself, there is no subject and object in that self-recognition of you as being, of you as consciousness, what you sense is not an object, there is not I and life, I don't sense the life that I am, and then life here becomes conscious of itself, that's a better way of putting it, but you have to kind of be so careful with language, because it's language is to do with the world of duality and multiplicity, that's what it reflects, so in the awakening, there is no longer subject and object, it's not that I sense life, the life that I am, I sense the I am, you can't really say more than I am, the I am knows itself, I'm explaining in words, just it can be helpful just to have the little pointers, what matters is that recognition in yourself, and it's everything else in your so-called life, which doesn't exist, because you don't have a life, you are life, you have a life as long as you have a conceptual life, we talked about that, but everything else in the life that you think you have, is quite unimportant compared to this, compared to this awakening, and everything else in your so-called life, the life that you have, which is a conceptual thing, a lot of these things actually become easier, the life of form that you inhabit, your life situation is so much easier to deal with, when you are rooted in the formless, when you are rooted in beingness, then the way in which you, not only the way in which you perceive, the life of forms around you, changes because it becomes delightful, but also the way in which you interact, with the life around you, people, situations that arise, whatever it is, that also changes fundamentally. And how does it change?

It changes, because first of all, you will notice, nothing that is to do with the world of form, your life situation, and whatever arises there, it loses its absolute seriousness, it's the which it has, if that's all you know, because if the life of form is all you know, it's dreadfully serious, because it's all that matters to you, and every situation that you discuss with other people, this is, what are we going to do about this? Oh my God, and now he wants us to do that, he's trying to do that, what's he, other people, what are they trying to do to us?

Now we are going, what's going to happen if we do that? It could be disaster. Now we have to be very careful here, this is complete identification with, oh, everything matters so much, and then we react, I'm acting out a little bit, but basically, that's how it is, and everything is dreadfully serious, because it's all you have, and you're still hoping at some point, it's all going to work out and satisfy you, until the next lawsuit comes.

So it loses, it's this absolute seriousness, and then you deal with, you can deal with it, but you deal with it in a more spacious way, there's always, and this is the wonderful thing that happens when you are connected, there's always a bit of space when you deal with, for example, you have a discussion, what are we going to do about this? And as you listen to the other person, as you speak, there's always some space there in the background, and that's the formless. So there's a, sometimes it's called detachment, which could also be misinterpreted, but there is definitely, although you deal with it, you give it your fullest attention, but there is a sense of space around situations and people that ultimately is inner space, so you have both forms that arise in your life and space that is there at the same time as you deal with the forms.

And that is, for example, when you listen to somebody, let's say you're discussing what to do in business, some business situation or whatever it may be, you're engaged in discussing, is there, there's some space as you listen, there's just listening, spacious listening, that's space. And that means what ultimately, what ultimately matters in any situation that arises in your life isn't the outcome or what you say or do or what other people say or do, what ultimately matters is whether through you, space comes into the situation, whether you embody spacious awareness while you do things, say things or listen to other people. The spacious awareness that is in you now as you listen here, spacious awareness when you're listening to a spiritual discourse is of course easier to enter because every word in spiritual discourse, if it comes from spatial awareness, in other words, if it's truly alive, it awakens that dimension in you unless it's totally blocked.

It awakens the dimension in you. So as you sit here, you can dwell in that spacious awareness of essence, thoughtless awareness fairly easily, perhaps not continuously, perhaps occasionally your mind will come in and say, what the hell is he talking about? And then that thought subsides and the egoic personality goes back into the background.

And again, there is spacious awareness. And so this is a wonderful place to experience this fully or as fully as possible at this point for you. But then you go into everyday life where the discourse you hear from other people is not spiritual discourse that is designed to point you to spatial awareness.

No, what you're listening to in other people is egoic minds totally identified with what they are saying, totally identified with every thought. And then it's more challenging to listen and listen is the first step, to listen through spatial awareness and not get drawn into their identification with form, total identification with form. So you have to be, hold the presence, embody the presence, be the presence, even though the other may be completely trapped in form or the other people around the table.

A meeting of six agitated egos plus you, that's a challenge. And the words that are spoken around the table are not meant to take you into spacious awareness. They are meant to pull you out of spacious awareness and say, this really matters.

All that's, forget about that spiritual stuff. This is real. We have a lawsuit against us.

They're doing this, trying to do this to us. Now, this is what matters. And then the challenge is stay present.

And present with your whole body as you sit there and listen to the egos without judging them or reacting or confusing who these beings are with their state of consciousness. These people are so annoying. You're confusing, of course, the reaction with who they are.

It's like saying, the weather is miserable. The weather doesn't know about it, that it's miserable. You just told the weather that it's miserable, but of course the weather just is.

And everybody just express whatever their state of consciousness is. And the moment you call it something and believe in it, you have joined them in their state of consciousness. The moment you believe in a thought that arises that judges the other, welcome, you're one of them.

So the other people, it's of course, as I mentioned somewhere, Jean-Paul Sartre said, hell is other people. That's of course true from the egoic point of consciousness. The literal, I believe my French is very limited, but the original in French actually is, hell is les autres, the others.

Hell is the others. That's the egoic perception, ultimately. There's a movie that we saw recently.

It's called, There Will Be Blood. And it's, I think it got even some Oscars. The word ego is never mentioned, but really what it shows is how one man's ego grows and grows and grows and grows until it reaches complete insanity.

So other people, the otherness, I use that term sometimes, the egoic consciousness, the form-identified consciousness likes to emphasize the otherness of others. It wants to make the other really other by judging and dismissing and criticizing and fault-finding. And perhaps a lot of the time it's actually true, what it says, but it's not true.

Sometimes it's true, and sometimes it's a complete projection. You never know. So whatever, if your last five, four ex-wives say the same thing about you, there's probably some truth in it.

If it's only one ex-wife, it could be a complete projection. But if it's three, four, five, they have to look more carefully. If they all say you are a jerk, you're a controlling jerk, then you may have to admit, maybe something there.

But at other times, what other people say about you may be a complete projection of their conditioning. You never know. But whatever it is, when you, you emphasize the otherness of others, that's the ego loves it because it feels superior when it can criticize, judge, find fault, whatever it does to others, dismiss, evaluate negatively, find wanting in this or that area, not good enough, whatever it is, the ego feels good about that because the moment you judge the other, you feel superior, not knowing that you've become more trapped in your own form identity, which is thought forms. And this is why Jesus, he didn't explain it the way I explain it now, because at that time, the people wouldn't have understood what he said. Judge not so that you are not judged.

You judge, in other words, when you judge another, you're really doing it to yourself. You yourself get trapped in the judgment, which is a thought form, which you totally believe in. And in that sense, when you judge another, you judge, you are judged.

You believe in that. And so a wonderful spiritual practice is to relinquish judgment of others and allow them to be in this moment, brings us back to the present moment. Allow them to be as they are and be the space for them.

Lovely. And then you can be in the meeting with five agitated egos, and you can be the one conscious presence there and hold that state. And that's more challenging than here.

You will feel the pulse of the collective mind pulling you. This is so serious. Can't you see that?

Not that you have to, don't say this isn't serious. That doesn't work. You have to embody it.

It may be relatively serious on the level of form, but it hasn't that dreadful, it's not absolutely. I also use the word important. Whatever happens on the level of form may be relatively important, but it's not absolutely important.

The absoluteness is knowing who you are beyond forms and then living this knowing in your daily life. And then you become a blessing wherever you go. If you live that, you bless every situation.

You heal situations you go into without feeling, I am healing. You're not actively doing the healing. It happens by embodying that consciousness and you will be challenged from within and from without just because that is arising in you, is awakening in you the essence of who you are does not mean that your egoic mind is not going to come back.

Let's for a moment consider it because there's some truth in it. Almost an entity that lives in you that has lived in you for a long time, thousands of years in human beings, an entity that consists of mind forms and emotional forms that consciousness has identified with completely, which is the dream state of unconsciousness, the nightmare, the dream, that exists in you as a little, a nice, I love the little creature in Lord of the Rings, the little, the little, and it's really, it's a visual representation of ego. When you look at it, it's beautifully done in the both written and in the movie too, how it goes about and that little creature, this cunning thing, it doesn't just go away.

It's, it will want to come back up. You can, don't fight it. You can't fight it.

You can, if you fight it, you energize it, but recognizing it is enough because recognizing, what does that mean? Recognizing is recognizing there's a light of consciousness shining on it. Consciousness is the unconditioned, timeless, and the form is consciousness that has become a little bit like frozen water.

So there's up, there's no duality. This is just an analogy. The forms that are stuck in your mind as egoic forms, consciousness has become that frozen heart.

So it's ultimately the ego is not separate from consciousness. It's just an appearance of consciousness as solid. And it goes, as it comes into the field of awareness, it gradually dissolves, but that could take a little while.

In the meantime, it comes up and will try to trick you and sometimes succeed in giving it energy again by identifying with the thoughts it thinks. And what does it think about? Me and my life.

Oh my God. And there you are, trapped, it drags you along and you completely get back into it. And the little thing comes up and says, oh, I know exactly how I can get your attention.

Just this little thought.

[Speaker 4] (2:45:34 - 2:45:35)

And it's, ooh.

[Speaker 1] (2:45:41 - 4:30:54)

And you follow it and then hours later, you wake up, oh, and there's a little bit of spacious awareness again. And for the first time again, you see the sky. And you smell the air.

And there's a feeling of aliveness inside you. So that may happen. Have compassion with yourself, the ego and identification with thinking.

Don't consider it as a personal problem of yours. It's not, neither the ego nor the identification with thinking, which creates the ego is personal. It's inherited.

Everybody inherits it as a human. It is the inherited condition, the human condition. That is the Buddha already recognized as that which leads to suffering.

The state that leads to suffering. Dukkha, dukkha, misery, translated as misery, unsatisfactoriness, not good enough. Suffering, unhappiness, discontent.

That's all dukkha, inseparable from identification with thought. He already saw that. That comes as you exist as a hybrid.

There are two forms of hybrid. There's the more advanced hybrid. And there is the more basic hybrid.

The more basic hybrid creature, those are the first production line. The more basic hybrid creature is periodically, completely taken over again by the egoic consciousness. And then after a while, they wake up again.

And then they are back in pain body or something and do it also, which is the emotional part of the ego of old accumulated painful emotion that becomes, that energizes the egoic mental patterns. So the hybrids, the basic hybrids lose themselves in that and then come back for a while and then lose themselves again. And then gradually you advance to the more advanced hybrid.

Which means forms, you can, thoughts come up in you, but there's never complete identification anymore with them. There's always some spaciousness and you can use thoughts beautifully, but always with spaciousness in the background. And that is the beautiful state when you are an advanced hybrid of form and formlessness.

Then you are the advanced hybrid and then problems don't exist anymore in your life. You no longer even think in terms of my life. There's only life and unfolding every moment.

And it's beautiful, even the challenges. Comfort is not the ultimate aim of the universe. Security is not the ultimate aim of the universe.

The lack of challenges is not the ultimate aim. And the universe is not here to make you happy. Things are not here to make you happy.

People are not here to make you happy. They're here to make you conscious so that you find the happiness, the true happiness that's not dependent on things and forms. But forms are good, but the formless is the good.

Thanks. Welcome to our evening meditation or middle of the night meditation. If you're somewhere else or morning meditation if you're in Europe, whatever time it is on the external level where you are, it's the now and that's our meditation for this evening on the now.

We start with the surface of now, which is whatever we perceive at this moment, whatever you perceive, whatever I perceive, really it's the I. Okay. So you perceive this person sitting on a chair, talking, you hear the voice.

There's the totality of the room. There's the ever present noise of the air conditioning. There are the lights, the ceiling and the walls, all part of the totality of your visual perception.

The people in the room, you perceive them and peripherally perhaps, because your focus is perhaps on this man sitting in a chair. And you feel the body on the chair. Yes.

Resting. So there's a totality of sensory perception. Let's see, I actually call it the surface of the now or you can call it the outside of now.

And then you're also aware of yourself breathing and you may be aware of the energy inside the body. So we are gradually moving from the outside to the inside. And if you allow the outside to be as it is, although there's nothing special here in this room, it is quite nice, it has its own beauty.

I mean, even artificial light is quite nice. Sounds are quite nice if you allow them. And if you don't complain about the air condition, even that is quite pleasant.

And imagine it's the om sound. And now comes the really important part. You're aware of yourself as the perceiver of all these things.

You're not aware of yourself right now or of the personal self, because at this moment, let's use this word, I hope that you are not thinking about your personal history right now or the problems you've had in the future, in the past or might have in the future. So when I say you're aware of yourself, it's not you're aware of yourself in the usual way, because when you usually say you're aware of yourself, you're aware of the story of yourself, you and your life, you and your position in the world, you and other people and so on. No, more simple now in our meditation, you're aware of yourself, not as a person with a history, but a deeper level of self.

And I begin by calling it the perceiver of whatever it is that arises in your perception, auditory, visual, feeling, sensing. Perhaps you can even feel the air a little bit. There's this little bit of air flow, very subtle.

That's the feeling level or feeling your chair, your body resting on the chair or your feet on the floor. So, but who is it that is perceiving this? Not the person, because the person is a story.

The story is not perceiving this. So for a moment, let's not call it anything, but be aware of the simple fact that you are perceiving this, but you don't know what that is, what is that I that is perceiving. But there's no doubt that that is there.

And even if what you're perceiving is a dream, perhaps it is. It certainly has a lot in common with a dream because a dream evaporates very quickly. It doesn't last.

Many philosophers have discussed whether the human existence is a dream. We don't need to go there. Can say it might be, but even if it is, if it's all not real, as some people say, there is something in which the dream appears.

The dream is being experienced. One could say there's a light in which the forms appear and you are that. And there's no doubt that if it's a dream, it's happening.

If it's all unreal, at least that unreality is happening. In that light of awareness, because without that awareness, there would be no sense perception. There would be no room.

There would be no man on this chair or voice or somebody listening to the voice. So that's the one thing that cannot be doubted. Everything else you can doubt whether it's actually real.

And that awareness is formless. It doesn't have a history because your entire history appears in it when you remember it in that awareness. And when things happened that once happened, they happened in the present moment, in the light of awareness.

And you can only remember it as the awareness now. So I'm now asking you, although you continue to be aware of sense perceptions, to simply acknowledge the fact that you are aware. And even that is not perhaps putting it rightly to acknowledge the fact that there is awareness.

In other words, you are aware that you are aware. You are conscious of being conscious. It sounds a little strange, but it's an amazing thing.

It also sounds, if there were a duality here, I am conscious of being conscious. The subject, I, but that only appears in language. In fact, when you are conscious of being conscious, and that's a, it's a, it's a strange thing.

Just, and you can't, you can't say much about it. You can't, it just has no form and no shape. It's, it has, it's totally elusive and yet all pervasive.

Can you feel the fact that you are conscious, or rather that you are consciousness? And that's an, to, to sense yourself as that and still be able to perceive all this. And you have long since left compulsive labeling behind when you are aware of yourself as consciousness and then perceive as consciousness.

Labeling things mentally doesn't come in anymore. There's just consciousness and forms arising and subsiding in consciousness. Arising, some forms stay for a while.

This room stays as long as you sit here. This room arises in consciousness and then you leave and it subsides. But the voice, the words arise in consciousness and subside.

Arise, subside. We could call consciousness the, the eternal gap behind everything. The gap in between everything.

The space behind everything. Whatever you want to call it, these are just pointers. And there is a, an intense frequency that arises in you when you become aware of consciousness.

Very, a, it burns up, it, it makes the personal self fade out. It burns up the, even burns up the karmic accumulations in you. Old, old stuff from the past.

Pain body, old mind patterns. And your entire being is vibrating at a higher frequency. That's the only way I can put it.

The words may not be absolutely right, but that's how I sense it in you. And that is inherently joyful and energizing. To sense this essence in yourself.

And we are learning here not to have it as a very short-lived glimpse, but to be able to stay there. And every moment you stay in that, the old gets burned up in you. And you connect with intelligence, not the IQ intelligence that you measure in IQ tests.

That's a very limited form of intelligence. Creative intelligence, I talk about creative. This does not mean that you or I this moment will come up with the solution to the problem that Einstein couldn't solve.

The unified field theory or whatever it was. Nor does it mean that suddenly I can paint a masterpiece or compose an exquisite piece of music. Because these are not vehicles that have been prepared in this body, by this body.

But this intelligence can flow into something if there is a vehicle in your life, it can flow into that, transform it, and make it absolutely creative. And even that is no more than a bonus. For some people, it may be enough to walk around the planet for the rest of their life in this form, as peaceful, intensely alive beings that are astonished at the beauty of all things and bring that vibration of peace that comes with the awareness of pure consciousness.

Whoever they meet gets a little whiff of that. And for some humans, that's enough, and they fulfill their purpose here. Others may create some more elaborate forms, but empowered by not the ego, but by the greater intelligence it creates, it can flow into the human mind and body and create through the human form.

Let's come back to the simple secret. Be conscious that you are conscious. Feel the awareness as your essence.

And you will notice it's very still. The awareness is still. I compare it sometimes to space.

I call it inner space or space consciousness. It has no extension. It is vast, but not like the outer space that you see or that you don't see it, but that is there when you look at the sky at night.

The vastness of space is only a reflection in the external of who you are in the essence of your being. And that's the awe-inspiring thing when you look at the starry sky at night. The absolutely awe-inspiring thing that if you are really looking will really shut up your mind immediately because it's so astonishing.

That was my first meditation when I was in my teens. I'd had no idea it was meditation.

Lying on the deck of our, we lived on the top floor.

There was a little terrace. It was in the south of Spain where there were beautiful skies at night, totally clear, and I would lie and look at this. And there was no thought.

I had no idea that was going on then. I just, it was deeply enjoyable. The awe-inspiring thing is not the countless, countless suns that you see, which are stars, but the vastness of it, the nothingness that makes it all possible, the vastness of space, unimaginable infinity, and there too that can put you in touch with the vastness within you, just looking at that.

And space, again, is very similar. The outer space is very similar to inner space because both of them don't really, you cannot say that they exist because as I mentioned earlier, existence means to stand out, but space is, you can't say, oh, here's space. All you can ever be aware of is things in space.

And again, in yourself, you can't say, here is the essence of who I am. You cannot be aware of it as an object. All objects are things, forms that arise in the space.

Why can't you be aware of space? Because you are it. You cannot separate from it and look at it as an object.

It is the formless I, the I am that I am. The most profound statement in the entire Bible, which is, of course, a mixed bag of all kinds of writings, but there are some deep insights. You'd know how to find them.

When God is asked, what's your name? God says, I am that I am. That's my name.

It's the I am. So that immediately, there's space in you when you become conscious of being conscious. That is space.

In any situation you find yourself in, a quick access to inner space, spaciousness, essence, is to become conscious that you are conscious. That's presence. Then, yes, you are then still a person.

You can function as a person, but you are not trapped in the person. That's the hybrid I talked about. You function as the person.

We are not trapped in the person. And now for a little while, I'll say very little, and we just see if we can stay there in that consciousness of consciousness. Just for a little while.

Occasionally, I may say something just to point you back to it, because there is always a possibility that you may drift off into thinking. Oh, if any question comes into your mind right now, please realize that it is irrelevant. And please realize that it is an attempt of your mind to obstruct your practice of presence.

It's also quite helpful as you are aware of being conscious to be aware at the same time that you are breathing, to feel the breaths going in and out, and at the same time, be the consciousness, the presence. Thoughts are not important right now, even if they pretend to be. Don't be concerned if an occasional ripple of thought floats around the surface of your consciousness.

Not a problem. So when you go into a meditation like this, it can become very deep so that there's just consciousness left, pure consciousness. And then as you open your eyes again, listen, look around, begin to perceive externals again, it's still in the background.

This is a bit like to use a slightly funny analogy. You know the lines from Shakespeare, all the world's a stage and all the men and women are merely players and so on. So in a way, humans here are conditioned entities when presence has not yet arisen.

So they're acting out their scripts in a way, because without consciousness, you are a conditioned being and you are simply acting out your conditioning, very much like actors on the screen, on the movie screen. So I like to give this analogy, imagine the movie screen, people acting out their comedy or drama. And at some point, let's imagine one of the characters in the screen suddenly becomes aware of something, he becomes aware that what's real about me is actually the light.

And then he closes his eyes and he traces his origin back to the projector lamp, because that's how the illusion of the form is created. You have a movie projector and then you have a film. I think you still do, I don't know how technology has advanced these days, but you have a film that goes through that obstructs the light in some interesting ways.

So by creating movies, humans are replicating the play of universal consciousness. You obstruct the light and the obstructions of the light become the characters that you see on the screen. And each character on the screen believes in his or her complete independent reality as a separate entity and identifies with their story and their form until one character wakes up and says, wait a moment, what is this essence that I can sense?

And then his attention goes or her, and then you suddenly notice your essential reality as the light that's being projected onto the screen. I'm actually the light. And then the moment you realize that, you have connected with the source of the light.

You've realized your, you've always been connected, but you didn't know it. You've connected with the source of the light and realize your oneness with the source of the light. And that changes to continue for just one moment, this weird analogy, which becomes more and more unreal, that changes from now on, what the character does and how this character experiences life and how this character interacts with the other characters in the movie changes because he or she is aware of his or her essential identity.

So he behaves differently, not no longer his or her behavior is no longer based on the illusion of absolute separateness of the me entity. So his consciousness has linked back with the source of everything. And so that's the end of my analogy.

And that's really what's happening to you. And that's what Jesus was talking about when he said of himself, I am the light of the world. And when he said, talking to some of his disciples, you are the light of the world.

Now, his disciples were not important people, illiterate, most probably, fishermen or craftsmen, but they were not VIPs in this world. So he cannot have meant that they were special in any way on the level of form. So when he said, you are the light of the world, he didn't say you are very special VIPs.

No, he was pointing to something essential that is not the form, their essence. He was pointing to their essence as the light of the world. And the light of the world is consciousness, of course.

And that's what every spiritual teacher teaches, awareness of your source and your oneness with the source. And when you no longer live your life through the conceptualizing mind, then that awareness is there and it changes how you behave, how you perceive things, how you relate to other humans. So that's what happens really, when you become aware that you are consciousness.

The actor has become aware of his essential identity as the light of consciousness. And he or she may continue to play for a while in the world of form. And the quality of the movie actually improves with that consciousness.

The cheap melodrama of unconscious existence can actually become something quite beautiful. So it is vital to, in daily life, to remember that, remember is not the right word, let's use it anyway, language is so limited, to remember that you are consciousness, not to remember to be consciousness, to sense your essential reality as consciousness. And then more and more, it's there.

And that's what you teach. You then teach who or what you are. You become the teaching.

You demonstrate through your behavior, your words and your silences, you demonstrate and it spreads from there. It's wonderful to see the one consciousness awakening in so many beautiful forms. We will meet again in the morning.

In the meantime, another little moment of complete stillness. We'll close our eyes, finish in your own time. I'll be with you for a little while.

And then probably when you open your eyes, the chair will be empty. Apparently, I got up rather abruptly at the end of our last session, and people said, is something wrong? I didn't even know I got up abruptly, the body got up and walked out.

And we have perhaps, well, not perhaps, we have some questions. I know there are some on paper and some in heads, your heads, some of your heads. Without insulting anybody, I just like to mention that no question is really that important.

What about my question? Well, mine is important. So the question has to be seen within the larger context.

And what is the larger context? It's the space. It's more important than any thought within the space.

And we are here to transcend thought within ourselves. But of course, thought still appears from time to time. A question may have relative importance, but not absolute importance.

It's also helpful not to have self-identification with question, which is self-identification with thought, which is ego, because it happens to be, come out of your head, and it's my question. And once you have identified, which is very normal, with some thought, like a question, if that question is overlooked, and the likelihood of your question being overlooked is greater than the likelihood of your question being answered, because there are many more questions than we can possibly answer here. And so you feel overlooked because your question is overlooked, and then the ego then feels diminished.

Almost insulted, as if something had been taken away. And again, it's normal, normal unconsciousness. And why does it happen?

Well, it's self-identification with thought, and so you need some kind of thought to respond to your thought, to feel enhanced in your sense of self. And then if the question does get chosen, then the ego says, oh, he chose my question. It's normal.

Perhaps many of you are not at that stage anymore, so I'm only mentioning to just a few who may still experience that. But the egos are weird creatures. They can even then get angry because my question wasn't chosen, and don't hear the rest of the session, the next session.

And our task is not to lose ourselves, and this always applies when you begin to use your mind, not to lose ourselves in the form consciousness, talking, questions, answers, and get completely drawn into that, and then lose all sense of space around it. So as we speak here, it's vital to have one foot, so to speak, in the spaciousness, and one foot in form, formlessness and form. And perhaps that brings us to just one question that I saw a few minutes ago is coming to mind at this moment.

So that seems to be the first question then to start with. It's on paper. Some questions, by the way, are also from people who are elsewhere on the planet.

Online, it's called, apparently. All these expressions, I only have a vague idea what they mean. Downloading online, and uploading, and...

Well, it's all very well this question coming to mind at this moment, but it also has to come into my hands. Anyway, it's not in my hands, but I know what it is. And it's a question about how do we, what does it mean to have space in a relationship?

How do we actually bring space, as I sometimes put it, the questioner asks, how practically, can you give practical advice? That's actually the question. Can you give practical advice on how to bring space into the relationship?

Because space is vital in any relationship, not just the so-called close, intimate relationships, but all kinds of relationships, from friends, to lovers, to friends, to acquaintances, to people you meet casually in the street. But especially, I think the questioner was especially referring to intimate relationships. Of course, there's a beautiful line in Khalil Gibran's book, The Prophet, which says, let there be space, or spaces, I think space, let there be space in your togetherness.

As this is the recipe for a good relationship. This is just a line out from that, these little prose poems that he wrote. Let there be space in your togetherness.

So, it comes down quite simply to your ability to have that space within yourself where you're not imposing thoughts on your partner. Or, to put it differently, where you're not looking at him or her through any kind of thought, mental concept. That space, when you can be with another human being, not constantly, but when it's possible from time to time, during the day, have brief moments of spacious togetherness when you, for example, listen to the other, even the other maybe just saying a few sentences or telling a little story of what happened, or telling how he or she feels.

And as you listen, you're not thinking. So, to have space in relation, it presupposes that the ability within you to access the space of presence. And then you can look at the other and be that pure, aware consciousness and not a person.

No matter, now, it does not matter whether the other person is also in that state or that moment or not. It's a beautiful thing if both can be in the state of pure presence. So, you can intersperse your relationship with spaces of pure togetherness when the need to function on the level of thought, and even on the level of emotion, is transcended for those spaces that arise.

It's deeper than the emotion, too, a very deep sense of oneness. So, looking at the other, whether the other is silent or speaking, and be silent inside while you listen, or look, or listen, and look, or touch. That is, you're bringing, you become the space.

So, to have space in the relationship, you need to embody the space. You need to become the space for the other person. The other, that lifts the relationship to a different dimension where you transcend mind, ego.

You transcend also the emotion. There may be an emotional bond, but at that moment, that also is transcended. There's a deeper sense of oneness there.

So, one thing is listening or looking at the other while they do something, or a beautiful sharing from time to time, look into the other person's eyes, and then you see no judgment, no thought, just a beautiful, just a presence. And if you can both do it, it's even more beautiful. It's then a deep sharing of oneness, of one field of consciousness where the body becomes unimportant.

Looking into each other's eyes, not overdoing it, of course, but, and that, I practice that in virtually any relationship, whether I meet, I don't practice it, it's so natural, you can't really call it practice, but it's, I don't think when I relate to a person unless that person asks a question, then perhaps as an answer, some thought arises that then becomes a word or words coming out of my mouth.

But while I listen or look, there's no thinking. And that's why every encounter becomes actually quite enjoyable when you're not thinking, but when you are space. I sometimes call it, I haven't used that expression yet, here, today or yesterday, I sometimes call that space consciousness, as opposed to object consciousness, which is thoughts.

Space consciousness is not a term from science fiction, nor is it to do with acid trips. It's something very real. Space consciousness is just another word for your essence identity.

And what we share here, why you are here, why I am here is to share basically space consciousness. Our essence. That's why we're here, to deepen that, so that it becomes familiar living in connectedness with that dimension.

That's why we're here. And the rest of it is simply addressing possible, very common obstacles to the arising of space consciousness. How object consciousness can keep you in its grasp.

And if you don't recognize how it does that, and we're talking here about, of course, about ego, then you can very easily be deceived by the egoic consciousness or space consciousness, because it has its little tricks with every thought. As you know, I mentioned before, every thought says, follow me. And so it tries to pull your attention in completely.

This is so important. I must think about this, says the thought. Not verbally, but it's implied.

It's 4.30 in the morning, but now I have to think about this. This is so neat. If my life will fall apart if I don't work that out right now, it's about my life.

Now, we already looked at that in the earlier session, the illusory nature of saying my life when you have a stream of thinking, which you call my life. That's identification with object consciousness. So we need to look at how easily that arises, how it pulls you in, so you can recognize it when the pull comes, a thought comes, says, give me attention.

And it can get hold, especially old thoughts that have been around for years, lodged in your mind, some deep seated thoughts of whatever it is. I don't know what it is. You are no good, or I can never forgive that person.

Or I'm a victim of life, whatever it is. And that comes again, and you were spacious, and then suddenly this entity comes in and goes. And you can see how you disappear.

Your presence becomes obscured, and you disappear into the thought. Your entire consciousness is absorbed by form. That's ego.

And so, people who are deeply trapped in ego, you can see them, you can recognize it. They are not there. There's something there, but it's a thought formation.

And they don't see you when they look. There's no space for you. It's just, there might even be some kind of role-playing, but it's all part of egoic consciousness.

There's, so not to space with the other, look at each other, touch sometimes without just being with that. Listen, watch the other move, and go about doing this or that, and just be there as a silent watcher. It's beautiful.

So, you can, of course, more formally meditate together as a formal thing, or just be still together. It's lovely. Let's be still together.

Go for a walk in stillness, all these things. But primarily, space always means a break in the stream of thought. And then, whenever I just got sidetracked, whenever I look at another human being, I am the space.

I'm not the person. And that's primarily your task also. So, be alert in any interaction to see whether it's, is it dominated by thought, or is it, is there space?

And when you are functioning as when you have a particular function in this world, a job or whatever, you may be playing a certain role. You are the salesperson, or you are the, whatever you do, the manager of this or that, and the other person is the employee, or the other person is the client or the customer. These are the roles that, of course, you play the roles, that's part of it, but don't lose yourself in the role.

So, if you are the customer and you approach somebody about something that's not right, so make sure there is space while you interact. There is a human being behind the role. Don't accept the roles that society gives you, or a social situation gives you, because then you function as the role.

So, when you're dealing with hotel staff, for example, in this situation, it's very easy to behave like a hotel guest talking to a member of staff, which is also true. That's on the level of form. But is there a deeper interaction between two human beings also?

That is more important, and that is the space. So, that must be part of the interaction. Otherwise, you're lost in form, you're lost in roles.

One more question from here, and then we'll have a question from any one of you. Now, there are a few similar questions here, so I'll take this one as a representative of other questions that are very much alike. Now, this one expresses it in this way.

Why allurement to thinking by the universe? To be allurement is the word. It means why, is that a word that exists?

It's on paper, it must exist. No. Why does, let's rephrase it, what's the purpose of thinking if we have to transcend thinking, or if it's our destiny to go beyond, or if it causes so much trouble, why does thinking arise in the universe?

Now, it is, as you might have noticed, the universe is very busy creating continuously multiplicities of life forms on this planet, and I'm sure in many other places in the universe, as there are several billion suns in our galaxy alone, and billions of galaxies, so the universe delights in creating form, and it creates the human form, and one way in which the universe explores the multiplicity, diversity, and differentiation of life forms is through human thinking. It's a very interesting way of experiencing itself, and when I say universe, I mean life, I mean the one that becomes the many without losing its essential oneness.

So the one creates these bodies, and through these bodies and these brains, it moves through the brains that it created and experiences the universe through thinking. So the experience of its creations becomes extremely differentiated through thinking. It's an incredible thing.

It's a wonderful thing. So you get thinking, be entities. It creates thinking entities, and then the game continues.

The thinking entities develop the thinking ability more and more. And they speak, they write books, and they discuss, and you can see how, and the universe must delight in this, and the drama suddenly arises, whoa, and of course, for it to really work, the thinking entities need to forget who they really are, which is expressions of the one, but if they remember that, it wouldn't really, it wouldn't be a real thing. It has to be the real thing.

So they have to forget who they are temporarily. So the entity loses itself in thought, becomes thought. It's as expressed in the biblical creation myths, where they eat of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, and that, to me, means the differentiation of judgment, good, bad, thinking ability arises.

Wonderful thing, on the one hand, but of course, on the other hand, you lose paradise for a while. So more and more over millennia, thinking becomes more and more important, so that eventually you're totally identified with that movement of thought. An interesting thing anthropologists found that there's this, I believe, I have an intuitive sense that this is true.

Some anthropologists, although others don't agree with it, say that when thinking first arose in humans, they thought they were being spoken to by entities. Gods would talk in their heads. Now you pick up the weapon and kill him.

Yes, I'll do that. Not realizing thoughts are arising. And so it must have been an incredible thing to experience that at first, very disconcerting.

Suddenly, voice starts up in your head. Imagine how your dog would feel if suddenly he or she started thinking. Mm-hmm.

Somebody talking in my head. And suddenly, your dog wouldn't have an opinion about you. And very soon, the tail would no longer wag because the dog would see how big your ego is.

And the dog would have lost paradise. But unfortunately, the dog is still in paradise, which means natural connectedness with being. Humans moved through the thinking stage, but the universe is getting tired now.

Why do I know that? I got tired. That means the universe must have been getting tired of thinking because the suffering, it's too much that's created when you'd continuously lose yourself in the mind.

And so the next stage arises, which is even more wondrous, much more wondrous, which is waking up out of thinking and realizing for the first time how wondrous all this is, which before was taken for granted when you hadn't arrived at thinking yet. It was just, everything was nature, everything was natural. You were part of nature.

There was no concept of nature and humans. It was all part of the undifferentiated oneness, the same way in which animals still experience reality, the universe. So that happened.

Now, an even more wondrous thing happens. Thinking has, to a large extent, outlived its usefulness as an exploration of the one, although it will continue for quite a while, but it will no longer be dominant because the one is now embarking on a different experiment or experience, and that is a deep recognition of that which was lost, the state of connectedness with being. But when something that is lost is found again after a long time, the reconnection happens at a much deeper level.

There is an added dimension of depths there that my dog does not have, although the dog is naturally connected. When you transcend thinking, you reconnect, so to speak, and there's the dimension of deep knowing there of the sacredness and the miraculous nature of all things and the essence of all things, as expressed in the, I believe it was Wayne Dyer the other day who quoted it, as I was having a dialogue with him, a little poem by T.S. Eliot, which I also love, which goes, and let us not cease from exploration, and at the end of all our exploring, arrive where we started and know the place for the first time.

That, of course, is also, is true of both human beings in their individual journey because they only reflect in their individual journey the larger cosmic journey. So these lines refer to human beings, individual lives. They also refer to the entire life of the cosmos.

It's a wonderful, wonderful thing. So you arrive where you started and then you know the place for the first time. So that's the function of thinking.

We are in the midst of the transitional, well, not perhaps in the midst yet because 90% of humans are not yet going through the awakening process on the planet as a whole. In some places on the planet, more than up to 20% are going through the awakening process. I haven't done any research on that because you couldn't.

It would be hard to do, but my intuitive sense is that. By the way, I can usually, I can be wrong occasionally, but usually by looking at another human being in a room or sitting somewhere going past, I can usually tell whether they are going already through the awakening process or not. How, I don't know.

I just know. But I have been wrong a few times too. So we could talk more about thinking, but I don't think that is necessary.

Hope, just before we have a live question, there's one of the questioners, there's a question about hope. Let's see if I can find it. Oh, I can't find it.

It's here. But the question said, what about hope? You said you used the word hope the other day when you were talking about your dog.

I must have said, I hope my dog lives a little longer. Is there a place for hope? For some people, hope is extremely important.

I use hope in a casual way, in a casual sense. Hope is not something that helps you to be present. It's hope.

When hope dominates your consciousness, then of course you are looking to some future moment for freedom or fulfillment or satisfaction, and you're missing this. Does not mean you cannot casually say, I hope you're feeling better. You can use these words.

And of course, I hope if you're not well, and the next day I call you or I leave a message on your phone, why not say, I really do hope that you're feeling better? I also hope if I'm ill, I hope that I will get better. I can say that casually, but I can still totally accept that this moment is as it is.

And I'm not devastating if the hope is not fulfilled. So you can put all your attention on the hope, in which case you lose yourself in future, or you can use the word casually, but be totally present and accepting of what is anyway. If my dog dies, then they surrender.

And if the dog lives, it's beautiful. Eventually every form dissolves. But don't live on hope.

Do, because there's always a, oh, it's, I hope one day my life is going to be better. But what about now? And of course it might be better on the level of form.

Maybe it will get better. Maybe you will move to a better place, a nicer place. Maybe you will fall in love and live happily ever after.

Is there water coming in? But there's a crack, a crack in everything that's, that's not only how the water gets in, but also the light in. So don't live in hope, knowing that things may get better, but if you don't access that which is beyond form, what happens is things get better for a while until they get worse again.

There's a continuous change of forms. You gain something until it's taken away from you or you have to let go or it dissolves in your hands because all forms come and go. It's a continuous flux.

So yes, of course they can get better, but not as some ultimate answer or solution to your life. It's simply how things work on the level of form. Things come, things go, things grow, things thrive.

But they can't thrive forever on the level of form. The economy is growing and growing and every day we are doing so well, the economy every year grows by so many percentage points and it grows and grows until the planet is gets choked by the economy and what it entails and can't breathe anymore. But it's so economic use is excellent that the news keeps saying, no they're not, it's an imaginary situation because it can't happen.

You have growth and you have shrinkage and growth, shrinkage, birth, death, decay, these come always together. So hope is fine, but knowing there's no ultimate fulfillment in anything that happens out there in any form. You have to access the formless, which is in the now, nowhere else.

And so you have to find the vertical dimension into the space as the essence of who you are, which is consciousness itself. And then you can casually say, I hope there's not, I hope we're not going to get flooded completely here. And if we do get flooded, that's fine too, we'll take action.

I assume there's a beautiful downpour outside unless it's a water pipe, but I believe it's these wonderful downpours that you get here. And then 10 minutes later, sunshine. And you enjoy them all, you enjoy every moment.

Let's see if there's a question that the people are running towards. There's Greg and there's Aaron, and they are running towards you and they will select a few, one or two people to come, first person is on its way. In the meantime, we are present.

Okay.

[Speaker 4] (4:30:59 - 4:31:06)

Got it, okay. Eckhart, on any average day, how much in the presence are you able to be?

[Speaker 1] (4:31:09 - 4:31:12)

Oh, me? You.

[Speaker 4] (4:31:13 - 4:31:17)

I guess I'm wondering what's possible for a mere mortal.

[Speaker 1] (4:31:17 - 4:35:36)

Okay. And then you tell me about yourself too. Okay.

There's always space consciousness. The intensity varies. Sometimes it's in the background.

So I may be dealing with some stuff in the foreground, sorting out papers, looking at trying to do something on the iPad. Or there may be some problem arising, so-called problem outside. So let's see, how do we do that?

What do you deal with that? So the intensity is in the background, there's a space, in other words, nothing that happens out there, I take terribly seriously. Not that I laugh all the time about things, no, I look quite serious sometimes, but it's not, I know it's not that serious if there's a problem out there.

So you deal with it, you give it attention, you give it its due. But there's always a space consciousness in the background somewhere. But that, so that happens when there's something to deal with.

And then enormous variation depending on the moment I interact with another human being, there's an intensification. When there's a personal interaction and I look at someone, there's immediately more. Often in nature, there's more.

Often in chaotic situations, there's more. In the middle of traffic, there's more. When something goes drastically wrong, so to speak, much more intense.

So if, for example, we had an earthquake here right now, hopefully, hopefully not, there would be very, just a very intense presence and in teaching situations also, another, there's an intensification of presence that comes with what is required at this moment, really the presence that arises according to what really is required in the present moment. So it's like a dimmer switch that goes up, it goes down, but the light doesn't go off, it goes up and down. So in another way of putting it is, you can be, there's the person, there's the object consciousness of the person and there's the space consciousness of the essential being of consciousness itself.

So in this situation here, it's virtually 100% space consciousness. This is not the person, the personal self really talking, it's consciousness using this mind to speak through. I don't say that I channel as such, but it is similar to that.

I don't channel as such, I don't have the sense that there's not an entity speaking through me, but there is source, the source speaking through me, through this form. So in a teaching situation, 100% in other situations, maybe less, there's a little bit of the person there, but there's space around the person. And so, what about you?

[Speaker 4] (4:35:37 - 4:35:38)

I'm getting there.

[Speaker 1] (4:35:39 - 4:35:44)

Yes, good. So there's already space in you, in your life, in daily life.

[Speaker 4] (4:35:45 - 4:35:50)

I think about it all the time. I don't practice it all the time, but I do try to think about it, be aware of it.

[Speaker 1] (4:35:50 - 4:50:03)

Thanks to you. Yes, so the awareness is there. Okay.

And are you able to find spaces of no thought at all? For example, now? Yeah.

That's fine. That is wonderful. It doesn't really matter how long they are initially, the spaces of no thought.

You can just, you open a little space and that is no thought. You can even use this gesture because it's a little added, almost a symbolic gesture, a physical pointer to something that's of course beyond the physical. When you go like this during the day occasionally, perhaps when nobody else is looking at you, there's a space.

So this represents the space between the hands, this represents the space of no thought. And you can hold that. It sounds, it looks almost like Qigong, but you go even deeper to just that space of no thought.

It's beautiful. And so you can practice with that and you can then miraculously feel your mind actually has stopped and you're fully aware. There's no, nothing, no voice anymore.

Just enormous, enormous power you've just accessed. The mind doesn't recognize that. The conceptual mind says, what's the point in that?

How does that solve my problems? Doesn't realize that that's the, it's far beyond anything the mind could understand, the conceptual mind. This is pure, another way of putting it, this is pure intelligence.

And that's only one word for it. It's primordial intelligence, the intelligence that underlies all of creation. It is the unborn, it is the unmanifested.

What the Buddha pointed to. So, and there it is. You can, even as a little practice, again, as a little external help, later you don't need it anymore, as a little external help, when you are walking somewhere, either in nature or in a town or a city, you know, if you're walking somewhere, look at the next tree or lamppost, let's say it's a few steps away, like the end of the stage here.

And as you're walking towards that tree or lamppost, that becomes the space for you in which you are just present and not thinking. So you hope that becomes the external space for the inner space. So as you're walking, and there you are, you had a space of no thought, and then you can look at the next one if you like, or you can go back into thinking.

But it's so beautiful and empowering, you will want to have more of that in your life, to be yourself more, more and more deeply, more fully. So little things you can use as transitional, helpful devices, pointers that help you to bring that into your life. So you can do it here.

You can choose also one activity, if it's not too long, it's not an activity that takes 20 minutes, you will probably lose yourself in thought quite soon. But an activity that is just 20 seconds, half a minute or one minute, and choose whenever you perform that activity, choose to be present with it, to feel what it is you're doing. This is the ancient, the idea underlying the Japanese practices of the tea ceremony, of flower arrangement.

There are these, why these practices originally arose is as a vehicle for a state of consciousness, a vehicle for presence. So with the tea ceremony, now, of course, what happens after centuries of practice, the things become formalized. And when they become more and more formal, the original essence and purpose behind it can easily get lost.

And so, for example, another example of that is the certain simple instruments. In Japan, they have the shakuhachi flute. The shakuhachi flute is a simple piece of bamboo with a few holes in it.

And you play these beautiful notes on it with silences in between. And it's originally intuitive and played by Zen monks as part of their practice. And then some of them are just wonderful to listen to.

It's not only the playing, even when you listen to it, it puts you in that state of consciousness of pure presence if you pay more attention to the spaces than to the sounds. That's what it's there for, for you to become aware of the space. And, of course, after several centuries, you now get professional musicians who play the shakuhachi technically beautifully, but the underlying state of consciousness isn't there.

And you can sense that when you listen to it. So, occasionally, you still have shakuhachi played with the underlying state of presence, but when professional musicians play it, often, yes, technically very good, but the essence is missing. So, again, tea ceremony, you can have your own tea ceremony.

You don't need to learn anything about it. It just means, basically, again, you invite presence into your life by using any action that is not a means to an end. Any physical action that you perform, if it's not a means to an end, like making a cup of tea, usually the end is drinking the tea and everything else is a step towards that.

But that can be, it doesn't have to be like that. You can, with every movement, you can be fully present. You fill the water, the kettle up with water.

The lid goes down. The kettle, pick it up, put it there. Either it goes on the gas fire or electric, switch on, and after half a minute, you begin to hear the noise.

You open the cupboard, you take out a box of tea, either bags or tea, put it into the pot, and again, presence, you're present with every movement. It's beautiful. And then the water is ready, and then you pick that up, and it goes, and your senses are also awake, so you listen to the sounds, you feel the touch, and it's become a meditation.

In other words, it's not a means to an end. Any movement is fully self-contained. It's not in order to arrive there.

It's an end in itself. And that's, again, it's a practice that you can choose any simple activity. It can be extremely short.

It can be three seconds. If you only had a few, 10 times a day, five seconds of presence is a huge gain in consciousness. I'm giving you a minute.

Press the elevator button to call the elevator. And if you can, be present until it comes. And if you can, you might even be present while you're traveling in it, up or down.

So if you use an elevator at work, every day, somewhere, why not make that into presence practice? Every time you use it, presence, alert. It's no longer a means to an end, because the absurd thing about the unconscious egoic state is that virtually everything you do is a means to something else, which always pretends to be more important than the thing you're doing now.

It's a very strange way to live. It's always the next thing is, unconsciously, the next thing is always believed to be essentially more important than the thing you're doing now that is supposed to lead you to the next thing. But when you arrive at the next thing, you can't appreciate it because the mental pattern is always next.

Then already you have the next thing. And that's why people miss their whole lives, because they live for the next thing. No, if you spend your whole life living for the next thing, where's your life?

You've been waiting for the next thing. And then you reach the age of 80. Where's the next thing?

Still waiting for the next thing. So again, inviting presence into your life, no longer living for the next thing, because what does it mean when we say the next thing? What is the next thing?

The next thing is a thought in your head. That's what future is. The future moment is what we call the future moment.

This is vitally important. The future moment is the only reality it has, if we can even call it reality, is it's a thought in your head of the future that I need to get to. Because the future has no reality except as a thought.

Because when it becomes real, it's the present. There is only the present ever. There is no future.

Not the greatest philosopher could argue with the simple fact that every human being requires very little intelligence. Every human being can verify in their own lives that they have never experienced the future. Or have they?

No, you can't. How can you experience the future? You can only ever experience the present moment.

But you live as if something called the future were more important. And so what is that thing that pretends to be more important than the only thing there is? Thinking.

It's a thought. Future is a thought. There is no future except for the thought of future.

So a sign then to live for the next moment means to be identified. We come back to where we started, to be identified with your mind, to be trapped in object consciousness, in thought. So the more you are trapped in thought, the less space there is in you, the more you will be obsessed by getting to the next moment or the one after that, which promises fulfillment and which you never find.

Amazing, amazing. I've spoken about it many times, but every time I say it, I'm amazed.

[Speaker 4] (4:50:04 - 4:50:04)

But.

[Speaker 1] (4:50:10 - 4:50:19)

Thank you. Perhaps another question from the audience.

[Speaker 3] (4:50:21 - 4:50:44)

Oh, it's one person there. Yes. I find in trying to be present, I often feel tremendously alone.

Sorry, tremendously? Tremendously alone, a strong sense of loneliness. And the more I meditate, I find at the moment at least, everything feels dissatisfying.

Even the most pleasurable experience feels dissatisfying in some way.

[Speaker 1] (4:50:45 - 4:50:45)

Yes.

[Speaker 3] (4:50:46 - 4:51:45)

I find myself craving a sense of companionship, rather like Christians talk about having a companion for God or something that gives direction and helps making order and decisions. Yes. But instead I'm finding myself more and more with this sort of deep sense of aloneness and anxiety.

And my response is becoming more to become a workaholic rather than actually being present. And I was wondering if you could give some advice. Yes.

On the external level, do you live alone or do you live with people? I live alone and I'm probably as happy as I ever have been. Happy?

Basically, except inside there's a sense of I'm running away from now. Yes. So all the outside stuff is dandy, but when I'm actually present, something feels deeply unhappy.

Uh-huh. Uh-huh.

[Speaker 1] (4:51:52 - 5:31:57)

Now, as you know, there's a loneliness and there is solitude. Loneliness means you're alone, but longing not to be alone. And solitude means you're alone and completely surrendered to that state of being alone.

I wonder if you are able to really yet take your attention into the present moment, for example, by directing the focus of your attention, as we were suggesting today, to simple sense perceptions, or to your breathing, or to the feeling of aliveness inside your body, all things that bring you into the present moment, a largeness to sense perceptions, breath, feeling the aliveness that is there, that pervades your body, starting perhaps with your hands, feeling, are they alive? Can I feel the life inside my hands? Close your eyes for a moment.

Yes, can feel. Hard to describe what it is, but there's an aliveness there. Can I feel it in my feet?

Yes. Can I feel it in the rest of my body? Yes, I'm beginning to feel it there.

So, and then you're really, so make sure your attention actually moves into the present moment. And then, if then a sense, that means if you do it correctly, thought slows down and begins to subside. You're entering the present moment.

If then what you describe persists, a certain deep seated feeling of dissatisfaction, dissatisfaction, incompleteness, or not enough, what you do with that is you accept it the way it is rather than wishing that you were not feeling it. So you, the next step, but if so, first present moment, and then what is left when you bring your attention fully to the present moment, if that's left, what you do with it is you bring an acceptance to it in the similar way that you would accept, let's say you find yourself at home and suddenly a very unpleasant noise starts up outside. One of these drills, for example.

What do you do with it? You can't go out and say, stop. No, they have vital work to do.

So at that moment, I'm giving an external example. The same can be applied to the inner, something that doesn't feel good, but all you can do, you either suffer or you surrender, which surrender means you give it space to be, you accept it. And suddenly, let's stay with the drill for a moment.

Suddenly the drill continues. There was the irritation that you felt when you couldn't accept it. Your mind said something about it, how dreadful it is.

Why do I have to live in this place? It's the second time this week, this goes on. Why can't I find a place that's more peaceful?

Et cetera, et cetera, et cetera. Emotions come to respond to your thoughts. And then suddenly you realize what you're doing.

And you say, okay, let's see what happens if I completely accept that that is there, because that's obviously, there's nothing else I can do about it except create suffering for myself. And you accept the noise continues, and suddenly you become aware of space, spaciousness. And suddenly you feel peaceful with the noise.

This also means you have become internally independent of the external condition. A wonderful sense of freedom suddenly comes. The external condition can no longer determine your state of consciousness because you surrender.

And now we can move, let's move to the inner. Something arises in you that perhaps has lived inside you for many years. And perhaps it's an old feeling, an old emotion that is an energy formation inside you, a sense of deep lack.

And what do you do? There it is. That's your inner unpleasant noise, so to speak.

And what you do is bring, you accept that that's what you feel. You let it be, as the song says, let it be. There it is.

You become the space for it. So anything that you accept means you become the space for it. In other words, you realize there is more to you than the reaction, than the person that reacts.

The spaciousness comes the moment you completely accept any condition brings you to spaciousness. And then you feel peaceful despite the condition. And that's an incredible thing to be, and it almost sounds paradoxical that you can feel something inside you that doesn't feel good, but as you completely accept it, there is space around it, so to speak.

And then you realize that you, that space is more essentially you than the condition that you experience. That's an amazing realization. The spaciousness around the condition is more truly who you are because it's your essence than the condition that before made up your sense of who you are.

So you have to work with surrender to whatever arises as long as you do not fuel the condition with unconscious thinking, which means you're not present at all. So first you become present and what then, what still persists when you are present, you have to surrender to. So make sure you don't create the inner obstacle by unconscious thinking how lonely you are and that other people have relationships and you are the only one who doesn't have a relationship and whatever else your mind is saying, that means it's unconsciousness, you can't get out that way.

So you can only, before you can surrender, you have to become present and see what's left when you are present. You may be on the physical, emotional level, you may be longing for companionship that at the moment you don't have. It is possible because we are not complete as entities, we are male or female and so you long for the opposite.

That applies even in gay relationships, there are opposites. So on the physical level, you may long for this physical form, may want to feel the closeness of another physical form. Or on an emotional level, you may want to feel the closeness, the emotional closeness to another human being that again is a natural thing.

And if you have no access to the essence of who you are, then if those longings or physical emotional needs are not met, you become a very unhappy human being. For if for some reason they are not met, so there's longing for closeness, physical and emotional, even sexual longing can be part of that, it's not being met. If you have no access to space, the space within you, then your life seems terribly impoverished.

Similar to, for example, every woman carries in the physical vehicle, which is built in the desire to give birth is part of the physical form. Now, those who are not, who are totally identified with their physical form for their sense of self, if that is denied to you for some reason by life, you become very unhappy. And in some cultures where people identify you totally with the physical, when you're a woman, you are primarily a woman in some older cultures.

You're not a human being primarily, you're primarily a woman. And so you have to get married and have children. And if you're not married and have children, you're despised virtually.

You're assigned a particular role, a form identity, and if you don't comply for some reason, you have little value in that society. But if you go beyond the form and access the space, then even if these needs are not met, the physical need, for example, of the female form to give birth, or other needs on a physical emotional level of proximity, you can still continue to feel the longing without being consumed by it and without it making you unhappy. And that's a strange thing.

You can, for a while, you can coexist with that longing that is not met and still on a deeper level be in surrender. And that also, not giving birth to a child as a woman, if you are totally identified with your form identity, which is the physical vehicle, then they feel something missing. And some women who cannot give birth become very unhappy.

But if they access that which is beyond the form, then a little bit of unfulfillment remains within the vast space that you are. And that's the unfulfillment of the physical form. You can live with that.

You can live with. But the vastness of who you are beyond the form is there. Around it.

And so you feel peaceful about it. You can even feel peaceful about the physical longing. And as you become peaceful, by the way, it's much more likely that some human being will be drawn to you because humans are drawn to other humans who embody that peaceful state of consciousness.

And so on that deepest level, you don't need anything. On the level of essence, you don't need anything. On the level of form, there are some needs which may or may not be met by life.

So that's the practice. Thank you. Thank you.

Let's see, I haven't read any, sorry, any question online, online. It doesn't say where it comes from, but somewhere on the planet. There are several questions here.

I'll just take one or two. Oh, there's a question about space that I already answered, space in a relationship. And there's a question about being depressed and acceptance, that seems the question that has just been asked.

So somebody else on the planet has a similar problem to yours, at least one. I have autism that's increasing apparently. The cases of autism are increasing tremendously.

I have autism and practicing presence has slowed my thoughts and helped me feel peace. But I have a hard time bringing attention to my physical body, which often initially feels uncomfortable. What would you suggest to help bring awareness to my body?

That's easy. But it may not be so easy for you to take your attention out of the head. And I always start with one hand.

If you're right-handed, the right hand, otherwise the left hand. And for a person suffering from autism, this may not be that easy for anybody else. It's relatively easy, unless you're totally, many people are actually, totally.

And feel, the simple question is when you close your eyes, how do you know that I have a left or a right hand, whichever hand you choose? If the hand is not touching anything, how can I know whether I have a hand? Is there any way of me, without moving it or touching it, is there any way I can know whether I have a hand?

That question, the mind may superficially answer it and say, yes, because I just saw it. But that's not the answer, because you have to know in the moment, in this moment, how can I know? And the question takes your attention, which for many people is absorbed by thought in their heads, but to give an answer to it, your attention has to step out of thought and travel into your hand.

Some of your consciousness has to remove itself from thought, plook, plop. And it goes in here. And then suddenly you feel an aliveness, a very subtle aliveness, even sometimes tingling or warmth in your hand.

And then you can truly answer, yes, now I know that I have a hand. And that's the beginning of having attention in the body. If you can do it with one hand, you can also feel the other hand, it becomes easier.

And suddenly you have attention there in both hands. And you feel more alive already, and it's only the hands. And then can you feel your feet?

Okay, you may have to close again. Some attention has to travel there. Yes, and there, and feel.

And then what about the legs? And yes, arms. And then it becomes more diffused throughout the entire body.

I believe it was the first time with a spiritual teacher called Zong Klein, who called it, I think, a global sense of aliveness, global, so entire being. And that, it's an enormously, you feel so alive suddenly. And that's the entry point into the formless.

It's, you're already going deeper than the physical. So at first, what you touch is the, the life energy, the chi, and you begin to feel that it becomes alive. You feel it more strongly.

But the chi is the, as I call it, the bridge between the world of form, physical and other psychic forms, and the formless. So when you touch chi, you're already on the bridge to the formless. Chi is the aliveness inside you, and the aliveness in every being.

So as you put your attention into the body, you feel an intensification of life energy. That's the chi. But you're also on your way to accessing that which has no form already.

The chi is half form and half formless. And as you go deeper, you actually, after a while, if you did it with your eyes closed, you lose sense of feet, legs, hand, arms, and it becomes all that's left is a feeling of intense aliveness. But the mental image of body disappears, and what was before the inner body becomes a sense of aliveness that has no extension in time and space anymore.

It's just aliveness. So you've moved into the realm of the formless. That's how the body, the inner body, can be a portal for you to move into the formless, because that's the essence of every form is the formless, the one, God, the uncreated, or the universe before it became form, form, before the Big Bang.

No scientist can go there. The moment they ask, what was there before the Big Bang when it all started? Nothing.

But how is that possible? How can, let's think about that. Can't.

But you can experience that reality of that initial nothing in yourself, because it never went away. It still remains at the core of every form, the one formless nothingness. And so that's a beautiful, that was really getting in touch with the inner body as a spiritual practice, very powerful.

You can teach it to your grandmother or your parents who may not want to hear about anything spiritual. Don't talk to them about the formless or spirit, but you can say to your grandmother or mother who is tortured by her mind, can you feel the life in your hands? Let's have a little game.

Can ask her, can you feel the life in your hands? What do you mean? Do you want to just try it, try?

There, oh, yeah, yeah, I can feel it. Now what? Okay, do it again.

And so gradually you take her attention. I'm just taking an example of your grandma, could be anybody. And it's a beautiful thing.

They don't know it's spiritual. Don't mention the word. So that's the embodiment and also movement helps as some of you have been doing the presence through movement with Kim.

Movement can also help getting in touch with that inner aliveness. And for the autistic person that asked the question, I would also recommend that you take up an actual practice, physical practice, presence through movement, Tai Chi, yoga, Qigong, whatever it is that involves movement. And that can be a help to bring body awareness to make it possible for you to get out of the head.

Let's take one question from paper. Okay, here we have a question. My pain body is violent, destructive, and terrifying, and it tends to completely take me over with its power.

I try to just witness it or stay present, but it consumes me. I live in a constant state of fear and anxiety to the point where life doesn't seem worth living. Can you comment?

Very heavy pain body. You get completely taken over by it in certain situations. Presence is lost.

What to do? I very rarely recommend remembering something or going into the past, but one helpful thing that you can do is when you're alone or with someone who is fairly present or conscious, remember the last incident that triggered your pain body. Remember how it started.

And then you may begin to feel the emotion that goes with it, but it won't be quite as strong. It may be strong, but it won't be quite as strong as when it actually happened.

But you still can visualize what happened and you can feel the emotion.

Some people can even feel strong emotion when they remember how 20 or 30 years ago they were bullied at school. You remember the bully and what he did, and you go through the motion, and suddenly you feel this enormous anger. That's a good opportunity for practice.

So if you remember an incident or the typical kind of incident, if there is a typical incident that tends to trigger the pain body, bring it up in your memory and feel the emotion, and then it's not quite as powerful. It's a secondary way of exploring it and bring awareness to it there when it's not the actual situation, but it was the past. But you can still, the emotion is very much in the present moment.

So although the memory brought it about, you're still experience, of course, the only thing you can experience, which is the present moment. So you feel some of that emotion strongly again, and then see if you can stay present with it, which simply means allowing this pain to be there feeling it without, and the key, of course, is without fueling it with your thoughts. Because as you may remember, there are two ways in which the pain body feeds, takes on more energy, absorbs more energy.

One way is through drama with other people, provoking other people, wanting the emotional reaction of other people's pain bodies. And you actually go in there and it's like poking, poking somebody psychically. You say that the pain body says the very thing that's most hurtful to the other person, especially people you're close to, that's where pain body like to feed in families and relationships.

And so you poke the other person exactly where it hurts, so to speak, not physically, but psychically. And then you get the reaction, and then perhaps your own pain body even, and so you're feeding the other person, it laughs at, shouting, screaming. But if you're alone, what do you do then?

How does the pain body feed when there's nobody around you, but at its feeding time comes, it wants to renew its energy, it moves into your mind, and makes you think certain thoughts that correspond to the feeling. And they're not pleasant thoughts because the feeling is not pleasant. The feeling, whatever the feeling is, anger or deep sadness, irritation.

And then you think the thoughts, how dreadful it all is. You remember my life, thoughts about my life. When they are fueled by the pain body, thoughts about your life become dreadfully unhappy.

And so every negative thought has energy frequency that the pain body absorbs. Basically, it thinks the thoughts that it wants to think through you. It uses your mind, the emotion, it's like an entity, it uses your mind and makes it think thoughts that correspond to the kind of energetic intake that it likes.

It's vibrational, heavy, painful, negative thoughts. And it can go on for an hour, two hours, three hours. A day, two days.

And then a time comes when it doesn't need it anymore. It has taken on enough fresh energy and goes back to the dormant state. And you wake up, the drama is over, or the train of negative thinking.

You have a little bit of peace now until the next pain body feed comes. And so that's the pattern of the pain body. So when you go through this exercise that I just described, don't feed your pain body with your thoughts.

In other words, thinking negative thoughts because you have negative feelings in the anger, for example, extremely angry. So the thoughts that go with it, of course, are thoughts that one can sometimes read. I very rarely dip into the internet where people comment.

Now, 95% of comments, for example, when I post, well, actually somebody still does it for me, I don't know how, Facebook. When I post on Facebook, somebody posts what a little comment I write, a quote and a comment. And only the other day, for the first time, I started reading the comments that people make.

It's fascinating. Most of the comments are very, very positive. It's wonderful to read.

And then there's always, out of 50, there's one very negative, very angry person. No matter what you say, he or she, I don't know whether it's he or she, is very angry. You, how dare you say this?

I only talked about inner peace. How dare you? How dare you?

Who do you think you are? It is obvious that this has very little to do with me, but there's a very heavy pain body talking there. And no matter what I say, it would get triggered.

I could say, you are the most beautiful, how, what are you talking, nothing will work. So, there are some people who are in the grip, either permanently, some people have pain bodies that are almost permanently active. Even just underneath the surface, it's just waiting for the next thing.

It's always there somewhere, waiting for, you can look into their eyes and you feel this negative emotional entity waiting there behind, just for one wrong word, and you'll get the reaction. But if you're very present, actually, it won't come. It'll, and that person can experience a little bit of, oh, but it requires enormous presence when you're confronted with a very heavy pain body.

So, make sure when you do this practice, you are not feeding the pain body with your thoughts, you're accepting what you feel on the level of feeling, bringing acceptance to that, be with it, feel the energy of it. And, a visual representation of that enormous anger is in the old TV series, The Incredible Hulk, where whenever this person gets angry, the body suddenly grows, huge muscles develop, the shirt rips open, and the person turns green or red, I can't remember, and becomes huge. And it's a beautiful visual representation of what is inside of the pain body when it grows.

And it's satisfying, people loved watching it, it's gone now, but, because you could feel it with him, it was a, perhaps a cathartic thing of, without endangering anybody, experiencing a bit of your own pain body as this person's pain body suddenly grows whenever he gets angry. And then he shrinks again until the next thing happens. One more from a paper, and then again, we come back to you.

Can the mentally ill, like bipolar, people who suffer from bipolar disorder, understand consciousness and awakening? I would say, yes. Bipolar disorder is only an intensification of what is considered normal, a much more intense version of what is normal.

So as we all know, bipolar is people who are getting taken over by enormous positive, so-called positive energy, and they do weird, mad things even when they're on a high, emotional, mental high. And then they experience the corresponding emotional, mental low, and they get taken over by mental, emotional states. That's what it is.

Now, every human being, even in the so-called normal state of consciousness, gets taken over by mental, emotional states when they are not conscious. And here's just an extreme form of such a takeover. So this person, especially in between the high or the low, there are periods when this person can actually begin to be shown that there is such a thing as awareness in themselves by simply simple practices, pointing out certain things.

Here's, there's a thought, and there's, you know that this thought is in you. Can you feel that emotion? Who is it that feels the emotion?

Are you the emotion? The thought that comes into your head, are you that thought? If you are not the thought, if you are not the emotion, who are you?

Those questions can point the person to awareness. Once you have accessed awareness, there is a chance that some awareness remains the next time one of the two, the high or the low, begins to take you over. There's no guarantee that that will immediately stop it or stop the behavior.

But if there's some witnessing consciousness, which is awareness in the background, you won't be taken over completely. So the beginning then is become acquainted with awareness in yourself. And then there is a chance that awareness remains as, and if awareness grows in you, the intensity of the episodes will diminish.

It's not that they don't happen anymore, but gradually the intensity of the episodes diminishes. It diminishes. So that is, I would recommend that awareness practice.

So the answer then is yes, a person with bipolar disorder. The question is not quite right. The question says, can this person understand consciousness and awakening?

It's not really to do with understanding. It's with realizing it in yourself. Conceptual understanding is the first step, but then that, of course, is not enough.

You need to access awareness in yourself. Let's see if there are questions from the room. Somebody, Greg, or is going to choose.

[Speaker 2] (5:32:11 - 5:33:33)

Hi. Hi. I saw you speak with Wayne Dyer the other day, and there was a point where you were talking about this list of spiritually fantastic people or similar, and you mentioned that if you ever let it get to your head, that's the beginning of delusion.

Sorry, if you? If you let that thought. Oh, yes.

That idea. Oh, yes, yes, yes. That you're up high on the list.

That if you let that get to your head, it's the beginning of delusion, and what was interesting to me was you said something like, and I won't have it. Yes. And it was your strength in rejecting that idea, and I wonder how we can all get that same strength, so you get to a point where you sense the space and you love it, but you still revert back to thinking and various bad habits, whatever they might be.

Yes. How do we develop that strength where you just, I know I'm not gonna go there. Yes.

[Speaker 1] (5:33:34 - 5:33:35)

Good question.

[Speaker 2] (5:33:35 - 5:33:37)

Thank you. Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (5:33:43 - 7:11:28)

One way one could put it like this, presence, there is an awakening process, and as part of the awakening process, the presence that comes through you, it grows. There is a growth of presence, and it's only when presence has reached a certain level are you able to say, I won't have it. When presence has reached a certain level, you are also able to say you can drop thinking if you don't want to think, and when you've reached that, I think quite a few of you, I feel, are at that level or approaching that level where you're able to be free of thinking when you say, I won't have it, especially if you feel old negative thoughts arising if they're still inside you, and you notice how harmful they are to your organism, even to the physical vehicle, what emotions they produce, and you can say, I won't have it. There was a spiritual teacher in India who never wrote a book, but somebody recorded his teachings in a wonderful book that I've often recommended called I Am That, and the name of the teacher is Nisargadatta Maharaj. I won't spell that for you, but I'm sure.

And he, one of the things he said when people asked, a questioner asked about meditation, but really the question was about presence, what is meditation, what is true meditation, which, of course, is presence, and his answer, he was very radical in his answers. And he said, it's very simple. It's the radical refusal to harbor thoughts.

That's what he looked like, right? Almost a little scary. The radical refusal to harbor thoughts.

That's the most radical spiritual teaching I've ever heard, but it's beautiful. It's quite extreme, one might say, but that, of course, presupposes or requires a considerable degree of presence that's in you to say, I refuse to harbor these thoughts or any thoughts at any time. When you're walking on the beach here, there are the clouds, there's the sea, there are the palm trees.

What is there to think about, or anywhere? And so, are you able to, in the words of Nisargadatta, refuse to harbor thoughts? Many of you are there, almost there.

I never expressed it in such extreme terms, but yes, I'm not having it. You drop it when you don't want to think, you don't think. That's the greatest achievement, by the way, if you think you'll want a successful life or are not quite happy with the success that you have achieved.

If you're able to not think when you choose not to think, you become incredibly empowered by the source of all creativity. It not only ends all the unnecessary drama in your mind, you also touch the source of all intelligence and creativity there. So, it's a wonderful thing.

And the greatest success that you can achieve, except it won't look to you as if you had achieved anything, because the you that was thinking in terms of achievement was mind-made. And when you're not thinking, the mind-made self dissolves. So, you don't get the sense of I have achieved enlightenment.

What about you? But it doesn't arise, unfortunately. It's bad news for the ego.

So, all we can do then is trust in the growing presence in you, and of course, being here either as physical or tuning into here gives you an enormous boost of presence because this is what it is all about. It may not stay with you in that intensity as you go away from here, but some of it remains. Or it may.

Or it may be the end of all delusion. Some of you, it may be the end of non-acceptance, of not being able to live in the present, and from now on, you're aligned with the is-ness of now. For some, it happens all at once.

It's rare, but it does happen. For most, it's a process of awakening, and process is never a straight line upwards. Process is usually a spiral thing, so there's a gain in consciousness, and then you get drawn back into, mm, and then you come up again, and then you get, mm.

And sometimes you may have to experience a huge setback in your life that can happen to some in order to make an enormous leap forward in consciousness. As it happened to Wayne Dyer, he mentioned two instances in his life that would usually be regarded as very undesirable, being abandoned as a child, being an orphan, and then at a moment, he found himself by his father's grave, and he was able to forgive. He was still an adolescent, and that brought enormous, the event that would usually be regarded as extremely bad and negative, then turned around and became an influx of grace.

And more recently, as he shared with us, his illness, leukemia, and I could see the change, the deepening in him from last time I met him eight years ago to now, so again, something that normally would be considered bad through acceptance brought about a huge influx of consciousness. So let's trust in the process that it is happening in each one of you, and then eventually, you can drop these hot potatoes or hot coals, which you don't want them, not having that, the radical refusal to harbor thoughts. Thanks.

Thank you. Thank you. Thank you.

This doesn't mean that you can't think again. Of course, you think again, but you're no longer run by old thoughts. You can think more creatively when you do think.

Let's look at one more here. One question is about psychotropic depression. Drugs?

Ram Dass isn't here, so we won't do it. I'll ask him, and then I'll convey the answer to you. Are the conceptual mind and the egoic mind the same thing, or are they both separate entities of the unconscious mind that like to work together and regularly high-five each other?

No. No. No.

No. No. No.

No. No. No.

No. No. I love that expression that originated in Australia.

No worries. Beautiful. Are the conceptual mind and the egoic mind the same thing?

Yes. The difference being the conceptual mind that gets hold of you, so you identify with it, becomes the egoic mind. The conceptual mind itself is fine.

It's a lovely tool. You can do great things with it, but when the sense of self becomes lodged in that conceptual mind, in every thought that arises, this, then it becomes the ego. And so that's the false self.

That is the self that is ultimately not real, that all spiritual traditions point to as illusory, that Jesus talked about, the deny thyself, which means deny the illusory, the illusion of the self. Well, what point is there in denying the self if it's real? So by saying deny thyself, the implication is, of course, it's not real.

And the Buddha's teaching, the very essence of the Buddha's teaching, means the unreality of the self, and that is the concept, the mind-made self. So the question is, do you have thoughts, or do thoughts have you? There is no problem with having thoughts, but when thoughts have you, you become a problem to yourself and to others.

And that's the false self. So that is always the question is, are you in the grip of your thoughts, or is there space around your thoughts? And do you realize that you are the space, not the thought, the spaciousness around the thought?

That's the question. So the conceptual mind and the egoic mind, the conceptual mind becomes the egoic mind when there is a sense of self in every thought. And you can see it in people who start arguing about the most insignificant thing, the need to be right in an argument, the defensiveness, the anger that arises, even the lying.

You would rather lie, any lie will do, as long as you can be right when you get involved in an argument and you identify it with your thoughts, which is your mental position, your viewpoint. You will lie, you will bring out any evidence, you come up with weird ideas, this is how it is, just to be right. But people come to physical fights just to decide who is right.

So how does this need arise to be right in an argument? It means there is self-identification with viewpoints in your mind. And what is a viewpoint?

It's a mental position. What is a mental position? It's a thought.

So the thought has you in its grip, you cannot distinguish between who you are and your thought. That is insanity. If you can't distinguish between a thought in your mind and your identity, it's a form of insanity.

And this is how people fight each other, not realizing it's thoughts. So if you are wrong, it means nothing. It doesn't detract from your identity, but when you're identified with thought and you're wrong, you're virtually dead.

You feel totally devastated. So you can't allow that, you can't be wrong. This is just one example of the madness of complete self-identification with thought.

And so this is why we're here. We are definitely coming out of this self-identification with thought. So thought isn't a problem anymore without the self.

Anatta, in the Pali language, said the Buddha, the three, I love those three words of the Buddha's teaching in the Pali language. Anatta is the basic reality, no self. A means no, atta is the Pali for atman, no self, anatta.

Dukkha, suffering, misery. Anicca, impermanence. Those three, what he's saying is, all things are impermanent, all forms are nature.

All things are impermanent, forms come and go. If you attach yourself to forms and seek your identity in forms, especially the thought forms, then you have a self that is unreal. And so the teaching is anatta, there is no self, you can't find yourself in form.

Because if you look for yourself in form, then you experience dukkha, misery and suffering. That's a beautiful teaching, 2,500 years ago. So the Buddha just said, I teach suffering and the end of suffering.

So simple. Which means, I show you how suffering arises, and we've been doing that here all day. I show you how suffering arises, and when you see that, there's the end of suffering.

Because the seeing is the awareness, is the unconditioned. And this time I'm not going to run away. We'll go into stillness, just a little bit now.

Nobody's waiting, I hope. Forms dissolve quickly as the Buddha realized already. And you can verify in your experience, things come and go.

This retreat, there's a form, the external form of the retreat, the place, this room, the people coming together. It's beautiful. But what it really is powerful and beautiful is not the external form, it's something that's arising in you.

That's the essence of this, and that is timeless. So nothing really important is coming to an end. That which really matters is there in you.

And so the scenery changes as you, the body moves away today, tomorrow, next week. There's always something that remains unchanging. And that's consciousness itself.

We could call it the present moment. It's always the now that doesn't change. You can be sure that your life, your, your life is always now.

And the now in essence is who you are because it's a space for everything. Everything unfolds in the now and it's inseparable from who you are. So ultimately in the depths of it, what we call the now is the space of consciousness, the formless, the unborn.

And that's why we can talk about the power of now. And as you may have heard me say before, once or twice, the now is not what happens. That's the surface of the now, but it's not the now.

People confuse usually in ordinary existence, people confuse the now with, with what happens in the now. And therefore they say, every day consists of many, many moments, many present moments. That's how it looks when you think the now is what happens.

But if you look more closely, which in other words means in your immediate experience, you will see that your life does not consist of many moments. It's only when you go into thinking and then you remember, oh, there were past moments. I had breakfast this morning and so on.

But in your, that's your immediate experience is always only of this moment. Your life is always only this moment. So that's one can't really argue with because it's so obviously true.

So although we think life consists of many moments, that's because we confuse the now with what happens in the now. That of course changes continuously. That's what the Buddha refers to as the fact of impermanence.

And that's what the pre-Socratic philosopher Heraclitus or Heraclitus, who lived about the same time as the Buddha, 500 or so years BC. He had this famous saying, I believe in Greek, it's pantare, which means everything flows. And he said, you cannot step into the same river twice because it's everything is different water.

So everything is continuous flux. He saw that as the essence of all life, which is true on the surface of things. But if you go deeper within, you have two dimensions.

You have the flux of birth and death, coming and going of forms. And you find the place within that actually is an unchanging presence or space. And that is the true meaning of now.

And that's the only place where anything can happen. There was actually another philosopher who lived shortly, I don't know, shortly after or shortly before Heraclitus, who said the exact opposite. He said, nothing ever changes.

It's an, the change is an illusion. They are both right. So if you can be in your, in the essence of who you are, and then from there, you deal with a world of form, which continuously changes.

So if you can sense within you that still presence, that's the essence, and that's the now, then you become the space for whatever arises. Then you don't need to cling to the forms, but you appreciate them, but you don't need to cling. I need to have this thing that or whatever form it is.

It could be also totally abstract. I need to have recognition. People need to recognize me as important.

They're all thought forms. I need somebody to understand me, thought forms. I need you to understand me, otherwise I can't be fulfilled.

My parents need to understand me. It's just a thought, they don't. Just imagine these people who need to understand you, suddenly say, yes, now I understand you.

Oh, okay. It looks, when it's not there, it looks, it's going to be some great fulfillment. When you look to a form that isn't here yet, and when you project, you think when it comes, then I'll be fulfilled.

When it actually does come, you go, oh, I need to be famous, become famous. When it actually does come, you say, oh, is that what it entails, all that stuff? That didn't complete me.

Let's think of something else. I want to become a hermit now. I have a few more questions that people submitted.

And as you know, every answer to a question really is more than just about the question. It really is always about the unchanging truths. Somewhere it's, the core is always the same, of course, of every answer.

Okay, let's start with this one. In my everyday life, I find peace and connection to the universe. Here at this retreat with birds in cages, noise, junk food, blah, blah, blah, something like that, I am finding it hard to connect to that peace.

How would you cope if you had to live in a disco for a week? Well, the, let's just address the two parts to this. One is the part of here, not living in these unusual surroundings, not your usual, perhaps more sedate and peaceful surroundings.

How would you cope? Okay, that's a hypothetical situation that's very unlikely to ever happen to me. Okay.

But if it did, there are two possibilities, of course. One is you open the door and go out and leave, and then you're at peace. If you can't be at peace in the disco, my choice would be to open the door and step outside and leave.

But if the doors are locked, I suppose that's what you're talking about. But, if the doors are locked and I can't get out, what's left is surrender. So I would probably start dancing.

And to the same here, there's a clash between what makes you feel comfortable, you perhaps live in a quiet place, and you're not usually surrounded by sun-bathing tourists, and birds in cages. I haven't seen them, but they must be around. And junk food, because you don't have to eat it, but.

It's quite good for retreats to be, I haven't yet, by the way, found an ideal retreat setting. One would have thought that going to an ashram in India would be more conducive to inner peace than being in a big hotel in Hawaii. But there too, you'll find things that disturb your peace.

For example, my first night in an ashram in India, you're on this bed, and I was given a deluxe room, as they call it. They said the Queen of Spain had also spent some time in that room. So you're under the, lying on your bed, the temperature is just one degree less than at midday, extreme, extremely hot, under a mosquito net, and then sleep doesn't come.

At 1.30 in the morning, the need to go to the toilet arises, but there are several huge mosquitoes sitting on the outside of the net, waiting for you to emerge. And then you just wait a little longer, and finally, you have to get out, being pursued by the mosquitoes, you run to the bathroom. And in the bathroom, suddenly a flutter arises, and there's a big bat flying around the ceiling.

And finally, you manage to get back under your mosquito net, and there's a little bit of sleep. And then, at 4.30, there's a knock on the door. Oh no, that's not all, I forgot.

At 2.30, there's in the street, there's a loudspeaker of very low sound quality, with some lovely religious chanting going on. Why are they chanting in the street, to a loudspeaker at 2.30 in the morning? I don't know, but it's, rah, rah, rah, rah, rah, rah, rah, rah, rah, rah, rah, rah.

In a way, it's lovely, because they're chanting about God, and it doesn't matter if they wake people up, it's. And then, after 20 minutes, that subsides, and then there's a little bit of sleep. And at 4.30, at 4.30, there's a knock on the door. And the man, I open the gate up, open the door. Of course, it's still dark. And the man comes with a bucket with hot water, and said, the hot water you ordered, it's 5.30. It's 4.30, I ordered it for 5.30. And. And. And. And.

Oh no, come back, no, you surrender, you have to surrender every moment, so that you become one with whatever is in that moment. So you immediately adjust to that, you adjust to the mosquitoes not being able to sleep, or you become unhappy. And so you accept that the hot water comes at 4.30 instead of 5.30. And so it goes on. And then finally, you go for breakfast in the big hall, you sit on the floor, there's a banana leaf on the floor, and a man comes with a huge bucket, or what's in it, I don't know, and then a ladle, and he goes, on your banana leaf, flop. And. It's wonderful, continuous, one becoming one with what is.

And here you have the tourists. And the parrots in cages, and junk food. Probably the food on the banana leaf is more healthy in some ways, it's not junk food.

On the other hand, there may be certain things in there that the Western body is not used to. Which then results in very frequent visits to the bathroom. Wherever you go, there will be an opportunity for surrender, rather than want to, and that's part of the retreat, and it's part of, really, life.

Because wherever you go, you will find you get challenged by life, there'll be something that you need to surrender to, or you walk out. But very often, you need to go with it, rather than having expectations how things should be, you go with the, how things are, the is-ness, I call it, the is-ness of things in the present moment. And if you can be one with the is-ness, whether it's the bat in the bathroom, or whether it's the tourists here, then wherever you go, you can find peace.

That really is the purpose for realizing that, and without saying conditions need to be in a certain way, to be conducive. And if you could find the absolutely ideal place for a retreat, where everything works, and everything is absolutely immaculate and perfect, the food is exquisite, the temperature is just right, you get massages every day, in addition to the, pampered in every need is immediately met, you just have to say something, and somebody comes, yes, now you're totally undisturbed for meditation, absolutely perfect. Is that the ideal retreat?

Not really. The imperfections are actually more helpful than the perfect conditions. In the ideal retreat, or the ideal life, which doesn't exist, the life without challenges would be very similar to going to a movie in which there is no conflict.

Everybody is peaceful. Nothing really happens because there's no drama. The characters in the movie are not challenged by anything.

And so the movie viewers would go, Titanic without the accident. A perfect crossing. Two and a half hours of that.

But this is how people want their lives to be, they have this inner expectation, that's how it should be, or can be. But it's not like that. And then you begin to welcome the challenges.

It's actually fine. You don't demand that conditions should be perfect. They never are perfect.

And if they are, you go to sleep. Or if they are, they are not perfect for very long. Or you get so bored.

Oh, there's a question here about what is boredom? So that's the next question. You're not connected with the inherent aliveness within you.

You're floating on the surface of your mind and as a mind, you need continuous stimulus. If you are connected with the depths of your being, then even watching the perfect crossing of the Titanic would be fine, not that you would have to watch that. So if you're not connected, the mind needs stimulus and food.

What can I take in next? It needs some kind of sense of aliveness. I call it sometimes a substitute sense of aliveness.

So it looks for the next thing to, really, we could call it to reincarnate into the mind reincarnates and you identify with every form that arises. And when you identify with a form, that is what reincarnation is. Consciousness identifies with a form and does therefore a dreamlike state.

And that's, of course, what consciousness wanted to experience for a long, long time. And then it's had enough and then it wants to wake up out of the dream. So you can see how the mind grasps always at the next thing.

It used to be magazines that people, well, they still do. For instance, just one example, when people look through magazines, nothing really satisfies, but there's always something new there. But nowadays, of course, it's on the screen.

And it says, as we know, it has enormous addictive effect on the mind. But that restlessness, that is boredom, doesn't really arise. You become comfortable with being and you don't need something exciting.

But if it does, you appreciate whatever happens, but you don't need some kind of excitement around there to make you feel alive. And you become comfortable with sitting quietly in a room, too. One French philosopher said, all the ills of humanity are to do with the inability to sit quietly in a room.

It's really talking about the ability to enjoy your being, the essence of who you are. And you may find there comes a time as people are beginning to awaken that all the doings become less and less satisfying. What before was fulfilling and exciting is not really that satisfying anymore.

And so that means something else wants to come up in you, that is more essential, more vital. So, what are your suggestions for healing from deep grief of losing my two children last year in a boating accident? It's always painful, of course, when a loved one passes away, even more so when it seems far before their time, long before their time.

You have to become very still here so that you can sense, by sensing the essence of who you are, also sense that in your children that is not subject to decay and death. And it is a realization within you. I don't want to give an explanation, something to believe in, but I would only suggest whenever deep grief of this kind comes, which you cannot deny, which is going to be there, nor should one say, I shouldn't be feeling grief, as you know, I mentioned it in a book, there was a philosopher, ancient Greek philosopher, who, when he was told that his son had died, he said, I knew he was not immortal.

Now, where that statement came from, we don't know. We don't know out of what inner state these words came. They either came out of a disconnection, a person who refused to feel emotional suffering, who disconnected himself from his emotions, that's possible.

It's also possible that the words he spoke, I knew he was not immortal, came out of a deep realization of the essence of all beings. I don't know which one it is, where the answer came from. If it came from the disconnection, then of course it was a false thing.

If it came from the deepest level, I know from my own experience with somebody close to me, dying, my parents, for example, which is painful enough, but not as painful as your children dying, that there is grief because this cannot be denied and weeping. At the same time, there's a deep sense of peace and even sacredness in the face of death. These two can coexist.

I'd like to assume that this Greek philosopher had connected with the essence of who he is and that he spoke from that essence when he said those words, they were not flippant words, they were deeply felt. And I'd also like to feel that he did feel grief when he heard that and perhaps wept. But nevertheless, he said, I knew he was not immortal.

He was very much aware of the precariousness of all forms, all life forms, all humans, all other life forms. And that is the awareness of that death could just be just around the corner for anybody. That is a fact.

No matter what age you are, it could be just, you could walk out and slip on a banana skin and bump your head against something and that's it. It could, it's possible. Anything.

So we tend to delude ourselves into believing as a society, Western society, there's still very much death denial. We don't know how to deal with it. We deny it.

We don't really talk about it much. Some people are beginning to talk about it now. But awareness of death is actually a very beautiful thing.

And somebody close to you dying can be, this can result in a awakening in you of the precariousness of all forms. And then that can, when you see how impermanent and precarious forms are, and as you get older, of course, you also begin to see in a more natural way, people that you knew are beginning to die. And sometimes even young people die and they suddenly, people little, where there was a form, there's a nothingness suddenly.

Tch, tch. And in the presence of death, you become very still. If tears come, they come.

Feel the, if you can feel the essence of another human being, a loved one, while they are still with you, that is very helpful so that you don't identify who that being is with the, neither with the physical form nor with the psychological form. There is a deeper essence in that human being. And so in essence, what dies is the physical becomes dust.

And then my intuition tells me that on the psychological level, the form survives and may reincarnate. But ultimately what reincarnates is still the form identity. The essence is beyond reincarnation.

The essence is timeless. So there is an essence in me. There is an essence in you that is beyond reincarnation.

So you could say only the misperception of who you are finds another vehicle until awakening happens. So what reincarnates is the misperception, the delusion of thinking I am a separate person. That delusional mind structure, psychic structure, closes itself in another physical form.

But underlying that delusion, there is the truth of who you are already. So underlying that, and you find it, don't wait for death to find that which is deathless in you. That is also a word that's sometimes used in some tradition, Buddhist traditions, where as you know, they deny the reality of the separate soul.

And ultimately that is true in ultimate terms. Ultimately, there's only God and each being is a temporary expression of that underlying one, the one reality. Buddhists, the closest they get to talking about God is they have the term they sometimes use, it's called the deathless.

It's the realization of in you of that which is beyond death. Then the death of someone close to you is still painful because yes, the form also, there was an attachment to the form, but was that all there was, or was there more? It's painful, but with that acceptance of the dissolution of a form, although grief comes, a deep stillness also arises.

And in that stillness, there is a knowing, not conceptual, but a knowing that at the core of each being, there is the deathless. And that is also when you sit with someone who is dying, which is a very sacred thing to accompany someone, to be with someone on their deathbed, is the most sacred thing really you can do. And you are called upon to be absolutely still and present.

And words may come out of your mouth, words may come from the dying person or not, but if you embody that presence, then you will realize that the death process is very sacred. I spoke some years ago to a woman who sat next to her son who was dying of an illness. He was in his 30s.

And in the moment that he died, she was absolutely present and she could feel the entire room being transformed into a sacred space. And at that moment, she knew ultimately there is no death and who he is in his essence has not died. The room was transformed.

And only 10 or 15 minutes later, she started to weep. So she lived for 10 minutes, she was in that deep realization. And then other levels came up in her, of course, which is quite natural.

But it was the most sacred thing she had ever experienced. It transformed her life. And it made something that otherwise would have been absolutely devastating into something that is still, of course, will bring grief, deep sadness, but also sacredness.

As more humans awaken, one of the most essential things to happen is that people are taught how to die. This should be one of the most important things. People who are able to teach that, not as a set of, but to teach it primarily to embody that state of consciousness that is necessary to be with a dying person.

And to talk about death to almost anybody should already be, even children at school should know about death, but especially, of course, older people, they should, the places where death is a sacred thing rather than a thing you deny, as in hospitals, nobody knows to know except a few nurses who intuitively can be with a patient, not because necessarily they have been taught it, but they're in a something from within response to the situation.

But on the whole, hospitals just try to prolong life as much as possible, even if it causes more and more pain. How to die, one of the most vital things. But of course, how to die is also not just how to die physically, that's very important, but every human being at any stage of their life needs to know how to die to the psychological mind-made self that's the spiritual death.

And that's why we're here, because you have already said yes to that. You don't want to continue to be trapped in the illusion of that mind-made little entity, and that's the kind of death. Also, cause and miracles, again, the beautiful lines at the beginning of the cause and miracles, nothing real can be threatened, nothing unreal exists, herein lies the peace of God.

That's really all you ever need to know. Nothing real can be threatened. Of course, the body can be threatened, so it's not absolutely real.

Any form can be threatened, so that's not absolutely real. Herein lies the peace of God is in knowing this in the depth of your being, there arises the peace of God, which means the peace of the unconditioned, the unborn, the formless, the essence. How do you stay present when there's chronic illness and the symptoms are so consuming, it is hard to get peaceful?

The symptoms make your mind go a million miles a minute, and it's hard to focus on the breath because of asthma. For a long time in Christianity, in modern Christianities, maybe not really anymore, but medieval Christianity, and so for hundreds and hundreds of years, there was the image of the crucifixion was of extreme importance, and it sometimes actually worked beautifully for humans to look at that image, and especially if you are in deep suffering, because it is an archetype of human suffering, and you could then feel that you were sharing in the suffering of this archetypal human. You were sharing in their suffering, and thus you were able to accept your suffering, surrender. That's really the only way when this happens to you, chronic pain or chronic, very difficult condition, there's nothing else you can do except surrender, and I have met people who have experienced that extreme suffering, and I could see that through surrender, then their ego became eroded.

So surrender in extreme suffering can be one way of allowing your ego to be dissolved. It cannot survive in that, and then also your mind would become still in the midst of suffering. Otherwise, you have a hardening of ego if you resist it and have a lot of thoughts about it, how unfair it all is, how dreadful it is.

The ego can harden in suffering. The ego can dissolve in extreme suffering, and perhaps you have already seen the ego hardening is more common. The potential is there for the ego to be burned up.

It's not so much that it's burned up by the suffering. It's burned up by the deep surrender that is necessary. With the deep surrender, it would burn up in any situation.

The crucifixion is an image that can still, for some people, work. There's also, I talked about on the internet TV thing, I occasionally talk about a book, and one of the books I talked about was the medieval work, The Imitation of Christ, a lovely work of medieval spirituality. And The Imitation of Christ means that you become like Christ.

That's the sense of imitation. And that is a book that I would recommend to anybody who is in deep suffering. It can be very helpful in that state of suffering.

Suffering is also a path. Suffering that arises not because you create it out of your mind, but suffering that seems to come to you. So complete surrender to that really is, means it's almost then you accept it as if you had chosen it, which is an expression that I sometimes use.

You accept it as if you had, of course, as you know, in some new age teachings, you are told, why did you manifest that? Or they ask you, you must have chosen it on some level, but I don't say that. It creates anger in people.

And it's not necessary. You don't need to say you must have chosen it on some level, or why did you manifest this? That person feels even worse.

I must have done something dreadfully wrong. It's also not right to equate physical, spiritual awakening with perfect health. It's not always the case.

There may be other factors that operate, which are karmic in the physical vehicle. Many things do dissolve in presence. Many old patterns do dissolve as intense presence arises.

There may be some, however, that do not dissolve. And so there have been enlightened masters who have contracted illnesses. And so let us not necessarily equate spiritual awakening with perfect health, that would be, or a perfect body.

I remember the spiritual teacher Gangaji saying, I was talking to her some years ago, when she first met her teacher, an Indian guru, and she was a body worker. And so she met this Indian guru, and at first she said she wasn't interested in him because being a body worker, her idea was a perfect body means a perfect spiritual realization. And this guy had a kind of crooked body, a little bit like mine, perhaps just bigger.

And she thought, how can a person with that posture possibly be awakened? Later she realized, of course, that was a misperception, but that was her first, being a body worker, that was her first thing. Of course, there is a relationship between inner states and the body.

Of course, it's preferable to have a healthy body. Of course, it's something through healthy diet and exercise, of course, you want to, it's wonderful to have a healthy body, but there's not necessarily that correlation. There may be other factors at work in the physical vehicle.

Some ancient Indian teachings say that the karma, the old karma is like an arrow that has left the bow, and even if you awaken, the arrow that has already been shot as this physical vehicle goes through its lifespan, it's the arrow that has been left, so it's the old karma. And there are some, unfortunately, some traditional teachings also in the West that equate perfect health with spiritual realization. There's a lot in Christian science.

There's spirituality there. The book, the foundational book for Christian science is a beautiful work, quite powerful, a lot of truth in there, and yet the complete equation of health and spirituality go together is not quite right, and even a beautiful teacher like Joel Goldsmith, who is a, if you haven't read, I'm sure many of you would love him, Joel Goldsmith, who lived, taught mainly in the 50s and early 60s, he lived actually in Hawaii, and his teachings are an expression of oneness, oneness, non-duality, what's called advaita in Indian terminology. He expressed oneness through his teaching in Christian terminology, so he deepened the Christian message through his teachings, but he too, because he came from, originally from Christian science, there was a little bit, unfortunately, too much of a correlation of physical health and physical healing with spiritual realization, to the extent that when he had his first heart attack, it had to be kept secret from the followers, because the followers would have thought, oh, he hasn't realized, he's just talking about it, it's not the case, and finally, he did die of another heart attack, and finally, they had to admit he died of a heart attack. Suffering, physical suffering, suffering, psychological suffering.

In many cases, it's the psychological suffering that can be far worse than the physical, but in extreme cases, the physical can be pretty bad, but then surrender is the answer here, so that all psychological suffering dissolves. I witnessed in the case of my mother, when her body was growing old, the body she had identified with all her life, up to the age of 80, as being quite fit, quite slim, always looking, oh, look, this is, look at that fat person there, she would say, and I said, how can you say that? And then she looked in the mirror and said, oh, I'm still so slim, but look so good, and then her physical appearance, being identified with that, and then as she was growing older, the body suddenly failing.

She had a fall, her hip couldn't walk properly anymore, had to use the thing that you push, push, what, push, walker, walk, whatever, and there was discomfort, not extreme pain, but some discomfort, some pain, but not extreme. The extreme pain was the psychological pain. Why did that happen to me?

Other people, look, they're all looking at me now, dread, I'm not going out anymore. It's dreadful what's happened to, why did this have to happen to me? I tried to explain it's old age, the body is beginning to go, but we look at other people, they don't, if you had really looked at the suffering of humanity, you would see that you're quite lucky that you have to reach the age of 80 with an excellent body and only then it's beginning to fail.

There were brief insight, brief realizations when I was sat with her, but then immediately the old mind came back, unfortunately. So I'm sure she will have an opportunity to reincarnate and given another chance to experience her sensual, to know her sensual reality. So many nice questions.

Given all the responsibilities in today's world of raising children, would young married hybrids not be more trapped in the world of form focused on setting goals and planning future activities while a retired individual like myself can easily be more present? Well, there's perhaps some truth. It's more challenging perhaps to be present in the midst of continuous activity in daily life, but that's a good thing.

The challenge is a good thing. Old age is a wonderful opportunity, of course, for spiritual realization. And again, like death also, old age should be, could be the flowering of life for any human being.

If they reach old age, well, somebody once said, old age isn't so bad if you consider the alternative. You reach old age and it's a time of letting go of that which is false, of consciousness, flowering of consciousness, experiencing, knowing, realizing the essence of who you are as the body begins to dissolve almost. And again, many old, nobody can teach that yet.

It's very few people. There will be old age places where people can grow old rather than waiting for death, spiritual centers where old people go and where spiritual realization in old age is encouraged and helped along. Then it's the, so you are, I'm very happy that you are flowering now in old age and it's a beautiful opportunity for the younger people who are still immersed in all kinds of activities.

The talent of being present may be greater, but it's equally important to bring being into the doing. And we've been talking about this a lot, but perhaps I haven't put it quite like that. While you do not lose yourself in the activity, don't treat all these activities as means to an end.

Be present in whatever you do. Don't project forward continuously. The beautiful teaching in the Bhagavad Gita, the ancient Indian scripture, one of the main spiritual practices recommended in the ancient Bhagavad Gita is translated into English.

The term is karma yoga, but it's translated in one of the beautiful translations as consecrated actions. So every action, it says you consecrate to God. You're not doing it for yourself.

It's a consecration. So every act is that. So that is also another word where you could translate it as surrendered action.

And you don't look to the fruit of your action, it teaches. Don't look always to the outcome, always the next moment, but treat every action as self-contained, that you're driving the children to school. Why project yourself mentally of having arrived already at the school?

And once you do that, you have another projection. Or getting the children ready to go to school. Is it possible?

I'm not telling you it is possible because I haven't had children, but you have to find out, but I know it's possible in many other ways. You have to find out whether it is possible to get the children ready without stress and without necessarily even slowing down. You can still be fast.

Can you enjoy the movement? Can you enjoy the energy behind what you do in the moment? Rather than getting stressed, thinking we should already be there, but we are here, we shouldn't be here.

So that's incredible to experiment with that. You may not succeed all the time, but experiment with moving fast without stress because the stress is not generated by moving fast. The stress is generated by doing one thing here, but mentally already wanting to be there.

That causes a tension between the doing and where you want to be at the end of the doing or whatever it is. You want to be, that is where stress arises. Stress does not come from working fast.

You have to add something to the working fast that projects you away from the present moment. You can hurry to get somewhere without stress. You should try it.

Next time you have to hurry to get somewhere, you're late. See if you can move fast or whatever you do without stress. It is possible.

And once you do that, you actually enjoy the high energy of that moment. Oh, wow, it's great. I'm alive.

Trying to catch a bus. And don't be attached to the outcome or as the Bhagavad Gita says, to the fruit of your action. In the case of the catching the bus means, ultimately, whether you catch it or not, isn't that important?

And if you don't catch it, you surrender there. So you introduce another level into your daily activities. There's not only what you need to do on the level of your daily activities.

There's another level introduced into your daily activities. That means your daily activities become a spiritual practice and you are almost more interested in that than in what you're doing. So the two come together.

That means being flows into doing. Otherwise, you can only either lose yourself in the doing, which includes thinking. Thinking is a doing.

You lose yourself in thinking and then you lose yourself in your activities, always reaching out to the next thing. Or you can be in being, but then you have two separate compartments in your life. You're quite good at meditating.

Dad, can you help me with this? Can't you see I'm meditating? That means the being hasn't merged with the doing.

Leave me alone. I'm not meditating. I'm meditating.

I'm practicing loving kindness, metta. So daily life as a spiritual practice, every challenge, everything. How do you meet the challenge?

How do you do what you do? Being and doing merging. Ah, it's been a life-changing journey.

Now I'm lost. My so-called life is in crumbles and I can't seem to put the pieces back together. Your life is not, has not crumbled.

Maybe your life situation, I don't know the details of a life situation, but your life is now and it's fine. What's wrong with this moment, with your life now, the life that you are? The rest is a mental construct.

Yes, there are situations that you may need to deal with in your external circumstances. These are your life situation. But if you lose yourself in your life situation, and this happens to the majority of humans, then you miss the most essential thing there is, and that is your life, which is now.

It has no problem now. There is no problem in the now, ever. So the more you dwell in the problem-less, the problem-less now, the more, I would say, empowered you also become by life itself, which can guide you and help you into dealing with the life situation.

Then you look, you become still. You look, you're sitting on a bench. I'm giving an example because I'm familiar with that.

You're sitting on a bench, not much, just a little bit of money left in your pocket. Can you feel the life that you are? Is there a problem at this moment?

No, of course not. This moment is beautiful. I can sense the aliveness in the depths of my being, and from there, I perceive the world around me, the trees, the sky, I can feel the wind, every little detail, it's lovely, it's beautiful.

There is no problem here in this moment. And then the mind, of course, says, okay, what are you going to, where are you going to spend the night? What are you going to live on tomorrow?

And you become still, and see if there's any action you can take. And then you may find yourself getting up from the bench and going somewhere, or calling somebody, or you may suddenly see something that points you to where, what's the next step in your life? Or somebody may come to you and offer help.

This often happened to me when I was sitting around, sometimes not knowing where to go, what to do. Very often, help came from the outside, and sometimes it was a combination of initiating something, and then the universe helping you along. So you take one step at a time.

The important thing is to be rooted in life so that you don't lose yourself in your life situation. From once you're rooted in life, then you deal with things one thing at a time. You do what you can.

So the idea that your life has crumbled is just a mental construct. Your life is fine. We're calling it your life, of course it's not yours.

It's the life that you are. The rest is things you do, the situations you deal with. If you exist exclusively in the mental construct, we talked about that probably yesterday, then you think in terms of, oh, what's my life, where has it gone to?

What's, that you live in that mental construct that you call my life, and it's not a pleasant place. Cada vez que intento meditar y estar presente, me invade gran sensación de cansancio y sueño. Quisiera saber su opinión al respecto.

That happens to some people. I would highly recommend, if that's the case with you, that as soon as you become still, you go, because you fall below thinking, that's what it is. You become still, and then you go, hmm.

Instead of rising above thinking and actually being more alert, you go, thinking, above thinking, below thinking. I would highly recommend a physical, associating the state of presence with some physical practice, such as yoga, tai chi, qigong. If you fall asleep while doing tai chi, it's not pleasant.

So to be on, to stand on that one leg and go like that, as seen in the movies, you have to be really present. And then perhaps gradually, a time may come then, where you can also sit still and be present. So that is a great help for many people, presence in movement through movement.

One or two more. Okay. How do you deal with being in the now all day?

You get hungry after all the shops are closed. In Denmark, they close and you didn't shop because you weren't hungry before. This person says, in Denmark, the shops close early, so you can't go out late at night and buy things.

The person apparently is from Denmark. Welcome. So you're in the now all day.

And of course, the questioner says, because you're in the now, you're not going to do any shopping, are you? Of course, that's a false assumption. And then suddenly you get hungry, and then the shops are closed.

[Speaker 4] (7:11:28 - 7:11:30)

Ha ha ha.

[Speaker 1] (7:11:39 - 7:18:56)

Clock time and psychological time. We're talking about the psychological time, not about disregarding clock time and disregarding the practical aspects of your daily life, where you say, where you look in the fridge and you know that tomorrow morning, you're going to need your muesli and whatever else you have and some fruit, and the fridge is empty, and you say, right, I need to buy muesli and fruit for tomorrow morning. Does that mean you have left the present moment?

No. You have left the present moment when you sit there and think, isn't it going, my life going to be wonderful when I get that muesli again tomorrow morning? Or I wonder if they have muesli in that hotel I'm going to tomorrow, and then you give them mental movies about muesli in the morning.

But there's no, you don't leave the now when you say, all right, tomorrow morning, I need this. Therefore, I'm going to the shop now. And while you look in the fridge, you're present.

And while you write down on a piece of paper, muesli, bananas, nuts, you're present. And while you put the piece of paper in your pocket and open the door and walk towards the shop, you're present. And while you buy the muesli, you're present.

So you don't lose the now, you don't have to wait until you get hungry to do your shopping. So you don't lose the ability to deal with your life situation and what is needed. You can't say, I'm never going to book a flight again because I'm lose the present moment.

And I'm only going to book it the moment I want to go and say, is there a seat left? That's not how it works. You can plan for the future.

It has nothing to do with losing yourself in the future. And even while you plan the future, you can be present in the planning. You can draw up a plan if you know how to.

I'm going to build a house. Yeah, why not? And this is how it's going to look like.

Are you losing the present moment? No, you'll go, shh, shh, shh. And then I visualize it like that.

And that's how it's going to be, completely present. But you'll lose yourself when you dream about that new house and how wonderful it's going to be when you finally move in, you will finally be at peace and finally people will come and visit you and admire your wonderful new place. That's losing yourself in the future.

Or you worry about the house. Well, is it all going to work? Or think about all the things that we'll have to do and useless thinking, not purposeful, just useless daydreaming.

Space of the present. And, ah, so what you take with you from here, to put it in external terms, is this. This is, you take with you the space, which is what you are, who you are in your essence.

The rest is form, of course it dissolves. It's fine. So this is not the end of the retreat because the retreat is finding the essence, realizing the essence of who you are.

That's the essence of the retreat. And so that's the retreat. Whatever you see here is the surface of it.

Some people, if you confuse the surface and essence and you feel, oh, what a pity. Or in the case of the man who is not happy with the, there may be a few others, not happy with the tourist hotel and the trapped birds and the junk food, they can happily look forward to their usual place of residence. But I suggest the alternative possibility.

This is your last chance of surrendering to this place here. So if you haven't done it yet, this is your last chance of saying this is how it is and be comfortable with the isness of this place because while you're here, because you happen to be here at this moment, you're not going to change the hired hotel. So in some situations you can take action to initiate change in a situation, but you would fight a useless battle if you try to change things here, it would be pointless.

It is not necessary. So use the last hour or two that you have here. And if you haven't surrendered yet, walk through where all the tourists are sunbathing in a state of surrender.

There's nothing wrong with it, it's what is. Thank you. I may see some of you a little later.

I wish you well, be at peace, rooted in essence, surrendered to what is. As the Beatles song says, it's easy. Thank you.

2012 June Eckhart Tolle Omega Retreat New York State part 1 of 2

[Speaker 1] (0:11 - 1:20:44)

So we're here for a few days. You have arrived here with a little bit of luggage, probably not a lot because it's summertime, light luggage. But of course then there's another kind of metaphorical baggage of a different kind that you cannot let go of so easily and that's the mental baggage that every human carries around as their conditioning, conditioned mind patterns.

And wherever you go, of course, that goes with you and colors the way in which you experience your reality. And so many people find that wherever they go and whoever they meet, they tend to recreate similar life experiences. And that's because the way in which you experience life is largely determined by the conditioning of your mind.

But we are not here to improve your conditioning, to make it better so that you can function better in this world. There's nothing wrong with doing that, but this is not what this is about. This is about discovering, or for many of you, it's not discovering, it's already deepening or accelerating something that's already happening in you, discovering a dimension in you that is deeper than the conditioned mind.

And that is the core of all spiritual teachings, no matter what words they use to point to it. And that is also the core of the essence of all religion, although most religions have become burdened with all kinds of other baggage, cultural baggage, collective cultural baggage, so often you cannot perceive the essence anymore. But the essence of all that is that liberation from the conditioning of your mind.

It doesn't mean that those things, all the things that have accumulated in your mind, it does not mean that you erase your mind completely. We are not, don't need to do that, but discover something within you that is deeper and not conditioned. Whatever we want to call that dimension, it is there, all the ancient teachings and teachers point to it.

And many of you already are undergoing this process of becoming more and more rooted and established in that dimension. So you are here to deepen or to accelerate what we could call the awakening, because that's what it is. You awaken to something within you that is vaster than the personality that you think you are.

I'd like to give in our first session here, which may be a little shorter than the other sessions, but who knows? I'm not planning anything. Just a few hints and suggestions on how to use the totality of our situation here as part of this shift in consciousness, where you're no longer exclusively identified with the mind-made sense of self, that consists of continuous thinking, and it's all conditioned.

That's the baggage. So it's vital that don't just consider our sessions here as the teaching. Use the totality of the situation here, that every moment that you are here as part of the teaching and as part of your practice.

And I'll make a few suggestions in a second on how. So I mentioned the baggage that you cannot so easily let go of, that travels with you, that may come in the form of certain patterns, some very common patterns. I'll mention a few.

They may be familiar to some of you. Complaining or fault-finding, a very favorite pattern of the egoic mind, because when you complain something, who you feel yourself to be can get a little bit bigger and stronger. You put yourself in a position of superiority when you complain about another person or a situation, you immediately become superior towards that.

It's an unconscious pattern. I'm not saying do not tell people if something is wrong here in your room, and the water, the tap doesn't work, or something wrong with the mattress, and you cannot surrender to it. To point out to somebody that something needs to change, if they can do it, this is not complaining.

It's just telling people this is something, can you put that right? That's fine. Some things can be put right.

Other things, perhaps not. So please use every moment of being here to step out of the conditioned mind by, and here comes the spiritual practice, by using the present moment as a portal into a deeper state of consciousness, the unconditioned state of consciousness. So the present moment really is the device, so to speak, that you use, and the present moment has two dimensions to it, the surface dimension and the depth dimension.

First, let's talk, perhaps primarily right now, about beginning, touching the present moment, the surface dimension of the present moment, and you do that by noticing whatever there is around you in a state of alertness, alert to sense perceptions. If you become alert to sense perceptions, you are beginning to touch the surface of the present moment, and that means your attention moves into visual perception. You're truly looking at whatever it is that you are looking at, and you are truly listening to the sounds of the trees and the birds, whatever natural sounds or human sounds.

Your attention moves into perception, auditory perception. You're listening, you are looking, and behind the listening and the looking, perhaps you're also smelling the air. Perhaps you're touching things too, but the predominant senses are, of course, visual and auditory.

You are looking, and now the practice is, and don't say, don't believe your mind when it says you can't do that. You are looking without interpretation, and that's a practice. You look at the flowers, at the sky, the tree, the grass, the totality of the landscape, or if you go for walks, which is highly recommended in nature, there are trails, and even if you travel here with friends or family members, I recommend that from time to time you take a solitary walk.

Then you move about as an aware presence through which all that beauty around you is being perceived, a state of alert presence, and as I speak about that right now, I hope that these words, that are not just words, because the words come out of that state of alert presence, which is nobody's personal achievement. It's an evolutionary shift. I have not achieved alert presence.

The me that I thought I was isn't even there when the alert presence arises, so it's nobody's achievement. And this is the arising of a deeper essence in you when the awareness comes in which the conceptual mind that otherwise takes up most of your attention, so that most people are only peripherally aware of their surroundings, they still know where they're going, they have enough awareness of that, but beyond that, most of their attention, and that's unfortunately the normal state of humans, most of their attention is continuously being absorbed by thought processes, conceptualization, mental conceptualization.

With just enough attention left to their surroundings not to bump into furniture. And sometimes even not that. And this has become so normal for millions of humans, that state of complete absorption in the conceptualizing mind, so much so that your entire sense of who you are is derived from the conceptual mind, that certain ideas which are concepts of who you are, your history and so on, that you're thinking about and telling others about.

That's why when humans use the word I, usually they refer to that mind-made entity, one could say, that consists of conceptualization, it's a conceptualized sense of self. And that sense of self is never at ease, you might have noticed, in any situation. And very quickly finds something wrong with whatever situation that self finds itself in.

And it's, oh, very quickly something comes in, and if sometimes that subsides, and you go, ah, perhaps it just happens occasionally, that you simply suddenly become a present and aware, and suddenly there's a deep sense of peace and aliveness, and that perhaps lasts for a few minutes, and then the conceptualizing mind will look for a problem, there must be something wrong here, that I can think about, and that I can make into a problem, and then I feel, and then the conceptualizing mind feels it's in control again, because when you're peaceful, it's no longer in control, it's not running your life anymore. So we are burdened with this entity. It's almost a science fiction story, but I'm not going that way.

We can come up with all kinds of theories, and they exist if you look on the internet. Theories that at some point, something, those aliens did something to humans, and that's why we are in such a mess. That might even be true, I do not know.

What I do know, and what everybody can verify for themselves, is that the fact that we are in a mess is the case, look at human history, 20th century, if you think that there's nothing wrong with the human mind, read the history of the 20th century, as if you had never read it before, not as some familiar story, but as if you'd never read it before, let's say it's the history of another planet, and you read that, and then you read, no, this can't be true, what humans have killed in one century alone, not 100 million of their fellow humans, as it mentioned in the Power of Now, erroneously, but more closer to 180 million of their fellow humans. What?

This can't be right, it must be a misprint, it's inconceivable, in one century alone. So if you still doubt that there's a dysfunction embedded in the human mind, then you will definitely be convinced otherwise, if you read anything on 20th century history, or listen to the news tonight, or look at the lives of your relatives, a milder form of dysfunction, they perhaps don't go around with machine guns killing people, because we don't live in that time period, fortunately, unless they ascend to some country where these things are still happening right now, but most of them probably don't, but there's still a lot of really unnecessary conflict that humans generate continuously in their relationships. I call that excess baggage, when, because of their conditioned reactions, situations are blown up into drama, and we all know people who have a tendency of doing that, and some of you were there too at some point perhaps, not anymore of course.

But one needs to, the root of it is, lies in the collective mind, and you have access to the collective mind in your own mind, because there is ultimately no such thing as your own mind, your own mind is an aspect of the collective mind. So when we conceptualize reality, because our entire sense of self is derived from concepts, we lose the ability to sense the essential humanness of other humans, the essential, the essence in other humans, and we can, there's no empathy anymore, we cannot sense anymore the essential aliveness of the other. And when we have, because we have attached concepts to them, called them this or that, they have become conceptualized, of course first we have done it to ourselves, because our entire sense of self comes, whether it's a religious conceptualization, whether you call them the unbelievers and therefore they must be eliminated, or whether it's a political thing, it doesn't matter, the same pattern operates, loss of empathy, loss of the ability to have compassion towards other humans, because we live in a conceptualized reality, and then it can happen that violence towards other humans becomes so much easier, because you don't feel your essential oneness with them, you cannot feel their pain, because they are a concept in your mind. You have certain labels that you attach to them, and that's what they are to you.

But even all those humans who don't go around killing others, they also do it in a, not such an extreme form, but whenever you apply judgments to other humans and believe that your judgments are the essential reality of that, those humans, you are in some way inflicting the same thing on them. And it's a dreadful thing to do to them and to yourself. As somebody said, when you judge others, you are really judging yourself, you get trapped in that same, in that mindset.

And this is all part of the baggage that we carry, so we need to get out of that sense of self that is derived from thinking, ideas in the head about who we are, and who others are, and that's why we are here. So, to get out of that, there are a number of portals that you just need to know that they are available, a number of portals into the, an awakened state of consciousness where you are no longer controlled by the conditioning of your mind. For a while, it may still operate, but you are no longer trapped in it because something else has arisen in you.

And whatever you want to call it, I'm going to use several pointers because I'd like to give you a choice because some pointers work better for others, certain pointers work for certain people, and other pointers work for others better. So, we begin by using the portal of the present moment, and as our spiritual practice, especially here and now, in the next two or three days, our spiritual practice is to make the present moment the focal point of our attention. And that, in the first instance, means, as I said, noticing, paying attention to sense perceptions.

And already then, you will notice a shift happening inside you, you just, as your attention moves into sense perception, listening, hearing, there must be an alertness there, otherwise you can't even be aware of sense perceptions. That alertness replaces habitual thinking. And that's already, there's already a shift, the moment you pay attention to sense perceptions, without wanting anything, it's not a want, not that you want to pluck that flower because you want to take that flower home, or you, no, just noticing, a shift happens in your consciousness, and you may notice that shift, an alertness arises, and not only an alertness, an actual, there's a stillness that comes with that alertness. And at that moment, the mind-made sense of self subsides, and something else arises, and that is, whatever we want to call that, awareness, pure consciousness, stillness, an essence, a presence, an underlying presence that was always there, but you didn't know it, because it was continuously obscured by mostly unnecessary, futile thinking, so you couldn't sense your essential beingness, which is what that is, you could not sense your essential beingness because you were trapped in the surface layers of the mind. And as I'm talking now, I hope that when I say attention, the word attention, please, this is not some new thing to believe in, attention, okay, it's all about attention, I must, I have to ask some more questions about that, then it doesn't work, it's a pointer, so attention means, oh, and being aware of sense perceptions means this, and then you notice a miraculous thing, the sense perceptions, first of all you see aliveness and beauty around you which you hadn't seen before, even in an urban environment you will see aliveness and beauty, even the man-made things are alive in some way, they are all manifestations of the play of life, so even when you are in that aware presence, when you are not interpreting, you're just letting it be, of course the mind says, don't go there, you will lose control, this is not true, when you go there, a deeper intelligence begins to operate in your life, the conditioned mind loses control, that is true, but the unconditioned arises, but at first it seems to the human mind that you don't know anything anymore when you don't interpret all the time, and then you look at another human being without interpreting and you just look, and there's a beauty there, you don't need to call that human being anything, you don't need to judge, compartmentalise, no labelling, attaching some kind of label in order to feel secure, or immediately want something from them, or fear something, or compare yourself, is her or his body better than mine, I have to look more closely, I have to think about my body, or he looks more spiritual than me, must have been, or what's he doing here, he doesn't seem to be spiritual at all. But once you have decided on certain labels for certain people that you meet, whenever you meet that person again, the first thing that arises in your mind is those, the labels that you have already attached to them, so you're then no longer really interacting with another human, you're interacting with your mental labels, and vaguely behind that screen you still see there is another human but you can't really reach him or her, there's no true meeting anymore, there's only the conceptualised mind. So the beauty that comes with relinquishing the need, and this is our spiritual practice here, not just as we sit here, relinquishing the need to interpret, the need to label things, the need to call things something, and we can actually realise that we can be, you can be, the presence behind the sense perception.

And that alertness is a beautiful state, it is a very peaceful and alive state, a simple alert state of consciousness. And of course that's the essence of ancient teaching such as Zen is simply that, that's all there is to Zen, and people go to Zen monasteries and spend years there, can't figure it out. There was a Zen disciple in a monastery who had just spent a few years with a master and then he was going away to, back into normal, every Sunday, please give me something to remind me of the essential teaching of Zen, just please write down a few words for me to remind me.

Of course that already means he didn't get it in all those years. And so the master wrote, of course it was in Japan, so there's the symbol with the ink brush, there it is. And the disciple looks, oh, and it reads attention.

And the disciple says, okay, can you just write a little bit more please? And the master takes it back, the scroll or paper, and tries again, and the disciple reads, attention, attention. The disciple says, attention?

What does it mean, attention? I don't understand. And the master looks at him and says, attention means attention.

That's the end of the story, Zen stories are like that. You only understand them when you get the essence of Zen and then you understand the story. Attention means attention.

Ah, oh, okay, thank you, got it. And of course, some of you may be familiar with the story which I haven't told in a long time. There was the Zen master who, whenever he was asked to explain the meaning of Zen, and again, you can't really explain the meaning, the essence of Zen, you can't explain it.

You have to get it some other way. Whenever he was asked, he became famous because whenever they asked him about to explain Zen, his teaching consisted of a raised finger. And not only a raised finger, but of course, together with the raised finger came the entire energy field of attention.

That was the answer, that's the essence of Zen. So there wasn't just the raised finger, that was the outer reality, but behind the raised finger, there was the emanation of presence or attention. So what's the meaning of Zen?

And a few people got it, and many others didn't. And of course, those who didn't said, well, did you hear my question? So this is, to be able to do that, to discover in yourself that you are able to be the present behind the perception, is a beautiful thing.

And many of you already have discovered it, and if you are new to this, some of you, look at it as an experiment. You have nothing to lose. You are welcome, of course, and quite free to go back to your normal reality when you get home, but just spending these days here, or wherever you are at home, as an experiment in consciousness, why not?

You've lived in one particular consciousness all your life, and that wasn't that great. Why not try something else, and see what that feels like, and what that does. And so, it's particularly helpful if you are in nature, of course.

If you live in a city, when you become, this becomes more deeply established in you, it's easy to do in a city, too, to perceive in that way. But initially, it's easier to perceive in this way the natural things, because they do not stimulate thought as much as the man-made things do. Man-made things tend to stimulate thinking much more.

So, if you want to be present on Madison Avenue, where I walked along the other day, for ten blocks, just perceiving all that enormous flux of energy fields, humans, cars, car horns, and it was a wonderful experience. It was simply like floating along a sea, a stream of energy, and it's actually, it's a manifestation of life, of aliveness in that particular form. And walking along Madison Avenue for ten blocks with virtually no thought in my head, the most wonderful experience.

And then back on Park Avenue, the same way. But that's a somewhat more advanced practice. Because otherwise, if you go to Madison Avenue, immediately, you are drawn into the same nervous state that most humans are in.

But of course, it's energy. It's good. It can be transformed into awakening.

There's a shorter way, probably, from the nervous state of high intensity of energy, or the little bit mad, sometimes, or more than a little sometimes. Little bit mad, but probably easier to shift there into presence than sitting around a street corner all day long in a state of semi-sleep. As in some places that seem very relaxed, you go to some countries where it's hot and tropical or whatever.

People sit there. Everybody seems totally relaxed. And they say, oh, they must all be enlightened.

But probably they are, perhaps because of the heat, they are beginning to fall below thinking. They're not rising above thinking. So, easier than Madison Avenue is the trees.

Look at the trees and the sky and listen to the sound of the breeze and the leaves, this wonderful sound as I was walking here. Oh, there's a beauty in that. This is what poets hear and then they write about it.

This is the things that you can only notice when you are, when your attention is there. And there's no, there's no person there that imposes something on the sense perceptions. So, that is your, that is your practice.

And not only, now we come to the deeper level. When you notice sense perceptions, that I called them, you may remember I called those things the surface of the present moment. So, you're becoming, you're entering the present moment through the portal of the now.

And the now, first of all, is realized as and through sense perceptions. And then, you may also notice an essential presence that is you, without which there would be no sense perception. You notice, we, one could say your essential presence is not yours, by the way, we're just using those words temporarily.

You're sensing your essential presence not as the person, because you're not remembering your story at that moment, or your problems, because at that moment there is no problem, of course, it's only in the mind. Unless a dog runs towards you about to attack you, but that's not a problem, it's a talent and then you have to take action in the moment. You sense also the underlying, an underlying essence, or aliveness, or presence, or stillness, I'm giving you a choice of pointers, without which you wouldn't be able to perceive anything, there would be no perception.

So what it is that you sense, we could call that consciousness itself, before consciousness becomes a thought, the unconditioned consciousness, the spaciousness, the formless, the spirit, the divine spirit, the light of consciousness, Jesus called it the light, sometimes he used that expression, it's the, you are the light of the world, he said to his disciples, who were not VIPs, but simple fishermen, so he wasn't telling them that they were very special as personalities, but he said, you are the light of the world, and he's, and this is not something to believe in, or to then go to the church and repeat, you, I am the, you are the light of the world, no, it's a pointer, that is, it's meant to you, to take you to that realization, that, what does it mean light of the world, without the light there's nothing, you wouldn't see anything. So it's not that which you perceive is lovely, but that which makes the perception possible, there's an Upanishad that actually talks about that, the ancient scripture of India, not that which you perceive, but that which makes perception possible, know that to be the eternal, and not what people here adore, not your thoughts, but that which makes thinking possible, know that to be the eternal, and not what people here adore, and so on.

What people here adore is the world of form, but that which underlies it is the formless essence, so there is an essence reality in you, and without that, you've really missed the purpose of your life in this particular incarnation, which is not that tragic on a universal level, because one incarnation is a brief consciousness moving into this particular form, and then withdrawing from the form, the one consciousness moving into all these forms, withdrawing, so if you could see a speeded up version of your life, then of course you would see you grow, and then you shrink, and then you dissolve, and that was your life. But that's the form. Now that was an attempt of consciousness to enter this dimension, and it's a wonderful thing when it does happen, and that's the purpose beyond whatever, you have a purpose of course on a personal level, also whatever life gives you to do on a personal level is fine, that needs to be honoured also, you have a function as a parent perhaps, so you have a job to do, you have a creative endeavour, you're creating something, all these are wonderful things, they need to be honoured, and also given attention to, but in themselves they are not really enough to bring you to a sense of fulfilment and true inner peace and aliveness, and knowing yourself as something far deeper than the personality, the person.

So it all then begins with sense perceptions, this is the surface of the present moment, and then the deeper dimension of the present moment is presence itself, which you sense as that which underlies sense perceptions. Let's do it right now, if you're not there already. Your entire life, of course, if you bring it down to essentials, your entire life consists of sense perceptions, thoughts and feelings, that's about it, isn't it?

So sense perception means whatever happens around you, you register it through your senses, of course, so all the events in your life and the people you relate to, you register, you know all these things through your senses, which then transmit signals to the brain, which decodes the signals, it's a miraculous process, and suddenly a world arises. So sense perceptions, thoughts, emotions become your life. Right now that means there is this room, the totality of this room, and your visual perception of this room, and the sounds that you hear, and your awareness of, you can touch your body, or you can touch the chair you're sitting on, or you can touch your hand and you can feel that, it's also sense perception.

You can breathe in, it's also sense perception, you feel the air moving in, and you may have certain emotions right now, certain feelings, perhaps it feels good, perhaps not so good, but it's there, and certain thoughts, if you still have thoughts, that occasionally come into your head and they arise, they say something about this, where we are, where you are, there may be expectations that have not been met, because you haven't achieved enlightenment yet in the first 30 minutes, thoughts arise, and they go, and another thought comes and goes, those are all part of that which makes up your life, and it all very quickly fades and becomes something else, like a dream. Is there anything that we missed? Thoughts, sense perceptions, feelings.

How is it possible for thoughts, sense perceptions, feelings to be? Oh, there is someone there who has these thoughts, sense perceptions, and feelings, and that someone is not the person that you think you are, because the person consists of thoughts, sense perceptions, and feelings, so there is something deeper in which those arise, and that is the underlying presence. Now at this moment, can you feel yourself as that underlying presence that is deeper than thinking?

And it may be helpful, you may find that you can feel the entire, you can feel that presence in your entire energy field, the body, not the external body, but an inherent sense of aliveness that pervades the entire body, right now. Don't believe your mind when it says, oh, I can't feel that, you can, you can feel the aliveness in your hands, your arms, your feet, there is a global sense of presence, it's not just a head presence, your entire being becomes present in that, and that's a beautiful state of peace and stillness and intense aliveness, and that is the, becomes the basis for the sense of who you are, not the story in your head, not the conceptualized sense of self, but something more vital and more real, infinitely more real than the conceptualization in the head, and then the conceptualized self is fine, it goes about, it will still do things, you think things, you go about your life, talking about things, meeting people, there's nothing wrong with that, I'm not saying you get rid of it, no, but you transcend it, it still operates, actually in a less dysfunctional way, when you know who you are beyond any idea in your head, because otherwise who you are is an accumulation of ideas in your head about who you are, reinforced by other people's ideas about who you are, so it's a, this is how looking at a tree can bring you to self-realization, looking at a tree, which is beautiful in itself, in itself it's lovely, even if you don't go any deeper, it's lovely to truly perceive the aliveness and beauty all around you, which many humans miss all the time because they're too absorbed in the head, the problem making faculty in the head, so we are here then to discover or deepen that dimension in ourselves, and it begins with simple things like noticing the noises around you, the flowers, the birds, the sky, and then noticing that there's an alertness there, and a still alert presence, and in that your past becomes irrelevant in that alert presence, also whether you are young or old becomes irrelevant, it has nothing to do with that alert still presence, whether your body is, looks good or not good becomes irrelevant, whether your success or failure in the eyes of the world or in your own eyes becomes irrelevant also, whether everything you've done in your life has been a mistake becomes irrelevant and not only that, you actually realize it wasn't a mistake, because it has brought me to this point of realization, if I hadn't made all the mistakes and made me unhappy, I wouldn't realize, I haven't realized it, I would still be immersed in the illusory reality, so that's the, my life was like that, one mistake after another and nothing really worked on the external level, because I was more concerned with being the presence, so I didn't pay that much attention to, until I started writing a book, and my relatives and particularly my mother thought I had wasted my whole life, never achieved anything, had to reach the age of 50 without achieving, almost 50 without achieving anything, and then finally, ah, a book, he wrote a book, oh that's great.

Now finally he is somebody. Now strongly linked to the attention in which you let go of labeling or if mental labeling of things happen, you just don't follow it, if a thought comes about what you are perceiving, see it's only a thought that arises and don't follow it where it wants to take you, just let it go again, and another thought may arise or they may not even arise. So you are beginning then to experience the most amazing transformation possible for humans, an evolutionary leap, one could almost say, by realizing that you are able to relate to external reality, not always having to relate to external reality through concepts, but you can also relate to external reality through awareness, and you have a choice.

When you look at another human, you can be the awareness or the presence and become still and alert and look at them and then you are truly meeting them, or you can be the person and label that other person and have certain interpretations about them and believe in them completely and then think that that is who they are. Simple people do things like somebody lies to you and then you say to your friend, he is a liar, and then you call up another friend, you know what he did, he lied to me, he is a liar. What you have done, he may have lied to you, but now you have made him into a liar and this is a big label that you stick on his head and next time you meet him, that label already obscures who that person is because you are meeting the liar.

And whenever you talk about him, you talk about him as this is a conceptualized reality. Now it's even possible that he lies continuously to everybody. It's possible some humans are like that, so you might say, well, I'm not quite, this isn't completely wrong because he lies all the time, so he is a liar.

But you are still, the fact that he lies a lot may be a true fact, but if then you create a conceptualized reality for him and call him a liar, that is where you make it impossible for you to relate to him and also in some way you prevent him from going beyond that behavior pattern because you impose it on him by your judgment. So what you now expect him to do and everybody else believes it, they all expect him to lie and he does. Humans are connected in their interactions and if you are not fully conscious, your expectations to a large extent determine people's behavior towards you and the expectations are governed by the conceptualizing mind.

And that's why there's this story that you may have heard, there's a man sitting in a small town in a cafe, an old man, and a man approaches him and says, oh, are you a native here? You live here? Yes, and the man says, I'm thinking of moving here, do you think it's a good place to live?

And what are the people like here? And the old man says, well, what were the people like where you used to live? And the man says, well, oh, they were dreadful, they were dishonest, deceitful, full of envy and malice, I just can't stand that place anymore, I have to get out.

Okay, then the old man says, it's very much the same here. And the next day, the old man sits again in the cafe and somebody else turns up, by coincidence, and says, my wife and I are thinking of moving here because we like this town, what are the people like? And the man says, well, what were the people like where you come from?

And he says, oh, they're great, they're helpful, kind, couldn't be nicer people. And the old man says, it's very much the same here. And of course, the old man is right.

You create according to your conditioning, your conditioning to a large extent determines the way in which you experience other people and reality. And when you go beyond your conditioning, you reach a place where you give the greatest gift to other humans that you can give, and that is the gift of your pure attention. When you look at somebody and you give them attention, there's an outflow of energy towards them.

Just look, and attention means, pure attention is you're not labeling anymore, it's not, you're just looking, perceiving, and there's an outflow, perhaps they are talking to you, there's an outflow. Attention is energy, or you give attention to a child. Many parents can't do that because they're continuously saying to the child, do this, don't do that, now we must do that, get ready for this.

There's always something, there's never pure attention really. There's always something to sort out and to make better. Of course, those things have their place.

Brush your teeth, of course they need to brush their teeth, but if that's the only reality of do this, do that, come to, there's never that spaciousness which is attention, giving it to the other. And the child can feel that, if you give a child, you just look at the child and you listen to the child, or look. It's a beautiful thing, there's a flow, and then something comes back to you from the other, because ultimately attention is a form, we can almost say a form of love, in a deeper sense.

There's a giving, an outflow. Of course it's not your personal, it's not something of your personal belonging that you give, attention comes through you, it doesn't come from you, it comes through you from the Divine, the One Consciousness, and you become an opening for that. And then the way in which you experience reality changes dramatically, a wonderful shift happens, situations are no longer, life in general is no longer perceived as hostile, it becomes helpful.

And again, when you look at a tree, or you listen to the sounds, that's the outflow of attention, and attention of course is just a word, it's a mysterious, ultimately unnameable energy that is, goes, it has no form. And you can become an opening for that, and then it begins to live through you, that essence, and express itself through you, in what form it expresses itself varies from person to person. But it begins to, it could just be that you become more, you stay where you are, become more kind, and loving, and not because you're thinking, I need to be kind and loving, that doesn't work, you can try very hard, love your neighbor as yourself, okay, I'll try.

Except that guy, and that one, when you feel that you are, something is living through you, without being obstructed anymore, it was living through you before also, but only a trickle. It's a little bit like, let's imagine you are a ripple on the surface of the ocean, and the ripple, for a moment, which is a lifetime for the ripple, forgets that it is part of the ocean, and it's only an expression, a brief expression of the totality in this particular form. And the ripple thinks, I'm a ripple, that's my life, that's my ripple life, my life, the ripple thinks that its life is its own, it doesn't know it is the ocean, and then of course the ripple becomes unhappy.

It doesn't realize that it is the ocean. But once the ripple realizes it is the ocean, and now we have to let go of this analogy, because then something happens to the ripple that would not happen to a normal ripple, that's why we let him go. It becomes a beautiful formation suddenly.

Oh, and now the ocean is expressing itself fully through that. So use every moment here, and when I say every moment, it's not entirely correct, there is no such thing as every moment, there is only this moment. Well, I've never met any other moment, I can't find any other, it's always been this moment, so in language one says every moment, or many moments, but ultimately there is no such thing, there is only the appearance of many moments, because there is always something different that arises, that changes all the time.

In the space of consciousness, things arise and subside, and arise and subside, thoughts, emotions, perceptions, experiences, come and go, and so when you only see the surface, then you think everything that arises, this is one moment that arises, and one moment that arises, and the next moment that, but of course it's not really like that, because it all arises in the present moment. Which is eternal. And the present moment, the deeper meaning of it, of course is that the present moment is consciousness itself.

That's what the real meaning of the power of now is, of what the now is, it's not what happens, the now in its deeper sense is not what happens, it's the space in which everything happens, and that space is eternal, in other words timeless, and that space is you, in your essence. Oh, but this is not of course something to believe in, but to sense that spaciousness in you as that which underlies all perceptions and all thinking. So the shift in consciousness or the evolutionary leap in consciousness is from being exclusively identified with form, the me, the thought forms of me, to being rooted in the dimension of the formless.

So this is why I sometimes say, although again, don't believe, don't take these words as absolutely true, they are only temporary pointers, one could almost say they are two halves to who you are. And most humans only know one half, which is the form, the physical form and the psychological form, the ideas they have about themselves, the stories and so on. The one half is your form identity, the other half, which most humans don't know themselves as, is the more essential, the essence identity that is formless, that you cannot know.

The other half you can know, but the formless essence identity, you cannot know it because it is the essence through which everything is known, this is why it is sometimes called the I, the eternal I am, the timeless eternal I am. And that's why Jesus said, you cannot, the kingdom of heaven, which is the dimension of the formless, which is, kingdom means dimension, my translation of kingdom is dimension, because we don't have many kingdoms anymore, so the language is old fashioned. The kingdom of heaven is, and heaven is, now in many languages, heaven, the word heaven is the same word as the word sky, in German, in French, in Spanish, heaven is and sky are the same word.

And for that reason, when Jesus used the kingdom of heaven, Christians for many centuries, they always looked, where is it? And a Russian astronaut said, when he came back from space, I went up into the heavens and I didn't find God there. So the word can be very misleading because it becomes a place where you look for God, but the kingdom of heaven is already God, the kingdom of heaven and God are the same thing, no thing.

And heaven is, now when you look up at the sky, of course, there is a vast expanse there, a vast spaciousness, whether it's the night sky or daytime sky, a vast spaciousness. So it's the dimension of vast spaciousness, this is my translation of the kingdom of heaven, the dimension of vast spaciousness that is not, as Jesus said, it's not out here, you can't say, oh, there it is, or no, it's over here, that's my translation again. But I tell you the kingdom of heaven is within you, it's the essential dimension of who you are beyond form.

And the moment your thinking mind ceases in between two thoughts, right now, in between two thoughts, what is left of you? A spaciousness that at first seems like nothing and then you sense it is a presence and it is essentially who I am. And to live in connectedness with that and ask that as the foundation for your life that is awakened living and that's why we are here.

And as you go to bed tonight, for a few minutes, lie on your back, on your bed, in the spaciousness of presence and feel that presence with your entire body. So that you may almost find that these cells begin to tingle with presence almost, it's an aliveness. And then you begin to see that aliveness is not confined to the body, you are surrounded by that presence also, so it is within and without.

And there is no thought in that, there is no thought, there is just being it. And from there, perhaps you can go to sleep and when you wake up in the morning before you do anything else or get out of bed, again lie on your back and feel yourself as presence. And then open your eyes and look around and as you look around the room, continue to feel the energy field of presence.

That makes it easy to look without labeling anything, just pure perception. This is a little bit like a child would perceive the world where conceptualization hasn't happened yet. But there is an added dimension when you do it because you have gone through conceptualization, there is a deeper knowing now.

But this is the reason why Jesus said, you must become as little children if you want to enter the kingdom of heaven. Little children are not burdened by conceptualization, by the conceptualizing mind. Now we are not going back to the child stage, we are transcending the human stage, the intermediate stage of dysfunctional humans.

And we are becoming, we could say, fully, completely human. So far we are only going towards it, have been going towards it. Unless you become like little children, you cannot enter the kingdom of heaven.

And then of course you can only understand that if you look at a one year old and look into their eyes and see, sense the consciousness that's there that has not yet been obscured by conceptualization. And it's beautiful, you go, ah, ah, because it opens something in you. When you see that, it triggers that opening in you where you can sense that in yourself.

When you go, ah, then really what happens is for a moment you join with that child in the non-conceptual state of consciousness. And of course it opens your heart in colloquial language. It opens your heart, this is what presence does, and you go, ah, and that's the beauty of it.

Even a dog can do that to you. You look into the eyes of a dog, and the tail, and you go, ah, so sweet, that sweetness of being coming through the eyes. Or a cat, and rubs itself against your legs, and you go, ah, and you can sense the being there.

And so those animals are more rooted in being still. Humans, of course, are still also in being, but they don't know it anymore. They've become externalized through the mind, and they can no longer sense their rootedness, their oneness with the one, so to speak.

So the animal, I say, the animal or anything natural has integrity that most humans don't have anymore, but they can regain it at an even deeper level. Integrity, of course, really means, translated, being one with who you are. Not being divided, split into two, and suddenly have an identity that you can be concerned about and talk about my life.

What's my, I have to think about my life now. And then you have a relationship with yourself. I hate myself, but I'm trying to love myself.

Of course, loving yourself is better than hating yourself, much better. But I would suggest there is a way beyond also loving yourself, and that is called being yourself. Because when you love yourself, there's still a duality there.

There's the self that you love, and maybe one day you don't love it. But if you are yourself, then you become an expression of love. You are one with the one, and then love, just true love flows through you.

So self-images humans have, they are problematic self-images. Hmm, me. No dog has a self-image.

No dog has a problem with self-esteem. Even the ugliest dog, in the eyes of humans, is simply in itself. It doesn't have a mental image of this is me, this is me.

But we are not regressing. We are transcending that intermediate stage of where we think we are our mind, whatever our mind tells us who we are. So, that's our essential practice.

And it's about the most, well, not about, it is the most vital and the most important thing in your so-called life. Although, of course, it's not your life at all. I'm just saying it.

It's just words. There's no such thing as your life, because you don't have it. It's not yours.

You are it. If you say you have a life, there's a duality there of you and life, which is absurd. There is no you, or let's say I, there is no I apart from life.

I can't say my life, really, although I sometimes use those words. It's colloquial language, semantics. But I, I don't, I cannot have a life.

You cannot have life. It's not your life. People think they are independent, little independent life entities with their own life.

It's, but, of course, it's not possible. You cannot have your own life. You can only be an expression of the one life moving through a temporary form.

It's obvious, isn't it, that when you say my life, or he lost his life, or I don't want to lose my life, it's all erroneous, it's created, a delusion created by conceptual, by language and concepts that you have a life. You can't, because that would imply that there is a life and then there's you. And you have it, but what are you without life?

There is no you without life. It's an absurd duality created by conceptualization. You are life.

I am life. You are, I am, temporary brief expressions in form of the one formless essence which goes into billions of life forms on this planet alone, let alone the rest of the galaxy and other galaxies. And it moves, it becomes form, it goes into forms, billions of, and it evolves in time on this dimension, or in the essential dimension, there is no time.

And it forms, come and go. And it's all one, it's all one. So, it's quite a relief, ultimately, that your life is not yours, you are an expression of the one.

Oh, so I don't really need to worry about my life, because I don't have a life. That's right, you don't, but of course, in the world of form, you still need to do things, you need to honor that, but coming from essence, the essence then flows into the doing. And that's what this is all about.

I will leave you now to your night time practice, and we are meeting again in the now, in what we call tomorrow, which of course doesn't really exist, and you will know that it doesn't exist tomorrow morning, because I'll ask you, is this tomorrow? Hello?

[Speaker 11] (1:20:49 - 1:20:51)

Thank you.

[Speaker 1] (1:21:36 - 3:33:45)

Welcome back. It's the now again. I thought we were going to meet tomorrow.

No. Also welcome to those of you who are not in this room, but elsewhere on the planet. Very pleasant here outside, pleasantly cool temperature, ideal for walking.

Hard to believe that according to the weather forecast, within 48 hours, the temperature is going to go up to around low 90s or 36 centigrade. We'll see if that's true. And that'll be good practice too.

As you sit here, a good way of being here, sitting here while you listen, or even just sit, is to have part of your attention in the inner sense of aliveness of your body, the inner sense of aliveness that pervades the body. Then the temptation, or the gravitational pull of the habitual mind, lessens, and it can become for you an anchor for staying present in the now. And that's an interesting thing.

Right now, what I'm talking about and recommending to you, I'm also, of course, feeling that very strongly, as I sit here, a very powerful sense of aliveness throughout the entire body. So some of your attention is there. There's still more than enough attention left for auditory perception, more than you need.

So you are present within, and present without. Now what is it that you sense within you? We don't really need to attach a name to it.

We can say, well, it's universal life energy. It's chi. It's the bridge between the world of form and this formless source of all life, halfway.

Whatever it is, it feels wonderful and good. To be present within, I'd like to get, when this afternoon we have our first question and answer session, some feedback from some of you to see how you're getting on with that practice. Then it becomes habitual, almost, that you are present in yourself while engaging in activities and even thinking.

You can still think and nevertheless feel that sense of aliveness within. Another wonderful benefit of that is you're not dependent on some external stimulus to make you feel alive. Because when you're not in touch with the inherent sense of aliveness, then you're up here in the upper story of the house, the loft.

You inhabit only the loft of a big building and you never venture down into the rest of the building. And up in the loft you go, OK, what can I do now? And if there's nothing, then what you can always do is think about your problems.

And if you have enough problems, as everybody does, then at least it gives you a sense of, I must still be alive because my life is full of problems. And not only that, that mind also then loves to create problems for others. And that is called drama.

Problems between two or more people is called drama. And in relationships it's often the case that couples feel there's something wrong with our relationship, we haven't had any drama in a whole week. Are we still having a relationship?

Another subtle thing on another level, it gives the egoic sense of self a sense of self-importance to have all these problems. My life is so important. I have far more problems than you.

Or as my dad used to say, whenever somebody said, I have a headache, he said, you have a headache? I've had a headache for weeks. So that puts the ego down of the other person.

Oh. And that of course is a pattern that operates in many people, not necessarily with headaches, but you have problems, let me tell you about mine. Oh.

Interesting pattern. So then of course other ways in which that self in the upper story, in the loft, seeks some kind of heightened sense of aliveness through whatever there is a grasping. What can I take in next to add to me, to give me more of a sense of fulfillment?

And so it used to be, it could be things like picking up magazines and you go. And no page is really satisfying, but maybe the next one is. Or make a totally pointless phone call.

Now that used to be like that, but nowadays of course we have, technology is much more advanced, so there are other things we can do that are even more stimulating and addictive. We can go on the internet, this vast world that suddenly opens up and go into all kinds of futile channels and oh, maybe there's more there. It used to be just changing the channels on a TV set, but we've long gone beyond that.

There's far more stimulus now for the mind that's seeking more and more stimulus. And it becomes addictive. Of course anybody who uses that thing knows through self-observation, I can feel it once I start looking at YouTube.

One thing leads to another. And another, and then there's related videos and others. Oh God.

And it's always that reaching out and I need to take in something more. Where can I get the next more? And if it's not that, then of course it's the search for some new stimulus through a new affair.

I'm looking for somebody to, so you go to a bar, well most of you don't perhaps have gone far beyond that stage. And then you look for that. It's just another search for the next thing to fulfill you.

And there's always, from the basis behind that, there's that sense, there's always that sense of unfulfillment. We could call that state not enough. Or we could call it something missing here.

And that unconscious assumption, belief of feeling something missing here, not enough, is prevalent. It's there in virtually everybody who has not gone beyond the egoic mind, who is still totally identified with the egoic mind. So underlying then your whole existence, without you knowing it, it's an unconscious underlying belief or assumption, this is not enough, I'm not enough, I can't get enough, something is missing.

You may, if you observe your own life, I'm just using those words, your life, as you know you don't have a life. We are just using words. If you observe your own life, you can, or you remember before you awakened spiritually, how it was, maybe it sometimes occasionally still is, that sense of something not right.

And it's always, of course, in the present moment that something is not right, because that's the only thing you ever have. So the permanent place where something is not right is the present moment. But the present moment happens to be the only thing there is.

That's a dreadful state to be in, of course. It's called normal. And then the civilization creates all kinds of things to perhaps obscure that feeling of not enough, to mask it, to satisfy it.

But of course it never is satisfied, because it's not to do about what is missing. It's a structure in the mind. It's not to do with content, because no matter what content you add, it's not going to be it.

There'll still be something missing. I talked to somebody who achieved enormous success in the world, became extremely wealthy, and then bought a huge mansion overlooking the Pacific Ocean. And at first it was very satisfying.

And then he realized he was beginning to spend most of his time in just two rooms out of the 35 rooms. And then he was feeling a bit lost, wandering through the other 33 rooms. Okay, is that it?

And then he had to invite people, a cocktail party. And that at first was fulfilling too, and then not another one. And it got too much too.

So maybe that huge house is not that fulfilling either. There's still something missing. And there always will be.

Because the answer is not on the level of content. Nothing that you can add to yourself is going to free you of that feeling of not enough. I am not enough.

This moment is not enough. Or another perspective on this is to say another aspect of it is there's something wrong here. That's another aspect of that feeling.

And so imagine millions of humans walking around the world with a continuous underlying sense of there's something wrong here. And of course they create a whole civilization in which there is something wrong. Because if you create out of your state of consciousness, so then awakening is the realization that the answer is not out there at all.

And some people only get there when they have all the things that they thought would be fulfilling and then realize there's still something missing, something vital missing. And so we reach the simplicity of directing our attention away from the mind and its restless movements and feel the inherent aliveness in the inner energy field. And from there we can begin to, as I pointed out yesterday, look around and actually enter the present moment with our attention without feeling that there is something missing in it.

That's an enormous advance when you can consciously inhabit the present moment without feeling this isn't enough. I'm not meant to be here. Why am I here?

I don't want to be where I am. I don't want to be with the people that I'm with. I don't want to be doing what I'm doing.

I want to be somewhere, anywhere but here. And that is a great liberation. And you notice immediately a shift in your entire inner energy field as you feel the inherent sense of aliveness and then from there you perceive whatever is around you.

You look, you listen and you realize it's actually quite beautiful, this moment. You acknowledge it. You acknowledge the aliveness of it.

In everything, in every other human, that before humans were... What are they doing here? Or as Jean-Paul Sartre said, hell is other people.

Les autres, the others, that was the literal translation. Hell is the others. And that's again part of not feeling totally alienated from life because you are totally alienated from the present moment which is where life is.

So for the first time then suddenly actually you discover subtleties about the present moment and your surroundings that were always there but you didn't know it. You discover how satisfying it is to watch a leaf quivering on a tree, quivering in the slight breeze and you see things that before were just unimportant because you had other things on your mind. I've got other things on my mind.

I haven't got time to look at the leaves. And you see suddenly... And there's a subtle sound when hundreds of leaves on the tree go like this.

Oh, the world is alive. And it's almost as if as you come to life you can feel that not only your body is pervaded by this field of aliveness it's also externally the entire world around you is pervaded by a presence. And you can most clearly feel that when you're out in nature.

And when you're very advanced in your present moment ability to inhabit the present moment fully you can even sense it in the city. But let's wait with that. Let's put that aside for a moment.

So in nature, in other words, you discover something that for many humans makes no sense at all that we could call sacredness. There is a dimension there that you acknowledge. There is a presence there that is not separate from your own presence but it is...

All the things you see or hear are an expression of that aliveness that which inhabits the forms. And so... Oh, suddenly the mind has stopped.

Oh no, it wasn't the mind, it was the air conditioning. And we never even knew that that noise was there until it stopped. So many humans, they live with this...

The mind never stops. They don't even know that they have this voice in their head that never stops talking until something happens and suddenly they go... Oh!

Oh, and suddenly they really look at something or someone and they're fully there. And suddenly they go, Oh, this is how pleasant life can actually be. And nothing has changed externally.

So that's... The present moment practice then brings about a shift in consciousness. And you notice the sacredness that otherwise is just a concept.

Sacred? What do you mean by sacred, says the mind. Sacred?

What is that sacred? Can you define it? And of course, no matter how you define it, that still is not it.

It's like writing a PhD about honey and never having tasted it. So I'm sure there are learned PhDs about sacredness, holiness, the holy. But whether the author actually has tasted it, I don't know.

And it's so immediate that I usually avoid language that is too religious because most religious terms have been used for so many centuries and misused and misunderstood that they are burdened with all these misunderstandings and distortions. But I'll just say it. There's a sense of a sacred presence that is both within and without.

You can only get that when the mind becomes still and an alertness arises instead of the mental noise. The alertness takes the place of the mental noise. And then you feel something that is beyond concepts or words.

There is a presence there, both within and without, of which you are an inseparable part, not an otherness. A presence of which you are an inseparable part, and yet a presence that is vast. And to feel your connectedness with that, and connectedness, again, is not even the right word because it's your oneness with it, that liberates you from the sense of not enough or something missing.

Because when you sense the presence, which I sometimes call your own presence, but of course it's not your own, there's nothing that's your own. When you sense the presence, that frees you from the habitual dissatisfaction of the mind, the mental, the mind-made sense of self. And you become also, of course it frees you from the egoic self, and you become simple and present.

And something arises that is sometimes called, or an acknowledgement of that sacred presence, that you find both in the forms that you see, but also formless, a formless presence, but it shines also through the life forms that you see all around you. And the acknowledgement of that, one could call that, because you may have heard, you may practice, have practiced, be practicing in your life, the very important thing called gratitude. And that is really, in a deeper or wider sense, the acknowledgement of that, the sacredness of the present moment, is an act of gratitude also.

And even if you're a Buddhist who says, well a Buddhist asked me, well gratitude, I don't believe in a god, some entity there, Buddhists don't, but so who am I grateful to if I have gratitude, if I don't believe in a god? Who am I grateful to? You don't need to be grateful to, gratefulness can be a state of consciousness that does not require an object that says, I'm grateful to you, that is just appreciation of the beauty and sacredness of life.

And that is really great, that appreciation, that acknowledgement, is really gratefulness also. So you don't need to say, I'm grateful to you. Of course, and if you do believe in god, the important thing is that the belief becomes an actual realization that ultimately, there is a place where you and god merge.

And you are not separate from the one. You're an aspect of the one. And even as we talk now, I can still feel the aliveness in the inner energy field.

When you're walking in nature, here or wherever, walking is a very helpful thing because you can only take one step at a time. So you can have some of your attention on the step you're taking at this moment, still capable of reaching your destination. When you pay attention to the step you're taking at this moment doesn't mean you lose your ability to reach your destination because you forget where you're going, because there's only one step.

It means the focus of your attention is on the step you're taking now. You may not be able to feel the inner body so much when you're moving, but your attention can be on the movement. So you feel there can be, again, a sacredness.

Now let's change the term. Equality. When a movement that your body performs is imbued with consciousness, with presence, when you are present in the movement, there is a sense of, for lack of a better word, or maybe it is a good word, quality in the movement that you perform.

And this you can only observe in yourself when the mind is somewhere else. You need to reach the next moment, which is so more important than this one, and the mind is trying to get there. And in the meantime you are moving, or performing some kind of work that you need to get to.

Lack of quality. Now, if you compare that with movement that are imbued with presence, then the walking, and not even necessarily much slower than before, you can even walk faster, and there can still be presence, but there's a presence in every step, in every movement. You can pack your suitcase, let's say you're running late, and you have to go to the airport, and you're not fully packed yet, usually that would be a very stressful thing, because your mind says, I need to be at the airport already, but I'm still packing here, and all kinds of stress arises, the mental projection of future, and you don't really want to be here, you want to be there.

And if anything like that happens, you can actually practice, you can still, can I be present even now, even in that situation, with every movement, rather than projecting myself mentally, and then your attention is on, and you're actually beginning to enjoy the high energy of that, you're moving actually fast, but without the mental projection away from the present moment. That means you're still moving without stress, at the same speed as you would be moving under enormous stress. So you do not become less effective, or so slow that you'll immediately be fired from your job, or you can't reach, you don't get anywhere anymore in time, you're so present that you never look at your watch again, and you miss every appointment, it's not like that.

I'm usually on time, I love to be on time, and I wear a watch, people say, you wear a watch? I thought, there's nothing wrong with the practical aspect of time, it makes life easier, we're talking about the psychological time. So, there it comes, and then you close the suitcase, and then you run to the car or the taxi, and still present, enjoy the high energy of that moment, and whether or not you catch the plane is not that important anymore.

If you miss it, at least you feel alive. So, you miss the plane, and you sit somewhere else, instead of sitting on the plane, you sit in the airport seat. You always either sit, stand or walk somewhere, does it really matter where?

It's only the mind that tells you, I should be somewhere else. So, that comes then, we go from sensing the sacred presence, within and without, to gratitude, to not projecting yourself away from the present moment into the future, and nevertheless, be capable of performing, and performing more beautifully, whatever it is that you're performing, any action that you take, a sense of quality, comes into your life. And sometimes you can sense the quality in an object that has been made by a human in that state of consciousness of attention, where it wasn't rushed, it wasn't machine made on the conveyor, there was a human being who paid attention to the making of this object, there was presence, and sometimes an object can be imbued with a sense of quality that humans can feel because of the way, of the energy that went into the making of it. But more important than, of course, than anything you make is that energy field itself. So that quality of life is related very strongly to your state of consciousness, not so much to the external things of your life.

And so, you may remember, I believe I mentioned in the Power of Now, every human has a life situation and also there's a life situation and there's life. And we are here to go deeply into, to discover, to go deeply into the life that you are so that, this is another aspect of this vital realization so that the life that you are, the consciousness that you are is not continuously obscured by your life situation. There needs to be a balance in your life, your life, not to be taken too literally, there needs to be a balance in your life between your life situation and your ability to be present as life.

Now, life situation, everybody has one. Life situation, I have a life situation, you have a life situation. What is it?

What are the ingredients of a life situation? The ingredients of a life situation are where you live, your home circumstances, your work situation, your financial situation, your health situation, your relationships, the general, the work that you do, I mentioned that already, the sense of purpose in what you do. So, basically then, health, finances, relationships, home situation, your life situation.

And, for many people, of course, life situation is something problematic. It's, is it working for me? And it's very rare that it actually works totally smoothly for too long.

There's always things that creep in there that, where there was, there's order for a moment and everything is fine in my life situation. There are probably not that many humans who can say that everything is perfectly fine in my life situation. It's not, it's not the nature of life situations to be totally, totally harmonious.

You can try, it's good to try to, of course, it's likely to become more harmonious as you become present. Nevertheless, most humans are then burdened. There is, all they ever, your entire, your life situation absorbs your entire attention.

And this is the case for many humans. Their finances, their relationships, their health, whatever may be the main thing at this time. And often it happens, your finances improve and then there's something goes wrong with your health.

Your health improves and then relationship breaks down. Somebody has a great success your, your, your son, your daughter has had a great success but the other one, dreadful failure. They see ups and downs.

And so, most people believe they need to continuously dwell on those, on their life situation and they don't even know that there is anything else. It absorbs all these aspects of their life situation, absorb conflict situation between people, whatever is happening there absorbs their attention almost the entire time except when they become too tired to think about it. But that's, those are short moments in between wakefulness and sleep when for a little while you become free simply because you're moving towards sleep.

And that can be quite nice but that's not where we are going here. Okay, I can't remember all my problems anymore. Just one more drink and I'll be free of my problems.

And to some extent it's true but the next drink after that you, you lose consciousness. Well, maybe two or three after that. So, realizing of course you have a life situation and of course a life situation is a life situation which requires your attention but the attention that it mainly requires is when things that pertain to your life situation need to be dealt with in the present moment.

But for your life situation to occupy your entire, the entire workings of your mind for all your waking hours that means you are missing out on the most vital dimension of life which is to feel the aliveness of life. To feel yourself as life. So you have the dimension of life which is inseparable from the present moment and you have the dimension of the life situation which involves past and future in other words the mind.

So where your life situation exists ultimately is in the mind. It is, that's where it is kept alive. Without that all you would ever have to deal with is whatever arises in the present moment.

But as the shift happens you are no longer, your attention is no longer continuously absorbed by your life situation and you are able to step out of that which is the mind and into the present moment and that's life. Life is now, your life situation is past and future in the mind. That's because that's where past and future exist.

I haven't found any past and future elsewhere except in the mind. Even if you go to ancient Greece and see the ruins of the temples it's still the now. And when they were built it was the now and when we see them it's in the now.

So even, so past and future are in the mind that's obvious and then there is the present moment. Oh and attention to the present moment takes you out of being trapped in your life situation takes your attention out of the life situation and connects you with the inherent aliveness of life itself. And that by the way as a byproduct of that is that it adds enormously to your ability to deal effectively with the things that pertain to your life situation that you need to deal with when the time comes which is always the present moment.

So you become much more effective when you when you get in touch with the vertical dimension which is the present moment so that your entire attention is not continuously absorbed by the horizontal dimension which is where your life situation exists in past and future. You remember the past? Okay that wasn't too good but I can still I can still look here.

Oh promise of fulfillment here. But if you took look too long to the to here which is the future if you look too long the promise of fulfillment can suddenly become the monster. Oh dear what's going to happen to me?

Well you're going to die. So horizontal dimension you can see how how superficial in a deeper sense a deeper sense of superficial how how superficial your life is when you live only in past and past and future trapped in your life situation. The vertical dimension is missing the depth is missing which the depth can only be accessed by moving your attention into the present moment and suddenly the life situation subsides and you realize this there's far greater vitality in this moment than anything I can find in my life situation.

So it frees you from this trap of exclusively dwelling on your life situation and identifying with it and deriving your sense of self from your life situation which may be satisfying for a while I did well people admire me okay for a while but who knows what they say about you tomorrow Oh now they don't like me anymore whatever it is enter the vertical dimension if that's missing no matter what you do you are dissatisfied the sense of not enough remains something missing remains and it's frustrating it's just so frustrating to live only on a horizontal dimension of life why does nobody teach the children at school not to lose themselves in the horizontal dimension of course I wouldn't call it that to children find another term but the most vital knowledge should be that life has a dimension of depth which is now which is vital this is where the inherent intelligence behind all life is accessed this is where all creativity comes from by accessing the vertical dimension which means for a moment the mind becomes still but an alertness remains and there opens up the present moment the depths of the present moment Oh and you're not thinking at that moment of yourself as a person you're not remembering all the problems and dilemmas that make up your life situation but it is not you're not evading the mind will tell you if you go into the present moment you are evading your problems you need to think about them because the more you think about them the more likely you are to find some solution and eventually you'll be able to solve all your problems just think about it more of course that doesn't work you can many of you have been there have tried that when the time comes a situation can be addressed and a situation is there okay now I need to go my wife is taking me to court I'm taking an example of a problematic life situation she wants all my money and so you're on your way to see the lawyer but even on your way to the lawyer you can you can enter as you're travelling there you become alert and present and you look at the sky and the trees and you feel yourself breathing and you feel an inherent sense of aliveness you acknowledge the beauty around you and then when you sit in front of him you say okay what can we do well and even as you talk to him you can feel the inner sense of aliveness and you're rooted in in presence of being you are the presence and the presence looks at the situation it faces the situation this looking is not just a visual looking it's an outflow of attention towards whatever situation arises there now what is what are the possibilities here what can we do and you can deal with things without the egoic involvement which says that bitch she wants all my money that draws you into and you deal with it and you don't make her into an enemy simply that's what she does okay that she wants okay I have one million in the bank and she wants three million okay let's deal with it what can we do here that that it's not it becomes specific when you can deal with it through the personality or the conditioned mind you can deal with the situation or you can deal with the situation this is of course the next step in presence living presence practice the first step is you're looking at the trees a more advanced step which we are going to now is being in the lawyer's office but when you can see it working there it's an amazing thing to be able to look at a situation that would normally be called problematic in some sense you could say it is problematic and yet you look at it and you can feel the power of your attention that you're directing towards it and primarily that attention in the first place is not conceptual you don't immediately say oh we have to do this or we can do that before any concept arises or any realization of what best course of action is before that arises there is a pure field of attention directed towards the situation and that is where the power lies when you can look at whatever the situation is you look and I'm using look in a wider sense not just through eyes looking meaning the outflow of pure attention or consciousness in the same way that before you looked at a tree and felt its aliveness and your own aliveness at the same time and therefore your oneness with it no longer the separation in the same way you now look at the situation in your lawyer's office and you feel the same energy flow but perhaps you feel it even more strongly because that situation may demand a more intense presence than the non-demanding tree the tree is offering itself to you and says please perceive me acknowledge me give me your attention see my beauty because when you perceive me acknowledge me nature is I get that sense it's a very strongly that nature has been waiting for to be acknowledged by humans and appreciated by humans for a long time and now something it completes itself it knows itself and its own beauty and sacredness when a human comes and looks at that tree or that flower it responds that's a an almost poetic way but I very strongly feel the reality of that and you may also sense that as you bring your attention to nature and now let's return to the lawyer's office so that the nature is not is not is more it actually as I said it loves your attention and now in the lawyer's office the situation requires a more intense presence because you are faced with the human mind in its and if you're in the lawyer's office you're probably faced with a human mind in its unconscious state or fearful state and that requires intense presence and you may find as you as presence operates more and more in your life in certain situations the presence that comes through you intensifies and those tend to be challenging situations when you're not when presence is not yet fully flowing it can easily happen that a challenging situation a difficult human a difficult situation even just missing your plane or being delayed in traffic can bring about a reversal into complete reactive unconsciousness until presence is more fully alive in you when a challenge makes you more present until that happens a challenge tends to pull you into unconscious reaction so find the ability in yourself to direct attention towards a situation and feel the power that is you still feel the inner body and feel the power that is in that outflow of attention and then you're still in that you're looking you're listening to the lawyer she wants that she's talking okay hmm and then suddenly you find your mind starts to operate but now the mind is linked into presence and you start saying something and it's absolutely clear and say well these are the possibilities I can do this I'm prepared to do that I wouldn't be prepared to do that let's tell her these things write it down please that I can do that I can't do and it's absolutely clear and you have not gone into judgment and making enemies just dealing there are some people who are very effective in the world who somehow perhaps they've learned this lesson in other lifetimes they deal with things in that way not many but some I've met a few who deal with things in that non-egoic which is what it is totally non-egoic way they don't regard a challenge as a personal attack on them and of course the ego regards anything that goes wrong as a personal attack even sometimes bad weather gets angry about it and definitely a traffic jam in other drivers they personally they are these drivers they are actually their purpose is to annoy me I regard it as a personal attack on me that's how the ego sees other drivers but when you drive non-egoically somebody cutting you off or whatever on the freeway there's no you just take action whatever action is required in that moment you take it it's just as if a wind were suddenly blowing towards your car a strong wind unless your ego is massive you wouldn't get angry with the wind but an unconscious human is just like that it's a natural force and so why get angry there's really nobody there he doesn't know who you are you don't know who he is and so how you behave in traffic is already one of the many ways in which you can judge your progress on the spiritual path so attention the directing of attention onto anything specific become familiar with what attention feels like what it what that is and that it is the most vital part of who you are and most humans don't even know that it exists in them that the potential exists in them it is the most vital part of who you are and at the same time far transcends who you are as this person and that's the beauty of it that the what we call attention or pure consciousness comes from a source far deeper than you as this person so you are then connected to that deeper source of life or aliveness and that is the end also of conducting your life in a state of fear it's only when you are not connected to that then of course life is fearful and threatening and every situation and every challenge is threatening and it's a dreadful way to live so that is the power of attention that we become familiar with here when we are not being challenged so that when we are being challenged it can be there also and we can deal with life by accessing in ourselves the vertical dimension and living from the dimension of depth and it all starts with little things like walking around consciously perceiving things being in the present moment choosing the present moment rather than choosing to be in useless thinking a great help then always to remember feeling the inner body when especially when you are sitting or lying somewhere it's easy to do feel it now and at the same time perceive practice is when you are talking to somebody in the dining hall for example when you are listening to people talking while you are listening feel the inner body so that you don't get lost in your mental reactions it happens so easily so you and even meditators who have a compartment in their lives that's their meditation and then they meet people over lunch and then they go totally go off into especially arguing about who is right and your perspectives and beliefs and mental positions and likes and dislikes which are very strong so if you can listen to humans and feel the aliveness within that keeps you present when you are moving then the movement itself can become an anchor for presence the step you are taking at this moment and then you can sense get the sense of quality in every step or whatever action you perform with your hands and then another wonderful access point or portal is simply to be aware that you are breathing that also takes your attention away from futile thinking and you are just sensing I call it one conscious breath you feel the air flowing in to the body and you feel the air flowing out of the body just one conscious breath opens up an inner space where you are not thinking because while you are observing how the air observing not visually but just sensing how the air flows into the body and then out of the body while that happens when you are truly your attention has to move there otherwise you can't be aware of your breathing just one breath one breath is the in breath and the out breath that's one breath and taking one breath a conscious breath maybe just two or three times in an hour which is not very much at all will bring in little pockets of spaciousness into your life that presence in other words because while your attention is on the breath it is not on thinking so while your attention is on the breath you go into the vertical dimension it brings in and to do that let's say twenty thirty times during the day which is still very little is probably more effective than meditating as a separate compartment in your life for half an hour or an hour every morning but if you can do both that's wonderful of course if you can have both the meditation and those what I call those mini meditations throughout the day but the mini meditations where you bring presence into your life only for a few seconds have more transformative power than the compartments set aside for meditation and then do not flow into everyday life so just a conscious breath this goes back thousands of years to the Buddha and perhaps even before the Buddha the Buddha's teaching nobody knows exactly what exactly he taught the scriptures we don't know exactly which of the scriptures actually do go back to the Buddha but it seems very likely that that was one of the main methods that he recommended to be aware of your breathing now that in itself can become part of a meditation technique and that is a different matter when you set aside 10 minutes 20 minutes and while you sit you your main activity then is to be aware of your breaths flowing in and out that's very calming too and it opens up space you surrender to the breaths and my recommendation is use it throughout your daily life have little pointers in different parts where you work where you live in the bathroom have a little pointer that may be a symbol for breath whatever symbol you choose that reminds you to take one conscious breath and you may love it so much that you may even take two conscious breaths and you can also associate taking a conscious breath with certain routine activities brief activities that you do and while you are engaged in those brief activities you are at the same time putting your attention on your breath if you have an elevator that you use during the day a few times at home or in the office while you are in it going up or down while you are waiting for it you press the button why be immersed in your life situation while you are standing there what are you going to add to your life situation thinking about it waiting for the elevator why not enter the vertical dimension and access the inner space and take conscious breaths until it arrives and then you step in and then why not continue until you get either up or down and there it is and why not associate getting into your car closing the door and taking why not two or three conscious breaths before you start the engine how much time do you lose in that twenty seconds thirty seconds you can't afford to lose thirty seconds for conscious breaths I don't think so but the mind may tell you that not now I have to get thirty seconds to haven't got time for presents now that's tough I've got things on my mind I've got so you close the door and so if that becomes habitual then many routine activities have an added dimension to them and they are no longer routine they actually take you deeper many years ago when I lived in England they started they introduced compulsory seatbelt wearing so they had to come up with an advertising slogan to remind people that they have to use their seatbelts now and so what they came up with is the slogan was clunk click every trip clunk is the door the noise of the car door clunk click is the noise of the seatbelt clunk click every trip and that's how people in England remember to put on their seatbelts and here you can have a similar slogan clunk whatever I don't know what but it means it's the association of something that you do all the time with something else so you go clunk breeze and taking just the if this were the only thing in your life of the only spiritual practice throughout the day remembering to take conscious breaths especially associating the conscious breaths with certain routine activities if that were the only spiritual practice it would be enough to transform your life because it would bring in spaciousness and so your daily life would become interspersed with presence with moments of presence and then as your daily life becomes interspersed with presence then that grows to it and you find after a while it's no longer just tiny pockets of presence presence then tends to grow into larger pockets until it's no longer a pocket there's a vast space opens up and then you begin to live in that dimension or rather that dimension begins to live through you and it's not so much sometimes from the egoic point of view it looks okay I have now access to this vast power I can become powerful here there's a secret here well this is not entirely untrue but as presence moves into your life it may well be that your initial impulse in some cases is that you want to become more effective and powerful it's true that you become much more effective and creative as presence comes in but whatever it is that initially gave you the motivation to seek presence to embrace presence to invite presence into your life whatever that is you may find that changes as presence moves into your life more powerfully and then presence has its own purposes for you it's not that you are you are the one who is using presence presence begins to use you because as you this form it flows through you and then suddenly what it is that you want in life changes completely because what it is that you want is no longer what you want it's what presence wants but ultimately it is what you want because you are the presence something to be aware of that is another habitual tendency of the human mind is a very all this is very closely related of course the habitual mind always anything that it does anything that you do through the habitual mind is really is always a means to an end because anything you do either whatever writing doing something on the computer going from here to there cleaning something wiping the table getting dressed but really the attention is always on the next moment I want to be dressed while I'm getting dressed I'm really elsewhere already and while I'm traveling to work I don't want to be traveling to work I want to be at my workplace I don't want to be going to the store I want to be already at the store so it's every movement is in the service of the next one the next moment and that is you need to be aware of that so that the pattern that is so prevalent does not take you over again and again it is a mental pattern that we all inherit the collective mind has that pattern and that is reducing the precious present moment instead of acknowledging it honoring it giving it your full attention the egoic mind reduces it to a means to an end the end being the moment that it wants to get to which of course only exists as a thought in your head so and this is part of the trap of living in a conceptualizing mind you're living for some thought in your head which you call the next moment that I need to get to you have to be very alert so that when that pattern comes in you catch yourself and say oh where is the present moment here am I reducing this moment to a means to an end and then you give your attention to this moment rather than where you want to get to and with that comes the power and the quality again is back there it is and then the next time you do something again the old pattern asserts itself it's always I need to get I need to get there and there's always I'm now acting out so that I don't you can see what that state of consciousness is like I need to get there whether the there is somewhere else in space or somewhere else in time doesn't matter it's the next thing while I'm doing this I really want to be there so a frustrating way to live and what you do is not effective at all because your attention is not fully in it so that can be read undone so that you know where you want to get to of course you do and yet your fullest attention is on the doing so observe yourself when you when you make the present moment into a means to an end reduce it to a means to an end it's a very common pattern you may find even as presence arises you may find that that pattern still comes in from time to time but recognizing it is helpful because then you suddenly can say oh okay let's give the attention to this moment because that's all there ever is and then your attention moves into this moment any conscious breath as we said will take you there also immediately puts you back into presence any time you feel your inner body you're back there you're back in presence and then of course another habitual pattern is which is even more unconscious than making the present moment into a means to an end is to make the present moment into an enemy you intensely dislike where you are who you are with or what you're doing and you're doing it the dislike the unpleasantness flows into what you do and anybody you speak to the words that you speak are full of that the negative energy that you feel about what you're doing you hate you don't want to be here some people live like that almost all the time I've seen people in information offices people who are there their job is to give information at airports or stations and some of them they regard every question that somebody is asking as a personal insult and I've seen others who are absolutely present give your fullest attention and everybody who asks them a question feels better afterwards not only because they were given the right information but also because their being was acknowledged it doesn't happen often but I've met people like that also in jobs like let's say waiter waitresses waiters there are some who embody in their work presence when they put the fork or the knife on their table they go they don't go now it tends those are the waiters that tend to work in better restaurants and if you if you work at at Denny's and you go like that then it wouldn't be long before somebody notices you and says do you want to work for me and it's a wonderful thing when you when somebody in a service capacity uses it uses presence in the service then that presence flows into what they do and they spread presence everybody who comes into contact with them feels that quality that surrounds them and that flows into everything that they do so the way you of the person in front of you, is not made into a means to an end, which means that again, here we have the outflow of fullest attention towards that person.

And you give the information and all that you feel is secondary to the flow of attention between you and that person. And when the attention is directed, that awakens something and the attention always involves, always involves a spaciousness. In when you look and listen, there's not just the looking and the listening.

There is the energy field behind that perception. And it's not thinking. It's not to do with thoughts.

The energy field has no thought in it. It is pure awareness, pure presence. And so when you look and listen to the other person, there is not, there's far more to it than the visual perception and the auditory perception.

There is the flow of consciousness. And that is the most wonderful thing you can give to another human. You're giving of life essence to the other.

And that awakens life essence in the other. Sometimes it happens. And the other person may not know that this is what is happening or the other person feels as they like you very much.

They like to be in your presence and they don't know why. He's such a lovely person. And they feel good around you.

And if the client feels good around you, he is of course much more likely to sign. But the attention must not be used as a means to an end. You're not giving attention so that he signs because then you're fooling yourself.

It's not the real thing. The full attention is not a means to an end. It cannot be.

It's pure presence. And it is so enjoyable. You're not even thinking that you could make it into a means to an end.

It's so enjoyable to give attention. And you can use that in whatever job you're doing right now, even if you're dissatisfied with the job you're doing. In the meantime, while you're still doing it, maybe you are looking for something else.

That's fine. But if you're still doing it, you might as well, while you're doing it, give it your fullest attention. And if it's a job that you cannot possibly do it in that job, let's see, what kind of a job would it be that you cannot give your fullest attention?

I don't know. There might be some, you may be in a totally insane work environment where everybody's close to a nervous breakdown and everybody's screaming at each other. You could still be there as the Buddha and sing.

But those places don't want Buddhas, so luckily you would probably get sacked. So some places will eject you as you become, as you give your fullest attention. Those are the insane, totally insane places.

Because insanity cannot tolerate sanity. It would threaten it. But in many places, you can transform, not necessarily what you do while you're doing it, but how you do what you do, which is always more vital than what you do.

How you do it, how means what state of consciousness do you bring to it. And so even if you work at a diner, you can give attention to everybody and acknowledge their being and have that spaciousness in the moment when you, what would you like? And one coffee?

Okay, I'll get you coffee. There was, there's a, that's love too. That is really a deeper love, not the egoic love.

There is a, you'll love that person. And although that person may be, the personality may be rough and unpleasant and, but you, when you're not judging through the mind, you give them space. Give them space to be rough and unpleasant.

Okay, good, I'll get you. Coffee is not hot enough, I want another one. Okay, good, I'll get you another one.

And they become very perplexed because of your lack of reaction. There's a saying, and I don't know which spirit tradition it is, treat everybody who comes to you as a noble guest. How would you receive a noble guest?

I don't know who would be a noble guest. Well, noble, we think in terms of nobility, but noble means something else. So you give them, this is the, yeah.

You would, how would you receive, well, noble would, let's say the Queen of England came to you. I don't know, if you like her, you'd say, please come in, sit down. Perhaps you would be more likely to give her attention than an ordinary human, but that is absurd to differentiate.

The egoic mind, of course, demands certain things from people, and it doesn't, the egoic mind doesn't get what it wants. I remember my dad who had a big ego. Later in his life, some chunks of his big ego broke off, and some awakening came through in certain areas of his life, and it was wonderful to see.

And other chunks didn't break off and remained. So in his next lifetime, the remaining chunks will break off. He went to visit a colleague at work when he was still working for dinner.

And when he arrived, the colleague was wearing slippers. And my dad, who had a big ego, said, he received me with his slippers on. If I had been the Pope, would he be wearing his slippers?

And probably not, I think. So he saw it as an affront, his dignity felt injured, and he never went to see him again. That is an ego reaction.

But of course, everybody wants, is longing to be acknowledged in their being. Now, it doesn't have to be through wearing shoes instead of slippers, but really what they want is to be acknowledged and to be given that attention so that in that pure attention, you acknowledge their being beyond the personality. On the ego level, of course, the ego wants other things.

It wants to be superior to you, or it fears you, or it wants to be made bigger through this or that. But there's something deeper in every human that needed to be recognized in their being. And when it does happen, they love it, and you love it.

And you're both joined then in that energy field of presence that unites you. There's a common energy field in which who you are transcends whatever you are dealing with on the surface of life, the business, whatever. Who you are transcends that, and it also transcends who you are as personalities, and something deeper emerges.

And then two people could meet from totally different worlds in that way. You could meet somebody from a totally different culture and you meet, and if there's that flow of attention, all those differences would become irrelevant and you would feel your heart opens and there's a coming together of the two. All the cultural differences would subside at that moment.

Or you can meet somebody who is perhaps from your own culture, but a totally different level of education or background. Well, in England, for example, you still have less so than it used to be, but to some extent, you still have class, these social class differences. And some people are only comfortable with their own class.

So you may be the working class or you are the upper middle class, and the accent, the way you speak, will immediately tell people what class you belong to. And again, as you meet somebody in that flow of attention, that becomes totally irrelevant. With every human, you feel the oneness, no matter what the surface differences are.

Everything is transcended. Everything in the world of form is transcended. And so that is, of course, how different cultures can live together.

If enough humans can access that dimension in them, the differences don't matter anymore. Something that is far more vital can be there, and that is what matters. So your practice is whatever your portal, as I sometimes call it, whatever portal you choose to enter the vertical dimension, to enter presence, is fine, breath, inner body, sense perceptions, movement, either movement as a spiritual practice or spontaneous movement.

That's actually quite beautiful. Most people, of course, you may want to learn Tai Chi or you're practicing Tai Chi already, but there's also such a thing as when you're present, you may feel occasionally, it feels good to move. Let the body move, and there's no thought.

There's simply, the body begins to move. And you're totally in every movement. When the hand is here, it's not going to try to be there already.

You're there at every moment. Anybody who does Tai Chi well is there at every moment. There's not a mental projection from the hand being here but wants to be there.

No, it's here and here and here and here and here and here. It's always now. And it's quite possible that Tai Chi that originated thousands of years ago originally was performed by somebody who was in presence who suddenly felt his or her body moving.

And then the disciples looked at him and said, what's he doing? And then they got a piece of paper and they wrote down, and now his hand is moving to the left. And then it's moving down.

And now his legs are lifting. Oh, write it down, write it down. And then it became Tai Chi that you can learn.

Now the strange thing is, it may have originated probably from presence, but as you go through the motions, it can also take you into presence, even if you're not present yet. So you can approach it from it originating out of presence, or you go through the motions and then they take you into presence. So it does work.

But also, so there's movement as spiritual practice and there's the natural movements that you do. And there again can be a wonderful way of giving it attention, the walking. You don't have to make it into a walking meditation, you can, but any walking from, every time you walk from your room or your cabin to the restaurant can be, be there with every step.

And you can, it makes a noise too, as your shoes or sandals touch the ground. And that's just, then you're not just present with the walking automatically, you're also present with your surroundings. Even eating, eating consciously.

You don't, not self-consciously. Self-consciously, you're there as, you're an external observer of yourself or you're thinking of whether others are realizing how consciously you're eating. There are certain things that can easily take humans into unconsciousness and eating is one of them.

And I've known people who are relatively, relatively present in daily life, but not completely, let's say not completely un-present. But the moment they start eating, they go completely off and they go. And when they finish their meal, they go, okay.

And also, of course, to some people, food is addictive. And that is only one aspect of what we mentioned earlier. And that is the not enough, the underlying sense of not enough in the egoic mind.

And in some humans, it may take the place of not enough food, not consciously expressed as a thought, but it's an unconscious assumption. And so the compulsion to absorb more food can be in some people an aspect of the underlying sense of more, not enough, not yet enough of trying to fulfill you with something. And it's unconscious again.

If you make it conscious, often the pattern gradually subside. But one way of making it conscious is when the impulse to eat comes, provided you know that the impulse to eat is there and arises. If you're very much identified with it, you might even not know that the impulse to eat has arisen until you're already biting into the chocolate cake.

And you don't even know how it got into your mouth. You walk to the fridge unconsciously, you took it out unconsciously, and you're already chewing. Oh, but as presence arises, you can actually catch the impulse.

And then you can just be with the impulse to have a chocolate cake or another sausage, or look at the fridge and whatever is in there, walking towards the fridge. And you can stop and for a moment, be spacious with it and allow yourself to feel that impulse. And again, it's part of what is in the present moment.

You might as well accept that this is what is at the present moment. Because if you argue with it, or beat yourself up, it doesn't work. But you can be there with that impulse and feel it, give it space, and wait a couple of minutes or three minutes.

And what you then do is really secondary. Whether you still want to go and eat it, then go ahead. Or you may find it's no longer that strong and you can actually leave it.

But either way, it can become part of your presence practice and then it's working. It's secondary really whether you still eat the cake or not. But it's more likely that as you practice this more, unnecessary eating or eating as an addictive behavior pattern will subside.

Let's finish this session with a little meditation. I'll be quiet for once. And we'll start the meditation with the bells and finish with the bells.

Choose where you want to put your attention while we are still here. You have a large choice. You can put your attention on your breathing.

You can put your attention on the inner energy field of the body. You can put your attention on sense perceptions. See the room and hear the noises.

Or, of course, the best of all, and ultimately it all comes down to that, you can put your attention on attention. In other words, you can feel or sense the presence, the attention, aware that you are aware. That's the ultimate meditation.

You're aware that, not that you are aware, you are aware as awareness. You're aware of yourself as the underlying awareness. If you can do that, that's great.

If you need an anchor, then use the inner body or use the breathing or use sense perceptions. Just a few minutes, timeless few minutes. Thank you.

You may want to get up in your own time, sit a little longer if you wish, whatever feels right. Welcome back. I may just say a few words now and then we'll go on to the questions and maybe some answers too.

The greatest thing to learn here, learn is not the right word because learn usually means adding some knowledge or information to your mind. That's usually the meaning of to learn. And to teach means to give out information.

So I'm not really teaching and you're not really learning because it's not about conveying information that may happen to bits of useful knowledge. Yes, but the essence is something else. The essence is for you to become familiar with, to absorb almost, by tuning into what looks like a person, is a person on some level, but tuning into spaciousness.

So you become familiar with something that perhaps you didn't know before and that is to know yourself not only as the person that consists of a history and mental content, but more importantly, to know yourself, not know in a conceptual sense, to sense yourself as that spaciousness also, formless awareness. And you may find at times, you become a person again, totally identified with form. At other times, you move in between two worlds, the world of form and thinking and doing.

But at the same time, there is a space in between the doing when the doing is not always directed to, as we pointed out before, the doing is not always directed to arriving at some point, but it's totally given complete attention in the now, then there is a spaciousness that comes into the doing. Sometimes a spiritual teacher is regarded by the disciples as God or a God. And the reason is that they see him or her and only as the space, and the family of the spiritual teacher say, I don't know what they're on about.

They only see the form. Talk to their children if they have children or their wife if they have a wife or their parents. They say, what is this?

This is so and so. We know him, we know him so well. They don't get the space at all because they're so familiar with the form of the teacher.

They don't see the transcendent dimension. Their vision is closed. And sometimes even the surroundings.

This is why Jesus said, no prophet, I don't know the exact line, no prophet counts for much in his own village, his hometown. And there's also a line in the Gospels where the family of Jesus, he is with a group of people in a house and his family come, presumably means his mother and he also had siblings. They come and they want to get him because they think he's gone mad.

They want to bring him back home. And they tell him, your family is here. And he said, you are my family, the spiritual family, which transcends the relationships that you have on the level of form.

So the greatest liberation is to know yourself also as space, not only as a person. And this is why you are here. And that happens when you become still and alert and present, the personality subsides.

And sometimes that takes over completely. It could happen when somebody comes who needs some form of healing, not necessarily physical healing, perhaps healing of his mind or her mind, or somebody comes and asks you a question and the answer suddenly comes no longer from what you know, from your mind, but you become still, you hear the question, and then suddenly you find yourself, you start speaking. And the answer comes and it's just right for this moment and for this person.

That is the connectedness with the essence. And it's beautiful when it happens. And then you could say you're beginning to teach.

Anybody who goes through this transformation, and even while you're already still in the process of awakening, the Course in Miracles uses the term teacher. It says anybody who goes through this process of awakening becomes a teacher of God. You teach God.

Not the conceptual God, the true God, which is beyond form. Not the God of this or that religion, but that which is behind the names, the various names. Not my God or your God.

You don't even have my life as a mistake, let alone my God. There's also a word in spirituality and religion called faith. Faith is sometimes mistaken for the complete conviction that certain statements or stories are absolutely true.

I have faith in this and this and this and this. I believe this to be absolutely true. That's a lower form of faith.

And of course it always applies when you don't really know whether it's true or not, because if you know it, you don't need to believe it anymore. I don't have faith in this flower because I know it's there. But if there is no flower, I can say I have faith that somewhere there is a flower.

So faith in God is something else. It's a sense of trust. Trust in something that transcends who you are, but is intimately one with who you are.

Something that carries you, something in which you are rooted, and something that can actually move and operate through you. And that is called faith. To sense, to feel that trust.

Trust in life or just trust. And with faith, there is a lot that you don't need to know. The egoic mind thinks I need to work out.

There's a lot you don't need to know about other human beings, about certain situations, because a lot of the so-called knowledge of the mind is a pseudo-knowledge. It's not real knowledge at all. And it's a fragment.

You have a thought about a person. He is such, so and so. This is how he is, she is.

It's a fragment, a tiny fragment, and even that's probably distorted. Thought always takes a fragment out of reality, and this is how it is. Also, then, it's very liberating to know that you don't need to.

There's so much that you don't need to know to come to some conclusion about another human being. You don't need it when you're present with them. You don't need to formulate some concept.

This is how it is, and then you carry that around in your head. And many conclusions of that kind about other groups of people, all these rigid opinions, and this is why one Zen master when asked about how to practice Zen, he simply said, stop cherishing opinions when you're practicing Zen. Stop cherishing opinions.

Interesting, he didn't say have no opinions anymore. Cherish, cherish means to hold them dear, my opinion, and really means to identify with. This is my mind, and of course, when you identify with an opinion, you don't know it's an opinion.

You think it's the truth, and your sense of self is invested in it. That's the whole delusion. So stop cherishing opinions.

You can have them in a loose way. Yes, of course. You still have the same opinion about the Democrats or the Republicans, whatever, your favorite politicians.

But they are no longer invested with a sense of self, and there's a space around them. One more thing before we go on to the questions. You may have observed that before you began the awakening process, you spent a large part of your life waiting, waiting for the next thing, waiting for some resolution to something, waiting for the end of the day, waiting for the weekend, waiting to get somewhere, to achieve this or that, waiting for, there's always a waiting game that's part of the old consciousness, the mind-identified consciousness. So that is, of course, you're not present. You are waiting for the next moment, and that begins to subside as you become more present.

You're not always waiting for the next thing because this moment is actually fine. And so when I stop speaking, you're no longer waiting for, but what's he going to say next? Why is he stopping?

There's often, when I start giving a talk, there's often a silence first, not quite as long when there's a huge group because then, before I even start speaking, I've already lost 50% of the audience. But there's a silence, and one reason, of course, is that I love it, and it's lovely to enter the silence, but another reason, of course, is that there's a silence because I don't know what to say. And faith means to be comfortable with that state of not knowing and just be in it, the spaciousness.

And then, at some point, the first words come. So, and then, this is important to point out, not just if you ever give talks, but many other occasions, to become comfortable with not knowing. You don't need to know, not in the conceptual sense, but if you relinquish having to know every conclusion in the conceptual sense, there is a deeper knowing that arises that is non-conceptual.

I sometimes call it non-conceptual intelligence. And that is there, whatever you really need to know at that moment is suddenly there. And that's where it becomes, you become inspired by true life knowledge.

So, anything, also action that you need to take right now, if you come from that place of non-reactive place, right action arises also spontaneously. And if you've ever listened to the Dalai Lama, who you might have noticed that quite often when they ask him questions, and sometimes they ask the strangest questions, and he looks like, I don't know. And sometimes after a while he does, he starts to speak, and then the answers actually, he's quite inspired.

But he starts from not knowing, but he's not uncomfortable about it. If he had a self image as I am the Dalai Lama and I know everything, then he would have to pretend that he knows. But there's just a space there.

You may have noticed that some people with big egos can never say, I don't know. If you ask them a question, they come up with the most absurd answer, just to pretend they have not the slightest idea, but something has to come out because they can't say, I don't know. Okay, let's have a first question, and I cannot guarantee that I know the answer.

And remember how it goes, there will be a couple of people, I'm not going to pick the questioners, but a couple of people, one person will be closer to here, the front, and another person will be closer to over there in the middle, and we'll pick, I don't know where the person is here in the front who is going to pick the questioners, so that person needs to come to the front while we are still not waiting for anything, of course. Take your time, the longer the better.

Okay, so, one questioner is already there, not waiting either, not waiting for anything, just standing there, that's fine. And let's see how it goes, hi.

[Speaker 5] (3:33:45 - 3:34:16)

Thank you very much, I'm enjoying the conference and all the participants here, and I've read the books, and there's one thing that's been on my mind, and that's when you started talking to us, you talked about all of us having luggage, and I wondered if you carried any luggage at this point, I'm still curious as to whether or not you have a bad day with a pain body that comes out, or with all your practice, has it gotten to the point where you're 100% focused on days and presence?

[Speaker 1] (3:34:16 - 3:37:13)

Okay, there are fluctuations, there are days when, for example, when physical energy is low, and there are days when physical energy is higher, there are days of more intense presence, and other days of presence just being in the background, there's always a sense of that spaciousness somewhere, it's always somewhere, but sometimes it's in the background, and I'm dealing with paperwork or stuff here, and it's there, or somewhere, and I'm doing things here, and then there are times when the awareness comes and almost obliterates everything else, and it goes...

and everything is a bit unreal in the world of form, and everything is compared to that presence, so there are variations, and sometimes it depends on what the situation is, when, before an event, there's often an arising of more intense presence, and sometimes that can also arise spontaneously when I'm just meeting one person who is asking something, or who needs something, one person who might be suffering, and I'm just facing that person, and sometimes it happens that, as this person speaks to me, suddenly I notice an intensification of presence, and then words may come, or they may not even come, maybe there's just the presence and the listening through the presence.

When there is chaos around me, it doesn't happen very often, but it can happen, a chaotic situation, also there's an intensification of presence, so there's a fluctuation of the intensity of presence, I haven't experienced the loss of presence for a long time, so a bad day as such I wouldn't say, but fluctuations, yes, they happen. What about you?

[Speaker 5] (3:37:23 - 3:37:31)

I was having a good day. I am having a good day, yes. I'm here, so there are fluctuations.

[Speaker 1] (3:37:31 - 3:37:48)

Yes, okay. Okay, where is the next, where is the person who, oh, do we have, do we change from somebody being, okay, welcome.

[Speaker 5] (3:37:48 - 3:38:14)

Namaste, thank you for sharing your wisdom with us. Thank you. You said the world is in a mess, and I was wondering if there are any clues as to how we can get out of it, or do we have to go through a path, because we won't be able to do it, won't be able to get the act together, and what is that path going to be all about, and what's the best way to survive that if there's...

[Speaker 1] (3:38:14 - 3:38:19)

So you're asking about the mess that's out there? Yes.

[Speaker 5] (3:38:20 - 3:38:31)

And if you were to recommend an impact on the curriculum of education for children in schools, what would that be based on all your learnings?

[Speaker 1] (3:38:31 - 3:44:12)

Okay, that's an interesting and good question. The most important subject for school, if I were to recommend, and actually I am scheduled to meet with one or two people who are... Somebody wants to introduce me to the Minister of Education in British Columbia, which is the province, and about bringing in consciousness into the curriculum.

So if I were to recommend, the main subject at school would not be mathematics or sciences or history or languages. These are all secondary. The main subject would be to teach the children the meaning and the reality of awareness.

To show them, of course, it means the teacher needs to embody awareness. You cannot teach it as an abstract subject. The teacher needs to show what awareness is so that the child learns not to be lost in their mind and not to be lost in their emotions.

What it means to be the awareness behind it. And that needs to be a daily practice at school. Everything else is secondary because that is the art of living that should be the main subject.

How to live in a sane way. And it's only when more humans begin to live in that sane way, not the normal insane way, that the outer will begin to reflect that as the new generation grows up. Less insanity means less of a mess and suffering that we create out there.

It is absolutely dependent not on some kind of new governmental policies. No policy can bring about a true change unless it arises out of a transformed state of consciousness. So many things have been tried.

Communism was initially an attempt to create a fairer society. The only thing they overlooked, and when I say the only, it's also the most important, they overlooked the one vital thing. They wanted to create a new society overlooking the dysfunction that's inherent in the human mind.

And so they created something new. And what did it become? A manifestation, in an even more extreme form, of the dysfunction that's inherent in the human mind.

And so what became of it then was quite mad. But the original idea was actually, of course, wonderful. Equality.

Well, the French Revolution already started with that. But equality. No possessions.

That sounds all wonderful. But they neglected the inner, the inside. So it's good that you have two questions.

One is concerning how to deal with the mess that humans have created and what to do about the education of children because these two are really one question. You need to start with the education and to bring in the most essential factor into the educational system. And, of course, that begins with the teachers.

I already have come across and met teachers who are introducing that into their classroom. But it's not yet part of the official curriculum. It's only individual teachers here and there are introducing it, and it works beautifully.

I had a conversation with Oprah a few weeks ago. And, as you may know, she has the school for girls in South Africa. And the first class graduated recently.

And I was amazed when she told me that she had given each of the girls a copy of my little book, Stillness Speaks. And then they talked about it. And then she said, they got it.

And Oprah told them, without stillness, there's nothing. You have to try. And they got it, she said.

They got it. That's a wonderful start. So, your question really is one.

The two questions are really one question. And I'm sure you know that. That's why you asked them.

The transformation of the mess begins in this room and in you. And it's wonderful that you are here because you are the root for the transformed world. Not only children.

Adults have their role to play, too. Because we are still here alive as long as we live. We have the role to play here, too.

Do you live in the States?

[Speaker 5] (3:44:13 - 3:44:14)

I live in New Delhi, in India.

[Speaker 1] (3:44:15 - 3:44:15)

In Delhi?

[Speaker 5] (3:44:15 - 3:44:17)

Yes. Yeah, yeah.

[Speaker 1] (3:44:18 - 3:44:43)

Yes, well, I'd like to go back to India sometime soon. I perhaps see you there. It would be a pleasure.

Thank you. Thank you. Thank you.

Thank you so much.

[Speaker 6] (3:44:43 - 3:45:18)

I appreciate the impact that you have on my life and on so many others. I kind of have a practical question. It relates to something you said yesterday about being present with your children.

And I certainly want to be present with my child. You brought up something about they still have to brush their teeth. And I get the infamous, no mommy, no mommy, I don't want to brush my teeth.

No mommy, I don't want to get dressed. And so how do you be present when your child is constantly saying no on a day-to-day basis so that I can really love him that, like you said, be completely present to him?

[Speaker 11] (3:45:21 - 3:45:22)

I'm finding it hard.

[Speaker 1] (3:45:25 - 3:50:07)

All right, now I feel like a Dalai Lama. But let's wait a little. And that's all right.

There's a balance, and that's quite an art to achieve that balance. Since I've never brought up children, I cannot give you concrete examples, but I have observed children and I have observed families, how they live together, how they relate to each other. And the balance is between doing what needs to be done on the level of form, which includes brushing your teeth, knowing also to what extent you need to force a child to do something, which might have to do with preventing the child from endangering him or herself.

Some parents have become so permissive that they allow the child to do almost anything. They can climb up on a high wall, they might fall down and break their neck, and they still let them do it. That is not wise.

But allowing them to explore, allowing them to make mistakes, even fall down, not down a cliff, but don't stop them from experimenting and exploring, give them space to explore for themselves, but at the same time there need to be certain structures in their daily life, which many modern parents cannot because they represent the reaction to the oppressive way of bringing up children that we experienced in the past, of absolute coercion, of not giving them enough freedom, forcing them into their roles, and shut up. Why ask the child, why?

And then the answer is, because I say so. That's not a good answer. But traditionally that was the answer for a long time, and then as a whole we have now shifted to the other polarity where many parents seem incapable of having structures in their child's life, and the child is yearning for some kind of guidelines and structures in their daily life that are absolutely there.

There's no question that this needs to be done. So it's bringing in structures, not more structures than are needed to bring about a sane way of living together as a family. And the rest is, once you have the structures, it becomes easier.

The child knows that those structures, you can't go outside of those, and there are boundaries, there need to be boundaries. Many parents these days don't give boundaries, and then when the child grows up eventually, they have to find boundaries in a much more painful way, and they may end up arrested or something, and then they suddenly find, oh, actually there's boundaries in this world. There are things I can't do.

So bringing up children as long as structures, and once you have that, it's easier to bring in the spaciousness into the child's life, and that is giving attention. So when the child is talking to you, the child learns primarily from their parent's state of consciousness. The child learns not so much from what, as you know, we all know that, the child does not learn from what the parents tell them.

The child observes the parent's behavior, and it absorbs that, and also absorbs their state of consciousness. If there's a lot of emotional conflict in the family, the child absorbs that, and the pain body grows and grows.

[Speaker 6] (3:50:09 - 3:50:16)

That's extremely helpful, because I think you really put the nail in the head, because I'm really having trouble putting boundaries and structure, figuring out what's guilt around that.

[Speaker 1] (3:50:16 - 3:50:17)

Yes, yes.

[Speaker 6] (3:50:17 - 3:50:20)

And it will help me be more present once he gets into the routine.

[Speaker 1] (3:50:20 - 3:53:56)

Yes, yes. And so the child models your state of consciousness, so that if you embody presence, then something of that will be absorbed by the child. And if you are able to give the child, in addition to dealing with daily situations, this needs to be done, and that needs to be done, and this is not to be done, there's the spaciousness that comes when you look at the child.

Don't always, when you look at a child, come up with something that needs to be done, or tell them to stop doing something. And that's the only way you interact with a child, is to tell them either to do something or to stop doing something. And that's a very impoverished way of interaction.

The most vital element is missing. And, of course, many parents are so absorbed in their minds, they are hardly there, their bodies are there, but the dad is on his cell phone and computer, and the mom is busy with her things, and then they are arguing with each other, and there on the periphery is the child. Nobody is really giving them attention, except when they say, stop doing that, or do that now, it's time to do that.

It brings, give attention, which is looking, listening. It doesn't have to be long, you don't set aside, you don't say, okay, it's time for attention now, it doesn't work like that. It's an organic thing, it's part of your daily life.

So that means you need to embody the presence, and then don't just relate to the child as the mother, that is your role, temporary, because when the child grows up, and you can't get out of the role of mother, you become obnoxious to them. Because you still tell them what to do, and you always know better. And you are so worried about the mistakes they are making, and you know all the mistakes they are making, and you keep telling them not to do that, and they hate you for it.

So don't get identified with the role, no, it's a temporary thing, and then you grow out, because know yourself not only as the role, but know yourself also as the essence, the essence consciousness behind the role. And the essence is not even a woman, the essence is beyond man and woman, it is the aware presence. So it can be there not only as the role, mother, but the form, but be there also as the aware presence, and the two.

So the child is living with two of you, so to speak, the mother and the aware presence, but they are really one, of course. Well, that's my answer, and you can also ask Dr. Phil about it. Okay, now the next is from the second half of the room, and then again we come to the front half, we alternate between people from the second half and from the front half.

As somebody has been, yes, somebody is walking towards the microphone, we are not waiting for anything to happen.

[Speaker 6] (3:54:02 - 3:54:49)

Thank you, Mr. Tolle. You've given myself and I know many other people this gift that I'm about to present to you, in that I've been walking the road with my mother, who is in the process of dissolution of self through dementia, and the gift you have given me, and I'm sure many others is, that it has become, instead of something very sad, it has become a beautiful spiritual process, and I thank you for that. And my question now is, what can we do as a culture to help encourage others to make this road more comfortable for those, and for us as we walk down that road toward the dissolution of self?

[Speaker 1] (3:54:52 - 3:54:59)

For others, other cultures, or what, how do you...

[Speaker 6] (3:54:59 - 3:55:23)

Well, in our culture, I guess, what I'm trying to express is, I feel like perhaps we don't handle this as best we could. We shove people back, and we put people in corners and away, and I'm wondering how we can use your teachings in a way where we can find presence and bring others into this presence as their lives are ceasing.

[Speaker 1] (3:55:24 - 4:16:34)

Ah, yes, yes, thank you, yes. That's important. It occurred to me recently that, as I was talking to someone, that it may be time for this teaching, which, it's not a teaching, but we have to use words, it may be time for this teaching, which so far has gone out, spread out into the world at large, to perhaps be applied in a somewhat more focused way to certain areas where perhaps it has not sufficiently, the areas it has not sufficiently reached yet. And one that came to mind as I was talking to this person was college kids.

I got inspired by, I gave a talk a couple of months ago at the University of California, Santa Barbara campus, to a small class of undergraduates. Some were graduates, some were undergraduates. And the talk was about, to do with ethics in daily life.

And there were about 25 people there. And I was surprised how many people, after I talked for an hour, were absolutely, look, they said this had an enormous impact on my life. We feel something has come into my life, many said.

I didn't know it was there. They were transformed, many of them. And that inspired me, because I didn't know I could reach people that age that easily.

And so one thought came that perhaps I'd like to focus a bit more on reaching certain classes of people. One is college kids. And two days later I got invited to Yale University.

I haven't replied, I forgot to reply. I got invited to give a talk at Yale in the fall. Just as the thought came, I'd like to reach more college kids, they came, would you like to come to Yale to talk?

Yes, I would. I just have to remember to reply to the email. And then it came to me another area is prisons.

So that to get the teaching into prisons through sending them reading material and CDs or DVDs and perhaps even go into prison, if that is possible, and work with a group there for a while. And then perhaps we have to use the media these days and then perhaps film it and then perhaps the film of that work could be shown to others. And Oprah had a similar idea.

She told me she was in the shower and suddenly she said she felt she wanted to go into a prison with me. But it hasn't happened yet, but it may happen. And then the other idea that came to me was reaching people who are approaching or going towards death, old age, because that is a wonderful opportunity that is sadly an opportunity that is missed in most cases still, of spiritual blossoming when the form of you, the physical form and also the psychological form, begins to become shaky and begins to dissolve as you are moving towards the dissolution of form. And still the majority of old age centers, senior residences, homes and so on are just waiting rooms where they hang around waiting for death to happen and watching television and playing cards in the meantime. It's an emptiness there, not the true emptiness that we point to, but another emptiness.

And there's a wonderful opportunity there because it is such an important stage that the Western societies don't know about this anymore. It's such an important stage of life because Western societies are so excessively focused on form they cannot deal with the dissolution of form. They have to deny it.

So in more ancient cultures there is more of an acceptance of death and the elders are highly respected because they can sense, others, the younger people can sense that there is a wisdom in the elders. And so the most respected people are the old people and that is not the case in our civilization at all. They are tolerated.

They may be the cute granny, that's the most, you have a cute little granny, but not the grandmother in the sense of the native Indian tradition and so on. It's a figure of great dignity, the grandfather, the grandparent. And so I don't just want to go back to what we have lost but recover what we have lost and at the same time go deeper and to show people who are approaching death what is possible in the dimension of consciousness as the form is becoming less heavy.

And I have had contact with people who were close to death and quite a few of them, once they realized the possibilities, went into a state of complete surrender and absolute childlike presence. And they looked at you very much like as if they were a little child with a presence there that was absolutely beautiful and suddenly something ageless came through the form. They were no longer old people, only the form was old.

In fact, some of them appeared younger in their last year or two years of their lives than they had been during their working life as adults because there was a liberation there, an inner liberation that happened and the form identity subsided, the heavy form. Because being an adult in our civilization and serious about life and business and dealing with stuff, it's a role. You play the role of adult and you are serious about life and business and it needs to be taken seriously.

It's a role you play. Society teaches you that this is your role. You are now a responsible adult.

You are not playful anymore. You can't really enjoy yourself because you're not responsible if you're enjoying the present moment. You should be worried.

You should be worried about your financial future. That's what you are taught. Yes, this is a wonderful thing, so let's see what happens.

In the meantime, you do what you can, whoever you meet, who is approaching, who is entering that last stage of physical existence, perhaps there's something that you can point out when the moment is right. You always wait for the right moment, which can be maybe a question or some kind of opening that you can sense, and then you point something out. And there may be some old people who are absolutely close to anything spiritual, never say spiritual, but they may be open to, if you suggest, can you feel the aliveness in your hands?

Yes. What are you getting at? And can you feel the aliveness in your feet?

Aliveness in my feet, yes, just try. Do you know if your feet are still there without looking at them? Yes.

And then the rest of the body, how does that feel? Does it feel good? Yeah.

Never say anything spiritual or you need to be in the present moment, maybe that's too much too, but you can feel the aliveness within. Oh, that's good. But you're not convincing them of anything, that they need to believe in something, not at all.

Start with something very, very concrete, very immediate in their experience, and then see where it leads. Actually, I read your book, I was thinking about my sweetheart, and when I read it I wrote this question down. So it is this, how do you keep your ego in check and love yourself at the same time?

Okay, good. The true meaning of ego is you don't even know that there is an ego. When you're really in the grip of ego, you're in the grip of certain mind patterns which are totally possessed by your thoughts, identified with your thoughts, and you are a thought-made entity.

So, to be aware of ego already implies that there is a little bit of freedom because you're aware that there are certain behavior patterns that are egoic. For example, you're aware that when you're having a discussion with people, you suddenly become defensive or aggressive because your point of view is questioned, your opinion is questioned. Or with your partner, you suddenly get into a fight because you need to be right, and your partner needs to be right, and you're fighting about being right, and you can sense the emotional force behind the argument, that leads to the argument.

And sometimes couples, they start fighting, and it starts with, I'm right, no, you're right. It could be something quite totally insignificant, and it leads to a big fight. It's quite amazing.

It could be a simple fact. What was the temperature yesterday? No, it wasn't.

What do you know? You never believe in me, do you? You always doubt what I say.

You believe other people, but you never believe me. You always know better, don't you? There's the ego.

So as it operates, you can be aware of it. And when you're aware of it, it no longer has that force that it has when you're completely unaware of it. And then the awareness grows, because from the awareness you're able to see that it is a little bit insane, to put it mildly.

It's a way to live that is where you carry the excessive baggage around, and you react to situations through that excessive baggage. You get worked up about things. You take things personally.

When something doesn't go right according to your expectations, you take it personally, and you react to a situation as if the situation had been designed to frustrate you. Me. It's against life against me.

Me against life. That's the ego. So you observe whenever you get upset.

You observe, what did that happen? And then the awareness comes in more and more. So you keep it in check, really.

You can't really suppress it, but you keep it in check by more and more being the awareness rather than the behavior pattern that may still be there for a while. Loving yourself. One aspect of loving yourself is you accept that you are part of an evolutionary transition that's happening, and as such you are not perfect.

There are things in you that are perhaps still dysfunctional, including the ego, and you accept that that is still there, so you have compassion towards yourself. You don't beat yourself up because you got lost in your mind again and you got into an argument again, or whatever it is that the ego does. But there's a deeper meaning to loving yourself, and that is, yes, be compassionate and accepting of your limitations while they're there, and there will always be some limitations.

You are here as a particular form, so as that form you may be good at this, but no good at that. My left brain is probably quite undeveloped, so I have to have compassion with myself. I can't remember numbers, and I could never do mathematics at school, totally failed at mathematics, and even remembering a number, my cell phone number took me four years to remember.

So that didn't improve with becoming awakened. And other things, I have to accept my physical body is not strong, but so far it's been okay. I mean, I haven't seen a doctor in many years, so it must be okay, relatively speaking, but it's not strong and it's not beautiful, so you have to live with that imperfection that for a time when I was younger made me unhappy, but now it's actually all right.

I don't mind. It's fine. It served me for quite a few years, and I'm okay with that.

So there's a compassion that comes as to your limitations. That's good. But loving yourself when you feel good about yourself is much better than hating yourself, and many people hate themselves, are very critical about themselves in their mind, and continuously regard themselves and berate themselves as not good enough, not as good as, should be better, I should have done that, why didn't I do that, why are you so stupid?

They talk to themselves in their head. Why are you always so stupid? You never get it right, can you?

You've been in a spiritual path for so long, and what's it all been pointless? You can't get it right, can you? If you lived with a person like that, as many people have stuck in their head, you would run away.

If you lived with a person that is so critical about you as the voice in your head is, not you personally, but generally speaking, it applies to many people, you would immediately end the relationship. But ending the relationship with your mind is something else that's not that easy. That can only come in through awareness.

It's only through awareness that the relationship with your mind changes. So, and then you go perhaps from loving, from hating yourself, to say, OK, I love who I am. To me, that is, in some New Age teachings, that is the goal of transformation, but as far as I'm concerned, it is a transitional stage, loving yourself.

Because even when you love yourself, what does it mean, I love myself? Who are you, and who is the self? There must be two of you here.

So you're split. You are the one who has a relationship with yourself. The dog doesn't.

The cat doesn't. The dog is itself, him or herself. It doesn't have a relationship.

It doesn't feel good about himself or bad about himself, or have some kind of inadequate self-image. The dog has no self-image, there's no ego. Ego really means an imaginary mind-made image of who you are and living through that image.

So you are possessed by the mental image consisting of thoughts and emotions, and that's me. And so you are possessed by that mental image, and you are split, you don't know it. So loving yourself is a transitional stage that can take you to being one with who you are.

And then you don't love yourself anymore, but love can flow through you into this world. You become love, but you don't love yourself because there is no self anymore. You and yourself have merged, like the dog.

But you have transcended the ego. You haven't gone back to the stage prior to ego, evolutionary terms. You have transcended the ego.

So we have pointed a lot, we have practiced here, being the awareness. When you are the awareness, you don't need to love yourself anymore because the awareness is who you are, and there's no longer a split between the thing that I am and the thing that I love. In that awareness, yes, there is compassion because awareness is a spaciousness.

And in that spaciousness, you have compassion not only towards yourself but also towards other human beings and their shortcomings. Acceptance is an intrinsic part of awareness because awareness is spaciousness, and awareness is saying, I accept this moment as it is. And this moment takes on many forms that change all the time.

Often this moment comes in the form of another human that comes into your field of vision or consciousness. And that human may manifest behavior that is very unconscious and very egoic. And you don't hold it against them.

You know what it is. You don't make it into their personal identity, and you accept them for who they are. You become the space for what is.

That's ultimately love and compassion becoming one. So awareness is love and compassion flowing through you into this world. And then you don't need to love yourself anymore because you are yourself fully.

This is oneness with who you are, which can be called integrity. And then you look at your dog and say, we're in the same place, except that I know it. The dog just lives it.

And you live it and know it. That's the added dimension.

[Speaker 11] (4:16:36 - 4:16:37)

Great answer.

[Speaker 1] (4:16:37 - 4:16:40)

Thank you. Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (4:17:02 - 4:17:02)

Hi.

[Speaker 3] (4:17:04 - 4:17:19)

I was wondering if you perhaps could offer a few words about physical pain, particularly chronic pain, pain that's been going on for many years and for which no alleviation could be found.

[Speaker 1] (4:17:20 - 4:17:23)

Is that a question that concerns you?

[Speaker 3] (4:17:23 - 4:17:24)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (4:17:24 - 4:17:27)

Yes. What kind of pain is it?

[Speaker 3] (4:17:27 - 4:17:29)

It's pain in my eyes.

[Speaker 1] (4:17:30 - 4:17:34)

Your eyes? And is it constant?

[Speaker 3] (4:17:35 - 4:17:35)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (4:17:36 - 4:17:38)

Do you know the cause?

[Speaker 3] (4:17:40 - 4:18:05)

I've searched for the cause for many years and it was not really possible to determine. I've really consulted traditional ways of medicine, of coping with it, and many alternative ways. The last I heard about it was that it's supposed to be a neuropathic condition that is the result of a dry eye condition that I was suffering from originally.

[Speaker 1] (4:18:26 - 4:23:44)

An important aspect of that is accepting what is, which does not imply that you do not seek help, if help is possible. You explore every possible avenue, but in the meantime, not creating on top of the physical pain an unhappy me that is the second superimposed on the physical pain. Then comes the psychological suffering that goes with the physical pain.

That is something that you do not need to accumulate in you. This is part of excess baggage. If the pain creates an unhappy me entity that complains about it and feels sorry for itself, and so on.

So, accept while it's there. You have to bring acceptance to it. And then, don't formulate certain thoughts in your head about it that make you into a victim where your identity becomes, you become someone who is a sufferer of a particular disease.

And that can easily become, I've often observed it, people who have a condition that goes on and on, in their mind they become a victim of that condition and they describe themselves to others and to themselves as a sufferer of such and such. There's a labeling process that happens. And for some people it even happens that they don't even want to let go anymore of their condition because it has become so much part of their identity and if anybody would suggest to them that they perhaps could find a cure they might even get angry.

They say, there is no cure. They've looked for a cure for years. Don't even suggest it.

So, don't create. Surrender means allow the pain. Now in your case it's that, it may be many other kinds of pain.

Pain can, if you surrender to it, erode your ego. And I have seen cases of people who've had prolonged pain or prolonged disability, confined to a wheelchair for 20, 30 years or their whole life, no longer able to use your limbs, being totally paralyzed. And some of those have actually transcended the ego without ever having come into contact with any spiritual teaching.

It just happened by itself. In the face of this constant pain they had to give up inner resistance and with giving up the inner resistance the ego, which is resistance to what is, dissolved. And so I've occasionally met people in wheelchairs, for example, and we have, I looked at them, and I say, there's no ego there anymore.

There was just... I thought I saw it, although I'm not sure, that was many, many years ago when I looked at Stephen Hawkins in his wheelchair. And he looked at me and I looked at him.

And I could suddenly feel he's not suffering. He's suffering on the physical level, I'm sure, but he doesn't seem to be suffering on the psychological level. So there was no me entity that was in suffering.

And I found that quite amazing that in the face of one of the worst things that could happen to a human being, you could hardly imagine a worse fate than what happened to him. It would be very hard to come up with a worse story, no matter how much you have suffered in your life. Not to become gradually paralyzed, can't even hold your head up anymore, can't move any of your limbs, the only thing that's still working is your mind, and you're like that.

You cannot feed yourself, you can do nothing. You lose everything. And that was his fate.

And there he was when I observed him every day at lunchtime being fed by his students and trying to speak but no longer being able to speak. He didn't have a machine yet. They hadn't invented it yet at that time.

So only croaking sounds would come out of his mouth.

[Speaker 11] (4:23:46 - 4:23:48)

Croak, croak, croak, croak, croak.

[Speaker 1] (4:23:49 - 4:28:21)

Nobody could understand except the people who were close to him and spent a lot of time with him. They could interpret what he was saying. Croak, croak, croak, croak.

He wants apple pie. And... Croak, croak, croak.

Coffee. He wants coffee. And I'm doing that because it's...

So the amazing thing, what did not happen to him was the build-up of a victim identity on top of the pain. The build-up of an unhappy me on top of the pain, which would be normal. It would be normal for this to happen.

It didn't. For some reason, it didn't happen. So all that was left was that extreme discomfort, but he seemed to be okay with it.

So with a deep acceptance, and this is... I've seen it several times with some people who have had chronic pain or permanent disability, surrender happened. And sometimes also when acceptance happens...

Now, acceptance is not the acceptance of a condition. You don't say, I accept that I have AIDS, cancer, whatever the condition is called. You don't accept the condition in your mind.

What you accept is only the reality of this moment. And at this moment, the condition, which may have a name, at this moment, the condition manifests in some form as either physical pain or it manifests as physical disability or as physical weakness. It manifests in some way, presumably.

And that is what you accept. So you don't have in your mind, okay, I might as well accept that I have cancer or AIDS. I need to accept...

No, that's not... You don't accept some mind structure. You accept only the immediate reality of this moment.

And then healing can also happen and does happen when you go into deep acceptance. There is a... I read one or two books about healing and they found that when people come to a deep acceptance, not of their condition as a whole, but only of that which arises in the moment through the condition, then healing is more likely to happen because with that acceptance comes an energy field that is loving and harmonious and powerful and deep that comes with the acceptance.

So allow the pain to push you into that acceptance of what is so that you don't build up a superstructure of an unhappy me on top of it. And then perhaps a change will happen. So use it.

It's not... Nobody perhaps would choose it, although in new age many people might tell you, why did you choose that? And of course I never say that because it doesn't quite work that way.

I'm not telling you that you chose that pain, but some new age people will. They may not be entirely wrong, but it's not quite the right perspective. But what I do suggest is accept, and I wrote it somewhere, accept this moment as if you had chosen it.

That's easier. Because if you believe I chose that, you begin to feel bad about yourself and guilty. So that's not the case.

You don't need that. But accept this moment as if you had chosen it. And then a shift may happen.

And even if the pain does not go away, something else gets eroded inside you. And then the pain will have had a certain function that you didn't know it could have. And maybe then it will go away.

So that's all I can offer you with surrender to what is, and don't build up an unhappy me on top of it.

[Speaker 3] (4:28:23 - 4:28:25)

Thank you so much. Thank you.

[Speaker 1] (4:28:25 - 4:28:45)

Thank you. The hand of destiny.

[Speaker 10] (4:28:57 - 4:29:25)

Hello. I had a meditative experience one time that was so... Consciousness was in every cell of my body to the point where it felt like my knees understood like they were communicating with plants in the rain.

In that state of consciousness, it occurred to me that death perhaps wasn't imminent. You speak about the new species arising. Is that possibly what you're referring to?

[Speaker 1] (4:29:31 - 4:29:36)

Was that a short-lived or how long did that experience last?

[Speaker 10] (4:29:37 - 4:29:41)

I don't know. Perhaps 10 to 20 minutes.

[Speaker 1] (4:29:42 - 4:30:01)

So it was an intense awareness of the aliveness in every cell of your body. And then what about your normal day-to-day life? Is there still remnants of that left, that you still feel that?

[Speaker 10] (4:30:02 - 4:30:22)

Fluctuations. There are times when it feels like a pulling back and I realize that there are shadowy parts of my body. You speak about disease possibly creeping in to those parts of the body.

I accept that I probably will die, but I don't... That you will die? That I will certainly die.

[Speaker 1] (4:30:22 - 4:37:08)

Yes, you will. But with enough consciousness that death perhaps wasn't imminent. No.

It's probably not imminent for you. So that's fine. And even if it were imminent, that would not be a problem when you are disidentified from form and the flowering of consciousness happens.

Now, perhaps you can... Do not try to replicate that experience. That rarely works.

But you can simply, very gently, continue to put attention into the inner energy field. So don't wait for it to happen again. But consciously direct attention into the inner energy field of the body.

And of course, that is part of the... It seems almost as if you were identifying with the body more. But the strange thing is, when you sense the inner energy field of the body, you're actually going beyond identification with the physical body.

Because what you sense is not the physical realm anymore. It's that which animates the physical realm. That is what you sense.

So, you're already... And of course, that is all part of the awakening. What eventually, so it seems, will lead to a transformation of collective consciousness that is so vast that we could only compare it to the arising of a new species, as I wrote somewhere and as you just said.

So, that is what is happening. So, don't wait for it to happen again. But consciously choose to bring more awareness into the body in daily life.

And be happy with whatever awareness is there. So, you may not be able to replicate for a while the intensity of what you experience spontaneously then. But that's not necessary.

But be there as much as possible. An interesting question arises now. And that is, is it not that when you are aware of the inner body, is there not some duality there, you might ask?

Is there not an I that is aware of something? It seems like that when we talk about it. Because when we talk about it, we use language.

And it sounds, if you say, I am aware of the inner body, there's I and there's the awareness of the inner body. But the reality is not like that. And the reality is what you experienced.

And that is, one could say, the entire energy field of the body becomes self-aware. So, it's not that you, there's not you and the body awareness. You and the body awareness are one.

You and the inner body are one. You are that. And it is becoming self-aware.

And that's an amazing thing. It's only when we then talk about it, we formulate a sentence. And in the sentence, we have a subject and an object.

And then we say, I am aware of the inner body. But there is no division there. There is already a sense of oneness.

You and it are one. It's a beautiful thing. And it's also a very healing thing to have attention in the energy field of the body.

It's healing. And it is a great way of preventing disease from arising. Not in every case.

There may be other factors coming in. But it is a great way of preventing many diseases from even beginning to arise. Because in this intense aliveness, diseases find it hard to survive.

Of course, yes, you might ingest poisonous substances which are everywhere in our civilization. Something could still happen. But it's less likely to happen.

So your immune system, this awareness affects every cell of the body. And the immune system becomes actually, I rarely use terms like that which refer only to the physical dimension, becomes strengthened through that. And that's a wonderful thing.

I highly recommend it when you feel the onset of some kind of disease. It could be flu or something like that, which, by the way, can often happen. You may observe it in your own life.

It often happens when you lose yourself in some emotional upheaval, mental emotional upheaval. Something happens in your life. You lose yourself in reactivity, in the old egoic consciousness.

You get upset and negative and angry. And a few days later, you can feel a flu start coming on. There's also a correlation they even find between the onset of serious illnesses and drastic upheavals in a person's life, such as separation, divorce, death of someone close to you, accident happening to somebody close to you, great loss, extreme anxiety about losing your job.

Upheavals in your daily life can often lead to the onset of disease because they bring about an absence of consciousness in the body because you become totally mind-identified in those states. So, yes, be grateful for that and continue to bring attention into the body so that it becomes a natural way of being and then see what happens. You don't have to do much else except invite it in and then it will do the rest.

[Speaker 10] (4:37:09 - 4:37:13)

The experience made me realize that Jesus probably did walk on water, is how it felt.

[Speaker 1] (4:37:14 - 4:37:38)

Okay. Monday we may try it. With Tony Robbins, people can walk on fire.

Perhaps we can walk on water. Thank you. Where's the hand of fate?

[Speaker 9] (4:37:41 - 4:38:25)

My question is about trusting what arises. For example, at the moment I have a big decision to make in life that will impact my life and other people and a direction seems to arise, simply arise. But I also know that there are unconscious forces, unconscious desires inside me that are silent and can arise in the same way.

How can I trust what arises?

[Speaker 1] (4:38:31 - 4:41:05)

Some things, you're right, arise not from the deep place of knowing and awareness. Some things may arise from the emotional field or the ego or fears and desires may arise. And how do you tell the difference?

There is a certain feeling quality associated with things that arise, realizations, sudden realizations, even a thought that comes that you suddenly, oh, this is what I need to do. There's a feeling quality associated with things that come from the deep place of awareness and of knowing and not from the restless emotional field. There's always associated with it a deep sense of peaceful certainty.

Peace is peace, but a vibrantly alive peace comes with that realization. If a vibrantly alive peace does not come with the realization, it doesn't come from the deepest place. It comes from the intermediate place of emotion, fear, egoic desire, masquerading as perhaps some great insight.

But if it's deeply peaceful, and with that comes a faith that you can't really question that anymore. It's so obvious that this comes from the deep place, and then you know you can trust that. If it's not peaceful, it does not come from the deepest place.

So if, for example, a decision becomes, should I continue to be in this relationship, or should I leave? Now, the impulse to leave may come from the emotional or egoic level. You get very angry and upset, and finally you pack your bags and you walk out.

That is probably not from the deepest place, but if the impulse to leave comes with a peaceful and deep certainty, then it is right. And then you walk out without even making the other that you leave behind into an enemy. And there you know that's the right place, and you can act on that.

That's how it is. So does that make sense to you?

[Speaker 9] (4:41:06 - 4:41:42)

It does make sense. Sometimes when it does come with that feeling of alive peace, and I've acted on it in the last years as I've been on the path, even then, as that peacefulness stays with me, it still creates turbulence outside. So even that faith stays with me, that somehow it couldn't have been different.

It's difficult. That is not what's reflected back in the world. It doesn't change my path, but I do wonder about it.

[Speaker 1] (4:41:43 - 4:41:55)

The turbulence, so you act on what you feel within, it's peaceful, and then you take some action, and that creates a turbulence around you. Yes.

[Speaker 9] (4:41:55 - 4:42:01)

Even sometimes for me, but yet that peace stays.

[Speaker 1] (4:42:01 - 4:46:52)

Yes. Well, some people may be upset by certain things that you do from there. You're not in this world in order to protect others from their upset.

For example, one's parents, parents of grown-up children, may have certain fixed ideas of what it is you need to do and how you need to lead your life, and if you don't conform to their ideas of what you need to do and how you need to live your life, they get very upset. Your mother might be close to a nervous breakdown, as my mother was, several times. She couldn't sleep anymore.

She said, he's going mad. What is he doing with his life? He's wasted every opportunity.

He could have done so much. He had so much. He's so intelligent.

And what's he doing with his mind? Nothing. Now, I had to accept that.

If I had said, okay, I have to do something so that my mother doesn't have sleepless nights anymore, I'm now going to apply for a job in Wall Street, and then my mother will be happy. That would, of course, be dreadful. Of course, she would be happy, but I would not be happy.

Some people may have to go through the pain generated by their unconsciousness. You cannot take that away from them. So you may have to take certain actions that sometimes cause others pain, not directly.

Ultimately, you are not causing them pain. If I become a dropout, as I kind of did, became a dropout, I did not directly cause pain to my mother. She did it to herself.

That is, of course, the case. And all I could do was compassionately accept that this is occasionally attempting to point out that I was doing what I felt was right for me, even not very successfully pointing it out. And so she continued to feel the pain until, in the eyes of the world, I became somebody.

And then she suddenly could sleep again. So certain things I did created that turbulence, and I accepted it. I wasn't even in a conflict about it.

It was so clear to me that I did what I had to do and could not do otherwise and had to just allow my mother to go through that pain that she generated for herself. So that created turbulence. Another thing that happens is, even when a deep conviction comes from within that is peaceful, you act on it, there is still your mind that may come up with all kinds of subsequent doubts.

It can then start to question, but can you really be sure? Was that really the thing? Maybe I should have done something different.

So the peaceful thing that comes does not immediately obliterate your entire mind, which may still be there and may still question whether what you are doing is the right course of action or not. Because that's how the mind is. But you again have to see what is the feeling quality of it and go to the source and feel that, and then you can ask the mind to, please, you don't need this anymore.

I've already decided on this course of action and this is what I'm going to do. You could otherwise be in conflict for years. Some people live like that.

The mind loves that because it can keep itself going. It can think all through the night, did I do the right thing? Maybe I should have done something else.

So stepping out of the mind as much as you can. Yeah. Okay, do you want to go one first and the other one next?

Okay, so we have...

[Speaker 10] (4:47:32 - 4:48:08)

There are a couple of things that still pull me into the pain body. And I'm aware of that. So I know it's a process and it's getting better.

It won't always be like that. But when I'm in there, it's total suffering. It's really total suffering.

And then when it passes, I see it. I'm having difficulty with a loss of identity. I'm not sure who I am anymore.

[Speaker 1] (4:48:09 - 4:48:11)

Okay, that's good.

[Speaker 10] (4:48:23 - 4:48:25)

I feel kind of lost.

[Speaker 1] (4:48:26 - 4:54:03)

Yes, yes. Well, that's the transitional stage. There are really two questions.

There's the pain body question, pain body episodes, and the sense of being lost because you're not quite sure anymore who you are. And not being quite sure who you are and feeling uncomfortable about it is a transitional stage for many people as they go through the awakening process. And once you've gone through the transitional stage, not knowing who you are and feeling uncomfortable about it, you reach the stage where you don't know who you are and feel comfortable with not knowing who you are.

And then there is a deep knowing in there, who you are, but you couldn't say anything about it. When you become comfortable with not knowing, as I am, I don't know who I am. I don't have concepts in my head that tell me who I am.

I have other people who think they know who I am. They say he's a spiritual teacher, or they say he's a writer, or they say he's done great things, or whatever they say, or they say he's insane. They all know who I am, it seems, but I don't subscribe to that.

I don't have a sense even that I'm a spiritual teacher except when spiritual teaching happens. Right now, I seem to be a spiritual teacher because I'm sitting here and teaching happens, if you want to call it teaching. When I walk away from here, and I don't carry around the sense of identity that here's a walking spiritual teacher.

So a spiritual teacher is a function, but it's not an identity. It's a function, so whatever you do in your life, you perform a function. You may have a job, whatever you do in your job, it is a function that you do.

And while you do it, you can call yourself that, teacher, whatever you do, the function, but not an identity. You don't carry it around as an identity. The most liberated place in yourself is the place of having no particular ideas in your head about who you are, but just being the awareness.

But the awareness is not an idea. It looks like an idea when you talk about it. But being the awareness, that's who you are.

But conceptually, you can only be the awareness if you give up on a conceptual level trying to figure out who you are. So it's only when you give up trying to figure out who you are conceptually, and conceptually means it's some story you tell yourself. This is who I am.

It may not even be your job. In some people, in some cases, it's their life story. I'm a sufferer of abuse.

Of course, it's a sad thing that you suffered abuse, but to build an identity around it is a deception, a conceptual identity. I'm a sufferer of such and such. And then you can go to a convention of sufferers of such and such a condition and to strengthen your sense of identity.

It's very seductive. Oh, now we know who we are. So not knowing who you are feels a little strange to you right now, but if you go more fully into that and you see that there's an awareness there that doesn't need to know conceptually, and that's who you are, and you are rooted in that.

So just continue what I said about the function of being a spiritual teacher, and then I walk away to my room or go somewhere, but not as a walking spiritual teacher, but simply as a walking field of presence, a field of awareness walking. But that's not a conceptual thing. That's an immediate realization that I am the awareness.

But I'm only the awareness because conceptually I've become comfortable with not being anybody. Comfortable with not being anybody. So your transition, the discomfort, will be replaced by acceptance of not knowing who you are, and suddenly you feel yourself rooted in awareness, or you are the awareness.

Then you know who you are by not knowing who you are conceptually. That's the beauty of it. And now let's come briefly to your pain body episodes.

There are certain situations in which it tends to arise. Perhaps you can even note the two or three particular situations where it happens again and again. Perhaps to do with other humans close to you.

Am I right? Yes.

[Speaker 10] (4:54:06 - 4:54:11)

It has to do with my daughter and money. Those two things.

[Speaker 1] (4:54:11 - 4:57:41)

Okay. That's a big thing for many people, their children and money. Money can bring up a sense of the fear that makes up many people's pain body.

Pain body can consist primarily of anger. The pain body, which is the old accumulated emotion that you carry around, can also consist mainly of fear. Fear of survival and so on.

And particularly for those people in whom the pain body contains a lot of fear vibration, money often triggers that fear. And it could be sometimes insignificant amounts of money and you can suddenly have a reaction. $10.

$100. $100. So whenever you...

You lose awareness when the pain body arises and the awareness returns when it subsides. So it's not yet there in the middle of it. I recommend that when you approach a situation that you know may lead to your pain body coming up, a discussion with your daughter or a particular situation that tends to repeat itself with your daughter or something to do with money, the moment your attention begins to focus on some money situation, bring that alertness to it knowing that at any moment this thing may trigger my pain body and turn up the dimmer switch inside you so that you become more alert as you begin to deal with money matters, for example.

Okay, now let's look at my bank account. It's like handling a hot coal. Hot coals.

Careful. Be alert. And then you may find it may not even come or if it does still come, at least there will be an awareness as it happens.

If there can be an awareness as you get taken over by the pain body, that means you're not completely taken over by the pain body. The beginning of the end, which may take a while, but the beginning of the end of a pain body is when the awareness begins to be there even while it's happening, which may not yet prevent it from happening, but you know it's happening and not just afterwards. And that is more likely to happen if you have a little bit of foresight so that you know, I'm now approaching a possible pain body situation and then the alarm, maybe they should invent an app for that, that you carry your cell phone in your pocket and when it senses certain skin reactions that are associated with pain body, suddenly the cell phone goes, burp, burp, burp, burp, burp.

So maybe somebody here can come up with that. Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (4:57:52 - 4:58:24)

Hi. I'd like to know if you have someone in your life who has suffered from a medical condition and it has become part of that person's identity and you see that person suffering, how could then I be most helpful to that person to help, I can't tell the person what to do, but to help alleviate the suffering?

[Speaker 1] (4:58:25 - 4:58:32)

So there is such a person in your life? A very close relative or friend or?

[Speaker 9] (4:58:32 - 4:58:34)

A child.

[Speaker 1] (4:58:34 - 4:58:37)

A child. How old?

[Speaker 2] (4:58:37 - 4:58:41)

Well, a young adult. Young 20s.

[Speaker 1] (4:58:47 - 4:59:03)

It's likely that if you tell him or her, it is likely that if you tell her, this is not who you are, probably is not going to be received well. Maybe you have tried it.

[Speaker 9] (4:59:03 - 4:59:06)

I think I've said everything. Yes.

[Speaker 1] (4:59:09 - 5:01:46)

Yes. It's probably best not to address that particular condition, the psychological condition, if you want to call it that, of pseudo-identity, not to address it directly, but simply what I suggested a little bit earlier, to do what you could do with older people who are maybe not be open to anything spiritual whatsoever, introduce somehow, find a way of introducing to them to body awareness. Somehow, maybe you can think of something that makes it an occasion that arises where you just do it, you say, oh, I learned something interesting, you want to try it out, and try out, guide them, guide them into body awareness as something that actually is fun and feels good, and it works for me, you say, it's not a lie, hopefully, it works for me, and it actually is very pleasant to do.

And when you guide them into body awareness, inner body awareness, that already takes attention away from where it is usually lodged in their mind, and of course that is in their mind is where the pseudo-identity lives, as an idea of who I am. So the more you take attention away from their mind, put it into the body, the weaker the pseudo-identity, which is an idea, becomes in their head, and you never need to address it directly, you never need to question the pseudo-identity, because as you know, probably it doesn't work. So take them out of their mind, and see what happens, and then they may love it, and then begin to embrace it, and live more centered in the body rather than in the mental realm, so they become rooted in something more real than the level, dimension of ideas of who they are.

Another thing is, of course... Oh, how old is that person? Twenty-three.

And what is your relationship?

[Speaker 9] (5:01:47 - 5:01:48)

My daughter.

[Speaker 1] (5:01:49 - 5:02:04)

Your daughter. Okay. How does being in nature...

Does she have a relationship with the natural world, or the world of nature?

[Speaker 9] (5:02:05 - 5:02:06)

Not so much.

[Speaker 1] (5:02:06 - 8:03:22)
